The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Report of Advertising

Week of April 19 to 24

Total Number of Inches Display Advertising, 919

Daily Average 153.16 inches

During the Week of April 12 to 17

the total number of inches advertising carried by the The Evening Times was 748.5

The Daily Average for the period was 124.66

INCREASE

Daily Average--Almost One-Quarter Page Daily

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

IN THE BALKANS

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Long before the breaking out of the late war between the Balkan states and Turkey there was continued fighting between the Christians and the Turks. A party of Turks would swoop down on a hamlet or single house, kill what men they found there, loot the place and carry off the women.

The Christian inhabitants held secret meetings, which were the forerunners of rebellion. They would meet in cellars, in garrets—anywhere that they could deliberate in secret. These meetings gradually took the form of a revolutionary propaganda. They also became fighting bodies. A meeting would be held, and perhaps the next day a body of Turks who were oppressing the people would be attacked while they were asleep.

A young man named Alexander Isver was prominent among the revolutionists, so prominent that he became known to the Turks and was obliged to remain in hiding—that is, he hid himself when he was not on some incursion against the Turks; then, backed by armed men and with a carbine in his hands, his tall figure was seen moving about encouraging the Christians and fighting desperately himself.

Alexander loved and was loved by a young girl named Sonia Damotika. She was very proud of her lover, but was in constant dread lest she lose him by a Turkish bullet. But so dreadful was the situation, so cruel were their masters, that she could not conscientiously ask him to desist from his efforts.

At last Alexander was betrayed, and his enemies laid a plan to take him, which meant death after torture. They were informed that he was hiding in a certain village. There a small party of Turks repaired, dashing into the place just at dusk and searching every house. There was no force for defense, and they had their own way. But their leader, who was bent on capturing Alexander, gave orders that no loot should be taken, no women interfered with, till he had been found.

After an hour's hunt the Turkish leader while ransacking a house caught sight of a woman's foot under a bed. He ordered whoever was in hiding to come out, and Sonia, pale and trembling, obeyed. One of the Turkish soldiers recognized her as Alexander's betrothed and told the officer in command of the fact. Immediately in order to intimidate her he put a pistol to her head and ordered her to tell where her lover was hiding.

It was some time before the girl could gather enough strength to reply. When she found her voice she said that she could not tell where Alexander was hiding; she could only lead them to the spot. But this did not satisfy the officer. So eager was he to get the man he was after that he promised Sonia that if she would reveal to him his hiding place he would not molest her. If she refused he would carry her off with him. She knew well enough what it meant to be carried off by a Turk.

Sonia insisted that it would be impossible for her to direct them to Alexander's hiding place. To reach it they would have to go through many secret passages. Besides, she must get out into the open air or she would faint. Since she showed signs of swooning the officer consented to take her out of the house, and a few drafts of fresh air seemed to revive her. As soon as she was able to proceed she started down the street which ran through the village.

By this time it was quite dark, and the place was but dimly illuminated. Coming to a narrow side street, she turned into it, following it till she reached a still narrower one. Pursuing this for a short distance, she arrived at a pair of steps. Mounting the steps, she entered a deserted house.

"There," she said, weeping, "you will find him—that is, unless he has gone since you came."

Her tears convinced the Turks that she was telling the truth. Indeed, so terrible would be her fate in case she deceived them that they did not doubt she would prefer to lose her lover. Eager to pounce upon their prey, they broke down the door of the house and all rushed in, leaving the girl behind them.

The place was hilly, and this part of the village was built on a declivity. The moment Sonia found herself alone she darted up the incline, soon reaching a low growth of timber. The terrible fate that threatened her gave her strength to climb, and, though in darkness, she knew the ground. Not far from where she had taken to flight was a cliff that was reached by a path which was known only to the villagers. Reaching the summit of this cliff, she waited a few minutes to catch her breath. The Turks, finding that the building was empty, looked about for Sonia. Not finding her, they ran outside, but by this time she had reached the cliff. Hearing them running about searching for her, she ran on.

Alexander and Sonia had been caught in the same house and, hearing the Turks below, took refuge under a bed in the room where they were. The Turks, intent on the capture of Sonia, did not think to look under the bed for her lover, not dreaming that he would be there. When Sonia led them away Alexander came out from his hiding place and made his escape. Sonia afterward joined him, and, since it was not possible for them to return to their home, they came to America.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Catching Cold.

If you are always catching cold look to your general health, strengthen your resistance against cold. Do not overeat. Keep the organs of elimination normal. Take frequent baths. Sleep in a cold, well ventilated room. Avoid crowds and overheated rooms. Keep the teeth, tonsils, nose and throat clean and breathe nothing but clean air.

ANCIENT WAR METHODS.

Did Hannibal Use Dynamite In His Passage of the Alps?

Every one knows the story of how Hannibal crossed the Alps. It is usually asserted that he demolished the rocks that opposed his progress with the aid of fire and vinegar. The word used by the Latin historians which is ordinarily called in English translation "vinegar" is acetum.

The question has been raised by an European officer whether this is the true meaning of the original. He is of the opinion that by acetum the historian intended to describe a substance resembling dynamite in its properties, and he invites chemists to consider the question whether the ancients may not have possessed a formula for making a powerful explosive of this kind.

He calls attention to the fact that two ancient historians, Marcus Gracus and Albert of Aix, speak of the existence of two kinds of acetum, one of which possessed greater energy than the other. A clew to the composition of the explosive may be found, he believes, in the fact that to acetum was ascribed the property of extinguishing the dreaded "Greek fire." He thinks the substance may have been strongly oxygenated.

Although to discover how Hannibal's "dynamite" was made would be to add nothing perhaps to our sense of the greatness of his achievements, yet such a discovery would certainly throw new light on some interesting events in the wars of antiquity.

MILITARY AEROPLANES.

Fitted With Phonographs, Into Which the Observers Dictate.

When the military aeroplane is scouting it usually carries two men. One is the pilot, who runs and steers the craft; the other is the observer, who marks the placing of the hostile troops, the position of their guns, the movement of trains, and the like. The observer also makes many sketches of the ground over which he is flying—work that often interferes with his writing notes and memoranda.

In certain conditions of flight, too, it is often hard for him to use a pencil and paper. To obviate the difficulty the military aeroplane, says the Scientific American, now frequently carries a phonograph, with a speaking tube running to the mouth of the observer, so that by talking into the machine at any time during the flight he can record his observations and still have his hands free for his field glass or his sketching pencil.

Russia's Craving For Alcohol.

Since the sale of vodka was prohibited in Russia many strange methods have been developed to procure alcoholic beverages, and recently statements have come out of Russia that many illicit stills have been unearthed which have been engaged in recovering the alcohol in shellac. The shellac is divested of its alcohol by distillation, and a crude beverage is then made to be sold as a substitute for the prohibited old wines and vodka.

Women In Canada.

In Canada it is necessary for a wife to secure from her husband a written notice to the bank before she can deposit to or withdraw money from an account in her own name. It has been only after twenty years of agitation that the legislature of Quebec passed a law giving to the widow a share of her husband's estate if he died intestate. Previously it had gone to the most distant relative in preference to the wife.

A Reminder of Robin Hood.

The portion of the English coast which recently suffered from German bombardment was connected with Robin Hood. Tradition says that from Whitby towers he and Little John used to shoot at long range with their English bows, and a bay a little south of this town bears to this day the name of Robin Hood's bay. This would seem to bear out the belief that Robin Hood was an actual living personage.

"City of Dreadful Light."

London streets at night are far more beautiful to look at and far more agreeable to walk in than when every shop flares with a vulgar display of hard light and when the disgusting electric light advertisements defaced walls, riverside and space itself. May London never go back to its old, vulgar, hateful system of lighting. We want no more of that city of dreadful light.—London Saturday Review.

A Grasshopper Plague.

Grasshoppers have become such a menace to crops in San Salvador that the government is preparing a novel method of extermination, one used with good results in South American countries. Virus has been procured from Brazil, and numbers of the inoculated insects will be freed in the swarming droves. The disease is said to be remarkably fatal to the pests.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Mounting Largest Telescope.

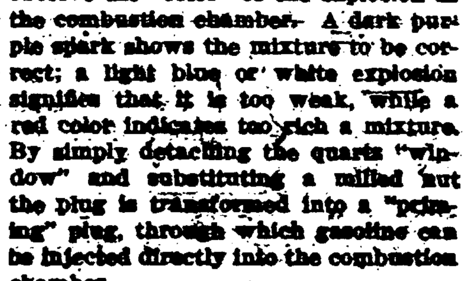
The last annual report of the Mount Wilson observatory states that all the larger parts of the mounting for the 100 inch reflector, which will be much the largest telescope in the world, will probably be assembled at the Fore River shops, where they have been constructed, in time to permit shipment to Pasadena via the Panama canal early this year, says the Scientific American. Meanwhile the smaller parts and accessories have been under construction at the observatory. The driving clock, which is nearly completed, required more than half a ton of bronze castings and nearly a ton and a half of iron castings, in addition to the two ton driving weight. The circular steel building for this instrument is complete up to the rails which are to carry the dome. The latter has been built in Chicago and is about finished. The building and dome will probably be completed next summer so that the mounting may be set on the pier in the autumn. Meanwhile good progress has been made with the capital task of grinding and figuring the great mirror.

The Pigment Lithopone.

Lithopone is produced by mixing solutions of zinc sulphate and barium sulphide. The resulting precipitate consists of zinc sulphide and barium sulphate. It is filtered off, heated to a high temperature and dropped into water, whereby it is thoroughly disintegrated. It is washed and filtered again, dried, and ground. All of these operations require a good deal of care and attention to produce a satisfactory pigment. Lithopone is very stable and is probably the whitest pigment known, being very widely used in high grade enamels. Exposed to light and dampness it darkens, but will often regain its whiteness again. It is therefore not suited to outside use by itself, but needs to have a large amount of some stable pigment combined with it.—Engineering Magazine.

Improved Automobile Sod Pan.

The usual type of sod pan used in automobile construction is fastened to the frame side members of the car and passes under the engine crank case, as shown by the full line in the sketch, says Popular Mechanics. This is not only a very heavy and expensive construction, but the pan often jars loose and must be removed from the chassis



EASILY CLEANED SOD PAN.

when being cleaned. The sod pan substituted is shown by the dotted lines and simply consists of metal sheets, fastened on one side to the flange of the lower crank case and on the other to the frame side members of the chassis. This construction is cheap, very light and can easily be cleaned. The lower part of the crank case is exposed, but the dirt collected on it can be easily removed without disturbing the sod pan.

New Telltale Spark Plug.

A novel type of spark plug for internal combustion engines has been invented by a British company, says the Scientific American. The plug has a tubular central electrode, which carries a block of quartz serving the purpose of a window through which one can observe the "color" of the explosion in the combustion chamber. A dark purple spark shows the mixture to be correct; a light blue or white explosion signifies that it is too weak, while a red color indicates too rich a mixture. By simply detaching the quartz "window" and substituting a milled nut the plug is transformed into a "priming" plug, through which gasoline can be injected directly into the combustion chamber.

Fish Oil In Paints.

Menhaden, or fish oil, is used in special paints, which are required to stand heat and light, as on smokestacks. Such a paint is considerably more expensive than a linseed oil paint, so it can be seen that menhaden oil is a valuable aid and not an adulterant, as often claimed. Proper treatment of the oil is very expensive, as the loss by evaporation is large and certain volatile products are formed which are very offensive to the workmen. Mixed with linseed oil it is used to some extent for making waterproof paints for various purposes and seems to give good satisfaction.—Engineering Magazine.

Inflation of Automobile Tires.

It is no doubt a fact that more tires are ruined through under inflation than from all other causes combined, says Automobile Dealer. If one would keep his tires inflated to a pressure of eighteen or twenty pounds to every inch of cross section of the tire he would be quite free from blowouts. Even during the hot weather this pressure should be maintained, as it has been conclusively proved that the extra pressure caused by friction is so small it need not be considered. But care must be taken to see that the tubes are of the best quality, for in reality the tube is the "heart" of the tire.

WOMEN OF ALL NATIONS SHOW FINE HEROISM IN FACE OF WAR

In Every Stricken Land They Have Cheerfully Taken Up Work of Men Gone to Battle Line.

Many Have Even Fought as Men and Thousands Are Training to Be Able to Defend Homes.

NOTHING is more remarkable in the great war than the heroism with which the women of all the stricken nations have borne the cold test. Every day for the past eight months women have proved by their ability, their sacrifices and their services, as well as by their unspeakable sufferings, that war is their business as greatly as it is man's. Everywhere woman is coming to the front with flying colors.

In Germany, France and England women are not merely doing the work of men. A few have gone to the front and are ready to fight with the rifle to defend their homes.

No picture could be more touching than that Frau Ida Boy-Ed, mother of Captain Boy-Ed, naval attache of the German embassy at Washington and one of the foremost literary women of Germany, draws of the German "soldier mother." Throughout the empire, she says, the women have enthroned motherhood by giving up their dearest for the fatherland. A sovereign glory shines on every German woman's brow as she fulfills all the duties that have had to be abandoned by the heroes to whom she gave birth.

Beware of Suffragettes!

Several contingents of Englishwomen, who proudly boast that they are suffragettes, have arrived at Havre,

CROWN PRINCESS CECILIE OF GERMANY.

France, for service with the English army. Some are qualified as telegraphers, others for telephone work, others as messengers. Others are to serve as chauffeurs.

A letter found on a German prisoner taken at Neuve Chapelle contained the passage:

"Magdeburg. 28-2-15.—Several battalions of suffragettes have landed at Havre. There are 800 women in each battalion.

"I want to warn you to be very careful when you meet them. Don't let them scratch out your eyes, and, above all, don't let them capture you. That would shame you before the whole world."

Germany's first woman army doctor to be given charge of a military hospital was Dr. Elisabeth Reinicke. She wears the uniform and the other insignia of her rank and enjoys all the dignities pertaining to it.

Five military hospitals have been equipped and staffed entirely by Englishwomen. In two other hospitals more than half of the doctors are women.

Mrs. McKenna Makes Bullseyes.

In an old railway carriage on a sidetrack in France, not far from the firing line, from 7 p. m. to 8 a. m. members of the British Women Emergency corps hand out soup, chocolate, coffee and milk to men on their way from the trenches.

The women of this corps wear a smart uniform, and among them are some of the most fashionable set in London. Every day they practice rifle shooting at a miniature range in the basement of a club in Piccadilly. Mrs. Reginald McKenna, wife of the British home secretary, is one of the crack shots. The other day she made three successive bullseyes.

More than 35,000 women have already registered themselves for special war service in England since the call made by the government on March 17.

The women employed on government contract work are paid the same piece rates as men. Women willing to undertake dairy or agricultural work get a fortnight's training in agricultural colleges, with $5 a week as a living allowance.

Are Aids In Camp.

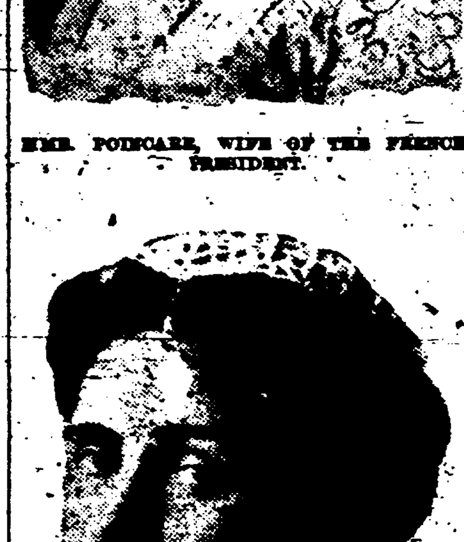
Throughout England a woman's volunteer reserve has been formed for [illegible] military duties as telegraphing, [illegible] writing, motoring and [illegible] cooking. The colonel in chief is the new Marchioness of Londonderry.

They are being taught the use of rifle and revolver, the art of signaling, scouting and map drawing and even how to dig trenches. Regiments of them swinging through the streets have become a familiar spectacle in London, Manchester and Liverpool and the other big cities.

The Hon. Mrs. Evelina Haverfield, daughter of an earl and descendant of one of George Washington's staff officers, has trained a corps of 200 women to assist in the cavalry remount department.

The girl guides is another big corps organized in England after the system and rules of the boy scouts. They make the signal flags for use on the coast, do sewing of all sorts, mainly for the boy scouts, who are being used now as patrols, and in costume are a cross between sailors from "Pinafore" and inmates of a girls' orphan asylum.

MME. POINCARE, WIFE OF THE FRENCH PRESIDENT.



CZARINA OF RUSSIA.

Run Trolley Cars.

In London the woman police volunteers are familiar sights on the streets.

Women street car conductors are being tried in Glasgow. The uniform includes a neat blue skirt and coat edged with gold braid. They work only four hours a day and are paid the same wages as men—$6.25 to $9 a week.

Hamburg is to install women as conductors on the street cars, so that the men may be free to go to war. Berlin already has a number of women car conductors.

The Women's National service is active in Berlin. It holds many public meetings to remind housewives of their duty to conserve Germany's food resources. All the meetings are full to overflowing.

Royal women are also sharing the burdens.

Few of the European royalties have had a more anxious time in the war than the Crown Princess Cecilie of Germany, wife of the heir to the throne. She has frequently been at the front to cheer her husband and recently presented him with their fifth child and first daughter. The crown prince hastened to Berlin from the battle line, but could be at her side only a few hours.

Queen, a Pathetic Victim.

The Czarina Alexandra Fedorovna and two of her four daughters have passed examinations as trained nurses and with scores of titled Russian women are working shoulder to shoulder with the daughters of the humblest citizens.

The Grand Duchess Olga, sister of the czar, is a sister in a field hospital, taking her turn day and by night in the hardest routine work, in receiving the wounded, removing their blood stained clothes and heavy boots, bathing the wounds, assisting at operations and sharing in the work of the wards.

Queen Victoria of Sweden is one of the most pathetic victims of the indirect consequences of the war. She is a daughter of the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden. Until the war broke out it was little to her that she was a German, but now she has quarreled with her husband because he will not side with the kaiser. The breach is so serious that the queen has decided to return to her mother's home at Karlsruhe, and it is doubted if she will ever return to Sweden. She is dying of tuberculosis.

Women have taken the places of all the grooms in the famous Duryea racing stables, near Paris.

Women have insisted even to death to go to the front with their soldier husbands. The most pathetic case was that of the wife of Captain Jean Herail of the French cavalry. When she refused to leave after her husband had been told he would be cashiered if she stayed he shot her rather than let her degrade their name. He has just been acquitted at his court martial.

"K. of K.'s" Tart Telegram.

What might have ended in a similar tragedy was recently averted by Lord Kitchener. "K. of K." heard that a distinguished and recently married officer was being visited by his wife at his headquarters in the field.

"One of you must come home," Lord Kitchener wired.

But women have also fought. Among the wounded German prisoners at the hospital at Warsaw seven women were discovered whose wounds showed that they had been in bayonet action. Four of them died.

Found among the wounded transported to Moscow was a Russian girl of sixteen, Alexander Shirobova, who fought for three months without betraying her sex.

Helen Choba of the Kuban Cossacks went as a trooper with the full knowledge and permission of the authorities. She could beat most men of her age at feats of horsemanship and sword play.

QUEEN VICTORIA OF SWEDEN.

Tomiloffskaya, a Russian colonel's daughter of twenty-one, donned a man's uniform, distinguished herself in fights in East Prussia and was three times wounded. She led bands of men in scout service and intercepted a German telegram of intention to attack the Russians.

Peasant Woman Is Brave.

Twelve-year-old Rosa Zenoch, an Austrian girl, carried water for twelve days to German soldiers in the trenches near her home until one foot was torn away by shrapnel.

A peasant woman, Jalina, on the East Prussian frontier, made it a practice to supply both Russians and Austrians with drinking water. At 12 o'clock each day she appeared between the firing lines, driving a decrepit old horse hitched to a water cart flying the Red Cross. At her appearance both sides ceased firing. Both Russians and Austrians then sent one soldier each at a time to fetch a bucket of water. When the water barrel was empty Jalina bowed to both sides and drove away.

Marie Kurpyeva, a Russian volunteer aviator, has received from the czar the cross of St. George for daring work on the Carpathian front.

They Want to Fly.

Mme. Jeanne Pallier, who holds licenses as an aviator and a chauffeur and is now forming a woman's automobile club in Paris, has appealed to Mme. Poincare, wife of the President of France, to aid her in persuading the French government to let women help in the army as fliers and auto drivers.

Among the 200 members of the new club are the Duchesse d'Uzes, who was the first woman to obtain a chauffeur's license in France; Jean Catulle Mendes, Helene Dutrieu, Louise Abbema and Marie Marvingt.

In recognition of the devotion of Lady Ralph Paget, Red Cross worker, Uskub, Serbia, has decided to rename its finest street after her.

Lady Paget, wife of Sir Ralph Spencer Paget, a member of the British diplomatic service, is a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Paran Stevens of New York.

With the hope that they may help to end the strife the Woman's Peace party in America is having Euripides' "Trojan Women" played as a peace sermon in cities throughout the United States.

Points for Mothers

Regarding Environment.

A study of sound educational principles shows that the greatest perils as well as the greatest opportunities present themselves largely during A B C age and that therefore a careful study must be made of all requirements when providing a child's environment.

Specialists point out that at the start every child is greatly handicapped. Therefore he should be so nourished that every part of him works with a minimum amount of friction. We must rid ourselves of the idea that the youngest child requires the teacher of the least ability and skill. This is a viciously harmful idea. If children are wisely directed in the beginning there will be less cause for complaint afterward, less cause for men like Herbert Spencer to condemn the method upon which the advancement of the community rests.

Seguin tells us that we must educate the study of the senses, train the faculty of speech, the art of receiving, storing and expressing impressions, which is the natural gift of infants, and then we shall not need books to fill up the emptiness of our teaching until the child is at least seven years old.

If the education of the senses is neglected all after education partakes of a haziness, an insufficiency, which it is impossible to cure. Here, then, is a chain of reasoning that mothers and teachers of the very young child cannot escape. Examine the Montessori plan or Hillyer's or any one of the methods based upon the fundamental principles advanced by Froebel, Seguin—indeed by educators that reach back to the beginning of all things—and you will find in every instance that the greatest reliance is placed upon the sense training accompanying these methods. These students of education grasped the underlying principles and then worked out their own methods for action.

Night Terrors Are Serious.

Night terrors are due to fault in the nervous system which makes it easily excited by any slight irritation, even though that irritation be in some remote part of the body. The child awakens suddenly with violent screaming and gives abundant evidence of great fear. This may be repeated night after night or at less frequent intervals. Night terrors usually attack children between the ages of three and eight years, and in nearly every instance the attack comes on within two or three hours after the child has retired.

The face of the child shows the extreme terror which he is in. His eyes are widely opened and generally fixed upon one object. Sometimes a clew is given to what frightened the child by his crying out the name of the thing or person. During the attack the child will cling to others for protection. This period of extreme terror lasts usually only a few minutes, but it may be prolonged to nearly half an hour. Following this is a period during which the child recognizes persons and his surroundings, but for a considerable time he remains in a state of mild fear and dreads to be left alone.

Night terrors should never be allowed to continue untreated. They are indications that there is a serious fault in the nervous system, and this should receive the most careful and thorough consideration.

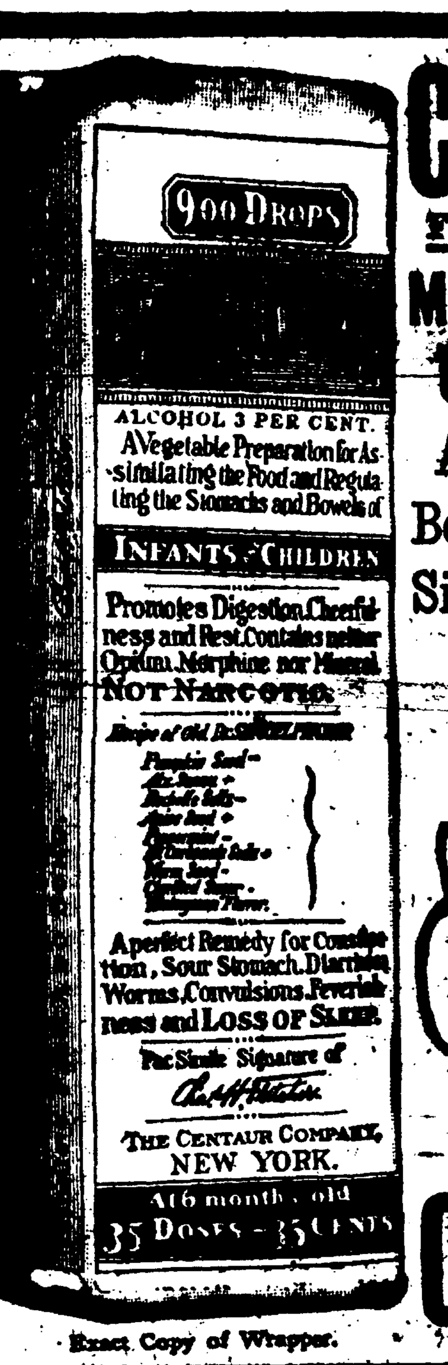
American Toys.

To take the place of the lead soldier made in Germany one firm has made a steel soldier very durable and quite neutral, his breeches Magyar, his coat English, his helmet German. He is cheap, too, the little set of fifteen infantrymen and three cavalrymen costing 25 cents as against the price for the imported pewter set of soldiers of $1. The sale of the paper and wooden soldier has gone up from the rate of 3,000,000 a year before the war to 5,000,000 since.

The sales of toy shotguns have also increased. In one firm the employees have been increased from 60 to 180, and they work in day and night shifts. This firm made not only guns, but war games. Their history is interesting because it is so recent. They are an adaptation of the peaceful map game made by the firm before the war, a game of the shortest routes for parcel post, or a game to be won by locating the capitals of the states or by naming rivers and harbors.

Cruelty a Trying Fault.

One of the most trying faults to combat in nervous children is cruelty. Fortunately it is not a common one. The difficulties of its early eradication are made possible by the many examples that the child sees of what is apparently deliberate cruelty carried on by adults. He cannot see why it is not wrong to trap and kill mice, to kill fowl, to use worms as bait or to catch flies. He justifies his own acts by those of others. This is what makes the problem a particularly hard one to solve, and it requires the most patient handling to set the child right. Single acts of cruelty in the child need not be a cause for alarm, but persistency in such acts or their occurrence in later childhood should attract attention to both physical and psychical needs.



Exact Copy of Wrapper.
C... For ... Mot... Ge... Al... Bea... Sig...

COTTONS ARE POPULAR.

And Can Be Found In Prices to Suit All Incomes.

Never have there been prettier small patterns in cotton than are found this year, nor are they expensive, since they are found in every material from 25 cent dimities to $2 and $3 embroidered chiffons.

Canton crapes in tiny flower designs, voiles of various prices and even our old favorite, dotted swiss and polka dotted mousselines, may all be used for dainty little frocks, of which every one needs two or three, whether one remains at home or goes away for the hot season. The sensible woman who must consider the laundry selects one that will not soil easily, a well covered design or else plain white. She relies on what will always give her a fresh looking frock, not too elaborate, one that does not need to be laundered more than once.

Some women always send their wash dresses to a cleaner for the first laundering in order to set the colors and keep the shape of the skirt, but any of the materials should stand the home tubbing if the dress is first dipped in salted water and not hung in the sun to dry or sprinkled and folded up until ready to iron.

These sheer cottons and light silks stand much more fullness and flouncing than is possible in heavier fabrics, and milady can revel in billowy ruffles and gathers and puffings to her heart's content when hot days come.

Military Boot.

The severe shoe is the exception except for outing wear, and the military finish has the feminine cast that reminds one of the "fille du regiment" or some other light opera heroine, with its dainty patent leather finishing and high heel and tassel which are found even on the ties of the tennis shoe.

Grim Comedy.

A certain young actress was constantly irritated by the pompous behavior of the actor-manager in whose company she was playing.

"Now, Miss Blank," said the great one, "you'll have an opportunity to show your talents in another direction. I've cast you for a dandy part, small, but 'fat.' And you'll have a chance to study me in a new role. You've never seen me do farce comedy, have you?"

"Yes, I have," contradicted Miss Blank; "I've seen your Macbeth."—London Mail.

POCKETS ARE "IN."

As for pockets, they are "in." Here is a point for all women to consider in connection with the pocket question: Do not be persuaded into permitting them to be placed where they cannot be easily reached.

At present they are boldly placed where every one may see them and are more decorative than practical, but as soon as the polonaise modes really make their presence felt you will miss seeing the pockets. It does not follow they won't be [illegible], but they will be hid, as they were when they were modish before, underneath the polonaise draperies or within the folds of numberless puffs.

For the tailleur of dressy proclivities the pocketed skirt eliminates the possibility of a pocketed coat. And with the plaited skirt, of course, the pockets appear on the coat only.

New vogues for these also introduce braided effects which simulate pockets and flaps, too, for skirts or suits made [illegible].

POPULARITY WEEK CONTINUOUS 2 to 10:30 QUIRK THEATRE

SIX OF THE GREATEST PHOTOPLAYS OF $2 NEW YORK PRODUCTIONS EVER OFFERED IN ONE WEEK

MONDAY
WILLIAM FARNUM IN BERNSTEIN'S "SAMSON"

TUESDAY
ROBERT HILLIARD'S GREAT SUCCESS "A FOOL THERE WAS"
Featuring THEDA BARA and ALL STAR CAST

WEDNESDAY
HALL CAINE'S Superb Love Story—8 parts "THE CHRISTIAN"
Featuring EDITH STOREY and EARLE WILLIAMS

THURSDAY
DOROTHY DONNELLY IN "THE THIEF"
DANIEL FROHMAN'S N. Y. Lyceum Theatre Success

FRIDAY
CHAS. RICHMAN IN "THE IDLER"

SATURDAY
"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"
with CLAIRE WHITNEY and STUART HOLMES

NO CHANGE IN PRICES

ENLARGED SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DAVENPORT SAYS BARNES FIDDLED

Witnesses at Libel Trial Testify Organization Was Used to Hinder Hughes

That William Barnes, speaking with the mouth of a political Nero, stood in the doorway of the Senate chamber in Albany on the night of June 30, 1910, and fiddled while the Republican party was being destroyed within, was the charge made in Syracuse yesterday by Frederick W. Davenport, who was a Hughes leader in the fight for direct primaries at that time.

In a day of the Barnes-Roosevelt libel action, already marked by sensational revelations, Mr. Davenport made many spicy contributions as he told of the famous fights waged by the little group of Hughes Senators to prevent the passage of the Mead-Phillips bill. And as he proceeded with his narrative, warming up more and more, and exuding righteousness, political and moral, with every word, the Roosevelt idolators who crowd the court room daily almost lost control of themselves.

One, indeed, did meet with disaster, and it was no less a person than Charles H. Duell, Jr., the young man who contributed the Whitman letter of last February to the evidence yesterday. Mr. Duell brought his hands together with a resouunding smack and was promptly put out of the court room by Jupstice Andrews.

John M. Bowers, chief counsel for Mr. Roosevelt, put on all of his star witnesses, and by the time court adjourned had reached the State printing scandals, which, it is understood, will complete the case of the defence. In some of these witnesses the Roosevelt side was bitterly disappointed, for much that they could tell and were eager to tell was ruled out by Justice Andrews.

For instance, John A. Hennessy, with his little black book, was prepared to take a trip through what there was of the Sulzer administration and through the fusion campaign of 1913 in New York city, but he did not get three minutes on the witness stand, as Justice Andrews ruled that counsel for both sides must make stipulations on these matters, as he did not purpose to sit on this case forever, and so the name of Mr. Hennessy only adorns the record of the greatest libel action in history to the extent that what he found out about corruption in the State departments is conceded, with the addenda, slipped in by Wm. M. Ivins, that it was during democratic control of the State that he discovered these things.

Through such witnesses as Mr. Davenport, Harvey D. Hinman, and Josiah T. Newcomb, Mr. Bowers, however, did reveal Mr. Barnes as a boss of bosses, with an unbreakable influence over the Republican machine, which he had used to thwart the efforts of Governor Hughes to obtain direct primary legislation for the State of New York. He showed him in barter and sale with the Democrats on legislation and through the testimony of Loyal W. France proved that he had threatened the younger Republicans of the State if they did not cease their support of the political principle that Governor Hughes was advocating. [illegible] Roosevelt day, but not as good a one as had been expected.

Justice Andrews ruled that the matter could go in and that evidence could be offered concerning the printing situation in Albany city and county as well as [illegible] State.

Michael V. [illegible], of the Argus Company of Albany, was called to the witness stand. Mr. Dolan said that the Argus Company had been doing State printing for as far back as 1869. The Brandow Company and the J. B. Lyon Company, he said, also did State and city printing in Albany.

The Journal Company, he said, which is owned by Mr. Barnes, had contracts for much of the printing, but it had no printing plant and his company generally did the printing for it.

The Argus Company, he said, had had the legislative printing only twice in fifteen years, and in 1912 it sublet the entire contract to the J. B. Lyon Company. Mr. Bowers called attention to several bids made by the Argus Company where, if successful, the bidder would have been a loser.

"Oh, on some things we bid to lose and on others we bid to win," said Mr. Dolan.

Mr. Bowers brought out that in the handling of charters, calendars and bills the company kept its type standing.

"So when an amendment is made all you do is to make a slight change, isn't it?"

"That is true."

"And when you do that do you charge for full composition?"

"Why, certainly," said Mr. Dolan, as though such a question surprised him.

EXPORTS OF COTTON DECREASE 50 PER CENT

Wheat and Flour Nearly Trebled In Last Fiscal Year.

Washington.—The value of American cotton exports has been cut in half and the shipments of wheat and flour have nearly trebled during the eight months of the present fiscal year, ending with February, which period embraces the first seven months of the European war, when compared with the corresponding period of the year before.

The value of the cotton exports for the eight month period ending with last February was $243,800,000 against $498,200,000 for the same months of the year previous, showing a loss of $255,000,000. The wheat and flour exports jumped from $106,200,000 to $288,000,000, a gain of $181,800,000. Meat and dairy products gained only $11,600,000, increasing from $102,700,000 to $114,300,000. The value of horses showed a big gain in comparison with the year before, the increase being from $1,800,000 to $[illegible],600,000.

A comparison of the value of the principal exports during the eight months of the 1914 fiscal year and the 1915 fiscal year, the latter period embracing the first seven months of the war, as furnished by the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, is as follows:

Commodity.	1914.	1915.
Cotton	[illegible]	[illegible]
Wheat and flour	[illegible]	[illegible]
Meat and dairy products	[illegible]	[illegible]
Horses	[illegible]	[illegible]
Cotton manufactures	[illegible]	[illegible]
Harness and saddles	[illegible]	[illegible]
Cars and carriages, all	[illegible]	[illegible]
Chemicals, drugs, etc.	17,[illegible]	[illegible]
Upper leather	[illegible]	[illegible]
Explosives	[illegible]	12,[illegible]
Cottonseed oil	[illegible]	[illegible]
Commercial automobiles	[illegible]	14,[illegible]
Boots, shoes, slippers	[illegible]	[illegible]
Woolen manufactures	[illegible]	[illegible]
Sole leather	[illegible]	[illegible]
Refined sugar	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Copper and manufactures	[illegible]	[illegible]
Lumber and wood manufactures	[illegible]	[illegible]
Agricultural implements	[illegible]	[illegible]
Mineral oils	[illegible]	[illegible]
Naval stores	[illegible]	[illegible]
Passenger automobiles	[illegible]	[illegible]
Coal	[illegible]	[illegible]
Iron and steel manufactures	171,[illegible]	[illegible]
Electrical machinery	17,700,000	[illegible]
Tobacco and manufactures	[illegible]	[illegible]

FOX HOUNDS HAULED FOOD.

Larder Empty, Horses Unshod, Dogs Filled the Gap.

Camden, Tenn.—John Hundley, a farmer, awoke one morning recently to be advised by his wife of a serious deficit in the pantry—neither flour nor meal. Hundley's horses were not shod, the sleet and ice were too rough for the animals, the family's strong box was empty, and the farmer resided six miles from town.

But John met the emergency. He constructed a large sled hitched nine fox hounds to it, loaded on five bushels of stock peas and hit the trail for Camden. After a couple of hours' rest Hundley returned home, the dogs pulling a bag of meal and a barrel of flour through the snow.

OFFICIAL WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris.—The War Office made the following official communication:

In Belgium, to the north of Ypres, our attacks have progressed on the whole front on a depth varying from 500 metres (about 1600 feet) to one kilometre (two-thirds of a mile.

He have taken two successive lines of trenches and captured a great many prisoners.

The correspondent of the Associated rPess inspected today the summit of Hartmanns-Weilerkopf, which the enemy has not attacked for the last two days.

"One of our airships has bombarded the rialroad and sheds in the region of Valenciennes.

One of our aeroplanes, which was destroyed by an explosion, fell inside the enemy's lies."

"We made progress yesterday to the north of Ypres, in the region of Steenstraete.

"The city of Rheims received 500 shells, of which many were of an incendiary nature. These missiles started several fires, bu it was found possible to circumscribe them and to put them out quickly.

"In the Champagne district the enemy shelled one of our ambulances, wounding a physician.

"German war ships have been reported at large off the coast of Belgium.

"Dunkirk yesterday received nineteen shells of large calibre. Twenty persons were killed and forty-five wounded. Some houses were destroyed.

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—An official communication issued by the War Office says:

"On the wholef ront to the west of the Niemen yesterday we closely pressed the German advance guard.

"During the evening of the 28th, near Ossowetz, the enemy attacked our positions in the region of the village of Sosnia, but was repulsed with heavy losses.

"Enemy attacks, which were barren of results, took place between the rivers Pissa and Skwa, north of Vakhi, and on the right bank of the Omulew, and continued all day the 28th. The enemy yesterday, covered by the fire of his heavy artillery in the sector between the Pissa and the Skwa, fell back toward his old trenche..

"Near the village of Jednorojetz on the evening of the 28th the Germans suffered great losses as the result of four of their attacks which failed. Near Starojaia German forces which took the effensive were driven back to their old positions.

"On the left bank of the Vistula small bodies of the enemy made fruitless attempts to advance.

GERMAN

London. — The official statement from German Army Headquarters today is as follows:

"In the Champagne district, north of Le Mesnil, the French attempt to win back their former positions resulted in failure. A whole group of fortifications 1,000 yards wide and 300 yards deep has been reversed in its entirety and is being maintained.

"Reports from the Dardanelles pay tribute to the bravery and enthusiasm of the Turkish troops. In the first battle at Kum Kaleh the Turks did [illegible] my with the bayonet.

"Forty war ships bombarded Seddul-Bahr. While this battle was in progress the Turks captured a large quantity of rifles and ammunition.

"At Gallipoli the Turks fought uninterruptedly for two days against the constant attack of the enemy without showing fatigue.

"On the eastern and western fronts the situation, generally speaking, is unchanged. In Russian Poland and the Carpathians there have been lively artillery duels, in which our fire was very effective. In the Opor Valley the enemy, after many hours of artillery fire, vainly attempted a night advance against the heights held by our infantry."

O'GORMAN REFUSES SUFFRAGISTS' APPEAL

New York, May 1.—To a body of women rpresenting a congressional union for woman suffrage, whom he received at his office, United States Senator James A. O'Gorman said that he would not support the Bristow-Mondell amendment in Congress for national woman suffrage.

The Senator said that while he had great respect for the women of the country who were devoting their time and energy to the movement, he could not, on principle, support an amendment which would deprive the states of the regulation of suffrage and confer it upon the Federal government.

"I cannot favor this compulsory method," Senator O'Gorman said. "It violates every principle of home rule or local self government. This question, in my judgment, should be settled by each state for itself. I am also opposed to unnecessary changes in the Constitution and I shoul consider it my duty to oppose any amendment looking to that end that is not imperatively demanded by the people of my state."

EDWARD D. EASTON DEAD

New York, Saturday.—Edward D. Easton, president of the Columbia Graphone Sompanyñ and pioneer in the development of the talking machine, is dead at his home in Arcola, N. J., of a complication of diseases. He was 59 years old.

When the talking machine was in the earl ystages of its development, Mr. Easton gave up hisp rofession of law and organized the Columbia Phonograph Company. Four years later, in 1893, he became president of the consolidation known as the Columbia Graphone Company, a position which he occupied until his death. Mr. Easton was formerly a newspaper man.

BABY BASKET FOR McADOO

Washington, Saturday.—A new baby basket has arrived at the White House and was hastily forwarded to the home of the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. McAdoo, the latter the youngest daughter of the President. The new baby basket is of white wicker to match the fittings in the southwest bedroom, where the young son of Mr. and rMs. Francis Bowes Sayre was born in February.

"I got the wrong address," the driver of the delivery wagon explained. "This here things goes to 1709 Massachusetts avenue. Ain't that Secretary McAdoo's home?"

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your merchants for National Red Stamps and insisting on getting them with everything you buy. Every Red Stamp [illegible] will be redeemed by our merchants [illegible] Merchandise, Dry Goods, Clothing, S[illegible] Books and Free Stamps from any of [illegible] MONEY ON THE SPECIAL PRICES SATURDAY at [illegible] merchants.

FREE COUPON

This Coupon good for 30 Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 8th.

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP
Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear
106 Oneida St. Phone 3177

A. ALDERMAN
Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes
214 West First St.

J. BELASKI
GROCERIES
[illegible]4 West First St.

M. H. JOYCE
The New West Side Grocery
518 West Third St. Phone [illegible]

H. C. DANN & SON
City Meat Market
High Grade Meats at the right prices.
11 South 2d St. Phone 42

JOHN CRAHAN
GROCERIES
124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

JAMES J. KENYON
GROCERIES
518 South 1st St. Phone 3299

J. R. WARD
GROCERIES—Open Evenings
314 Seneca St. Phone 4450

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

Merchants wishing to learn more about this Wonderful Business Boosting Plan, call Mr. Beynon, at McDonald's New York Shop, Phone 3177

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY

WEST THIRD STREET AND BROADWAY

Announce they have joined The Greatest of All Profit-Sharing Plans, and will give FREE 10 National Merchandise Stamps Sat., May 1, to everyone entering their store. [illegible] quainted with their Courteous Clerks and Money-Saving Prices on Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes, Clothing, Trunks, Suit Cases, Furniture, House Furnishings, Wall Paper, Hardware, Stoves, Paints, Oils, Brushes, Garden Hose, Etc. A Carload of Screen Doors and Windows.

WATCH PAPERS FOR BARGAIN PRICES AND FREE STAMPS

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 115 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | MONDAY, MAY 3, 1915 | Price One Cent

Mayor Fox Indicated He Dislikes Quizzing Upon Subject of Bill Providing for Payment of Salaries to Future Mayors and Aldermen; Launches Irrelevant Talk, Keeping Away From Subject Pertinent to Meeting.

SYMPATHY FOR BILL'S PASSAGE TURNED INTO COLD-STONE CHAGRIN

A verbal battle of the most sanguinary nature was waged at the Chamber of Commerce rooms Saturday evening, with Mayor Fox arrayed one one side and seemingly the entire directorate of the Chamber of Commerce on the other. Enough verbal ammunition was spent to elect an entire Prohibition administration in 1916, and, although the cannonade was frightful, there were no casualties reported.

The meeting was instigated by several members of the directorate and the city government committee, who wished to get some information regarding the Brown bill, which has just been passed by the Legislature. As everyone knows, this bill would amend the charter of the city of Fulton, generally follows: 1. Salaries, if the council deemd it necessary, for the Mayor and the Council. 2. The creation of the position of police captain if the council sees fit. 3. Empowering the council to borrow a sum not to succeed $20,000, in the case of an emergency, and if the sum does not exceed $5,000 it may be added to the annual tax levy. 4. Licensing of poolrooms and bowling alleys.

J. Harry Howe was chairman of the meeting and at nine o'clock the session was called to order. Mayor Fox had been invited to attend, he was on hand promptly.

Mr. Howe explained that the meeting had called for the purpose of discussing the Brown bill and he asked the Mayor if he would like to tell the members of the committee anything about the bill. The Mayor promptly rose and said, "Gentlemen, I am not here to be quizzed," and in a few words told his hearers that he was on hand to listen. Mr. Howe replied, "In that event, Mr. Mayor, you would probably be interested to know just what the members of this committe think of this bill?. The Mayor, replying in the affirmative, Mr. Howe proceeded to ask each director and committeeman present his sentiments.

Director Butts was first in line. He stated that he had not heard a great deal about the bill and consequently was not informed sufficiently to give an opinion. He was gived a copy of the bill and proceeded to study it.

J. R. Sullivan, director, was the next to be questioned. Mr. Sullivan said that he had heard nothing but opposition to the salary provisioin in his district on the West Side, and that he was opposed to the salary provision.

J. J. Morrill gave voice to practically the same sentiments, adding that the city was not in any condition to pay further salaries. He said he stood as opposed to the bill.

W. J. Hartnett distinguished himself by saying that the bill, as far as he could see, was a good one, and that he approved of the salary provision as it would draw good men into office. He did not going into detail.

Frederick G. Spencer came out flatly with the statement that he was opposed to the bill. He said it was a reflection upon the civic pride of the city to say that salaries must be paid in order to get decent and capable citizens to serve as city officials. He asked the assemblage where the bill had originated, who drew it up and when there was any demand for it. He spoke of the salary bill of some years past which slipped through without the knowledge of the taxpayers until it was too late, and advised that the Chamber create a precendent in this instance which would prove conclusively that any such measure was distasteful to the taxpayers of the city for some time to come. He spoke of the financial condition of the city at the present time and said that in his opinion, he salary provision had been incorporated in the bill in the hope that the bill would slide through carrying the salaries with it.

L. W. Emerick was the next director to be given an opportunity to speak regarding the bill. Mr. Emerick appeared to be undecided for a time, but finally opinioned that salaries to one city department and not to all other would not be fair, and as salaries for all was an impossibility, he stood as opposed to the salary provision.

H. L. Paddock also said that it would not be wise to discriminate, and stood as opposed to the salary provision.

[illegible]

I. Achillei came out against the bill in very few words. He said that he opposed the bill for reasons already expressed and it was unnecssary to repeat them.

Mr. Butts reached the same conclusion.

When the final result was noted, Mr. Hartnett was the only one present who favored the bill.

The airing of the opinions of the directors and committee members did not seem to agree with the Mayor very well and he was visibly agitated when he arose at Chairman's Howe's request, to give his reasons for favoring the bill. To the surpcise of all present, he

(Continued Last Column This Page)

"Inquirer" Reports the Meeting for The Evening Times, also Giving His Honor One More Opportunity to Explain a Few Things.

Editor Evening Times:

"Whom the Gods would destroy, they first make mad." The Mayor was invited last Saturday evening to meet some Chamber of Commerce officers and explain the merits of his salary bill. It is very reliably reported that he at first refused to say a word when called on, and simply said he wasn't there to be quizzed. After the officers had about unanimously declared against his salary scheme, the Mayor's "bile" became agitated and he spoke. His speech wasn't an argument for his salary, but a tirade of cheap personal and political abuse of some of the persons present. It was largely a string of personalities and insults. It threw a flood of light on his bill and his official make-up.

It proved one of the best items in favor of commission government that he could have furnished. It proved that he can talk. Perhaps some day he will tell the taxpayers about those secret sessions with the assessors and the illegal use of taxpayers' money to pay for banquets. Perhaps some day he will condescend to inform us the result of his "expert" accountant's examination of the city books and records. Why is this covered up? The taxpayers paid the bill for it.

"Whom the Gods would destroy, they first make mad."

INQUIRER.

Police Department's Eye Was Soon Upon Man With a Mania

Merritt Miller, who was arrested Saturday night charged with the theft of a motorcycle owned by Chelsea Dann of West 1st st., was arraigned in police court this morning.

When the man was arrested after some good work on the part of the police, he denied taking the machine, but said that he was present and watched the others steal it. After a grilling examination, however, he finally came out with the truth and admitted doing the job himself. He said he had no accomplices. He was held for the Grand Jury, charged with burglery in the third degree and grand larcency in the second degree.

Miller has been arrested before and seems to be afflicted with a mania for stealing things without apparent reason. He is a painter by trade and was working at the time he stole the machine. He seems to be seized with a desire to steal something occasionally just for the fun of it and the police believe that he can be connected with some of the other burglaries which have occurred in the down-town section of late.

[illegible]

Miller entered Dann's garage last Friday night and uncoupling the motorcycle from the side car, he rode off with the machine. He abandoned the machine at the Fort Stanwix canning factory when the gasoline and Presto tank gave out and hid it in a shed there, where it was found Saturday morning by the police. Miller heard that the machine had been discovered and promptly shook the dust of the town from his feet, but he was captured that evening by Detectives Brannigan and Sweet and Chief Dyer at Martville.

SALARY BILL DECLARED A BLOT UPON CIVIC PRIDE OF CITIZENSHIP

did not advance a single argument in favor of the bill but he launched into a scathing personal denunciation of Messrs. Spencer and Howe. He said that Mr. Spencer was opposing the bill, not because it would cost the city money, but because it carried a clause which would compel poolrooms and bowling alleys to be licensed, and as Mr. Spencer was the proprietor of an establishment of that class, he was opposed to the bill. The Mayor consumed a great deal of time in reiterating this statement and saying nothing further in defense of the bill. He said that the city charter was in a tangled condition because of the work of the charter commissioners who drew it up, and here again he accused Mr. Spencer of being the prime mover. He said that the charter commission had allowed salaries to some boards and he could not see why all should not get salaries. Although the question had been asked, the Mayor did not explain where the bill originated or who drafted it. The Mayor stated that Mr. Spencer had told Chief Dyer that the poolroom clause was not legally enforceable, and he said in addition that the bill had been purposely misrepresented to the great majority of the people, because the council could give or withhold salaries as it saw fit.

All these things and many more did he say which are not written here, but boiled down his talk was simply a personal abuse, amounting almost to insult. In the course of his talk he leveled his finger at Mr. Howe and said, "You did not oppose the salary bill that went through when the Democrats were in power." Mr. Howe interrupted the Mayor long enough to say that he did not remember having a chance to oppose the bill mentioned as it was too late to oppose it when he got wind of it.

In the course of his remarks regarding poolrooms, Mayor Fox turned to H. L. Paddock and said, "Mr. Paddock, you wouldn't want your boys to be going in those places, would you?"

Mr. Paddock replied suavely, "Well, Mayor, you see, I have no boys."

"But if you did have?" persisted the Mayor, amidst some subdued tittering, and Mr. Paddock averred finally that he didn't think he would allow it.

After the Mayor had finished his harangue, Mr. Spencer was allowed the floor. Taking up the Mayor's accusation regarding the poor work of the charter commission Mr. Spencer stated that he was not working on the section of the charter mentioned, but on the City Court section and he stood willing to accept just criticism for any mistakes in that section. He admitted that he had advised a client in the regular course of his business as an attorney, that the provision of the charter regarding poolroom licenses was not legally enforceable and that the payment of the license fee was not compulsory. He admitted also that he had told Chief Dyer to that effect, and that he had further advised the chief to make no arrests of the poolroom owner. He told the assemblage that salaries were allowed two or three boards under the original charter but only where the state law required it, as in the case of the plumbing board and civil service board. He made the words "original charter" emphatic, as he said the charter had been mauled and twisted by different administrations into a document quite different from the original. He said the commission had been very careful to cut down the expenses as much as possible as it was their purpose to run the two villages as one, incurring practically the same expense that each had incurred separately hitherto.

In speaking of the Brown bill, Mr. Spencer said that he did not believe conditions were such among right-thinking, decent and intelligent men in this city that they would have to be coaxed into office by dangling a salary before their eyes. He said that such a statement as had been made regarding the necessity of salaries if good men were to be found for the offices, was an insult to the civic pride of the city. "Such conditions are not in existence in other cities of this size," said Mr. Spencer, "and I am sure they are not here. I hope that the time has not arived when he shall have to pay men to take office here and pay them to give a little service to their own city, once in a lifetime."

[illegible]

lowed. A stenographer at hand took down every word uttered pro and con, and it should certainly make interesting reading.

Chairman Howe arose and stated that the sentiment of the meeting with the exception of Mayor Fox and Mr. Hartnett, seemed to be in opposition to the salary provision of the bill. "For that reason," said Mr. Howe, "we must stand as opposed to the bill in its entirety." It had been explained that the bill would either have to be accepted in full or rejected in full and it was not practical for the governor to veto part and approve part. The meeting was then adjourned, the session having lasted two hours, setting a new record for ginger and activity, as well as results.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 East First Street, Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 46

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
H. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3, 1879.

May 3, 1915

Opinions

The Neighbors' Chickens

It is a sad fact that most neighbors are not of such a just temper that you can go to them and tell them frankly that their hens are uprooting your sweet peas or that their rooster wakes you up at 3.30 o'clock every morning, especially Sunday morning, when you try to sleep until 8 o'clock. Most neighbors in such a case will, we regret to say, cease to love you in a neighborly way, will make unkind remarks about you behind your back, and may even make them to your shrinking face.

A different spirit prevails in the thriving burg of Stevens Point, Wis., According to a story that comes all the way from there, a citizen had the temerity to tell a neighbor that his chickens were digging up his seed as fast as he could plant it. The neighbor could not believe such an atrocious charge against his thoroughbreds, so the complainant resorted to strategy to convince him. He employed the ancient device of running thread through kernels of corn and attaching cards to the thread, and the chicks went home that night carrying in their beaks such placards as these:

"I have just been scratching in Mr. Sackett's yard."

"I am a naughty chicken."

"I have been trespassing."

"I am a feathered bandit."

It appears that the owners of these barnyard freebooters was overcome with shame, and one is justified in believing that he went across lots to his neighbor's home and shed grateful tears on his hand as he thanked him for offering such irrefutable evidence. The presumption is that he took proper measures to stop the depredations.

In such a city as Rochester (Lyons) the method of approach differs, necessarily, from that employed in the generous West. When the chickens scratch up your sweet pea seads, or the rooster disturbs your matutinal repose you take your grievance to the authorities, and they do the rest. Of course it would be idealistic if you could pour out your heart to your neighbor, but it is far from prudent, and, since it is so, it is surely a merit of our organized communities that garden sass and the peace of the early morning are protected by such prosaic things as ordinances of the Common Council.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Perjury a Common Offense

That a vast number of witnesses in courts of law are guilty of perjury is a fact that must impress itself on anyone who gives critical attention to the evidence presented. In case after case one is morally certain that the witnesses are not only not telling all the truth, and not giving truthful answers to the questions put, but are adding falsehoods for the promotion of their interests. Charles J. Martell, a writer in Case and Comment, says that "it is a conservative averment that in two-thirds of the cases tried in court there is positive contradiction of facts," and, after discussing this statement, he adds:

In this connection it is interesting to remember that the rules of evidence at present and for centuries in the past, enforced in our courts and English courts, not only tend, in spite of the plain context of the oath, to prevent the telling of all, but permit a [illegible] has some bearing, in truth, upon the matter at issue.

There are laws against perjury, but, so far as one may observe, they are dead letters. While the oath taken in court is a solemn form, neither those who give testimony, nor the lawyers, nor the judges, appear to expect that interested witnesses will look upon it as more than a prescribed form to be lightly regarded.

Nor is it in the courts alone that we find a lack of moral sincerity. Public officials, from assessors up, assume obligations that they have little thought of fully discharging. Politicians draft party platforms that in part at least, if not largely, are built for pre-election use. Many trades unions really exact pledges that ought to be of grave import to every man who takes them, but it is probable that few are impressed with their solemnity. The ritual of fraternal organizations implies an exalted life in their members, but how many seriously strive to realize in their lives the high standards to which they subscribe? Church membership implies that the man or woman who assumes it shall try to live, with whole heart, in right relations with God and man; and some of the pledges formally taken on entering into that relationship would make the hair rise on the head of a conscientious man and cause a fearful tremor throughout his mortal frame if he gave attention to what he was doing, or did not vitiate his act by a mental reservation. What is demanded today, as always, is greater moral earnestness and sincerity in all walks of life, not only in courts of law.—Rochester Herald.

WHY NOT STOP THE ABUSES?

New York city has begun through its mayor a campaign to end the abuse of its public parks by the element who wilfully or carelessly defile the common breathing places with rubbish. While the improvement and the creation of new parks is a part of the comprehensive plan of developmnet of the new Chamber of Commerce, it is not amiss to call attention to the flagrant abuse in this city by careless and unthinking persons of the grass plots in our parks and bordering the sidewalks of mots of the city's streets.

Fulton's parks belong to the people, it is true, but many persons who use them and enjoy them treat them as if they belonged to somebody else. Fulton has a big investment of money in its parks. The money used to create and maintain them has been taken from the taxpayers' pockets, yet the throwers of rubbish (which may consist of pieces of paper, tobacco and cigarette boxes, newspapers, banana peels, etc.) are heaping insult upon the people who do care for the appearance of the city. If the abuse of our parks and the grass plots which border sidewalks is due to carelessness and ignorance rather than from maliciousness, then there should begin in the newspapers published and circulated in this city a campaign of education and enlightenment, ending with the granting of power to the Board of Public Works to enforce a regulation that would show no leniency to those persons who might defy the authorities by their failure to respect public property and care for its use.

It is indeed a maddening and sickening sight to see one's beautiful sheen of grass littered with refuse of all sorts that the thrower would not think of discarding upon the kitchen floor of his home; or, perhaps still worse, trampled into a bareness that does not indicate a blade of grass ever existed to recompense one for the expense and care bestowed upon making a lawn meet the edge of a sidewalk and curbing.

When the Board of Public Works has been invested with authority to look after the people's property—the grass plots in the parks and bordering the sidewalks, offenders, whether guilty of maliciousness or carelessness, should receive severe sentences. In the European capitals no person is allowed to throw upon the streets any form of rubbish, yet here in our naturally beautiful American towns and cities one finds nothing but the most flagrant disregard of al that decency demands.

Surely, the grass growing upon lawns and in public parks is as sacred as the hearthstone of every citizen of this or any other city, and if a natural respect for it is not inherent, then it is time to enforce in the severest manner the right amount of respect.

A Criticism

Church of the Immaculate Conception
Haines Falls, N. Y.
September 15, 1914.

E. W. Lynch Enterprises,
110 West 40th st.,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I was well pleased with "The Christian" which we showed recently [illegible] of summer visitors, including five clergymen of various denominations were present. All praised the entertainment. The photography is excellent and the story keeps one interested from start to finish.

I unhesitatingly recommend this picture.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) Wm. E. Keefe,
Pastor.

Reaching a Conclusion

"I imagine from your speech that you are a taxidermist."

"What makes you think so?"

"Principally because you [illegible]"

COST OF LIGHTING

Watertown Investigating the Subject—Comparative Costs in Cities.

The comparative cost of gas and electricity in the various cities of the State is contained in a table presented to the Common Council of Watertown in connection with a movement by Mayor Breen to have the rates charged by the Northern New York Utilities Company investigated by the Public Service Commission.

The rates in various cities follow:

	Pop.	Elect.	Gas.
Watertown	26,730	9c	$1.25
Salamanca	8,075	8c
Lockport	17,790	7½c	$1.00
Cohoes	24,709	7½c	$1.00
Dunkirk	17,221	7c
Niagara Falls	30,445	5c
Olean	14,748	5c
Amsterdam	31,267	4½c	$1.00
Auburn	34,668		$1.00
Fulton	10,480		$1.00
Mt. Vernon	30,919		$1.00
Plattsburg	11,138		$1.00
Rome	20,497	7c	$1.00

The figures were explained by Alderman Phelps by saying that where they were high the people were paying for over-capitalization and large indebtedness. The per capita cost ranged, he claimed, from $10.21 in Amsterdam to $67.19 in atertown, the highest of all.

No Cuss Words at Home.

The late Tom Reed used to tell a story of how Blaine was once defended by an old farmer from the accusation of being profane at times.

"It's distressin'," said the farmer, "how they do lie about public men. They're circulatin' a story now that Blaine swears. I know 'tain't so. My gal goes to the same school with Blaine's gal, and she's often gone home with her and eaten many a meal of victual at Blaine's house, and she tells me that she never heard Blaine speak a cuss word. Now it stands to reason that a man that can keep from [illegible]"—Los Angeles Times.

TANNER QUIET ABOUT THE SUIT

Believes Good Will Convention; Boss System May Be Eliminated

Albany, Monday.—Numerous requests for interviews have been made on the work of the Committee of which I am chairman. I shall not attempt to speak for the Committee as a whole, for we have only had a meeting on organization. But public hearings beginning on Thursday, May 6th will be held during the month of May, and as the work of this Committee will be among the most important of the Convention, the public should get a clear idea of just what will come before the Committee in order to prepare for these hearings.

After all, the public is the final judge in this matter and the amendments proposed by the Constitutional Convention will amount to nothing if not adopted by the voters on election day.

This committee, as its name implies, is "on the Governor and other State Officers, their election or appointment, tenure of office, powers and duties." Its object is to devise a scientific scheme of government under which the powers will not conflict or overlap, and to shorten the present long and complicated ballot. When we get through we should have a system of responsible government under which the Governor is the leader vested with authority commensurate with his responsibility.

Under the present system, much as we like to delude ourselves, we do not have such a government. We have a series of departments, many of which conflict with each other, some of which are answerable directly to the people, others of which are answerable to the governor who appoints them. In the end the people have the right to look to one definite person, or very small group of persons to whom they can put the question, "Have you redeemed your pledges?" If that person, who in my opinion should be the governor, has not sufficient authority it is obviously unfair to make him responsible. This principle was admirably stated by Senator Root, in his speech accepting the office of President of the Constitutional Conventions as follows: "Responsibility without power can never be justly enforced, and power without responsibility can never be duly controlled.

To use a popular phrase, there is a "twilight zone" between the various branches of the government where apparently no one is responsible. This may not be the cause of the "boss system" but it is a powerful ally to it.

It is not my intention to indicate any opinion as to the merits of the libel suit now being tried in Syracuse. It would be manifestly improper to do so, but both parties to this litigation have made the fact clear, although the construction placed upon the fact by each is different, that when Mr. Roosevelt was governor of this State there existed a situation under which the real power did not lie either in the chief executive, or in the Legislature elected by the people.

In a speech before the Young Republican Club of January 8th, 1915, before the Legislature began its session, I described the exact situation which has now been developed in court and indicated what I thought my duty as state chairman was. The words used were in part as follows: "But the spirit of the times has changed since the days of Mr. Platt. The demand that the Republican chairman should direct legislation has steadily decreased and his power has been exercised less and less in that direction. The best political intelligence in the State places the responsibility for the passing of the laws and their execution where it belongs: that is, upon the governor and the legislature."

[illegible] ing party patronage to control legislation—a thing which never was contemplated in our system of government—I adopted the very simple expedient of refusing to do it. For this I was freely criticised by many members of my own party. The remedy was not to interfere temporarily, but to create in the Constitutional Convention a new and scientific system where both power and responsibility will be put where it belongs, upon the chief public servant who can be elected by the people and answerable directly to them. As long as we have, as at present, a loose jointed and unscientific form of government, it is an invitation for those who have undoubted power in the control of patronage to assume functions which properly belong to elected officers.

We have in a half conscious and tentative way recognized the need of greater centralized authority. The Constitution provides that the governor should make his recommendations to the legislature and gives him the power of veto. The custom has sanctioned moreover, what is known as "administration bills"; that is, bills that are prepared under the authority of the governor and introduced as his measures. We have gone so far as to give him the power of appointing officers like the superintendent of public works, and commissioner of highways, but without it in the case of the state engineer. I could multiply these illustrations in other departments, but it is unnecessary.

A Scene from "Samson" at The Quirk Tonight.

Political Comment of State Editors

How serious the financial plight at Albany really is may be seen by Senator Brown's statement that there will be no funds available for the salaries of state officials next June. This cannot but arouse patriotic indignation on all sides. The actual facts (when the financial juggling of the last administration is revealed, are appalling.—Lockport Journal.

* * *

Affairs were undoubtedly in a mess when the Republicans took hold of the Government on the first of January. Financial conditions were even more muddled in the State than in the city; in fact, the State finances were on the point of a complete breakdown because of neglect by the preceding Legislature to provide and the preceding Government to permit, appropriations to meet bills and wages actually to become due before the next fiscal year. This Legislature has provided the money, and proposes without subterfuge to raise it by taxation.—Brooklyn Standard Union.

* * *

The roars against Governor Whitman come from those who worked against and voted against him. He must expect that sort of opposition and be prepared to find that sort of opposition critical of his acts, no matter what they may be. The Governor would do well to hoe his own row and let his critics enjoy the pleasure of their citicism. It does him no harm and seems to do them a lot of good. —Binghamton Republican.

* * *

What a remarkable change has come over the Democratic members of the Legislature in the state and also the Democratic party leaders generally.

Since the first of January they have discovered a thousand and one ways of having Republicans save money for the state by not spending any.

For four years prior to January first last, the same Democrats could find a million ways to spend money with no thought of saving anything for the state.—Yonkers News.

* * *

Democrats are certainly in a state of mind as they see their pet projects for tapping the state treasury ruthlessly decapitated by the legislative scimetar. There was a stormy scene in the Senate when the bill which abolished the high salaried conservation commission was repassed. Surely the demolition of graft idols is proceeding with celerity and and dispatch.—Buffalo Commercial.

* * *

As a matter of fact the Republicans have improved conditions in every department they have reorganized. They might have secured better government by simply repealing the ripper legislation by which Democrats took over departments in Republican control, but they have improved upon 1910 as they reorganized. When the people discover, as they will the benefits of reorganization, as the taxpayers note the economy which will be in evidence when the Republicans have paid the debts they inherited from the other party, public sentiment will stronger than ever repeat the verdict at the polls last November.—Watertown Standard.

* * *

Under this new method of establishing prosperity by demagogic legislation we have driven the express companies almost out of business, a large part of the railroads to the verge of bankruptcy and many of our industrial corporations into such enforced economies and retrenchment that the payroll constantly grows smaller and the list of unemployed larger.

The people are facing the natural result of submitting so long to the quack remedies of demagogues and theorists. We have hundreds of thousands clamoring for work, we have the revival of the soup house, the shrinkage of dividends, an unprecedented list of bankruptcies, large and small, the withdrawal of capital from all new enterprises, and the smallest railway mileage under construction reported in many years.—Leslie's Weekly.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

BEAUTY AND UTILITY IN TOWN BACK YARD FARMS.

Cover the Ugly, Useless Surfaces With Crops of Vegetables and Flowers.

The problem of combining some semblance of design with the uses to which the average city back yard is put is a difficult one. Consider the acres of waste land and the countless wasted opportunities in those sad, hot, dusty back yards. Think of the tons of delicious vegetables they might have raised, the lovely flowers.

Here are suggestions for the planting of very small yards. A garden 25 by 60 feet of lawn, shrubs and flowers may be made, the whole completely hidden from the street by heavy planting in a corner. Another may be 37½ by 60 feet and have a small cold frame at one side. In the cold frame can be raised twenty-four tomato plants that later go against the north fence, the earliest crops of lettuce, radishes and onions and the first planting of sweet corn and cucumbers. Six dwarf fruits trees, a clump of shrubs at the end of the grass walk and a bench make an attractive outlook from the back porch.

A delightful flower and vegetable garden can be achieved in a planting space 30 by 60 feet by dividing them with a pergola. Suppose there is a long walk down the middle of the yard. It will seem less long because of the little rustic pergola dividing flower from vegetable garden. Grass surrounded by flowers and shrubs would be employed to make the little flower garden in front of the pergola restful and beautiful, an outdoor room of great charm. The pergola itself should have grapevines trained over it.

Behind it would come the biggest outdoor workshop imaginable, the vegetable garden. At the right an asparagus bed, if the bed is properly cultivated and fertilized. Peppers, eggplant or cauliflower can be grown between the rows of asparagus. Against the fence would be two rows of tomatoes (even in a small garden one must grow many of them, they are so satisfactory), lettuce, radishes and onions, six hills of rhubarb and the cold frame. At the left, Swiss chard, beans, three hills of cucumbers and sweet corn—a quarter of the garden in sweet corn, the most delicious vegetable in the garden.—Chicago Herald.

TOWN EXTENDS "GLAD HAND"

All of Asbury Park's Citizens, Young and Old, Join Reception Committee.

Hereafter when the visitor to Asbury Park, N. J., gets off the train he will not be met by a self appointed joint committee representing the jitney bus interests, the associated peanut venders, college pennant barkers, post card dealers with six views of the ocean for 5 cents, and such people. The town is now going to be made hospitable, cheerful, genial, interesting and different, for the mayor has ordered it. The genial mood was released for immediate publication by the mayor, C. E. F. Hetrick, says the New York Evening Post.

Mr. Herrick has organized the Glad Hand society, "in which all the citizens of Asbury Park, high and low, young and old, are charter members." The badge of the society is a celluloid button about half an inch in diameter, with "Ask Me" in white letters on a vermilion background in the middle. Around the outside it says, "Asbury Park, N. J., Glad Hand Committee."

"Co-operation for general good is being freely secured," according to the mayor. But this must be a press agent's slip, as co-operation for general good is only found in things fundamentally gloomy, like sociological surveys, where nothing meets with approval. The Asbury Park movement, remember, is one of scintillating smiles and cheerful chinnings.

Mayor Hetrick has lent the movement his own personal slogan, "There's no frown in our town." This was translated (somewhat freely) from a Persian poet, the same who wrote "There's no use talkin', we like Weehawken," and "Stop in Jersey City a while; somebody there is sure to smile."

"Already the effect is magical," says the mayor. Ministers have preached sermons pointing out that all visitors to Asbury Park should be welcomed with a smile and be asked to come back.

When You Plant a Hedge.

When you plant a hedge do plant it all about your place. Don't decide that you want a screen from the street, a wind shield on a north side or a Chinese wall to hide your back neighbor's chicken yard and then leave the other three sides unplanted. Be generous. Plant all four boundary lines, and you will be rewarded when the hedge has had a bit of time to grow by finding your most intimate sense of home getting a foothold in your out of doors.

Then, too, don't go in for a variety of hedges. Settle upon one that will be best for you all around. There are exceptions to this rule, as to every other, but they don't apply to the side and front hedges of a place being of different material. They apply to the planting of informal borders of shrubbery at the back of the lot and along the sides, in the special planting of steep front terrace slopes and to doing without a hedge along the front.—Delineator.

HEDGE FENCES HELP TO MAKE TOWN ATTRACTIVE.

Native Material, Especially the Barberry, High In Public Favor.

There is a distinct trend of fashion in planting, says Antoinette Rehmann Perrett in an article on "Beauty For Every Dooryard" in the Delineator. There was a time when the style was all for queer, expensive, foreign things, for single specimens planted in a heterogeneous way about the lawn and for circles, crescents and stars of bedding plants.

Now we have grown in good taste and take more to native material, to massing shrubbery and to hardy borders of perennial flowers with the seeds of annuals generously interspected for summer bloom. We use more shrubs and more flowers than we did some years ago, but they are, on the whole, much less expensive in their actual cost as well as in their upkeep.

If you live near a factory which belches coal smoke you will be well on the way to success if you plant unclipped Regel's privet, Japanese barberry, cockspur thorns, oriental plane and Norway maple. There is a playground in a certain factory district, the most beautiful small playground that I have seen, which is made up almost entirely of these, with Boston ivy on wire netting to form the screens and geraniums planted in oblong borders for the flowers.

A barberry hedge should be left unclipped. It has a kind of undulating grace of outline that is a vital part of its beauty. It is highly recommended because it does well almost everywhere—in poor and sandy soils, between houses, near factories, in all sorts of difficult positions—and yet it is a bush of aristocratic habits, of refined charm the year round.

ROCHESTER'S FINE BRIDGE.

Substantial and Handsome Structure Attracts Attention of Visitors.

Part of a bridge which attracts much favorable comment from visitors to Genesee Valley park, in Rochester, N. Y., is shown in the accompanying illustration, taken with the article from the American City.

This bridge was constructed in 1910-11. It is built of Portland cement concrete with a facing of white Portland and crushed Barre granite. The balusters were made in cast iron molds and set in place, the hand rail being cast about the upper ends of said balusters. The bridge is ninety feet long over all and the floor has a camber of twelve inches. The span is forty-eight feet and is a semi-ellipse with eight foot rise. The level of the water shown is one foot below the spring line and is the future low pool level of the barge canal, which crosses the Genesee river at grade near the mouth of this creek and but a short distance east of the bridge.

RE-ENFORCED CONCRETE ARCHED BRIDGE IN GENESEE PARK, ROCHESTER.

The construction consists of six parallel arches of structural steel buried in a rib of concrete sixteen inches thick, with floor slab and sidewalk slabs superposed. This sidewalk has a metal edge which answers for a curb, and a macadam pavement is carried over the bridge. The width of roadway is eighteen feet and the sidewalks are each five feet wide.

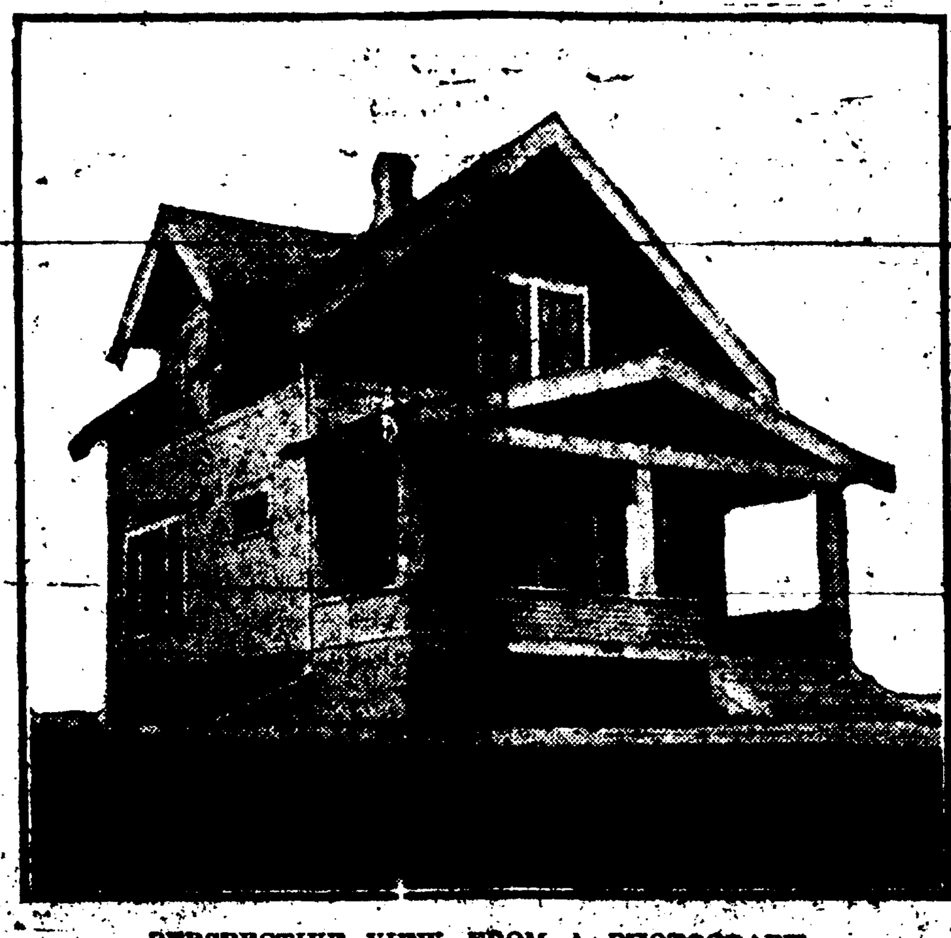
Owing to the location, the bridge rests upon two piers and the shore ends of the bridge are, including the steel ribs, cantilevered over said piers. The structure is monolithic in that no expansion joints are allowed except at the ends of the hand rail where they enter the newel posts.

The earth foundation received a severe trial in the flood which occurred March 28, 1913. At that time only the center of the deck was out of water, but the bridge withstood the strain.

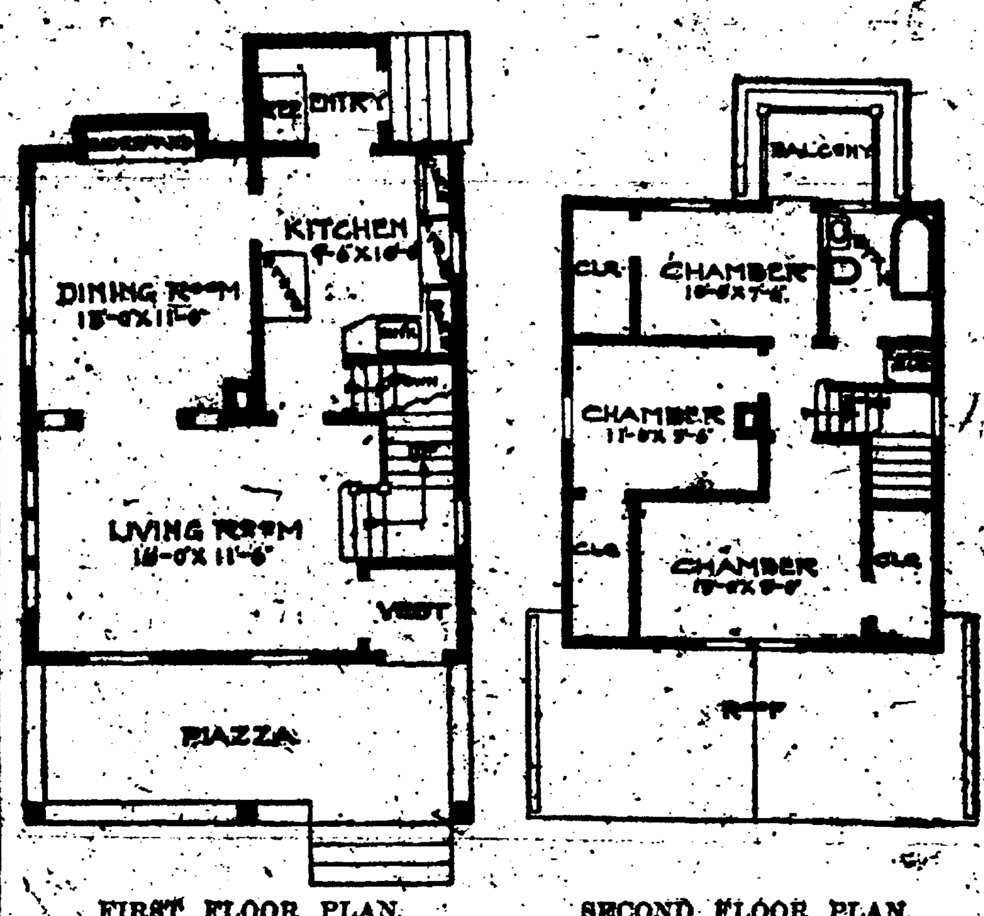
Portland a Bower of Roses.

Fifty-six miles of roses were added to the beauties of Portland, Ore., with the planting recently of 100,000 bushes. They have been purchased as a result of the campaign started by the City Beautiful committee of the Rose Festival association, the purpose being to make the city more than usually attractive in preparation for the coming of visitors on their way to and from the exposition at San Francisco.

COTTAGE OF SIDING AND SHINGLES



PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.



FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

For a small cottage home this is a very practical design. [illegible] living room extends across the front, with vestibule and stairway at one [illegible]. A high pedestaled archway leads to the dining room, which is a very good sized room, with the added attraction of a sideboard built in. There are three chambers in the second floor, with very large closets, a good bath and a balcony out over the rear, making the second floor commodious. Full basement. Height of first story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. All of the chambers finished in full height. Birch or oak finish throughout first story, with pine to paint in second story and birch floors throughout. This house is 22 feet wide and 26 feet deep. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $2,000.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will furnish a copy of Saxton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains 310 designs costing from $1,000 to $6,000; also book of interiors, $1 per copy.

MONTHS IN PRISON "HAPPIEST OF LIFE"

Also Most Useful, Says Ex-Convict, a California Millionaire.

Atlanta, Ga.—When Frederick A. Hyde, sixty-seven years old, millionaire land dealer and former president of the board of education of San Francisco, left the federal penitentiary here, after serving sixteen months, his first statement was that those months had been the most useful of his whole life. He added that he would return to his home in California, where his wife, daughter and three sons are waiting for him, not afraid to look any man in the face.

"Not only have these sixteen months been the most useful in my career," said Hyde when interviewed in his apartments at the Piedmont hotel, "but this period has been the happiest of my life, and I have derived more good from my work at the prison than at any other time."

Hyde was imprisoned in December, 1913, after one of the most sensational court battles in the history of the country. He was sentenced to serve two years for alleged conspiracy in land frauds, but the sentence was commuted by President Wilson.

At the penitentiary Hyde was known among his fellow prisoners as the "angel convict" because of his work to better the conditions of the other prisoners, especially those who were poor. He was assigned to the prison newspaper, Good Works, and in the performance of his duties was allowed to go to all parts of the prison and mingle with all the convicts.

From the first he took an interest in their welfare. He found that baseball and a few wornout movie films were the only amusements in the prison. He laid out plans for a complete athletic field which, with money furnished by himself, was constructed [illegible] Hyde and his fellow prisoners.

Hyde's greatest work in the prison was with the unfortunate men who finished their terms but looked upon freedom with no pleasure because they were without friends or money to make a new start in life. To hundreds of these Hyde gave encouragement and money, in many cases furnished them with sufficient funds to re-establish themselves in business.

One of Hyde's philanthropies in the prison was the establishment of a library. He bought hundreds of valuable books with his own money and donated them to the prison.

PATIENT FASTED TWO MONTHS

And Buttermilk "Did Taste Good at the End."

Warsaw, Ind.—After establishing a record for continuous fasting Jim Robinson asked for a glass of buttermilk and as he slowly swallowed it admitted that it tasted good. This was the first nourishment taken by Robinson, who is an inmate of the county infirmary, for eight weeks.

His long fast was due to lack of appetite and the fact that the taste and smell of food nauseated him.

Physicians here declare his case has no parallel in medical history. Fifty-five days was held to be the limit of man's endurance, yet Robinson passed that mark by more than a day and is still alive.

During that period he lost nearly a hundred pounds. Except for being weakened, his general physical condition was not affected.

Casting Their Shadows Before

[The mother of a famous dancer says she knew her daughter was destined for terpsichorean celebrity because, when a little baby, she used to kick her feet.]

When Bryan first beheld the light—a bald
And red and wrinkled mite—
He closed his eyes and uttered cries
Denoting high ambition.
And as his father heard him yell, his
Manly breast began to swell
With pride and joy—he knew his boy
Would be a politician.

When Goethals was a babykin he'd dig
His thumb into his chin
With wabbly jabs and wavering stabs
And queer and curious motions.
And thus his doting mother knew that,
When to man's estate he grew,
He'd dig the ditch at Colon which
Would join the rolling oceans.

When Jesse James was six months old he Loved the sight of shining gold,
And every time he'd see a dime
He'd instantly demand it.
Which made his stricken mother sigh, for
Well she knew that by and by
Her darling one would buy a gun
And go and be a bandit.
—James J. Montague in New York American.

BUFFALO'S NEW CITY CHARTER

Commission Form of Government Fully Explained.

THE MAYOR HOLDS OVER.

Legislative Act Calls the Commission "the Council of the City of Buffalo." No Provision In the New Charter For the Initiative and the Recall.

By HAROLD J. BALLIETT, Former City Clerk of Buffalo.

Buffalo on Jan. 1, 1916, is to be governed by a commission of five men. Four commissioners are to be elected at the regular election next November. Mayor Louis P. Fuhrmann, the present chief executive of the city, holds over for two years and becomes mayor and head of the new commission. This makes the five members provided for under the law.

The act passed by the legislature calls the commission "the council of the city of Buffalo." It says the council shall consist of the mayor and four councilmen, whose terms of office shall be four years save that of the four councilmen first elected. The one receiving the least number of votes shall hold office for two years and the other three for four years. The salary of the mayor is to be $8,000 a year, and the salary of each of the councilmen will be $7,000 per year.

© by Pohle.

MAYOR LOUIS P. FUHRMANN OF BUFFALO

Three members of the council, according to the legislative act, constitute a quorum, and the affirmative vote of three members shall be necessary to adopt any motion, resolution or ordinance or to pass any measure unless a greater number is required by the provisions of the act.

Meetings of the council shall be public. Stated meetings shall be held at such times as the council shall prescribe by ordinance. Upon every vote of the council the ayes and noes shall be called and recorded. The mayor shall preside at the meetings. He shall have no power of veto. In his absence the council may choose a temporary chairman. Every resolution or ordinance passed by the council must be signed by the mayor or by two councilmen and must be properly recorded before it shall be of force. The council is vested with power to enact ordinances. All ordinances are to be published in the official paper daily for one week. The council shall appoint and may at pleasure remove a city clerk and fix the salary to be paid him. The city clerk may be also the secretary of the council.

The executive and administrative powers of the city are vested in the council, excepting the city court, the children's court and the civil service, railroad terminal and grade crossing commissions. The council's powers may at the council's discretion be exercised through the five following city departments: Department of public safety, department of finance and accounts, department of public affairs, department of public works and department of parks and buildings.

The mayor shall be the superintendent of the department of public safety, which shall include the subordinate departments of police, fire and health. It shall be the duty of the mayor to acquaint himself with the conduct of each of the other city departments and from time to time report thereon to the council.

The council shall, at its first regular meeting after election of its members, designate a councilman to head each department. Such designations may continue through the terms of office of such councilmen, but shall be changed whenever it appears to the council that the public service will be benefited thereby.

The council shall, at its first meeting or as soon as practicable thereafter on the nomination of the mayor, appoint the following officers: A corporation counsel, superintendent of education, [illegible] commissioner, water commissioner, building commissioner, health commissioner, chief of fire department, chief of police, superintendent of markets, superintendent of poor, members of the board of education, city engineer, city [illegible], and shall also appoint such other officers

HUNGRY CHICKS PROVE CASE.

Come Home With Quantity of Neighbor's Corn and a Few Messages.

Stevens Point, Wis.—Frank M. Sackett, after a great deal of difficulty, has convinced H. K. West of this town that his chickens are a lot of bandits at heart. He told him about it long ago, and now Mr. West, blushing, admits it.

Mr. Sackett complained that his seeds were being dug up faster than he could plant them. Mr. West spoke about Missouri, and Mr. Sackett agreed to "show him." He scattered corn in his garden, but first ran a thread through each kernel, and on the far end he tied little cards.

Hanging from each chicken's beak when they went home were the evidences of guilt. No jury's verdict was ever more damning.

Here are a few of the inscriptions on the cards:

"I have just been scratching in Mr. Sackett's yard."

"I am a naughty chicken."

"I have been trespassing."

"I am a feathered bandit."

FARMERS' BIG PROFITS.

War Demands, It Is Said, Added $200,000,000 to Growers' Gains.

Chicago.—Europe's war has enriched middle west farmers approximately $200,000,000, the money going chiefly to growers of grains. What speculators have made by the war perhaps never will be known.

A prominent grain merchant said the $200,000,000 "extra" received by farmers for their bumper wheat, corn and oats crops can be readily accounted for by citing the one instance in regard to prices for cash wheat. He pointed out that wheat now is selling and has been for months at from 35 cents to 50 cents more a bushel than it would have brought but for the war.

FOR SALE

New and scond-hand I beams, also girders, all sizes and lengths. Also second-hand machinery. Inquire

I. ALDERMAN

Res. Phone 1242 Office Phone 2242

JOSEPH CORTINI

SHOE REPAIR SHOP

All Shoe Shines, 5c

KNIVES AND SHEARS SHARPENED

128 E. Broadway Near N. Y. C. Depot

BUELL BROS.

PLUMBING and HEATING

Phone 186

17 N. Second Street

FULTON'S BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONIAL DIRECTORY

SIGNS, BULLETINS, CARDS — any kind, anywhere. DECORATION, PAINTING. A. E. WORDEN, Academy and 6th sts. Phone 3432.

DENTISTS

FRED L. GARY, D. D. S. 122 West Broadway. Office hours, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.

DR. H. S. ORCHARD
—Dental Parlors
Phone 444 112 Oneida St.

BARBER SHOPS

CAMPBELL'S BARBER SHOP has removed to 21 South First Street. Ready to meet all customers.

BARBER SHOP AND BATH ROOM—Opposite Lower Depot, Second St. Three Barbers: Martin, Donovan, Carroll. Baths ready at all times. J. Fred Carroll, Prop.

UNDERTAKERS

YOUNG & HILL. Open day and night at 117 Oneida. Phone 2172.

DELIVERY SERVICES.

HALL BROS. BAGGAGE DELIVERY, Light and Heavy Trucking, Safe and Piano Moving a Specialty. [illegible]

FRANK DE LARM, Successor to GARRETT'S LIVERY, at 120 Cayuga Street. Solicits the livery business of all old customers.

Phone 235. Cayuga St.

O'BRIEN'S ARM FAILED IN 5TH

Loss of Plucky Pitcher's Work Jeopardizes F. H. S. Chances Against Other Teams

Fulton High school lost to Morrisville at Morrisville Saturday, but the game was one that must be laid at the door of the gods of luck rather than to any lack of ability on the part of the Fultonians. The locals had the game wrapped up and labeled as another win in the fifth inning and everything was going along well, when O'Brien's arm gave out and after that everything went blooey.

It will be remembered that "Oby" caught one of McIntryre's speedy twisters on his pitching salary wing in Friday's game. The ball hit him just above the ulna bone, and at first everyone thought he was out of it, but after some heroic treatment, he went back in the game and held the Beeville batters off without any difficulty. Wise ones prophesied ill effects later on, and they were right. The arm pained a little Saturday but not enough to prevent the pitcher from starting the game against Morrisville. As stated before, he had everything, and the Morrisville batters could not find him for anything that resembled safe hits until the fifth inning. The score at that juncture was 4-1, with the locals on the large end.

In the fifth with two down, "Oby" sent a fast one across and immediately tottered to the bench and sat down. His team mates gathered around wondering what was the trouble. On the last ball pitched, "Oby" stated that his arm seemed to collapse and he had no muscular control over it. No one else was on hand to pitch, so the crippled arm was forced to do duty again until the ninth. Without any speed or curves O'Brien was easy pickings for the Morrisville batters and they won out in the last inning, with the score 7-6.

The injured member did not take its treatment kindly and hardly had the game ended when the arm began to swell and O'Brien was sent home immediately. When he reached this city the arm resembled a young sapling around the elbow and the swelling was going up into his shoulder muscles. A doctor diagnosed the case as a badly strained muscle and O'Brien was ordered to stay out of the game for a week at least. Developments of a serious nature during that time may mean his enforced retirement for the season, as he took a grave chance in pitching the game with his arm in that condition.

Coach Starring is now confronted with the necessity of developing some new twirlers. Webb is ready to twirl Wednesday's game but he didn't seem to be in form last Friday, when he lasted only one inning against Baldwinsville, and if he has not improved it would be folly to start him against the Syracuse Freshman sluggers. Pullen has plenty of speed but little control, and aside from these two, none of the men on the team have done any twirling. There is some talk of bringing Keeler in from third base to the mound, but Jimmy has not the build of a twirler, and, even if he had, his departure from the hard corner will leave a difficult gap to fill.

O'Brien is very much broken up over his misfortune and his loss will be greatly felt by the team, as he was the mainstay of the pitching staff.

The sad story:

MRS. GEORGE KING

Mrs. George King, 70, died in Clinton, N. Y., on April 25, after an illness of about four weeks. Mrs. King was born in Eaton, Madison county, in 1845. She was the last surviving member of a family of six brothers and five sisters, all of whom died years ago. In 1864 she was married to George King of North Gage, Oneida county. In 1884 Mr. and Mrs. King removed to Clinton, where the former became engaged in business. The Kings immediately became identified with village life, making one of their aims the promotion of the welfare of the Presbyterian church. In December, 1914, Mr. and Mrs. King celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary.

The survivors are her husband, George King; one daughter, Mrs. Mary M. King, who made her home in Fulton from 1882 until two years ago, but has since then lived with her parents in Clinton; two sons, Fred B. King of Gloversville, and G. Floyd King of Clinton. Six grandchildren and five great grandchildren also survive, together with several nephews and nieces.

Those You Know

Mrs. Robert Scott of Syracuse has been the guest of Miss Carrie Seymour, S. 4th st.

* * *

Mrs. Perry Calkins of S. 2d st. is seriously ill.

* * *

William Middleton has purchased property in State st.

* * *

Rev. W. J. Barrett occupied his pulpit at the First M. E. church Sunday. Mrs. Barrett accompanied him here. They wil soon reside at the parsonage.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Plaisted and a party of friends from Syracuse motored here Sunday and were the guests of Mrs. Nicholas Lester, Worth st.

* * *

A. N. Hudon of Park avenue has recovered from his recent illness.

* * *

Mrs. Fred A. Summerville and Miss Doris Autin were Saturday guests of the former's sister in Oswego.

* * *

Orders have been given that all drivers of vehicles must at night carry lights which show both from the front Isaiah. 11:9.

* * *

John A. Bort is in Rochester attending the bakers' convention.

* * *

E. R. Redhead gave a talk before Borrowed Time Club today.

SCOUT NEWS

Benefit Arranged for May 12; Proceeds for Troop I and C. F. G.

At the regular meeting of Troop I on the evening of April 27th the meeting was called to order by Scoutmaster Robinson.

After a few business matters were discussed, Leland Root gave an interesting talk on wireless telegraphy. Mr. Root has made a study of this branch of telegraphy and is well informed on the subject. He explained the theory, the uses of different parts of an apparatus, and various other things concerning this interesting subject.

Several of the boys are becoming proficient in semaphore signalling.

An entertainment will be given on the evening of May 12 at 8 p.m. for the joint benefit of the Boy Scouts and Campfire Girls, at troop headquarters. A fine program is being prepared and it is hoped that a substantial sum may be added to the treasury. M. L. W.

CUTTING UP BRIDGE

Oneida Street Canal Bridge Will Get Special Treatment—Oxygen and Gas.

Unless something unforseen occurs, tomorrow will witness the destruction of the old iron bridge at Oneida st. by Isadore Alderman of Schuyler st., who makes such work one of his specialties.

Implements formerly used in work of the kind will not enter into the destruction of this canal bridge, as Mr. Alderman is bringing to Fulton a powerful machine that cuts or burns through iron by means of a combination of oxygen and gas.

But one-half of the bridge will be taken down at first and, when the canal bed is filled up to the proper level, Mr. Alderman will begin the work of cutting by the burning process the other half of the ironwork.

W. C. T. U. MEETING

The meeting of the W. C. T. U. at the home of Mrs. William Sylvester on Friday was well attended and one of much interest and profit. The Union, under the efficient leadership of the president, Mrs. Sylvester, is growing in interest, membership and regular attendance; the record is rapidly approaching the [illegible] mark, which number it is hoped to soon see doubled. Some of the work preparatory to the Y. P. B. Convention to be held in Fulton, July 2-7 is well under way and soem have already signified their willingness to entertain delegates who will number about 300. Mrs. R. B. McRea is the chairman of this committee. The local branch has a meeting of interest in the Baptist church May 4 at 8 o'clock at which all the W.C.T.U. members are expected to be present and with them an urgent invitation is extended to everyone.

A group meeting of this committee is to be held in Caughdenoy on May 6 which also promises much interest and a large attendance is expected.

Come join in these good things, become a member of the local Union, and help in the work of crushing out the great evil of our city and Nation.

BISHOP OLMSTEAD CONFIRMED LARGE CLASS

Yesterday at Zion Episcopal church a large congregation completely filled the church. At vesper services the choral evensong was sung and chanted. The Right Rev. Charles T. Olmstead preached, taking his text from Isaiha, ch. 11: v. 9.

After the sermon twenty-eight persons were presented by the rector, the Rev. M. J. Peters, for holy confirmation.

EDWARD C. WHITAKER

The funeral of Edward C. Whitaker, 74, who died Saturday at his home in N. 7th st., after a long illness, will be held from the home Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Rev. C. S. Robertson will officiate, and burial will be made at Mt. Adnah.

Mr. Whitaker was one of the oldest settlers in this city. He was born in Fulton and had lived in this city all his life. Surviving are his widow; one sister, Mrs. George Hanna, and one brother, Dr. G. G. Whitaker, all of this city, also a son, Earl Whitaker, of Chicago.

MISSIONARY TEA

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Presbyterian church will serve tea in the church parlors Tuesday evening, May 4. Mrs. McClelland's committee will serve the supper. Please notice the change of date from Wednesday to Tuesday afternoon.

KAUFF FLURRY QUIETS DOWN

Federal League Hope Returned to Outlaws by the Giants

New York, Monday.—The furore over the jumping of Benny Kauff from the Federal League to the New York Giants is practically over.

The National League has practically decided to return the player to the outlaws again. It was stated that when Kauff made a contract with the Giants, the management was assured that the "Ty Cobb" of the Federals was not under contract with the Brookfeds. Following the statement of President Gilmore that Kauff was bound by an ironclad contract, the National League met and decided that Kauff could not play with their organization.

What punishment will be meted out to Kauff by Gilmore is problematical. He stated yesterday that he had suspended Kauff indefinitely and would make an example of the contract jumper. But it is believed that Kauff's punishment will be made light because of the fact that he is a good drawing card, besides being signed up by the Wards, the strongest financial men in the outlaws.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS; STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Brooklyn.
New York at Philadelphia.
Pittsburgh at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 7; Pittsburgh, 1.
St. Louis, 3; Cincinnati, 1.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	12	3	.800
Chicago	10	6	.625
Boston	8	6	.571
Cincinnati	9	8	.529
St. Louis	9	10	.474
Pittsburgh	6	10	.375
Brooklyn	6	10	.375
New York	3	10	.231

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Chicago at Buffalo.
Pittsburgh at Brooklyn.
Kansas City at Baltimore.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 1; Buffalo, 0 (first game).
Chicago, 1; Buffalo, (2d game).
St. Louis, 1; Newark, 0 (first game)
St. Louis, 2; Newark, 1 (2d game).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Chicago	11	5	.688
Pittsburgh	10	7	.588
Newark	11	8	.579
Brooklyn	9	7	.563
Kansas City	9	8	.529
St. Louis	7	10	.412
Buffalo	6	12	.333
Baltimore	6	12	.333

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Washington at Boston.
Philadelphia at New York.

Results Yesterday

Cleveland, 7; St. Louis, 6.
Detroit, 4; Chicago, 3.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
New York	9	4	.692
Detroit	13	6	.684
Chicago	11	8	.579
Washington	8	6	.571
Boston	5	6	.455
Cleveland	8	10	.444
Philadelphia	4	10	.286
St. Louis	5	13	.278

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Montreal at Richmond.
Rochester at Providence.
Buffalo at Newark.
Toronto at Jersey City.

Results Yesterday

Newark, 6; Montreal, 3 (1st game).
Montreal, 4; Newark, 3 (2d game).
Rochester, 4; Jersey City, 0.
Providence, 8; Buffalo, 4.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	3	1	.750
Jersey City	2	1	.667
Toronto	2	2	.500
Montreal	2	2	.500
Richmond	2	2	.500
Newark	2	2	.500
Cochestre	1	2	.333
Buffalo	1	3	[illegible]

SOME FIGURES TO SHOW HOLD OF MOVIES.

More than $[illegible] a year is spent in the United States on movies, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton says.

Rental paid for films amounts to $[illegible] a year.

About $[illegible] of capital is tied up in unreleased films.

Pictures made in a year would make a band that would go twice around the earth.

Not fewer than 11,000,000 people visit film shows daily in this country.

Between $15,000 and $30,000 is spent each evening for the films to provide the entertainment.

More than $120,000,000 is invested in the theater buildings.

IN MISERY BLESS STARS AND STRIPES.

Belgian Gratitude For Relief Seen by American Visitor.

James W. Bennett of the Roanoke (Va.) Times, the only person not connected with the commission for relief in Belgium to cross the Atlantic in one of the commission's steamers, has just returned. Mr. Bennett was purser of the Lynorta, which carried Virginia's cargo to the Belgians. In Belgium he made an automobile tour of the German occupied territory, visiting Malines, Dinant, Namur, Louvain, Liege, Brussels and Antwerp.

"There were terrible scenes wherever we went," he says. "I saw long lines of famished people waiting for food. Many of them were well dressed, and this made the sight all the more pitiable, for everything defining respectability but their clothes was absent. They had once been affluent, and there they were without means to obtain food. Their faces were lined with despair.

"The Belgians were not slow to exhibit their gratitude. The motor relief car was flying the stars and stripes, and many approached and stroked the emblem with affection."

WEALTHY, STOLE FOR LIVING

Two Women Even Purloined Chickens to Celebrate Sabbath.

Mrs. Rose Schlissel and Mrs. Esther Cohen, two well to do New York women, have been sentenced to ten months each in the penitentiary for petty larceny.

Detective Frank Casassa said both had long careers as shoplifters, rarely buying even the necessaries of life. Mrs. Schlissel, he said, owned real estate in several sections of the city, but even stole chickens every Friday night to celebrate the Jewish Sabbath.

The women wore the most elaborate shoplifting outfits he ever saw, consisting of false waists and double skirts with pockets manipulated by strings that enabled them to drop stolen articles whenever they were under suspicion in a store and pretend the goods had fallen from a counter. They had worked together for years and had been arrested frequently.

IN PRISON AT 102 YEARS OLD

Has $15,000, but Won't Pay Doctor Because Operation Failed.

Although Thomas Goggins, who claims to be 102 years old, is said to be worth at least $15,000 and admits himself that he has a few "little dollars" in the bank, he is locked up in the county jail at Syracuse, N. Y., for contempt of court and stubbornly refuses to pay a fine of $18 and costs levied by Judge William G. Cady.

Mr. Goggins' case is unusual and baffling. He is ill with an incurable malady, and the judgment against him was for the bill of Dr. George M. Price, who performed an operation on him in an effort to restore his health.

He wouldn't pay, he said, because the operation was not successful.

Evening Times Subscribers are requested to advise this office if the carrier boy fails to deliver paper properly and with regularity.

CONGRATULATIONS

"I think more of The Evening Times than I do of the Syracuse ——" —B. H. Sharp, contractor and builder, Park and rPatt sts.

LEGION COMPLETES COUNCIL.

Roosevelt, Taft and Former Heads of Navy and Army Are Included.

Two ex-presidents, one ex-secretary of state, three ex-secretaries of war and three ex-secretaries of the navy now comprise the completed council of the newly formed American Legion, Secretary John E. Hausmann has announced.

To the council have been added the names of ex-President Taft and ex-Secretary of the Navy Charles J. Bonaparte. Other members already serving are ex-President Roosevelt, ex-Secretary of State Elihu Root, ex-Secretary of War Jacob M. Dickinson, ex-Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, ex-Secretary of War Luke E. Wright, ex-Secretary of the Navy George von L. Meyer and ex-Secretary of the Navy Truman H. Newberry.

Loses Three Sons In War.

Three of the four sons of Charles Legrand of Paris who entered the army have been killed in action. Mr. Legrand, who formerly was president of the French chamber of commerce, was active in the project for exchanges of commercial students between Harvard university and the French Commercial university.

Asking Too Much.

Out of Work—Yes, sir, I once had a good situation at a Swiss hotel. I was the echo that answered when people shouted. But I got the sack.

Gentleman—How was that?

Out-of-Work—Why, a Russian fellow came one day and shouted out something and I couldn't answer back. —Stray Stories.

EGG PRESERVER

by the qt. or gal. at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

FREE

We give FREE each week an enlarged 8 x 10 copy of the best print finished in our developing and printing department.

We guarantee satisfaction and our prices are right.

Agency for Ansco Cameras, Ansco Films, and Cyko Paper.

D. M. SULLIVAN

"THE DRUG MAN"

113 West Broadway Fulton, N. Y.

The Longer You Wait

in saving money and starting a bank account, the longer it will take you to accomplish something worth while.

Why not begin today?

Start an account with us with the amount you can spare.

4% Paid in Our Interest Department

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND

The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"

"CITY OF ERIE" —— 3 Magnificent Steamers —— "CITY OF BUFFALO"

BETWEEN

BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND

(Eastern Standard Time)

THE CLEVELAND & BUFFALO TRANSIT CO., Cleveland, Ohio

PUBLIC NOTICE

We have closed our Gloversville Store and have removed the best and most valuable part of the large stock to our Fulton Store. We have no room for this additional stock, therefore we have placed this $25,000 Stock of Up-to-date Merchandise in our large Basement and will start the greatest Bargain Sale on ever held in this vicinity—Watch for our Adv. in Tuesday's Evening Times.

THURSDAY, MAY 6th

Fresh Rose Bushes and Shrubs just from the Nursery, all healthy and sure to grow while they last at 10c

M. KATZ & CO.

THE STORE THAT MAKES GOOD

Hand or Phone in Your Miscellaneous Want Ad copy for The Evening Times as early in the day as possible to insure insertion the same day.

No ads will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

For Sale—Ayles homestead and furniture, corner E. Broadway and 3d. W. J. Ayles will be on premises May 8, 10 to 12 a.m. and 1 to 5 p.m., to show furniture. G. D. Shaw, Agt. 117c

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Found—Sum of money, Saturday night. Owner may have property by addressing Ernest Arnold, Fulton, R. D. 8. 117c

Wanted—Girl for housework; no laundry work. D. L. Lipsky, 159 S. 4th st. Call morning.

To Rent—Lower flat, furnished or unfurnished; modern improvements. 258 S. 3d st. Phone 1291. 115

For Sale—New sewing machine for sale at once, will sell cheap. 319 Utica st. 115c

Wanted—One or two capable machinists. Dilt's Machine Works. tf

Rooms to Rent—Near Nestle Food. 654 S. 6th st. 117c

For Sale—Baby's bassinet; also toilet basket. 309 Pratt st. tf

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCully, 202 S. 3d st. tf

Rooms to Rent—with or without board. 220 West 1st st., north. 117c

Wanted—Girl for housework. D. L. Lipsky, 169 S. 4th st. 115

Wanted — Dressmaking— and plain sewing. Phone 3432. 116

SPECIAL DEVOTIONS

Special Mass at St. Mary's Friday—Parishioners Urged to Attend Services.

Special devotions for the month of May were announced this morning by Rev. John Lindsman at the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Every morning during the month there will be special devotions after the 8 o'clock mass, and on Friday evenings there will also be devotions in honor of St. Mary, the patron saint of the month. Next Friday evening there will be a "Holy Hour" service and devotions will follow. Friday is the first Friday of the month and there will be special mass in the morning.

In his sermon, the priest urged his hearers to attend the May devotions with the same zeal with which they attended the Lenten services. He spoke of the power and intercession of St. Mary and also urged that the Rosary be recited at home during this month.

OSBORNE J. PERKINS

Osborne J. Perkins, 9, son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Perkins, died yesterday afternoon at the home of his parents. Two brothers and a sister, besides the parents, survive.

The funeral will be held at 1 o'clock from home Wednesday afternoon and the services will be strictly private. At 2 o'clock service will be held at Mt. Adnah chapel and friends are invited to be present.

Community Notes

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hewitt, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Hewitt and their guest, George Moody of New Castle, Pa., were over Sunday guests of Mexico friends.

• • •

Rev. C. L. Peck is in the hospital at Watertown where he is receiving treatment from his former physician.

• • •

Miss Grace Tucker has been entertaining Miss Jean Crippen of Baldwinsville.

• • •

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Beadle are enjoying a short trip to New York city.

• • •

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Currier, jr., left Friday for the exposition at San Francisco.

FARNUM IN TOWN TONIGHT

The Quirk's Revival Week Starts Off With Play by Celebrated Actor

This being revival week at The Quirk, Manager Darleigh announces William Farnum's play "Samson" for tonight's theatergoers.

The Cast:

Maurice Brachard ... Mr. Wm. Farnum
Marie Brachard (his wife) ... Miss Maud Gilbert
Marquis D'Andeline (her father) ... Mr. Edgar Davenport
Marquise D'Andeline (her mother) ... Miss Agnes Everett
Max. D'Andeline (her brother) ... Mr. Harry Spingler
Jerome Govaine (adventurer and duelist) ... Mrs. Charles Guthrie
Elise Bernette (his fiancee) ... Miss Carey Leigh
M. Deveraux (Brachard's confidential man) ... Mr. Geo. De Carlton

By William Farnum

The Paris Bourse heaves and writhes in the convulsions of a mighty money panic. Egyptian Copper, urged by some mysterious, unseen hand, has rushed downward like a plummet till, amidst a hoarse uproar, failure after failure is announced. Men who two hours before could write their cheques in six figures, face financial beggary. Yet only the day before, Egyptian Copper, under the magic wand of Maurice Brachard, the greatest financier in France, reached its zenith. Suddenly in the midst of the seething, cursing multitude, hoarsely bellowing its rage and bewilderment, appears the disheveled figure of Brachard himself. In a flash the crowd "rushes" the man it blames for the downfall of Egyptian Copper. Borne down, bleeding and bruised, Brachard fights off his assailants. By brute strength he fights his way to his automobile. He is whirled, with torn garments and battered face, to his home. His wife, Marie, meets him with a glance of contempt. But Brachard inwardly rejoices, for he knows that in smashing the market and ruining himself he has crushed also Govaine, the polished libertine who has tried to debauch Brachard's wife.

The meteoric career of Maurice Brachard begins on the docks of Toulon. His father is a drunkard of Thieves Alley. His mother a slattern. In such surroundings Brachard grows to man's estate as a dock laborer. His giant strength makes him a man of mark among his companions. One day he hears a street preacher expounding the scriptures. His theme is the story of Samson. It kindles a spark of ambition in the dock laborer. His brutish, loutish soul is fired. He has saved a little money. With it he buys a cargo of junk. He sells it at a profit. He turns this stroke of business to further advantage by acquiring a rickey old steamer. He trades this in turn for a cargo of copper. Mida-like, good fortune attends his every venture. He finds himself with Paris at his feet. True worshippers of the Golden Calf, smart society takes brawny, uncouth master of millions to its heart. He meets the Marquis D'Andeline, a needy old aristocrat who is almost at his rope's end. Brachard, with all the rugged force of his primitive nature, falls in love with Marie Louise D'Andeline. She loathes Brachard's unpolished, boorish appearance and manners, the inheritance of his dockyard days. But to save the honor of her debt-hounded parents she consents to wed him. But Brachard and she must be married in name only is the condition she imposes.

Govaine, the polished libertine and duelist, subtly fascinates Marie. He is a constant visitor at Midas's house and, like the rest of the parasites surrounding Brachard, profits hugely by the shrewd financier's market tips. All the time he makes secret love to Marie Louise. She consents to an assignation with him, at a fast supper party, on a night when, she believes, her husband has gone to London on a business trip. She tears herself sickened and revolted, from the orgy, only to find that the trip was a trap. Brachard is grimly waiting for her when she arrives home. Through Elsie Vernette, Govaine's cast-off sweetheart, Brachard hears of the supper party. He swears to be revenged on Govaine. But his hands are apparently tied by the fact that he cannot handle sword or pistol. Govaine is an expert with both. Brachard decides like Samson of old, to pull down the Temple of Gold about him and, although he himself will be ruined, crush Govaine in the titanic downfall. Imprisoning Govaine in a room he forces the duelist to see his fortune wiped out. Then, aftr exercising his giant strength on the man who has wrecked his happiness, Brachard visits the Bourse. But Marie, who has despised the former dock-laborer in his strength, loves him in his downfall. Amidst the ruins of his fallen temple Brachard exclaims as she seeks his side:

"At last! At last! My hour has come!"

OFFICIAL WAR BULLETINS

GERMAN

Berlin, via London.—German troops in pursuit of retreating Russian forces have penetrated into the region lying to the southwest of of Mitau, the capital of Courland, according to the German official statement issued by the Army Headquarters' staff today. Mitau is twenty-five miles southwest of the Russian seaport of Riga, which is the seat of government of the Baltic provinces. The ext of the statement follows:

"In Flanders the enemy after heavy artillery preparations again attempted to storm our new positions to the northeast of Ypres. The French attacked strongly between the canal and the road from Ypres to St. Julien. The British attacked feebly to the east of this road. The efforts of the enemy were unsuccessful owing to our active flank and back fire from Broodseinde and Veldhoek. Two machine guns fell into our hands.

"In the Argonne our attacks to the north of Four de Paris progressed. In spite of a strong defense the French lost several trenches and 156 men were taken prisoners.

"Between the Meuse and the Moselle the only heavy fighting was in the forest of Le Pretre, where the French attacked in great numbers. We repulsed all the attacks, some of which reached into our trenches, with heavy losses for the enemy. We captured 90 men.

"Yesterday two more French aeroplanes were disabled. One was destroyed near Rheims by gunfire. The other, belonging to an air squadron, was forced to land at a point to the northwest of Verdun.

FRENCH

According to the French official report issued lastnight the following were among the weapons used by the Germans in different attacks yesterday:

Wire cutters
Grenades
Automatic pistols.
Inflammable bombs.
Gases emitting green smoke.

The following official communication was issued by the war office:

"In Belgium, to the north of Ypres, the Germans attempted an attack on our right, but were immediately checked by our machine guns.

"Nothing new has occurred on the British front.

"At Maucort, to the south of Chaulnes, an attack, in which about eighty men engaged, was directed against our lines. The Germans were armed with wire cutters, grenades, automatic pistols and knives. They were almost all cut down by our infantry. Several of them were taken prisoner.

"In the valley of the Aisne and in Champagne the enemy employed during the course of the day divers devices which, however, were without effect—near Tracy-le-Mont glass tubes which threw off in breaking the odor of ether; between Rheims and the Argonne bombs charged with inflammable materials, and, finally, gases emitting a greenish smoke, which rose over the lines of the enemy without reaching ours.

"In the forest of Le Pretre the Germans essayed a counter attack, but were not able to debouch. We are holding all of our gain of yesterday.

"We continued during the day to bombard the fort to south of the entrenched camp of Metz. The efficiacy of our fire on one of these forts is undoubted, as well as on the barracks and the railway nearby."

EX-FULTON PASTORS

Four ex-Fulton pastors will this week meet in Troy and participate in the installation services for the Rev. J. H. Odell who will assume the pastorate of a Presbyterian church of that city.

The three pastors who will assist are Rev. G. W. Wellburn, of Scranton; Rev. Sawtell, of Troy, and Rev. Riggs of Auburn.

WEATHER FORECAST

Showers tonight and tomorrow. Moderate to fair winds.

ALBANY GOSSIP

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 3.—While several amendments to the State Constitution relative to sessions of the legislature every other year have already been submitted for consideration, the general belief seems to prevail that the delegates will not vote to change the present system governing the yearly deliberations of the law-makers.

Arguments to the effect that bi-ennial sessions of the legislature are held in other States do not seem to convince the majority of the delegates that New York State should follow suit, so far as casual statements go. No final statements have been made by the delegates, nor have any of the delegates placed themselves on record as being opposed to the proposition of bi-ennial sessions, yet the lack of enthusiasm has left the impression that the section of the Constitution relative to the yearly convening of the law-making body is likely to remain unaltered.

It is pointed out that unlike the smaller State, New York has many large interests which require constant observation and check. There are corporations which must needs resort to the legislature for enlarged powers, while the needs of the numerous departments are such as to require laws each year for their maintenance and expansion. These and other reasons are advanced as an argument to substantiate the contention raised by many that it would be unwise to substitute the bi-ennial for the present system.

The belief seems to prevail that the amendments which have been presented relative to an increase in the salaries of senators and assemblymen may be adopted. When it is considered that the members of both houses receive but $1,500 each and that for the past few years the sessions have lasted well into the summer, the compensation does not seem adequate, a number of the delegates say.

The attempt to have the salaries of the legislature increased was defeated by the people when the proposition was submitted in the form of a referendum, thus it can be seen that if the proposed increase is to be made the rsult must be accomplished by the delegates to the Constitutional Convention.

The amendment which proposes a single branch of the legislature to consist of sixty members, is another proposition which at this time does not seem to find many advocates. It is argued that the burden of responsibility would rest too heavily upon each of the three score members.

Chairman Elihu Root has taken the position that too many bills of a purely local nature are introduced each year and has made the declaration that the scope of home rule should be enlarged so that this condition need no longer exist. If his view are carried out it would greatly lessen the volume of legislation and tend to shorten the legislative session each year.

The legislative pilgrimage each year is popular aside from the argument that the presence of the law-makers in Albany is necessary for the first few months annually. There has never been a dearth of candidates which at least establishes the fact that there is no popular clamor for bi-ennial sessions.

M. DIETRICH'S TRIP A BENEFIT

Chief Engineer Chuck Full of Glories and Wonders of South and West

With ever evidence of having a good time during the nine weeks' trip through the Southland, into Mexico and then into California, Martin Dietrich has come home to old New York State looking a few pounds heavier in weight.

Enroute to the Golden Gate Mr. Dietrich stopped to look over the battlefield of Chattanooga. New Orleans was his next principal stopping place, where he found living surprisingly cheap. He secured a room in the Crescent City with all the comforts that a modern hostelry should provide, in the city's center, at $1.00 a day, and meals to suit, the man of average appetite and taste for 35 cents.

The great southwestern states were included in the itinerary, but in Juarez, Mexico, he found conditions that surprised him beyond measure. In Juarez everybody "gambles on the green," and otherwise, even to the women and children.

Mr. Dietrich's stay in California was his most delightful experience. There he met W. J. Pentelow, who is assigned by three of the State's counties to lecture upon and show the products of the counties at the San Diego exposition to visitors. Mr. Pentelow was of course delighted to meet Mr. Dietrich, who conveyed many messages of greetings from friends of the former Oswego county clerk. Mr. Pentelow has complete charge of the three counties' exhibit, which in itself, is immense, says Mr. Dietrich.

The engineer's story of what he saw in California fruit belt is a corroboration of other visitors' descriptions of that country, altho few persons have the good fortune when visiting the belt to fall in with a relative who is in a position to conduct one through the masses of blooming and bearing orange and lemon trees, that in some instances, spread mile after mile over the landscape.

Passadena and Los Angeles, in Mr. Dietrich's eyes, are superb. Rose trees full of blossoms and great spreading palms, together with the street parks, simply enraptured the tourist.

Town booming by fellow-travelers struck Mr. Dietrich forcibly. Quite frequently he was urged by a seatmate to stop off in that individual's town instead of making a stop at the proposed destination, which very often was miles away.

Mr. Dietrich's trip was made minus a member of his family. Travelling alone, he says, is a mistake and he will "never do it again."

MOTORCYCLE CLUB

Frederic J. Cavanaugh, an enthusiastic local motorcyclist is organizing a Fulton motorcycle club and all owners of motor in this vicinity who care to join the organization are requested to give their names to Mr. Cavanaugh at once.

There are at least fifty motorcyclists in and about the city, and if a sufficient number show a willingness to form a club, quarters in the downtown section will be engaged as clubrooms. Only a nominal charge will be made for membership, in order to defray incidental expenses. The usual features of a motor club, are planned, including club runs, picnics, athletic games and possibly a baseball team.

Spring's Joy

He planted seeds three weeks ago,
Quite neatly in a window box,
And now they're up he doesn't know
The cucumbers from four o'clocks.

As tender little leaves appear,
Each shoot his happiness completes,
And then he asks as you draw near,
"Say, are those radishes or beets?"

Some of his seeds have failed to sprout,
The reason why he doesn't know,
Perhaps he has been standing out
Some seeds he sowed a year ago.

So life for him is full of joy
As his big box is full of seeds—
Pure happiness without alloy,
Though some of his new shoots are weeds.

NEW WIRELESS CAR OF ARMY IS MARVEL

Can Face Any Sort of Land Surface and Has Eighty Foot Mast.

A traveling wireless station that can do almost anything but shin up a telegraph pole is the latest contribution of Uncle Sam's efficient army officers to the defense forces of this country.

Successful experiments just concluded at Fort Myer show that "radio tractor No. 2" can even travel over the fields when necessary, whereas its predecessor, No. 1, had to confine its peregrinations to the highways.

Radio tractor No. 2 consists of a motortruck that drives, brakes and steers on all four wheels and carries a knocked down army field wireless set. The mast that supports the antennae is eighty feet high when extended and comprises eight sections of light tubing that are strapped to one side of the truck when not in use.

The wireless outfit has a sending range of 250 miles under ordinary conditions and an almost illimitable receiving range. It is a great improvement on the old hand operated apparatus that is laboriously toted around on the backs of three pack mules. Moreover, it is not liable to stampede under fire.

The power to operate the sending apparatus is furnished by the truck's own motor and is made available by simply shifting a lever. This is a great improvement over the old hand operated sender and much more powerful. The electric generator is rated at two kilowatts or, roughly, twenty-two man power."

NELSON ESTATE FOR PUBLIC

Farm Left as Money and Trust to Buy Works of Art.

William R. Nelson, editor and owner of the Kansas City Star, left a farm of 1,750 acres in Jackson county, Mo., to be a model farm for thirty years for the purpose of instructing neighbors in stock raising and farming. On the death of both Mrs. Nelson and Mrs. Kirkwood, the editor's daughter, the management of the property is to be placed in the hands of a board of trustees.

The trustees are required to set aside for each of the children of Mrs. Kirkwood, if any, property "of the reasonable value of $1,000,000." The residue is to be managed by "The William Rockhill Nelson Trust," to purchase works of arts which will contribute to the enjoyment of the public generally.

EATS NOVEL BREAKFAST

Farmer Enjoys Two Ostrich Eggs Almost Every Morning.

Louis Sands of Spring Lake, Mich., enjoys the distinction of being the only man in the United States who sits down to two soft boiled ostrich eggs for breakfast every morning. Not every morning in the year, maybe, but every morning when the ostriches are laying well. An ostrich egg is about the size of a grapefruit and is pretty well stuffed with meat. Two or them make "some breakfast."

Mr. Sands owns a herd of ostriches.

Souvenirs Are Valuable.

London.—Pieces of German shells dropped in December raids at West Hartlepool are so valuable as souvenirs a bricklayer and a real estate agent had a lawsuit over a fragment weighing forty-seven pounds. They value it at $2 a pound. The bricklayer claimed it because he saw it first, the other man because it hit the house of a client, and the latter got it.

All Kinds of
GARDEN SEEDS
by the ounce or pound at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

THE BIG SALE OF ELECTRIC APPLIANCES IS NOW ON

Did you get a coupon? It's worth $1.00. If not, be sure and get one from Tuesday night's paper.

A FEW OF THE BARGAINS
G. E. and Hotpoint Irons ... $3.00, with Coupon $2.00
Hotpoint Percolators ... $4.98, with Coupon $3.98
Automatic Washer, $66.50, was $55.00; now with Coupon $42.50
Hotpoint Toasters ... $3.39, with Coupon $2.39
G. E. Toaster ... $3.48, with Coupon $2.48

Come in and look them over.

105 Oneida St. THE ELECTRIC CO.

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Why does the Evening Times get results? Because so very many subscribers say—"I hate to miss a single copy of your paper; I'd rather miss a copy of my 'Syracuse ——' than the Evening Times."

THE LATEST

REPORT OF ADVERTISING

Week of April 26 to 30—five days only—Total number of inches Display Advertising 1001

DAILY AVERAGE 200.2

Total number of inches advertising carried by the Evening Times during week of April 19 to 24—six days only—was 919 inches.

DAILY AVERAGE 153

INCREASE

Daily Average—47.2 Inches

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

A Death Shadow

By F. A. MITCHEL

An officer of the Belgian army was summoned before the king. They were in Flanders, and the Belgians constituted the tip of the left wing of the allied army.

"Captain," said the king, "I wish you to carry a message to the commander of the nearest British troops south of us. Go on foot and on the beach. The distance is short, but is full of danger. You will be as safe on the edge of the water as anywhere. We are not in touch with our allies, but there is no fear of any force pushing into the gap for our rear is defended by the channel. Your danger will come simply from any reconnoitering or other small force that you may happen to meet."

The captain took the message, rolled in a ball the size of a small pill, put it in the lining of his hat, saluted and departed. The hour was dusk. In the eastern sky was a moon in the first quarter. The beach was broad, and the officer walked midway between the line of foam and the dunes.

Was that his shadow down at his left and a trifle in advance of him? No. A shadow must lie in a line with the light interrupted. This one formed an obtuse angle with his body and the moon.

Was it a shadow? It was so faint that he could not tell.

There was a moaning sound to the waves that were washing over a bar not far from the shore. The wind was chilly, and the captain felt a corresponding chill in his heart. He did not like that dark spot or shadow or whatever it was. He looked down on the hard sand to his left. It was there, barely distinguishable, but surely there. He looked up at the moon. The dark spot surely could not be made by the moon, for it would lie behind him; whereas this was slightly in front of him. He looked at the planet Venus and saw that it was covered at the time by a haze. He cast his eyes again down at his feet, hoping that the dark spot had disappeared. It was still there.

To the south were the lights of a camp; how far he could not tell. That camp was his goal. He wished himself safely there. At night one cannot readily measure distances, and he could not tell whether the lights were far or near. He longed to reach them to escape that intolerable loneliness which weighed upon him.

He knew that at any moment he might receive a shot in the back or from the front. If it came it would come from the dunes on his left, not from the water. He cast occasional glances in the former direction, turning his head to the rear to see if he was followed. He thought he saw a dark something like the figure of a man against the sky line behind him. If it was a man he was soon in hiding, for it passed into the dark dune.

He edged down to the verge of the water and walked almost in the foam. The sand was wet and reflected the light of the moon. Beyond were the lights, slowly growing more distinct as he advanced. Usually there was at night desultory firing, not so far from the shore but that it could be heard. Tonight there was absolute silence of war. There was the moaning of the waves on the bar, with their nearer rustle on the beach. This was all.

But that dark spot. It would not go away. The captain tried hard to convince himself that there was no such thing there. He could not. He saw it. Of that he was sure. But it was so faint that he could not always see it. At any rate, he looked at it, concentrating his gaze upon it, till it seemed to fade away. But when he had rested his eyes and looked again there it was.

And now the lights of the camp are so near that another ten or fifteen minutes will surely bring him there. The dunes where he looked for danger had flattened, and what rise there was had receded. The sky line was visible, and he could have seen even a crouching figure. But he saw none. A breeze stirred some low weed or bush and sent his heart to beating, but in another moment he saw that it was not a man.

A short distance from the camp he came to a place where reeds grew out of a marshy spot just above the foam line. He must go to the left of them. Scenting danger wherever there was a possibility of it lurking, he gave it a wide berth, passing a hundred yards to the left of it. After leaving it behind him, looking down, he saw that the black spot was directly in line with the reeds. It seemed to him as he walked that the spot advanced, keeping in line with his body and the reeds.

Suddenly he felt his legs giving way under him. He fell headlong on the sand, gasped and died.

A figure with a rifle rose up from among the reeds and advanced toward the body. Turning it over with his foot, he looked down into the marble face and upon the uniform and, muttering "Belgian," turned away and sought a German camp not far inland. At the same time a dark cloud covered the moon.

Was what the captain saw the shadow of death? Who can tell? There are more things brought out by war psychology, when men's minds and nerves are strained to the utmost, than we can tell. Many a man who meets his death in the red horror of battle has a gruesome foreboding of his ap[illegible] in many former wars.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Divided Words.

1. Divide something borne or carried and get a prickly seed vessel and the home of a wild animal.

2. Divide a mark to be shot at and get a dark liquid obtained from resinous liquids and a verb meaning to obtain.

3. Divide a Scotch plaid fabric and get the same liquid and a yellowish brown color.

4. Divide a waterproof canvas and get the same liquid, a boy's name and a preposition.

5. Divide to upset and get a covering for the head and a word meaning magnitude or bulk.

6. Divide a kind of primrose which grows in wet places and get a useful domestic animal and something one is likely to do if one tries to walk on the ice.

7. Divide a title of nobility and get a piece of wood or metal long in proportion to its width and a preposition.

Answers.—1. Bur-den. 2. Tar-get. 3. Tar-tan. 4. Tar-paul-in. 5. Cap-size. 6. Cow-slip. 7. Bar-on.

Kite Flying Contest.

This game is interesting and exciting for those who take an interest in kite flying. It is necessary to have one or more persons to act as judges. Anybody may enter a kite. The decision is based upon the length of time required to get the kite into the air, the elevation attained, the steadiness with which the kite maintains its position or makes the ascent, and any other points agreed upon. This contest is sometimes varied by having only two contestants at one time; each is allowed to arm his string with any weapons he chooses. The object is to maneuver the kite so as to cut the opponent's string in two and thus to bring down his kite. This permits of a very high degree of skill in constructing the kite, choosing the weapon and maneuvering to get the opponent in a good position for attack.—Country Gentleman.

When Lost in the Woods.

A contributor to the Farm and Fireside calls attention to the following things which anybody lost in the woods ought to know:

"I thought every woodsman and guide knew that by going downhill you are sure to come upon a stream of water, which will in turn lead to a settlement. Furthermore, in our day nearly everybody depends on a watch instead of 'sighting the sun.' When the hour hand points toward the sun the point midway between the hour hand and 12 o'clock will be due south.

"Another little woodcraft trick is that of carrying a supply of matches in a large mouthed bottle. When fitted with a tight cork the matches are sure to be kept dry even though you have to swim a stream with your clothes on."

Rabbit and Snake.

A naturalist relates that he once saw a gray rabbit attack a large blacksnake which was holding one of her young in its coils. She fought by springing over the snake and striking back with her hind feet, which is the usual mode of defense of this species. Her blows were delivered with force and precision, and so rapidly that the snake was struck nearly every time, despite his attempts to evade them. As she passed the snake aimed at her with his fangs, but though he often scratched off a mouthful of hair he was plainly getting the worst of the battle, when the naturalist interfered.

Another instance is related in which a rabbit was observed to pursue a hawk in the act of carrying off her young.

A Jolly Competition.

Here is a game in which all may participate: Select ten small articles, say, nuts, corn kernels, wrapped bonbons. Seat the players in two lines opposite each other, and at the head of the line and the foot place a table or taboret. The game is to pass the articles, one at a time, to each player until all are on the table, the other side to pass them back down the line. This must be done rapidly, the side making the best time having the prize. This is loads of fun, and children love it.

Cat and Rat.

Have you ever played this game? It is great fun. Get a large number of children to ring up in a round ring. Select one person for a rat and one for a cat. The rat gets on the inside of the ring and the cat on the outside, and the cat tries to catch the rat. The children must try to keep the cat out of the ring. If the cat does get in the rat must get out. When the rat is caught a new cat and a new rat must be chosen. This is a fine outdoor game.

The Organ Grinder.

The old organ grinder was out in the street,
And the children danced round him with clattering feet.
Clattering, pattering,
Pattering, clattering,
Clattering, pattering, clattering feet.
When the old organ grinder had got all the money
He left in a hurry—now, wasn't that funny?
The children cried, 'Oh, but you shouldn't stop playing!'

Said the old organ grinder: "What's that you are saying?
Go on with your clattering,
Go on with your pattering,
Make as much noise as you like in the street.
Patter or clatter,
It doesn't much matter,
But when all the ladies their money stop scattering,
[illegible]

QUEER CONDUCT OF A RECRUIT

Young Soldier Sorely Perplexes His Colonel.

The Franco-Prussian war had just opened, and the German army was hurrying to the frontier. One morning before the day's march began a young recruit was brought before the colonel of the Eighty-seventh regiment of the line in arrest.

"This is Private Herman Meisner," said his captain. "Last night he voluntarily relieved one of the guard and connived at the escape of a prisoner under charge of sleeping on post. He admits this, but says that the man he released, Carl Meisner, is his cousin."

"How long have you been in the army?" asked the commander.

"Two weeks."

"Captain, this young fellow is doubtless ignorant of the enormity of his offense, and we need every man at his post of duty. You may release him. Has the escaped prisoner been rearrested?"

"He has, colonel."

The march was resumed. In the evening as the colonel was refreshing himself with a smoke the captain returned with Private Herman Meisner again in arrest.

"Colonel," he said, "when the prisoners were inspected after the day's march Private Carl Meisner was missing, and this man, Private Herman Meisner, was in his place."

The colonel knit his brows.

"What did you do that for," he asked of the boy, "after my leniency to you this morning?"

"They told me my cousin would likely be shot for sleeping on post."

"That is his affair, not yours. Do you want to get yourself shot in his place?"

"I would rather, colonel."

"That's very, very ridic—very noble of you, but it's unjust to yourself. It seems to me, captain, that this boy has the true elements of a soldier in him, but he needs instruction. You may return him to duty. Has the real prisoner been rearrested?"

"Yes, colonel."

The next morning Private Meisner was again brought before the colonel for having made a third attempt to free his cousin. This time he had failed to even get the prisoner away from the guard. The colonel sent the incorrigible Herman back to take his place with the other prisoners, to stand trial at the proper time for mutiny. "You are a little fool," said the commander.

"Are you sure he's sane, captain?" asked the colonel.

"Perfectly sane."

"Well, take him away."

The next day there was a roar of artillery at the front. As the colonel was mounting his horse the captain appeared and, saluting, said:

"The prisoners desire permission to take their place in the ranks for the coming battle."

"Grant it for any in whom you have confidence. I suppose those two cousins are among the applicants."

"Carl Meisner has applied. His cousin, who tried to effect his escape has not."

"That's strange," said the colonel, and, putting spurs to his horse, he rode away.

That day was fought the battle of Gravelotte. When it was over the captain appeared before his colonel, this time with both the Meisner cousins.

"Colonel," he said, "I have to report that I decided to put all the prisoners in the ranks for battle. Carl Meisner, who was in arrest for sleeping on post, distinguished himself by conspicuous gallantry. His cousin Herman ran and hid himself behind a log."

The colonel looked at the prisoner in perplexity.

"And you," he said to Herman, "are the man who wished to get yourself shot to save your cousin!"

The colonel expected him to hang his head in shame. He did no such thing. He simply smiled, smiled with his beautiful blue eyes, his delicately curved lips, every feature in his boyish face.

"I wish," said the colonel to the captain, "they would stop robbing the cradle to procure material for the army." The . to Herman, "How old are you, boy?"

"Twenty."

The colonel sat thinking. Presently he said to the captain:

"See that the charges against Carl Meisner are withdrawn and make him a corporal. As for this coward—what the dickens he means by trying to get himself shot in place of his cousin I don't know, but we can't be encumbered with him on a campaign. Send him back under charges of both mutiny and cowardice."

Private Herman began to cry.

"What are you sniffling for?" began the colonel, when Carl interrupted him: "Colonel, she is a woman—my wife. We have two little children at home, and she should be there to take care of them. But she would not let me go to the war without coming with me, fearing I would get killed, just as if she could help that."

"Phew!" exclaimed the colonel. "A woman! That accounts for her strange behavior, ready to die in place of the man she loved, but no desire for a fight. Well, captain, you must send Private Herman Meisner back home to take care of the children. I suppose the government won't give her transportation, so I will."

He took some bills from his pocketbook and handed them to the captain, [illegible]

Lucy Dove's Wedding Cake

A Fine Creation and Richer Than She Thought

By CLARISSA MACKIE

It was a magnificent cake, a mountain of dark richness masked beneath thick white frosting. About the edge it was ornamented with sugar flowers and Cupids, while it was completed by a delicate, airy ornament in the middle. This was a miniature church in white sugar, before the open doors of which stood a bridal couple, wee manikins, appropriately attired.

Little River never had seen such a cake, and they talked a great deal about it and about Lucy Dove's rich cousin in New York, who had sent it as a wedding gift.

While their neighbors admired the beautiful structure, the Doves, Mrs. Dove and Lucy, were disappointed.

First because Cousin Archibald had actually promised to make Lucy a valuable present on her wedding day—"to build a home," he had said, with twinkling eyes, and who could blame Lucy and David for counting on it?

Besides, Mrs. Dove had whispered the secret to one or two friends, and, lo! it was known all over Little River that Cousin Archibald would give Lucy a handsome present of money on her wedding day.

And all that came was the cake, brought from town by the caterer's special messenger, with a brief note from Archibald, who was sailing that very day for Europe.

"This, my dear Lucy," he wrote, "is my wedding gift to you and David. May you be happy and blessed is my heartiest wish."

"And that is all he sent?" quavered Mrs. Dove.

"Yes," said poor Lucy with quivering lips, for she and David had planned—why, they were going to build the home on a piece of land David's father had given. Now the home must wait awhile until they could save money.

"And we really don't need the cake," she said resentfully.

They really didn't need it, for inside the parlor cupboard was a high bandbox which contained a large wedding cake baked by Mrs. Dave herself after a recipe which had been in the family for many years.

So Cousin Archibald's wedding cake was displayed among the presents, and the guests marveled at it and whispered to one another while they nibbled at the cake made by Lucy's mother.

"I thought he was going to send them money," was the burden of their remarks.

So Lucy and David were married, and instead of building a cozy home they hired a shabby little cottage. But so happy were they that they forgot all about Cousin Archibald and the present which had disappointed them.

It is true that Lucy wrote to her cousin thanking him for the cake, but the letter pursued him around the world, and he didn't receive it until three years afterward just as he sailed for home.

"GWAMMA SAYS COUSIN ARCHIBALD IS COMING TODAY!"

David Wyatt worked in the grocery store. He was head clerk and made good wages. Lucy was industrious and saving, and one fine day she and David rode over to Graytown and drew $600 from the bank. This was to build a home.

"I am so happy, dear," sighed Lucy as they stopped the horse so that they could gaze at the plot of ground on which their home was to be built.

"It's our own money. We earned it ourselves," said David sturdily. "It will be a small house, but it's plenty big enough for folks who love each other."

Lucy blushed, and little Lucy, tucked [illegible] father kissed the adorable being she called mother.

The Wyatts built their little house and moved into it and were happy. Little Lucy divided her time between her grandmother's home and the new house.

One day she came pattering in bubbling with news.

"Gwamma says Cousin Archibald is coming today!"

Lucy smiled sympathetically. She had quite forgiven her cousin his broken promise.

"We must put the wedding cake in a place of honor," she told David.

"We better save it for Lucykins' wedding," laughed David.

So when Cousin Archibald came to call at the cottage he saw the untouched wedding cake and smiled a little while he examined it. He was a gray, elderly man, lonely, and fond of travel. Now, he was about to start on another expedition—this time to Alaska.

Before he went he gave little Lucy a five dollar gold piece and that appeared to be the extent of his generosity.

A week later disaster fell upon the little family.

David, the wage earner, fell down the cellar stairs at the store and besides breaking a leg was otherwise seriously injured.

It was a dreadful winter.

The money in the bank dwindled; another man took David's place, for he grew no better. They borrowed money and placed a second mortgage on the house and in the spring they lost the place and had to move away.

Lucy's mother made room for them in her house.

"It's all that drafted wedding cake," complained Mrs. Dove; "I've heard it was bad luck to keep a wedding cake a long"—

"If it will change the luck, mother, I will give it away," said Lucy.

"For land's sake!" cried Mrs. Dove. "Who would you give it to, child?"

Lucy meditated.

"There's Hannah Morey—she's going to be married next week—she'd be glad to have such a handsome cake."

"Do as you like, Lucy," said her mother, "only I'd hate to have it bring bad luck to Hannah and Joe."

"Nonsense!" laughed Lucy.

She lifted down the bandbox and trudged down the dusty road to the Morey house. The Moreys were poor and proud. Hannah received the cake with ruffled pride.

"I couldn't accept a secondhand wedding cake," she said stiffly. "Mine won't be anything like this one, but it will be made just for me!"

"Of course it will!" cried poor Lucy, ashamed of her errand. "It seemed a pity that it should not be used, and of course, it will be years before little Lucy will be ready for it."

"Why don't you eat it, then?" asked Hannah.

"Eat it—why, I never thought of eating wedding cake—like that!" said Lucy as she picked up her bandbox.

"I felt so foolish, mother," she said when she arrived home. "Of course Hannah wants a cake made especially for her, and I suppose Lucykins will want one made especially for her when she grows up."

The wedding cake went back into its box and was locked in the parlor cupboard.

The fortunes of the Wyatts did not improve. David's broken limb knit firmly together, but there was some internal injury that puzzled the village doctor.

"If I could have a specialist from town," he said regretfully, "I am sure the matter could be solved at once. There's some injury to the nerves. Now, Dr. Boudrey, the French specialist, could put his finger on the very spot."

"I suppose it would cost a great deal of money," faltered Lucy.

"A couple of hundred to get him way up here," admitted Dr. Smith.

Lucy shook her head.

"You will have to do the best you can, doctor," she said sadly. "We can't afford it."

Dr. Smith drove away much perturbed. If he could only help Dave Wyatt to regain his health he would gladly forget to send in his bill. But these specialists! He sighed profoundly. Without money one can do so little, and a doctor who forgets to render his bills is not usually very well to do.

David fretted the days away in close confinement of his bedroom off the parlor.

Little Lucy played around his bed, making timid excursions into the little used parlor.

Lucy had a passion for collecting keys.

Her mother said Lucy would be a good housewife. David laughed and predicted that his daughter's hobby meant she would be a burglar some day.

As for Lucy herself, she went on collecting keys from the various doors and enjoyed the baffling pursuit of fitting them to other doors whose locks refused to turn. Oh, the joy of suddenly finding the right key for the right door!

Lucy had tasted this bliss.

One afternoon when her mother and grandmother had gone off to the sewing society Lucy sat beside her father's bed.

His eyes were closed, and there was a grim look of suffering in his young face.

Presently slow tears coursed down his cheeks.

Lucy, awed and frightened, tiptoed into the parlor.

On the marble top table was a brass key, a different key.

Lucy picked it up in her fat fingers and looked around.

It might fit the cupboard door, she thought, and [illegible] climbed upon a hassock and [illegible]

To her delight the lock shot back and the narrow door opened. She brought a chair and climbed upon it.

Now to take down that mysterious bandbox and discover its contents!

Lucy tugged at the strings, and the box tumbled into her arms, almost throwing her to the floor.

Breathlessly she clambered down and was making for the bedroom to share her treasure with her father when the time worn strings broke and the box crashed to the floor.

The cover flew off, and Cousin Archibald's splendid wedding cake, shattered in a hundred crumbly fragments, lay in ruins on the floor.

Fear smitten, Lucy snatched at her one remaining hope.

The cunning little church with the two "dollies" was intact. Carefully she picked it up from the ruins and carried it in to her father.

He had heard the sound and was startled.

"What happened, Lucykins?" he asked, and Lucy answered swiftly:

"This didn't bweak, daddy." She placed the little ornament in his hands.

"IT WAS A CHECK FOR $10,000, MADE OUT TO LUCY AND DAVID WYATT."

Then she broke into wild sobbing, and to soothe her David made up a pretty story about the bridal couple.

"And she holds pretty flowers," smiled Lucykins, "and what is he holding, daddy, a cane?"

David laughed and looked closer.

Securely tucked under the bridegroom's arm was a tiny roll of white paper.

"It's the marriage license, I guess," he laughed, unrolling it. Then his face grew pale as he stared at the long slip of white paper which Cousin Archibald had concealed in the wedding cake.

It was a check for $10,000, made out to Lucy and David Wyatt, and it was dated nearly five years ago!

This was Cousin Archibald's gift. And when he came and found them so happy and independent of his help he had said nothing and gone away again.

"We need it now more than we ever will!" sobbed Lucy Wyatt when she came home.

And little Lucy did not understand until she was quite grown up why it was that she was never punished for ruining the beautiful cake nor why her mother and her grandmother and even daddy cried while they kissed and hugged her for joy.

Romance of a Tree.

In the beautiful gardens of Gray's inn, upon the finest stretch of grass in the heart of London, is what the Americans would call "some" tree—a catalpa—for it was planted in 1598 and is still alive and flourishing and, indeed, puts forth its blossoms every year. The catalpa has a very fine blossom, indeed, in a great bunch, something like a horse chestnut.

The catalpa tree was brought to England by Sir Walter Raleigh and was planted by Sir Francis Bacon, then a resident in Gray's inn, with which his name is so intimately associated. In course of time a shoot was taken from that parent plant, which has produced an even finer tree.

Then a curious thing followed: From the shoot another shoot was cut and taken back to America, and in Philadelphia the grandson of the original tree brought home by Raleigh grows today.—London Spectator.

Theatrical Caste.

"Muster Richardson," christened John, was a successful but illiterate traveling showman of the early nineteenth century in England. His "special train" consisted in a cart and other primitive means of locomotion, including a sturdy pair of legs. It was in the early part of his career that he boasted Edmund Kean as of his company. The old showman was not a little proud of the association and used to give himself credit for having had a part in the great tragedian's professional education. When Macready's name was becoming known in the theatrical world Richardson was asked if he had seen him.

"No, muster," he replied. "I know nothing about him. In fact, he's some vagabone as no one knows—one of them chaps as ain't had any education for the thing. He never was with me, as [illegible] Kean and them [illegible] —[illegible] Free Press.

EUROPEAN TRAVEL HALTED BY WAR

As a Result $275,000,000 Stays In America.

OCEAN PATHWAY DESERTED.

Great Passenger Liners That Formerly Carried Thousands Back and Forth Now Doing Duty In the War or Tied Up at Their Piers In Neutral Ports. Statistics Show Loss to Europe.

New York.—A quarter billion dollars of good American money will be kept in this country this year on account of the war. There will be at least that much saved by the inability of the public to travel to Europe. Last year the steamship companies received in fares alone approximately $83,000,000, carrying eastward and westward more than 1,200,000 passengers. A conservative estimate fixes the amount spent by this traveling army at close to $192,000,000, making the total amount spent for European travel $275,000,000.

There will be no exodus to Europe this summer, however. The Great Green Way of the Atlantic is as lonely as New York's Great White Way on a summer Sunday night. This is the time of year when the rush across the ocean begins. The tide of travel sweeps east across the Atlantic from May till August and back again from August till the middle of October. But this year the tide hasn't set in and it won't set in. Uncle Sam is holding back the tide by refusing to issue passports, and on the other side of the ocean the kaiser's submarines prove an obstacle.

Nobody is going away who can't prove to the satisfaction of Uncle Sam that he or she has business in Europe. Doctors, Red Cross nurses, reserves, continue to go, but even their number is dwindling.

From all ports of the north Atlantic there left for Europe last year in four months just 27,727 passengers. During the same four months of this year the number of departures was 4,198, a falling off of 17,529. The westward sailings were 13,662 for the same period last year and this year 4,674, a deficit of 8,995.

The arrivals and departures at New York last year from and to Europe totaled an army of more than 1,200,000. Of this number 148,380 traveled first class, 241,810 in the second cabin and 813,743 in the steerage. The grand total to and from all north Atlantic ports was: Eastward—first class, 83,261; second class, 121,085; steerage, 479,232. Westward—first class, 90,840; second class, 238,347; steerage, 631,862.

The average first class fare across the Atlantic on little ships and big ships is $120, second class $50, and third or steerage $35. That means that last year $20,892,120 was paid the steamship companies for first class passages, $17,720,000 for second class and $44,892,120 for steerage, a total of $83,055,780.

Placing the amount of money spent during the season in Europe by the first class traveler at $1,000, the second class at $500 and the steerage at $100, a pretty good average of American contributions abroad will be the result. Computed by these figures the amount spent in Europe last year by the American traveling public would have been $191,726,700. That these figures are by no means overestimated will be realized when one stops to reflect that $10,000 for the season would be no money at all for each of 5,000 American families to dissipate. This would alone mean $50,000,000.

At a modest calculation there was spent last year by people from America on European travel $278,664,500; $300,000,000 would be, perhaps, nearer the mark. It is safe to say that the war has cost Europe $250,000,000 of American tourist money this year. That much cash in hand would do strange things. It would do wonders for the unemployed of the country. It's the ransom of a king and no bagatelle even to a Rockefeller. There will be just that much more money remaining in the United States this year.

The click of glasses and the clink of wealth are hushed. The stewards' tips are missing. The bands of music are silent. The $10,000,000 Vaterland of the Hamburg-American line is eating her head off at the dock in Hoboken. The $10,000,000 Imperator of the same line is a hospital ship at Bremen. The $10,000,000 ship Aquitania of the Cunard line is a converted cruiser, and the $10,000,000 Olympic of the White Star line has also been impressed by the British government. The France, the beautiful $8,000,000 queen of the French line fleet, is doing government duty for France. The North German Lloyd's Kronprinzessin Cecilie, Kaiser Wilhelm II. and Kronprinz Wilhelm have figured in the war.

More ships on the average are arriving here today than ever before. Steamers whose names are unfamiliar to customs men and shipping men have reached the port in the past six weeks, sometimes as many as ten a day. They come here under charter or looking for a charter to carry away American goods. All kinds of freight is being stowed away in their holds, all kinds of vessels are in demand. They can't [illegible]

LAST HOUR SCENES AT FALL OF PRZEMYSL.

Austrians, Surrendering, Kissed Rifles Before Breaking Them Up.

A dispatch to the London Morning Post from Budapest gives a story of the last hours preceding the surrender of Przemysl to the Russians as related by one of two aviators who left the city shortly before its fall.

"Four of us left in two remaining aeroplanes at the time when Russian shells began to fall on the hangars," he said. "At this stage the garrison was engaged in destroying guns and interior fortifications.

"The artillerymen were not satisfied with knocking to pieces the breeches of the great guns and siege mortars, but explosives were placed in the rear part of each gun, and it was blown into fragments. The famous 30.5 centimeter mortars were destroyed in this way, their enormous steel tubes being torn into pieces.

"As to the many thousands of rifles, it was ordered that every man was to destroy his own, and it was a pitiful sight to see them do it. Some of the men kissed their rifles first and wept while hammering them to bits. They had to accept this mode of destroying them, for as they were firing almost to the last there would have been no time to gather the rifles and burn them in one pile.

"During the siege," the aviator went on, "we lost twelve aeroplanes and seven pilots. Seven officers who accompanied them as observers were shot down. We do not know if they were killed or taken prisoners. On the morning of the fall of the fortress shrapnel began to fall, and we had to leave if we wanted to save the aeroplanes and ourselves from falling into the enemy's hands. The scene was indescribably terrible below. When I encircled the fortress before leaving the smoke and flames of exploding ammunition stores shot up to the clouds. The military buildings and storehouses were in flames, and incessant thundering shook my machine as explosions took place below."

ANCIENT WAR METHODS.

Did Hannibal Use Dynamite In His Passage of the Alps?

Every one knows the story of how Hannibal crossed the Alps. It is usually asserted that he demolished the rocks that opposed his progress with the aid of fire and vinegar. The word used by the Latin historians which is ordinarily called in English translation "vinegar" is acetum.

The question has been raised by an European officer whether this is the true meaning of the original. He is of the opinion that by acetum the historian intended to describe a substance resembling dynamite in its properties, and he invites chemists to consider the question whether the ancients may not have possessed a formula for making a powerful explosive of this kind.

He calls attention to the fact that two ancient historians, Marcus Gracus and Albert of Aix, speak of the existence of two kinds of acetum, one of which possessed greater energy than the other. A clew to the composition of the explosive may be found, he believes, in the fact that to acetum was ascribed the property of extinguishing the dreaded "Greek fire." He thinks the substance may have been strongly oxygenated.

Although to discover how Hannibal's "dynamite" was made would be to add nothing perhaps to our sense of the greatness of his achievements, yet such a discovery would certainly throw new light on some interesting events in the wars of antiquity.

MILITARY AEROPLANES.

Fitted With Phonographs, Into Which the Observers Dictate.

When the military aeroplane is scouting it usually carries two men. One is the pilot, who runs and steers the craft; the other is the observer, who marks the placing of the hostile troops, the position of their guns, the movement of trains, and the like. The observer also makes many sketches of the ground over which he is flying—work that often interferes with his writing notes and memoranda.

In certain conditions of flight, too, it is often hard for him to use a pencil and paper. To obviate the difficulty the military aeroplane, says the Scientific American, now frequently carries a phonograph, with a speaking tube running to the mouth of the observer, so that by talking into the machine at any time during the flight he can record his observations and still have his hands free for his field glass or his sketching pencil.

Russia's Craving For Alcohol.

Since the sale of vodka was prohibited in Russia many strange methods have been developed to procure alcoholic beverages, and recently statements have come out of Russia that many illicit stills have been unearthed which have been engaged in recovering the alcohol in shellac. The shellac is divested of its alcohol by distillation, and a crude beverage is then made to be sold as a substitute for the prohibited still wines and vodka.

The Difficulty.

"Tom out of work again? Why, I thought he had a steady job."

"Oh, the job was steady! The trouble is Tom wasn't."—Boston Transcript.

The first bond of society is marriage; [illegible]

WAR MAKING MAN OF ENGLISH HEIR

Prince of Wales Serving at Front With His Regiment.

MUST NOT BE CAPTURED.

Life In the Open With Responsibilities Is Rapidly Developing the Slight, Rosy, Boyish, Twenty-year-old Prince—Lithe and Young, He Has Done His Twenty-five Miles a Day.

London.—The Prince of Wales, the twenty-year-old future king of England, faced Earl Kitchener in the war office one day last November and demanded that he be allowed to go to the front at once. Three months previously, at the very outbreak of the war, within a week of receiving his commission as a lieutenant in the First Grenadier guards, he had made the same request, but the secretary of war had refused it on the ground that the prince's military training had only just begun.

Photo by American Press Association.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

For a second time the lithe and slender subaltern stood before the great field marshal. He had thrown himself into his work with such enthusiasm and patriotic fervor that now, after only twelve weeks, he was fit and ready for active service. He had been so reported by his commanding officer.

Earl Kitchener listened to what the young man had to say. The British war lord is stern and unbending, but human. He knew the prince's spirit and talked with him as one soldier with another, not from a personal but from a national point of view. It went without saying that the prince was eager to fight and would do his duty just the same as any other officer, taking his chances of being killed or wounded with the rest.

That was not what was worrying Kitchener. He would mourn if anything happened to the Prince of Wales, but he knew that if the heir apparent did get killed there were plenty of other people to come to the throne of England. What concerned Lord Kitchener was this:

If the Prince of Wales were taken prisoner and held as a hostage by the Germans very serious embarrassment might be caused to the allies, and their plans for the final settlement of the war would be gravely hampered. This Earl Kitchener pointed out in his usual direct and forcible manner, but the young prince was not to be denied, and when he left the war office it was with the promise that he would be attached to Field Marshal French's staff at the headquarters of the British expeditionary force in France. On Nov. 16 the Prince of Wales crossed over from Folkestone to Boulogne and proceeded at once to St. Omer, where the headquarters' staff was then located.

From that day till April 10, when the Prince of Wales arrived in London bearing dispatches from the British commander in chief, he has regularly performed the arduous and dangerous duties of a dispatch rider.

The Prince of Wales is a slightly built and very high strung youth who looks two or three years younger than he really is. There is nothing in his uniform to distinguish him from any other staff officer.

Nearly four months elapsed from the day the prince reported for duty till Field Marshal French gave him twenty-four hours' leave. This was early in March, and instead of spending his time in the big white house in which he lives the prince ordered his car and, leaving the noncommissioned officer behind, took his brother officer and was on his way to Paris as fast as his car could carry him.

On his arrival he went to an old fashioned hotel in the Rue de Rivoli, facing the Tuileries gardens, and sent word of his presence to the British embassy in the Faubourg St. Honore. When the Right Hon. Sir Francis Bertie, the ambassador, heard about it he at once wired over to Buckingham palace, but the king and queen evidently decided not to interfere. So the ambassador called upon the Prince of Wales [illegible]

POPULARITY WEEK

CONTINUOUS 2 to 10:30

QUIRK THEATRE

SIX OF THE GREATEST PHOTOPLAYS OF $2 NEW YORK PRODUCTIONS EVER OFFERED IN ONE WEEK

TODAY
WILLIAM FARNUM IN BERNSTEIN'S "SAMSON"

TUESDAY
ROBERT HILLIARD'S GREAT SUCCESS "A FOOL THERE WAS"
Featuring THEDA BARA and ALL STAR CAST

WEDNESDAY
HALL CAINE'S "THE CHRISTIAN"
Superb Love Story—8 parts
Featuring EDITH STOREY and EARLE WILLIAMS

THURSDAY
DOROTHY DONNELLY IN "THE THIEF"
DANIEL FROHMAN'S N. Y. Lyceum Theatre Success

FRIDAY
CHAS. RICHMAN IN "THE IDLER"

SATURDAY
"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"
with CLAIRE WHITNEY and STUART HOLMES

NO CHANGE IN PRICES

ENLARGED SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

On the Threshold of Great Prosperity

The World's Work recently sent out to leading business men representing manufacturers, dealers, railroad and hotel men, a series of inquiries as to whether they were investing their savings or allowing them to accumulate. 441 replied that they were allowing their saving to accumulate in the banks, 260 were investing.

To the inquiry whether the outlook for American business in 1915 was encouraging, 160 stated that it was discouraging, 121 that it was normal, and 420 that it was encouraging.

All signs show that the time is ripe for a most energetic and spirited campaign for all kinds of insurance. The business depression caused by the war and the dissipation of resources by the waste of luxurious living, has given place to confidence and economy.

The millions of money heretofore spent in foreign travel are now being spent or held in this country. The balance of trade has for several months been consistently in favor of this country in a degree never before equaled. The exports for March were $115,000,000 greater than in March, 1914, and the balance of trade in favor of the United States for that month was over $173,000,000 and for the last four months $600,000,000. We are buying back our securities from European investors at low prices; the enforced economy has resulted in great accumulated savings. A few days ago, according to the Wal Street Journal, a bank president was met in a broker's office. Apologetically, he said: "I have come over here to escape my depositors. We have six thousand accounts, and have just computed that, on the average, every depositor has thirty-five per cent. more money than a year ago. I am besieged by them to know in what to invest their money." In the West "The banks are bulging with funds," writes Frederick Davenport in the Outlook for April 7.

Whatever may be the results during the future when the losses of the tremendous European conflict are being distributed, there is no question that for a considerable time at least, we are on the threshold of a great prosperity, and it will sweep the agents who have acquired the momentum of an early start and aggressive confidence to new records greater than they have ever before achieved. Considering what the field representatives of the company achieved and the discouragements of 1914, there can be no doubt it.

During the first quarter of 1915 one of our prominent agencies paid for over 25 per cent more life insurance than in the corresponding period of 1914.

Success in business as in battle, comes to him who in the terse phraseology of General Forrest, "gets there fustest with the mostest force."

MISS HUGO'S ROMANCE RECALLED BY DEATH.

Noted Novelist's Daughter Dies After Long Life in Asylum.

Adele Hugo, youngest daughter of Victor Hugo, the novelist and poet, who has just died in a sanitarium in Suresnes, a suburb of Paris, in her eighty-fifth year, had been in the institution more than half her lifetime.

The sympathy of the world went out to Victor Hugo over the misfortunes of his daughter sixty years ago. Adele had accompanied him in his political exile to the island of Guernsey about 1851. She was Hugo's idol, an elder daughter having been drowned with her husband several years before.

The girl became infatuated with a subaltern in the English artillery. Her father objected to the man, and an [illegible] wandering demented in the streets of [illegible] Straits Settlements. All she could tell of herself was that she was the daughter of Victor Hugo.

Her husband had turned out worthless. Two children were born and died young. The man drank heavily and finally committed suicide.

Victor Hugo had his daughter brought back to France and placed in a sanitarium in Vincennes, afterward removing her to Suresnes. Until his death, more than a quarter of a century after, he visited her weekly, and most of his fortune was devoted to her welfare.

Early Spelling Reforms.

Thomas Gatacre, rector of Rotherhite from 1611 to 1654, seems to have been the earliest pioneer of spelling reform. This divine, who was a prominent figure in Puritan circles, started his career as a reformer by changing to Gataker "to prevent miscalling." Gatacre published theological treatises abounding in repulsive looking words like "question" (for he regarded the [illegible] and other [illegible]," such as "believ," "[illegible]," "[illegible]" and "tru."—London Chronicle.

RETAILERS IN WAR ON TRADE COUPONS

Dry Goods Profit Sharing System to Be Fought In Courts.

STAMPS MAY BE DRAWN IN

National Association, Organizing Stores Throughout Country For Battle, Says $100,000,000 Worth of Tokens Are Sold Annually and Many Are Never Presented For Redemption.

The fight against coupons which has just been opened by some retail men is the biggest ever waged in the history of the drygoods trade in this country. It is to be fought out to the bitter end in the courts, the combatants say.

So far trading stamps have not become an issue. It is thought they may be drawn in.

The battle now raging is between the profit sharing coupon companies and those retail merchants who take their services, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the National Retail Drygoods association, which is the mouthpiece of the retail merchants who do not believe that the coupons are consistent with good business methods.

The American Newspaper Publishers' association at its recent meeting in New York passed resolutions opposing the "alleged profit distributing coupon plans and similar schemes," asserting that they had attained a growth which made them "a menace to legitimate business and had inspired legislation prohibiting them in various states."

The resolutions also stated that in the opinion of close students of economics these plans are "fundamentally opposed to the growth of trade and the expansion of legitimate business" and concluded with the remark that "the best interests, not only of the newspapers of the country, but of all business enterprises, are not served by such methods of exploitation."

Laws Have Failed So Far.

The National Retail Dry Goods association is carrying on a campaign all over the country against profit sharing coupons and has even secured the enactment of laws restricting the use of coupons in several states. Up to this time none of these laws has withstood the test of constitutionality in state and federal courts.

The Washington law, levying an annual license tax of $6,000 on merchants who use coupons or trading stamps, was declared unconstitutional by the federal circuit court of appeals on the Pacific coast and confirmed as constitutional by the Washington state supreme court. The state of Washington has therefore appealed from the ruling of the federal circuit court of appeals to the supreme court at Washington, which will hear the arguments in the case early next month.

The National Retail Dry Goods association has not been discouraged. Its campaign is not yet four years old, but numbers among its members most of the great department stores of the country, representing an annual business of more than $500,000,000, and has already borne fruit in the public announcement of a big department store of Chicago that it has decided to abandon the use of profit sharing coupons, coupled with a statement recommending every retail merchant in the country to do likewise.

Enormous Profits Alleged.

Almost simultaneously two of the principal trading stamp and coupon companies published a statement which they called "an open letter to the public," assailing the National Retail Dry Goods association for its campaign.

F. Colburn Pinkham, secretary-treasurer of the National Retail Dry Goods association, said, in an interview:

"We are not fighting the trading stamp. We don't want to, if we can help it. The trading stamp is a matter between the merchant and his customers. He buys the stamps himself and knows what he is doing. They know what they are getting. But estimating offhand, I should say between 85 and 90 per cent of the retail merchants of the country don't believe in this system and don't use it.

"I have seen figures which estimate that $100,000,000 worth of stamps and coupons are sold every year, while of [illegible] $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 [illegible] great majority of people do not make use of the stamps or coupons that are forced upon them. The difference between the $12,000,000 of stamps and coupons redeemed and the $100,000,000 represents the clear profit of the companies which issue them, and it is that profit which makes the business so lucrative." Many of these allegations are denied by the coupon and stamp companies.

CHURCHES GET $410,000,000.

America Spends $73,000,000 on Missions and Leads World.

Statistics just issued by the missionary societies show that the American people through their churches contribute $55,000,000 a year to home missions and $18,000,000 for foreign missions.

It cost last year to maintain all churches in this country, including these mission funds, $410,000,000, and in this amount America leads all other countries. The figures of the Presbyterian home board show a slump of $258,000.

Children Cry
FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

HER ABSENT BOY.

When a Mother's Lot Is One of Wistful, Weary Waiting.

It's mighty hard to be a mother of sons in Homeburg. I worked in the postoffice for a year once—handed out mail—and I got to know just exactly what most of the mothers in town wanted. I could please them with a new magazine and mystify them with a circular or a business letter.

But if I wanted to light them up until they took the shadows out of the corners as they went out I would give them a letter from a son way off somewhere making good. The best of them didn't write any too often. Once a week is pretty regular, I suppose, from the other end, but you should see the mother begin to come in hungry again the second day after her letter came.

And when a boy came home successful and prosperous and his proud mother towed him down Main street it used to go to my heart to see the wistful looks of the woman friends.

There is hardly a family in Homeburg of the right age which hasn't a grownup son off at war somewhere—fighting failure. It's grand when they win, but I hate to think of some boys who haven't come back.—George Fitch in American Magazine.

Just Like Eve's Apple.

A fruit supposed to bear the mark of Eve's teeth is one of the many botanical curiosities of Ceylon. The tree on which it grows is known by the significant name of "the forbidden fruit," or "Eve's apple tree." The blossom has a very pleasant scent, but the really remarkable feature of the tree, the one to which it owes its name, is the fruit. It is beautiful and hangs from the tree in a peculiar manner. Orange on the outside and deep crimson within, each fruit has the appearance of having had a piece bitten out of it. This fact, together with its poisonous quality, led the Mohammedans to represent it as the forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden and to warn men against its noxious properties. The mark upon the fruit is attributed to Eve.

Vanilla Beans.

The French colonies produce fully one-half of all the vanilla beans raised in the world.

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your merchants for National Red Stamps and insisting on getting them with everything you buy. Every Red Stamp Book filled with Red Stamps will be redeemed by our merchants for $2.00 in cash or $2.50 in Merchandise, Dry Goods, Clothing, Shoes, Etc. You can get Free Books and Free Stamps from any of our merchants. SAVE MONEY ON THE SPECIAL PRICES SATURDAY at the following merchants:

FREE COUPON

This Coupon good for 30 Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 8th.

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP
Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear
106 Oneida St. Phone 3177

A. ALDERMAN
Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes
214 West First St.

J. BELASKI
GROCERIES
174 West First St.

M. H. JOYCE
The New West Side Grocery
518 West Third St. Phone 4260

H. C. DANN & SON
City Meat Market
High Grade Meats at the right prices.
11 South 2d St. Phone 42

JOHN CRAHAN
GROCERIES
124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

JAMES J. KENYON
GROCERIES
518 South 1st St. Phone 3299

J. R. WARD
GROCERIES—Open Evenings
314 Seneca St. Phone 4450

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

Merchants wishing to learn more about this Wonderful Business Boosting Plan, call Mr. Beynon, at McDonald's New York Shop, Phone 3177

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY

WEST THIRD STREET AND BROADWAY

Announce they have joined The Greatest of All Profit-Sharing Plans, and will give FREE 10 National Merchandise Stamps Sat., May 1, to everyone entering their store. No purchase necessary. Come and get acquainted with their Courteous Clerks and Money-Saving Prices on Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes, Clothing, Trunks, Suit Cases, Furniture, House Furnishings, Wall Paper, Hardware, Stoves, Paints, Oils, Brushes, Garden Hose, Etc. A Carload of Screen Doors and Windows.

WATCH PAPERS FOR BARGAIN PRICES AND FREE STAMPS

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 116 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | TUESDAY, MAY 4, 1915 | Price One Cent

Give Pullen a Dark Day and the Rest May be Quite Easy

Fulton High school will have another chance to take a fall out of its jinx tomorrow afternoon, when the strong Syracuse University Freshmen team will hold forth at Athletic Park. This attraction is billed as one of the best of the season. The Freshmen have one of the strongest teams in the history of the university, and some of the material came in for favorable mention as 'Varsity possibilities, but on account of the three-year rule, the embyro stars could not be used. The hurling staff is exceptionally strong and, as Fulton promises to be rather weak in that department tomorrow, the visitors will have the edge on the locals in that regard at least. Familiarity with the field and some hard practice yesterday and today gives the locals confidence, however, and they will put up a stiff battle.

Barnes, a second baseman, has been drafted for box duty. Pullen, who went out for that position earlier in the year, but was relegated to the outfield has also been put through the tuning-up process and with these two men to bank on the locals feel that the hurling will be fairly well taken care of. Barnes is an unknown quantity, never having pitched a game, but he seems to have control, which is very essential, and he shades Pullen a degree in that regard. Pullen has a world of smoke but is inclined to wildness. Coach Stauring favors Pullen, if tomorrow is a dark day.

O'Brien, the "Matty" of the staff, is out of it for some time. Medical examination disclosed that he has some badly battered muscles which will have to be handled with gloves, if he is ever to pitch again. Rather than jeopardize his chances for another season, "Oby" has wisely decided to lay off until he can go into a game with the certainty that he is in good shape and taking no chances. His loss will be sorely felt, but Stauring has decided to make the best of it, and as the season is still young he hopes to develop one good twirler before the stiff contests at the rear end of the schedule. Webb is still working out daily and he may show something later on when it is needed. His main failing seems to be steadiness, but Stauring hopes to overcome that in a few games.

The infield for tomorrow will be practically the same as that of last Saturday. "Specs" Caffrey will hold down the quarter pole, Barker will play the keystone sack, Martin at short, and the rooters will have their chance to see Keeler in action at third. James is a gentleman of industry on the side and this circumstance prevented his apparance in the curtain-raiser last Friday. He will be there with the chimes tomorrow.

The onslaught of the Syracuse hosts is slated to begin at 3.30 o'clock. McConnel will officiate at the obsequies and it is asked that flowers be omitted.

Gulflight, Lying in Crow Sound, is Held Down by the Head

London, Tuesday.—The American steamship Gulflight, which was torpedoed by a Germ[illegible] last Saturday and which is anchored at Crow Sound, [illegible] from Scilly to Lloyds reports, is down by the bows. The [illegible]ck the vessel forward apparently abaft the bow and a foot below the low water line. The cargo seems to be undamaged.

There is no apparent list, but the Gulflight is so far down that the forehold is full of water and the propeller blades only eighteen inches above the water, the ship's freeboard bing not more than two feet.

Crow Sound, where the Gulflight has been beached, is a bight in the Scilly group of islands, off the southwest coast of England. The Gulflight, after being torpedoed and while in a sinking condition, was worked into Crow Sound by British patrol vessels, and to insure that the damaged ship did not sink she was beached after getting her across Crow bar.

The exact spot where the Gulflight encountered the German submarine is only known in the general terms that it was off the Scilly

The group consists of forty-eight islands, of which five are inhabited, viz., St. Mary, St. Agnes, St. Martin, Trescow and Beyer. Islands. The Scilly group lies about twenty-one miles westward of Land's [illegible] occupies a space of about forty-[illegible] square miles. The others are more or less barren.

COMMENDATIONS FOR THE EVENING TIMES FROM ALL SIDES

Since this paper was issued last evening, containing an account of the meeting at the Chamber of Commerce rooms last Saturday evening, when the Brown bill was discussed, there have been countless congratulatory messages received from taxpayers of this city, regarding the stand taken by this paper on the question of the bill, and the salary provision it contained. The account appeared in no other paper published or circulated in this city.

The Evening Times never has made and never will make any promise, the faithful observance of which will prevent this paper from publishing live news which interests and concerns taxpayers of this city. Statements to the effect that this paper made any such promise are not to be credited.

The charge has been made that this paper is prejudiced against the Administration and the Brown bill which is an administration measure. That is true and this paper is not alone in its stand as a ballot taken tomorrow, next week or next month would prove.

The Fulton Evening Times again promises this—

To print all the news—when it is news—without fear or favor, particularly news pertaining to the regulation of city affairs.

"CIVIC NEEDS;" E. R. REDHEAD

Borrowed Time Club Heard Talk on the Needs of Our City

E. R. Redhead, President of the Victoria Paper Mills Co. and first President of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce, addressed the Borrowed Time Club at the Presbyterian church parlors Monday afternoon on "Some of Fulton's Needs."

Mr. Redhead spoke for about forty minutes, touching upon a number of subjects related to the welfare of our city. While he spoke in criticism of some things, yet his remarks were in good spirit and were intended to be of help in the present forward movement of the new Chamber of Commerce.

The following is a summary of his address: First, he spoke of two things which would de desirable in Fulton, the one, better railroad stations. Fulton has not now a railroad station equal to the size and importance of the place. Oneida, Cortland, Geneva and other cities of about the population of Fulton were mentioned as having one or more fine stations which were a credit and an ornament to the community. Fulton ought to have, at least, one railroad station on each side of the river which would be ornamental and convenient and attractive. The other desirable thing mentioned was less blowing of whistles by the mills as making too much noise, unnecessary for marking or indicating the time of day and an economic waste in the loss of steam. Fewer and shorter blasts upon the whistles would in most cases answer the purpose of marking time and thus avoid the unnecessary noise and waste.

Needed things mentioned were these:

First, a thorough "Clean Up" day or period. This, the Chamber of Commerce with the sanction and help of the City Board of Health is undertaking. It is a work which should have the hearty co-operation of all our citizens and if carried out in the right way, will make Fulton, with its parks and its scenic attractions in the shape of a broad river with high and sloping banks, which if terraced and beautified is a not expensive way, one of the most attractive cities in the State. It pays in a commercial sense to cultivate the aesthetic taste, for a clean, sanitary well-kept town will by reason of these excellencies attract people to its borders—the very best class of new citizens to add to the population.

Second, better fire protection or rather reduction of fire hazards. Our splendid fire department was complimented, but it is handicapped in fight-

(Continued on Page Five)

PATHFINDERS' 1915 SEASON

Nothing to Be Left Undone to Make This the Banner Year in Club's History

This year promises to be the banner one in several seasons for the membership of Pathfinder Boat Club, as [illegible] for the annual opening day, May 30.

Pathfinder Island, the beautiful, one of Fulton's delightful historic spots, will this year be looked after by Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Holmes, who will of course work under the supervision of the Island Committee, whose membership comprises Messrs. George W. Morton, George E. True and Dr. S. D. Keller. The committeemen and Mr. and Mrs. Holmes are sure to please the membership at large by looking after every incidental connected with the many special and regular feature days during the coming season.

The athletic grounds will receive great care so that members and guests may not have reason for complaint when field days are held, and Mr. and Mrs. Holmes have promised added courteous treatment and attractive menus upon every and all occasions.

Motoring to the Island will this year be quite an attraction, due in great measure to the splendid roadbed afforded by the State on the eastern side of old Oswego river and, to the fact that a majority of the membership are enthusiastic motorists. Another important improvement made at the Island is the roadway built across the old canal, the latter having been recently filled up. This feature along with the new ferry boat installed for carrying passengers over the river, indeed make the Island quite accessible. Two new docks are to be built, one for the landing of the ferry boat, the other for the landing of motor boats, canoes and sailing craft.

Charles S. Hall is the new commodore of the club, and he will undoubtedly be the means of creating added interest in perpetuating the boating features, for which in years gone by Pathfinder held its place in aquatic sports.

Mr. and Mrs. Holmes, the kindly, courteous steward and stewardess, are to arrive May 15, when they will at once begin making preparations for the annual field day opening of Pathfinder Island Boat Club, which should this year eclipse all previous ones for activity.

WEATHER FORECAST

Showers tonight and Wednesday [illegible] winds, mostly southeast, becoming variable.

Man of Science to Lecture Upon Open-Air Public Schools

James Maddox, professor of science at Oswego Normal school, will deliver a lecture on "Tuberculosis and the Prevention of It," Thursday afternoon in the Public Library under the auspices of the Fulton Open-air school committee. Mr. Maddox is an interesting and fluent speaker, and he will illustrate his talk with stereopticon views, showing conditions which breed the dread disease and conditions which are to be desired. The interiors of various homes will be shown, the work of the nurses and the breeding places of the tubercular germs.

Admission to the lecture will be free and the general public is invited. It is expected that those who have children in the public schools here will make a special effort to attend. The lecture is one of a series planned by the Committee which will endeavor to impress the people of the city with the necessity of combating this disease at all times with every means possible. The Open-air committee is doing a great work here with the school, and its object in giving these free lectures is a commendable one. The lecture Thursday will begin at 3 o'clock.

The Germans Send Five More Neutral Vessels to Bottom

London, Tuesday.—One Swedish and three Norwegian steamships and a Swedish schooner were torpedoed by German submarines in the North Sea on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. With the American steamship Gulflight, attacked off the Sicilly Islands on Saturday, six neutral merchant vessels were made the target for submarine missiles in the three days. While the Gulflight succeeded in reaching shoal water and is still afloat, the North Sea victims were sunk. So far as is known the crews made their escape without casualties.

Another, or it may have been the same, submarine attacked a small fleet of trawlers fifty miles off Aberdeen on Sunday. Two of the craft were sunk. Three more were pursued, but the approach of a British patrol ship caused the German to submerge.

The greatest interest is manifested in London concerning the effect of the Berlin Admiralty's raid on Scandinavian shipping. It is said here no excuse of faulty identification of the lost vessels can be offered by Berlin, for in at least one instance the Germans directed the rescue of the crew, and in another passed sufficient time near the steamship to fire nine projectiles at her before she sank.

The first vessel to go to the bottom was the Norwegian steamship Laila, sunk on Friday. Her crew was landed at Copenhagen yesterday by the steamship Anna, which witnessed the sinking and at the request of the commander of the submarine took the crew of the Laila aboard.

The Norwegian steamship Baldwin was sunk on Sunday. The crew, numbering seventeen men, were allowed to take to their boats. Yesterday they landed at Leith. Nine shots were fired into the Baldwin before she went down.

The Baldwin was of 698 tons net register and 231 feet long. Built in 1903, she was owned by Det Selmerke Rederi, of Trondhjem, Norway.

The Norwegian steamship America sank within two hours. The crew of the America consisting of thirty-nine men, was picked up thirteen hours later by the Norwegian mail ship Sterling and was landed at Newcastle yesterday. The America left Sunderland on Saturday morning for Bergen. Her tonnage was 2,305. She was engaged in the transatlantic trade and left Philadelphia on March 28 on her last trip eastward.

The crew of five men of the Swedish schooner Elsa were landed at Leith last night. Their vessel, they say, was destroyed by the German submarine U-29 on Sunday morning.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 [illegible] Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 45

C. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
[illegible] BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. R. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 4, 1915

Opinions

"Brutalization of Childhood."

It was not for the purpose of opening these columns to a further torrent of vague and irresponsible allegations that the president of the New York Anti-Vivisection Soceity was invited, a few weeks ago to reduce some rhetorical flourishes she had lately indulged in to an unadorned recital of facts. "We want publicity," she had said, "trustworthy publicity," and accordingly an opportunity was oxered her to make public what she knew of the abuse of physiological teaching in our public schools.

She now writes to thank The Tribune for quoting her so liberally and expresses a sincere desire "to bring this matter more fully before the readers of so important a paper." By way of justifying her allegations she tells us that "many of the high schools in New York city and vicinity, as well as the general school throughout the state, practise vivisection;" she quotes "one young girl" who, when asked if the animals could feel, said, "They act as if they did"; she speaks, on hearsay, of "a school table full of frogs, upanaethetized and partially vivisected," and she offers us in conclusion the opinion of a noted antivivisectionist on "the brutalization of childhood." As to the evidence she was invited to give, all she has to relate is that some cruel little boys at Redwood, N. Y., "had made it a practice to go out to the woods and ponds near by, securing turtles, frogs, etc., bringing them into town, building a fire and roasting them alive." We are asked to believe that these young fiends acquired this habit "in consequence of the teaching of vivisection in the public schools"; because "our lecturer" was told so "by some merchants of that place."

If the president of the Anti-Vivisection Society has no better foundation for her denunciations she would do wisely to confine hereself, as hitherto, to rhetoric.—N. Y. Tribune.

Liquor Legislation in England

It is easy to account for Mr. Lloyd George's determination "to take a pledge never again to touch drink—politically." When first he dropped a hint of national prohibition he was overwhelmed with letters from all parts of the kingdom. We were not told how many of them were in favor of restrictive legislation and how many against it, but what has happened in the meantime makes it clear enough that compulsion, even of a partial kind, would have proved singularly unpopular.

The belief that the King's message might make the way easy was founded on a misapprehension. Doubtless his example as followed by many, but it is one thing to imitate the voluntary action of a monarch and quite another to submit to the coercion of a legislature. When the late King ceased to use the last button of his waistcoat he set a fashion; we may be very sure, however, that not all the tailors in England could have forced that fashion by act of Parliament. Popular clamor would have driven them to Tooley street. It is just so in the case of national temperance.

But there is more than this in the opposition to anti-alcoholic legislation. The liquor industry is of vast importance; exceeding anything the Chancellor of the Exchequer seems to have dreamt of when he projected his new scheme of taxation, though he might reasonably have been expected to foresee the objections of the Irish members. Mrs. William O'Brien, speaking for Cork, declared with some warmth that even the moderate measure actually proposed would be "as horrible as if the city were bombarded and sacked by Germans." Nor was Mr. Redmond slow to discover in the increased taxes one more conspiracy to strangle a great Irish industry. The upshot of the debate [illegible] taken in parliament since the war began—and now even the most zealous [illegible] the Government are clearly convinced that there must be [illegible] of the new tariff.

The belief of "The Daily Chronicle" Parliamentary correspondent that a plea for total prohibition "would have excited enthusiasm in the House and country" is at least open to question. That the remedy actually proposed was received coldly is to understate the case. The obvious fact is that it has failed to satisfy any party.—N. Y. Tribune.

OUR OWN PIECE

When a Syracuse newspaper boasts of its Fulton circulation it is evident Fulton's money has helped to build an institution distinctly foreign to this community. In the dim and distant past the Syracuse evening newspapers were blissfully alone in the field bidding as a medium for daily advertising and tabulating the daily happenings here and abroad.

Today a home institution, The Evening Times, leads the way. Progressive merchants are realizing its value as an advertising medium, and a sense of loyalty too bids them give home industry prestige over other mediums. Individuals are making the home paper a daily ambassador to their homes, thereby keeping in close touch with the vital problems that concern the community in which they live.

With this issue The Evening Times reads Volume 1, No. 115. When this publication made its initial appearance the "crape-hangers" said The Evening Times was destined for a brief, oh, very brief life—perhaps ten days would be the extent. Some there were who believed, others advertised and subscribed for the "home paper."

Today The Evening Times has made itself a firm place in the homes of the individuals and in business circles.

Today The Evening Times' circulation is 3,000 copies.

Today The Evening Times advertising space shows a daily average increase of 47.2 inches over last week.

Is it loyalty to home industry alone that causes this showing? Is it not possible it serves well the needs of local people.

Fulton wants a daily newspaper. The publishers of The Evening Times are doing their part; as citizens interested in the growth and welfare of Fulton are you each doing your part?

ARBOR DAY, MAY 17, 1915

I said last year, what has doubtless not been remembered by many, that I would ask the boys and girls in the schools to write the Arbor Day Annual the next year. This is the way in which I hope to have it written. The pupils in each school, or the pupils in every room in each school, are asked to select one of their number to write a letter to the Commissioner of Education, telling him how Arbor day was celebrated in his or her school, or telling him about the school itself. Perhaps a better way in some schools will be to have all the pupils write and then have selection of the best letter made by the teacher. But whatever the method, let there be one letter from each school, or each room, and let it be written on one sheet (not larger than 8 inches by 10 inches). If one sheet is sent from every one of the schools, the collection will be so large that it will fill many volumes. These volumes will together make the best Arbor Day Annual ever prepared in any State. They will be placed in the State Library as a souvenir of this day.

So will you not all contribute to this Annual: city schools and country schools; schools where there are no trees, except in the parks blocks away; schools which are near the forests of hemlock and birch and beech; school which are near the "sugar bush"; schools which lie among orchards or vineyards; schools which have only the scrub-oaks around them; schools which have only telegraph poles for trees.

Do not hesitate to write even if you think the celebration unimportant, or even if you have no celebration. Among the letters which come daily from all parts of the State, one that seemed relatively most unimportant has several times in these weeks crowded out the thought even of Legislature and the Constitutional Convention. It was a letter from a school child up in Monroe county, that told incidentally of her looking every afternoon to see whether two meadowlarks of other years had returned. That letter was like a bit of Woodsworth in a book of statics.

When your school Arbor Day letter has been writen please send it once to me at the State Education Building, Albany, N. Y., or if you can not remember the name of the Commissioner, send it to the State Education Building and it will reach me. It will cost you only two cents. The volume which it will help to make will be worth to the State more than ten thousand times two cents. And some day I hope to gather into a future bulletin the best of these letters.

May you all have a good Arbor Day about which to write—a day not only of tree-planting but also of tree-thinking; that is, a day in which you will all be thinking of what the tree, and all that it symbolizes in human life, can bring to the community and to the State.

When healing clay was first applied by the Great Teacher to the eyes of the blind man, he said he saw men as "trees walking." I hope that in the wider significance of Arbor Day we shall see children as "trees growing" and know, as the ancient prophet said in the legend which has been chosen for our Arbor Day, that the trees of the field are but "for man's life."

John H. Finley.

Our Best Navy

The United States Navy was never more powerful that it is today. This is the theme of Secretary Daniels letter written to the president of Williams College.

During the first two years of the Wilson administration, $70,000,000 were authorized for five dreadnoughts, compared with $26,000,000 authorized in the lats two years of the Taft administration for two ships.

In the same period $16,260,000 were appropriated for submarines against half that amount in the previous period. Three of the submarines are the largest ever built anywhere, and 23 are to be of the size used abroad. Shortly the supply of submarines will [illegible] nearly twice what it was two years ago.

The mine and mine laying equipment has been increased 244 per cent. The capacity of the navy's powder factory has been almost doubled. 75 ships not equipped with wireless two years ago are now so furnished. One millions dollars were appropriated for air craft, against practically nothing two years ago.

Of great importance, the Administration has stepped in and severed the partnership which seemed to exist between the government and concerns which provided materials, and has brought in a competition in contracts which has saved millions of dollars. When there was failure to compete on the part of private concerns, the governmenth, when possible, did the work itself. Incidentally, here is one of the reasons for the animosity of some business interests against the present administration.

There are 225 vessels in commission, 36 more than twoy ears ago. There are under construction nine dreadnaughts 23 destroyers, 38 submarines, and seven auxillaries, a total of 77 fighting ships.

In October, November and December the fleet went through a strenuous course of training and is keeping at it. Moreover, "for the first time in years the enlistment is up to the limit prescribed by law and part of the year we have had a waiting list," to quote the Secretary. The enlistment has been increased by nearly 6,000 men. Promotion has been afforded to enlisted men heretofore denied such advancement, 12 having been made ensigns and 13 assistants paymasters.

So the Navy is more fit than it ever was. Perhaps it should be made stronger but the studious effort to make it appear that the fleet is going into decay and is a useless affair is unwarranted. There may be a peace at any price party and a party whose principles are opposed to armed protection for the country, but the Democratic party as represented at Washington is not that party.—Bellville News.

The Recall in Ten States

There are 10 States which have a State-wide recall. Louisiana and Kansas adopted the system last year. In 1912 six States adopted the plan. The movement, therefore, is rather new and possibly it is a scheme which will be undertaken more generally than at present.

Oregon was the first State to adopt the system. In 1908 it provided that all elected officials, including judges, might be recalled providing 25 per cent of the State or local voters signed a petition and then, at the vote, a majority of the voters favor the petition. None of the States has ever experienced its power of recall.

The other States model their law after that of Oregon. [illegible] and Arkansas, however, require that the petition need contain no more than 12 per cent. of the voters and in Kansas the percentage is 10. In some instances, when a local official is up for recall, the percentage of voters differs from the percentage required to recall a State official. In California a local official may be voted on in recall only after the petition is signed by 20 per cent. In Arkansas it is 25 cent. Washington 35 and Kansas 15 in the case of county, and 25 in the case of district officials.

It seems plain that the recall is not a dead issue in the western States, but it is a movement which has not struck New York, and it may never reach this State. Nevertheless, since 10 States have adopted it in the past six years, it is not out of the way to predict that more will be heard of the agitation.—Utica Observer.

A TRIBUTE

No human thought can penetrate that mystery which we call death, and which has all seasons for its own, and when with slow and noiseless footsteps the dread angel enters into the home and beckons our loved ones away, we fain would enter in with them.

On Monday evening, Mrs. Charles R. Lee entered into rest, and we realied that a kind neighbor, a loving friend and a wise counselor had gone from us. The tribute of words seems of trifling worth in comparison with virtues so superior, of which Mrs. Lee was the possessor. The tie which bound her to her loved ones was strong and sweet and gentle was the atmosphere of the home in which she lived, and loved, and whose hospitality was unlimited. Possessed of a happy and cheerful disposition, and her grand, faithful and royal devotion made her presence in the home always blessed. Full of noble impulses and tender sympathy, she was never happier than when contributing to the happiness of others. Her generous heart overflowing with pity for those in distress it was natural for her to carry comfort and consolation to the sorrowful. The tender care and affection of friends could not keep her, and when the summons came, she entered into the shadow of eternity and into the glory of that land where there is no suffering.

Her death has brought deep affliction to the community, and an agony of grief to those best beloved by her. Today and ever, we shall mourn the sunshine of her smile, but her influence will remain to cheer and encourage us to a higher, purer, and nobler life. Surely the Master has walked in His garden and gathered the ripest fruit, and choicest flowers. Beneath the lilies she loved, we lay her away, with the comforting assurance the separation will not be long.

"So true, so constant was her friendship,
That by her alone, we knew her worth
And feel how true a friend has walkedw ith us on earth."

A FRIEND.

This Coupon Is Worth $1.00

Cut it out and bring it to our office with $2.00 and get an Electric Flatiron, or the Coupon and $3.98 will buy a $5.50 Percolator.

DOLLAR COUPON
1
No......... 487613
For advertising purposes, this coupon will apply as one dollar ($1.00) upon the purchase price of any Electric Appliance.
This offer for APPLIANCE WEEK (May 3d to 8th) ONLY.
Real Bargains. Best Merchandise. Startling Prices.
THE ELECTRIC COMPANY, 103 Oneida Street

This Coupon will apply as One Dollar upon the purchase of any Appliance. All Appliances greatly reduced in price.
THIS WEEK ONLY
THE ELECTRIC COMPANY
PHONE 144

For the Farmer:
Sherwin-Williams Paints
For Inside and Outside
Flat-Tone Wall Paints
Famous Belding Hall Refrigerators
New Perfection Oil Stoves
Just the Thing for Warm Weather
Fishing Tackle
Screens Screens Screens
A. M. Druse & Co.
"BUSINESS IS GOOD"
7 South First St. FULTON, N. Y.

THE BIG EVENT

Starting THURSDAY, MAY 6 and Lasting Until Every Article is Sold

M. KATZ & CO.'S $25.000 GLOVERSVILLE STOCK ON SALE

AT 50 CENTS ON THE DOLLAR

Upon closing our Gloversville Store the best part of the stock was shipped in here to be sold at PUBLIC SALE in our large Basement.

JUST THREE CARLOADS OF MERCHANDISE were received here, consisting of Ready-to-wear, Piece Goods, Hosiery, Underwear, Dresses, Waists, Gloves, Notions, House Furnishing Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Woodenware, Tinware, Graniteware, Etc.

AFFIDAVIT—Copy

The New York Central Railroad Co.
East of Buffalo

Fulton, N. Y., 4, 30, 1915

Messrs. M. Katz & Co.,
Fulton, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I beg to inform you we have received three (3) carloads of merchandise shipped by M. Katz & Co., of Gloversville, N. Y., within the last few days.

(Signed) W. H. SINGLETON, Agent.

THERE IS A REASON for this sale—a logical reason

THERE WILL BE A REASON

that will bring joy to homes for miles around.

THIS PUBLIC SALE

Iis forced upon us—as we have no room on our shelves to place this large stock.

TO BE PROPERLY PREPARED FOR THIS BIG EVENT

We have an extra force of clerks ready to take care of all who attend this big sale. As we have no place to put this surplus stock IT MUST BE CLOSED OUT at 25 per cent. and 50 per cent. below the wholesale price.

We have devoted our entire basement to the display of of Gloversville stock. Just think, a space 50x125 square feet full of Bargains.

This Sale Will Save You Money and Lots of it.

THIS SALE IS FOR CASH ONLY — NO GOODS CHARGED OR SENT C. O. D.
NO APPROVALS OR PHONE ORDERS — POSITIVELY NO GOODS EXCHANGED

The Following are Only a Few of the Many Money-Saving Bargains to be Found in Our Bargain Basement

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 1c

Enamel Pie Tins, Bread and Cake Tins, Writing Paper, Clothes Pin Bags, Shelf Paper, Forks, Can Openers, Tin Sauce Pans, Comb and Brush Holders and hundreds of other useful articles.

Ribbons, Beltings, Laces, Embroideries, Trimmings; sold up to 10c per yard.

Jewelry, Cords, Neckwear, Belts, Notions, Toilet Articles, Handkerchiefs; sold up to 25c each.

ASSORTED HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES AT 3c

Dover Egg Beaters, Tin Tea Pots, Pudding Tins, Dippers, Garden Shears, Brushes, Large Meat Forks, Candle Holders, Soap Holders and hundreds of other useful articles,

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 5c

Mincing Knives, Dairy Pans, Sieves, Cake, Pie and Bread Tins, Sink Brushes, Covered Buckets, Enameled Pie Tins, Oil Cans, 2-in-One Shoe Polish, Pound of 20-Mule-Team Borax, Shelf Brackets, Large Dairy Pans, Brushes, Picture Holders, Two-in-One Dippers, Large Shawl Straps, Pictures, Scoops and hundreds of other useful articles.

Ribbons, Pillow Tops, Handkerchiefs, Windsor Ties, Doilies, Pillow Cords, Drapery Cords, Stamped Pillow Tops, Infants' Mittens, Laundered Collars, Hats, Jewelry, Beads, Pocketbooks, etc.; sold up to 30c.

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 10c

Aprons, Shirtwaists, Petticoats, Kimonos, Veilings, Trimmings, Rufflings, Ruching, Muslin Undergarments, Hats, Dresser Scarfs and Squares, Handkerchiefs, Neckwear, Pocketbooks, etc.; sold up to 50c.

Collenders, Large Dippers, Nickel Trays, Enameled Drinking Cups, Door Springs, Large Lip Sauce Pans, Angel Food Tins, Large Preserving Kettle.

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 19c

Bath Rugs, Muslin Undergarments, Slips, Shirt Waists, Infants' Wear, Scarfs, Squares, Children's Guimps, Aprons, Hosiery, Slippers, Children's Dresses, Pocketbooks, Jewelery, etc.; sold up to 75c.

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 34c

Shirst Waists, Kimonos, Dress Skirts, Children's Dresses, Knit Underwear, Drawn Work Centerpieces, Scarfs, Petticoats, Middy Blouses, Hand Bags, Brazziers, etc.; sold up to $1.00.

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 48c

Shirt Waists, Muslin Slips, Combinations, Kimonos, Infants' Wear, Petticoats, Duck Skirts, House Dresses, Middy Blouses, Nightgowns, Sweaters, etc.; sold up to $1.50.

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 69c

Muslin Petticoats, Silk Waists, Sweaters, House Dresses, Silk Kimonos, Infants' Wear, Wash Dresses, Skirts, Children's Dresses, etc.; sold up to $2.00.

ASSORTED LOT OF GOODS AT 88c

White and Colored Women's Wash Dresses, Skirts, Coats, Children's Dresses, Kimonos, Muslin Underwear, Silk Slips, etc.; sold up to $3.00.

ASSORTED LOT OF GARMENTS AT $1.50

Most of the garments in this lot are single odd sizes, all good styles of high grade materials and good useful garments, including Dresses, Coats, Raincapes and Raincoats, White Coats, Skirts, Children's Dresses and Coats; and other garments; sold up to $7.50.

ASSORTED LOT OF GARMENTS AT $4.50

Fine high grade garments, Suits, Coats, evening and afternoon Street Dresses, Skirts, Raincoats, Children's Dresses and Coats; sold up to $25.00.

In addition to the Gloversville Stock we will offer daily specials from our Fulton Stock of Newest Spring and Summer Merchandise at very Attractive Price Reductions

M. KATZ & COMPANY

DEPARTMENT STORE

"The Store That Makes Good"

The goods on sale will be displayed in our basement only, so as not to interfere with our regular business on the main and second floors.

63-65 SO. FIRST STREET — FULTON, NEW YORK

[illegible] the most ronsing bargains Fulton or any other city [illegible] known.

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Why does the Evening Times get results? Because so very many subscribers say—"I hate to miss a single copy of your paper; I'd rather miss a copy of my 'Syracuse ———' than the Evening Times."

THE LATEST

REPORT OF ADVERTISING

Week of April 26 to 30—five days only—Total number of inches Display Advertising 1001

DAILY AVERAGE 200.2

Total number of inches advertising carried by the Evening Times during week of April 19 to 24—six days only—was 919 inches.

DAILY AVERAGE 153

INCREASE

Daily Average—47.2 Inches

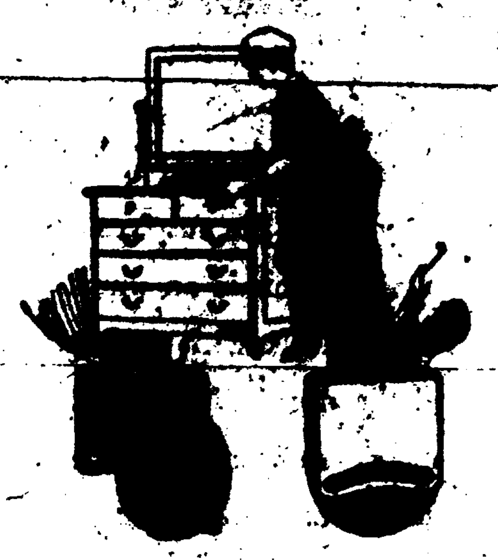
"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Caster Wheel That Makes Furniture Moving Easy.



An ingenious mounting for the wheel is embodied in a furniture caster recently invented, says Popular Mechanics. The caster holder revolves on a pin inserted in the furniture leg in the usual manner, while each end of the axle of the wheel works in flat inverted V shaped slots in the sides of the holder, so that the wheel slides from one side to the other when the furniture is being moved and trails readily without requiring the holder to reverse. When the furniture is at rest, the axle takes its place at the middle or high part of the slot, and the caster wheel is therefore central under the furniture leg.

Cheese Omelet.

This is a most delicious and savory dish, and quickly and easily made. Break three eggs into a bowl, beat well with an egg whisk, add a tablespoonful of milk or cream and salt and pepper to taste. Place a frying pan over a brisk fire and melt a teaspoonful of butter in it. As soon as the butter is very hot pour the egg mixture into it, beating all the while. Shake the pan gently when the omelette is cooking. As soon as it begins to "set," loosen the edges with a knife, scatter a dessertspoonful of grated cheese over the surface of the omelet, fold it over in two, slip it upon a hot dish and serve immediately.

Household Helps.

It is a needless waste of fire to keep a stove red hot all the time.

Rice with grated cheese over it makes a change as a luncheon dish.

Grease sweet potatoes before they are put into the oven to bake. They will bake in half the time and the skins will be soft.

When you paste labels on glass jars that are used for spices or cereals put the label on the inside. It will stay more securely.

Perspiration stains may be removed from white blouses if they are steeped before washing in cold water, in which a little bicarbonate of soda has been added.

Graham Pudding.

A cupful of molasses, a cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of graham flour, a cupful of slightly chopped raisins, a saltspoonful of salt, two level teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in a little warm water. Mix together, put in pudding dish and steam two hours. For the sauce beat an egg thoroughly, add three-fourths of a cupful of powdered sugar and a cupful of whipped cream, flavor with half a teaspoonful of vanilla.—Country Gentleman.

Escaloped Rhubarb.

Put into a pudding dish a layer of buttered bread crumbs, then one of finely cut rhubarb, add a generous sprinkling of sugar, and a dusting of cinnamon, repeat this process until the quantity is sufficient for the number of people to be served, making the last layer of the crumbs. Cover and bake for half an hour, then remove the cover and let brown. Serve hot, with cream.

Rhubarb Custard.

One pint of sweetened and steamed rhubarb. Strain over this one-half ounce of gelatin, which has been previously dissolved in sufficient cold water to cover it. When cold stir in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs and one-half pint of whipped cream; pour into a fancy mold and set away to harden. When ready to serve, turn out of the mold on to a fancy plate.

Tomato Pot Roast.

Buy a pot roast of beef and put it into the bean pot. Place it on top of the stove with a little cold water until it begins to boil. Pour one large can of tomatoes, well seasoned, over the whole, place the pot in a medium oven and cook for three hours. It needs very little watching and will be found extremely tender when eaten.

Beef Loaf.

One and a half pounds round steak, one-fourth pound fat pork, two tablespoonfuls milk or cream, one tablespoonful lemon juice, three tablespoonfuls of breadcrumbs, one egg, three-fourths tablespoonful salt and a good sprinkling of pepper. Make in loaf and bake one and one-half hours.

Tomato Eggs.

Cut some thick slices of tomato, dip each into flour seasoned with salt and pepper and fry. Make some rounds of toast, butter them, lay the tomatoes on them and put a poached egg on each. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

A Good History Game.

Count the number of persons to take part in the game, then prepare two slips of blank paper for each player, except Sarah and Dan who are the conductors. The conductors write on these slips the names of as many states as there are players. On the other slips the capitals of these states are written.

Having written the required number, have the other players leave the room. Then Sarah and Dan arrange the vacant chairs to suit themselves, in two rows or in a circle. The conductor having the names of the states places one on the bottom of each chair, the written side down. The other conductor holds the slips containing the names of the capitals.

Then the players are invited in and each seats himself in a chair holding one of the slips. This must be done, without trying to see the names written on the scraps of paper. When all are seated the conductor having the "capital slips," passes along letting each one draw from her hand. Then each one raises and examines the name of the state on which he has been sitting. Those who have drawn the names of the capital of their states, shall remain seated. The unlucky players return the slips to their conductors and again leave the room. The "state slips" are then mixed up and placed on the unoccupied chairs, the players called in, and the game proceeds as before.

The game is continued until all are allowed to remain. Then each in his turn may be required to tell some of the early history of his state slip and relate some interesting facts about his capital. Failing to do this he must pay the conductors a forfeit, and much amusement may follow in redeeming the pawns.

The game may be played without forfeits if preferred, and some different test of the history or geography of the states required, as giving boundaries, naming principal rivers and mountains or mentioning the leading products.

Persistent Questions.

Seat all the players save three in a row. The first of these three goes to each player and whispers in his ear some sentence descriptive of where he is supposed to be, the second player follows with a sentence telling what he is supposed to be doing and the third tells him whom he is supposed to be with. The first of the three then calls the name of some player and that player must give in one long sentence the three given him. If he laughs he pays a forfeit. As the three leaders are each ignorant of what the other gives the results are apt to be ludicrous.

One player saying "I am in the middle of the Atlantic ocean popping corn with Mary Smith," while another declares "I am in an airship darning stockings for Joe Brown," is apt to produce a gale of merriment.

Concealed Cities.

1. Anna polishes the silver when company is expected.

2. The unselfish hero bleeds for his country.

3. Will Douglas go west if we give him a ticket?

4. When we told her to go she neatly turned up her sleeves and cooked dinner.

5. There came to my room a hare pursued by the hunters.

6. I am her stalwart champion for ever.

7. I called the hat extraordinary, chic, a gorgeous millinery confection.

Answers.—1. Annapolis. 2. Leeds. 3. Glasgow. 4. Goshen. 5. Omaha. 6. Amherst. 7. Chicago.

Badges to Boy Scouts.

The American ambassador, Walter Hines Page, recently presented in behalf of the American Boy Scouts gold badges to twenty-five English boy scouts who assisted the American relief committee during the rush following the declaration of war. Mr. Page also sent letters, with badges, to five boy scouts now serving in the war zone.

An Ancient Tree.

A specimen of the kauri pine in New Zealand, growing on Mercury bay, has a trunk twenty-four feet in diameter and is said to be 1,300 years old.

Waste From Coins.

The waste of metal from coins rubbing together is said to amount to one ton and a quarter of gold and eighty-eight tons of silver annually.

The Building of the Nest.

They'll come again to the apple tree—
 Robin and all the rest.
When the orchard branches are fair to see
 In the snow of the blossoms drest.
And the prettiest thing in the world will be
 The building of the nest.

Weaving it well, so round and trim,
 Hollowing it with care.
Nothing too far away for him,
 Nothing for her too fair.
Hanging it safe on the topmost limb,
 Their castle in the air.

Ah, mother bird, you'll have weary days
 When the eggs are under your breast,
And shadows may darken the dancing rays
 When the wee ones leave the nest,
But they'll find their wings in a glad amaze,
 And God will see to the rest!

So come to the tree with all your train
 When the apple blossoms blow;
Through the April shimmer of sun and rain
 Go flying to and fro.
And sing to our hearts as we watch again
 Your fairy-building grow.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

Milady's Mirror

Watch Your Toothbrush.

A good toothbrush if used conscientiously should not be in use more than two weeks at a time, but it is better to keep two in use so that each may have a period of drying out and airing. It never pays to buy too cheap a brush if the price is at the expense of the bristles. In the first place, a poor set of bristles will not do their work well, and, in the second place, loosely fastened bristles are very dangerous if they slip down the throat, where they may catch and decay or penetrate the walls of the digestive tract. Always wash out the brush thoroughly after each application, and, by the way, a new brush should be soaked in a weak solution of bicarbonate of soda for two hours both to disinfect it from shop-handling and to set the bristles so that they will not fall out so readily.

The teeth should be brushed at night, after each meal and upon rising. It is particularly important to clean them the last thing before retiring, so that food particles will not remain in the teeth crevices to decay overnight when the mouth saliva is not active enough to prevent it.

During a long illness the teeth should be carefully cleaned when they cannot receive attention from a dentist. If this were done fewer teeth troubles would be laid to the ailment, which is not much more to blame than neglect of the mouth. See that the mouth is constantly washed out with a little bicarbonate of soda, which can be prepared by dissolving a teaspoonful of the bicarbonate (ordinary baking soda) in a pint of water and bottling it for use. Most authorities consider this better than too frequent a use of the hydrogen peroxide solutions which are not always good for the teeth.

Take Care of the Mouth.

Some fortunate girls are born to pretty mouths. A very few have the much sung Cupid's bow, with perhaps the added charm of a dimple. Others have a smile which transforms an otherwise plain face. A great many have very commonplace mouths, with no redeeming dimples. And some few, fortunately comparatively very few, have large mouths or distorted mouths. But no mouth is hopelessly ugly. Sometimes the teeth may be crooked, distorting the mouth, and here the dentist can give relief. But, oftenest of all, the mouth is made homely by facial contortions, the habit of screwing up the lips when talking, of drawing the mouth up on one side when laughing. The mother of growing children cannot be too careful of their appearance.

Whatever the shape of the mouth, its defects can be balanced in a large measure by good teeth, healthy gums and red lips. There is absolutely no excuse in this age of successful dental surgery for misshapen or protruding teeth and similar mouth defects. With comparatively little pain the teeth can be straightened, and in case they must be removed because of their bad individual shape new ones will be inserted on a bridge, not on an unsightly plate.

Another advance in surgery which adds greatly to the beauty of the mouth is the invention of porcelain fillings, which are rapidly replacing the gold ones.

About Climbing Stairs.

Climbing stairs always has been thought to be very injurious to a woman, yet in many cases, if it is right done, it may be of real benefit and gradually strengthen the heart and shoulders instead of doing actually the reverse. Mount the stairs slowly with the body erect, the head and chest high, and allow the leg muscles to do the work. Try this for a week instead of the old way of bending the back and depressing the chest and see how it improves the general carriage.

A physical culture exercise that is unrivaled for giving one an erect and graceful carriage, straightening the shoulders and making them as level as those of a West Point cadet is done by this same stair climbing, only in this case with the arms hanging at full length. The hands should be clasped behind the back, with the fingers interlaced and the hands turned as nearly to back as possible.

Then, standing very erect, mount the stairs slowly, and before half the ascent is made every cell in the lungs will have been expanded many times. These exercises are excellent for any one whose heart is in good condition, but when this organ is in a diseased state it is well to avoid stair climbing whenever possible.

If You Wish the Bloom of Youth.

If you wish to have rosy cheeks be careful of your diet. Eat simple, nourishing foods; avoid pastries, sweets, all rich and spicy foods and oily meats, such as pork and veal. Drink milk, cocoa and chocolate instead of tea and coffee. Pure air, pure water and pure food are the first essentials to a pure complexion. So are sunlight, out of door exercises and sleep. A cheerful disposition has much to do with the health. There is a story told of a husband who objected to his wife using cosmetics. He told her that the best way to give the face a good color was to get a pot of rouge and one rabbit's foot, bury them two miles from home and then walk out and back once a day to see if they were still there. She is said to have tried it and found it to be all her husband claimed.

IT'S WORK NOW, IT WAS TALK

Contrasting Features Apparent Since Whitman Assumed His Political Office

The scarcity of messages and promises from the executive chamber this year is one of the conspicious differences between the Whitman administration and its immediate predecessor. A year ago it was a dull week that failed to produce at least one message or highly attractive promise from the Governor. The promises ranged all the way from a saving of $200,000 on the state's coal bill to a saving of $16,000,000 by building state roads of brick to be made at the Elmira reformatory. This year there has been one special message calling attention to the fact that the State had inherited a number of millions of dollars of obligations and it was up to the Legislature to take due notice thereof and make provision for paying them if the state was to keep its credit good.

Some of the critics of the administration displeased by seeing Democrats drop out of the public service through the abolition of their positions complained that Governor Whitman was "hunting heads." The Governor stopped work long enough to admit that he was hunting heads—heads with brains in them to transact the public business of the state—and he proposed to keep on hunting them until he found them. The high standard of appointments to public office made by him from the very outset have furnished the best possible proof of the good faith of his statement above referred to.

To his critics in the New York city administration who argued against the imposition of a direct tax the Governor gave courteous attention even when their criticism took the form of entirely unjustified attacks. After the New York city comptroller had used a corps of fourteen expert accountants on the state's books for ten days to get at the facts, that official openly differed with his associates and declared that no one in the present state administration was responsible for the state's financial condition but that "the one responsible person is Martin H. Glynn, and the one responsible fact is Glynn's sham economy." That Mayor Mitchel and Borough President McAneny still persist in their criticism after Comptroller Prendergast's investigation and findings appears to indicate that they are more anxious to divert attention from conditions in their own bailiwick than to perform any patriotic duty to the state. The Prendergast investigation proved that the Governor knew what he was talking about when he sent his message to the legislature and could well afford to continue attending to the duties of his office as Governor.

When Governor Whitman in his first message to the Legislature said: "The present condition of the state's finances demands the immediate and drastic revision of the state's payrolls and requires that unnecessary offices, departments and commissions shall be abolished," he repeated almost literally the recommendation of his three Democratic predecessors, but while the promise was the same, the performance differed. His predecessors did not aboish any offices and he did. Dropping of unnecessary employes began in departments under Republican heads just as soon as it became apparent that these employes were unnecessary and is going right along.

When the Legislature adjourned it left in the Governor's hands 618 bills to be acted upon within thirty days and the Governor tackled them methodically as he has tackled everything in the line of duty that his office has brought him. "Do the next thing next" and "Say nothing but saw wood" appear to have a prominent place among the Governor's favorite maxims judging from his work.

MOTORCYCLE LICENSE BILL AT ALBANY

The Hewitt bill, taxing motorcycles two dollars each, is now before the Governor. As the latter advocated the measure, and as he is known to favor anything and everything which will increase the revenues of the State, it is expected that he will sign the bill.

Motorcyclists in general favor a State license, they being just as anxious to do their share towards good road improvements as are the owners of automobiles. The Hewitt measure does this and also stops the threat of local licenses which would be more costly and inconvenient to the motorcyclists.

It is not known just how many motorcyclists there in the State, but a conservative estimate places the number at forty thousand. This would mean an income of at least $80,000 to the State, besides the tax which the bill places upon dealers.

METROPOLITAN SEASON DECLARED A SUCCESS

New York, May 4.—Giulio Gatti-Casazza, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company, on the eve of his departure tonight for Italy, issued a statement in which he declared that the season just ended, though confronted at the outset with many difficulties and with unpromising prospects, had been a success. The courageous spirit of the directors, who assumed the entire responsibility for what seemed to be a risky undertaking, the loyalty of the public, which so numerously attended performances despite the general financial depression, and the good will and zeal of every one connected with the organization, Mr. Gatti-Casazza says, are responsible for this good result.

CRUISER BROOKLYN SENT TO ORIENT

Washington, May 4.—The cruiser Brooklyn, at Boston, was today ordered to the Orient to relieve the Saratoga as flagship of the Asiatic fleet. The Saratoga will be brought home for overhauling.

LYONS COMPANY MAN TESTIFIES

The Barnes-Roosevelt Case Gathers Many Kinds of Testimonies

Colonel Roosevelt, under a new ruling of the Court, was today allowed to testify in regard to facts not set forth in the pleading in mitigation of damages. And he sought to produce evidence designed to show that he held no malice for Mr. Barnes at the time he delivered speeches in which the plaintiff was named.

Mr. Barnes was called as a witness for the denfense yesterday after Franklin Craley, secretary and treasurer of the Albany Journal Company had sworn that books of the corporation which he was asked about were in the possession of the plaintiff. Mr. Barnes was to testify in regard to how much stock he owned in the Journal company and possibly other things. He was on his way to the witness chair when Justice Andrews, presiding, suggested that it might be a good idea to have Mr. Barnes get the books in question, which counsel said were in a local hotel. Attorneys for both sides agreed to this end and Mr. Barnes was instructed to bring the books to court with him in the morning. Mr. Craley said he didn't know much about the business of the company as he had been secretary and treasurer only since the first of this year. So counsel for Colonel Roosevelt, it was said, also planned to ask the plaintiff some questions about the business of the Journal company, which Mr. Craley was unable to answer. Whether the lawyers would accomplish anything in this direction depended, it was said, upon the judge allowing the plaintiff to be questioned as a witness for the defense further than was necessary to properly identify the books.

The testimony given yesterday was of many kinds. There was evidence regarding printing in Albany. One witness said that the plant of the Albany Journay contained a job press. He admitted, however, that it was operated with a single "kicker," furnishing the motive power. Another witness identified books printed for the city of Albany bearing the line "printed by the Journal Company" and admitted that his companf the Argus company, had actually struck off the books. The same witness told of the Journal company being paid fifteen per cent. commission upon orders by the Argus company.

The general manager of the J. B. Lyon Company testified he knew Mr. Barnes was at one time a stockholder in that printing corporation but he said he had never heard of him being a director. He produced a book containing what he said were the minutes of the meetings of the Board of Directors. Mr. Barnes' name did not appear. Then the witness, under questioning, said the book he had produced was not the original, that having been lost some years ago.

F. C. Foster, chief clerk of the State Printing Board, was called. He said the board was composed of the attorney-general, the comptroller and the secretary of state. He produced official records and identified bids of 1907 for legislative printing. These showed that the J. B. Lyon Company, out of five bidders bid next to the highest. The highest bidder was the Argus Company. The lowest bidder was about $4,000 under that of the Lyon company. Another record which purported to show that the board had awarded the contract to the Lyon company was read. In the award it was stated that the Lyons company's bid was the "most favorable."

A recess was taken.

Special sale of Farm Wagons during month of May. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

COMBINE STORES

M. Katz & Co. has closed its Gloversville store and is removing its stock to the local store. In order to make room for the surplus supply a big sale is scheduled to open Thursday, May 6.

Katz & Co. aim to serve the community in a thoroughly reliable manner. Believing and practicing loyalty to home industry the firm should receive the liberal patronage of local persons.

Pianos—best line in the county. Bogue's, 61 First st.

Gasoline, Oils and Greases. Van-

Special Boys' Suit Week

Very Special Offering This Week

FOR THE BOYS—Sizes, 7 to 18 years

$3.45

Some Splendid Values That Will Interest You

Neat Fancy Grey and Brown Mixtures . . . $3.45
Nobby Boys' Caps . . . . 25c and 50c
Neat Boys' Blouses . . . . 25c and 50c

S. LIPSKY & SON

"THE STORE THAT MAKES GOOD"

27 FIRST STREET FULTON, N. Y.

MASSARO'S DAMAGE SUIT

Local Grocer Sues Phoenix Manufacturer for Alleged Carelessness

A suit for damages, brought by Frank Massaro of this city, against Kirk N. Sweet of Phoenix, will come to trial before the Grand Jury at Pulaski next Monday, Justice Hubbs presiding. The action arose from an automobile collision in Phoenix last fall between the Sweet machine and one owned by Mr. Massaro. Dr. A. L. Hall also of this city was riding in the car with Mr. Massaro at the time and he was also injured. His claim was settled by Mr. Sweet out of court.

Mr. Massaro claims that he was driving through Phoenix slowly bound for this city and that Mrs. Sweet was backing his automobile out of his driveway at the time. In spite of Mr. Massaro's signal, Mr. Sweet backed his car into the road and lost control of it, according to Mr. Massaro and the plaintiff was forced to drive his machine into an open sewer to avoid a collision. Mr. Sweet says that the Massaro machine was maintaining a high rate of speed and got beyond the control of the driver, and the accident resulted from that.

VARIETY SHOWER FOR BRIDE

Mrs. Glenn D. Trimble gave a variety shower at her home on Saturday afternoon, in honor of Miss Queenia Rose Tooley of Fulton, whose marriage to Matthew Frawley is about to take place.

The color scheme was pink and white which was tastefully carried out in the decorations, costumes and menu. Carnations and pink and white sweet peas were the flowers used in the decorations.

One of the most pleasing features of the afternoon's entertainment was a mock wedding. Miss Queenia Tooley, the bride, was gowned in white net over voile and wore a bridal veil caught up with valley lilies. She carried a bouquet of pink roses tied with pink ribbon. The groom was Miss Maizie Gorman, who wore the conventional black suit. Miss Mary Fraley of Fulton was maid of honor and was gowned in pink. She wore a white aigrette in her hair. The best man was Miss Iva Tooley, of Oswego. The flower girl, dressed in white with pink silk sash, was Miss Bessie Coventry. She carried a basket lined with pink satin and filled with flowers which she scattered to make a rosy pathway for the blushing bride. Miss Lulu Baldwin held the broad pink ribbons between which the bridal party passed to a prettily decorated archway, while the Lohengrin wedding march was being sung.

The party stood beneath a large white bell, while the officiating clergyman. Miss Lena Jennings pronounced the happy couple man ad wife in a most able and befitting manner. The bride promised to love and cherish as long as the "potatoes held out," while the groom promised "with all my canned goods I thee endow."

Congratulations were offered immediately after the ceremony, and a wedding breakfast was served by the hostess. The place cards contained a conundrum relating to the bride which added to the amusement. Miss Tooley received many useful and beautiful gifts from her friends.

About thirty guests were bidden to enjoy Mrs. Trimble's hospitality.

They were: Miss Queenia Rose Tooley, Miss Grace Miner, Miss Ruth Graveley, Miss Iva Tooley and Miss Lulu Tooley all of Oswego; Mrs. Oakes Ames, of Mexico; Miss Mary Frawley and Ms. John Salisbury, of Fulton; Mrs. Thomas McMahon, of Central Square; Miss Minnie Tooley, of Pulaski; Mrs. Harlan Collins, of Gilberts Mills; Mrs. Bert Getman, Mrs. Carl Snyder, Miss Blanch Tooley, Mrs. Herman Hollenbeck, Miss Tressia Burton, Miss Maizie Gorman, Mrs. Fred J. Trimble, Miss Lena Jennings, Miss Reda Baldwin, Miss Clara Hills, Miss Ferne Scudder, Miss Bessie Coventry, Mrs. Ray Vrooman, of Central Square; Mrs. M. F. Tooley and Mrs. Gurden D. Trimble.

Those You Know

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. St. Louis have removed from their former residence on Cayuga st. to the Dr. Haviland house in Oneida st.

Assistant Fire Chief Rude has returned with his bride from a wedding trip through Central New York State, and has taken up his residence in 1st street.

Miss Hettie Staunton has resigned her position with the Oswego County Telephone Company, and will soon leave on a two months' trip through New York and Connecticut, stopping in New York city and Bridgeport. Miss Saunton will return to her position with the company in the fall.

The new bathroom has been completed in the City Hall and perspiring policemen will find relief during the warm weather in the new shower bath which has been added to the present equipment.

Floyd Suydam, of Buffalo st. left last night for a brief visit to be spent in Buffalo.

The W. F. M. S. of the First M. E. church will meet at the home of Mrs. George Carver, 177 West 1st st., Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Members and their friends are asked to be present.

Mr. and Mrs. V. C. Lewis of South 3d st. have been entertaining Mrs. Charles Stickney and son of Buffalo.

Mrs. C. R. Dines will entertain the West Side F. T. Embroidery Club at her home, 315 Hannibal st., Thursday afternoon.

Harry Wilcox of Ilion has been spending a few days in this city.

Mrs. Riley Harding will entertain the Queen Esther Society Friday evening at her home, 519 Oneida st.

Mr. and Mrs. Cross of Syracuse called on Fulton friends Sunday.

Albert Gifford of Hannibal has been the guest of Fulton friends.

Prof. and Mrs. Frederick Revels of Syracuse were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Redhead.

Miss Gertrude Candee of Emery st. has recovered from a severe illness.

Maurice Powers, of the Roberts & Woods Company was a visitor in Oswego yesterday and last night.

Attorney H. L. Gilman is in Syracuse today on business.

Attorney James R. Somers spent yesterday in Utica, having several cases in the United States court there.

Miss Elizabeth Garvin of Carthage is visiting in this city.

Smoke filled the St. Louis Bee Hive store on 1st st. this morning and the fire department was notified. In the meantime an investigation revealed the fact that a bad flue in the furnace was responsible for the fumes and the alarm was not answered.

Best makes of Carriages. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Pianos—best line in the county. Bogue's, 61 First st.

EGG PRESERVER

by the qt. or gal. at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

$795 f. o. b. Factory

VANWAGENEN, Inc. Agents

THE HARLEY-DAVIDSON

"King Among Motorcycles"

Get your order in for the 1915 Models NOW—Quick Deliveries if order is given before May 15th.

MOTOR NEEDS—ACCESSORIES—SUNDRIES

THE HARLEY MOTOR SHOP

121 So. First Street

62 years of successful paint making is the history of Wadsworth Paint Works of Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE WADSWORTH IDEA

A gallon of Wadsworth Double-Thick Paint, a gallon of Pure Linseed Oil; stir the two together and what is the result?

Two gallons of liquid Paint ready for the brush at a saving of at least—

50c per gallon

We want you to try Wadsworth Double-Thick Paint on at least one of your buildings, and compare the difference in cost between Wadsworth and the paint you used before, therefore, we will send you a trial order at a special price.

PEOPLE'S HARDWARE CO., Inc.

The Big Paint Distributors of Fulton

All Kinds of

GARDEN SEEDS

by the ounce or pound at

LaPorte's Grocery

WALL PAPER

We are showing the most complete line ever shown in this city.

Our prices are absolutely the lowest and quality the best. Call and let us demonstrate.

Get our estimates on hanging.

HULETT-TAFT CO. Inc.

208 Oneida Street

Hand or Phone in Your Miscellaneous Want Ad copy for The Evening Times as early in the day as possible to insure insertion the same day.

No ads will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

For Sale—Ayles homestead and furniture, corner E. Broadway and 3d. W. J. Ayles will be on premises May 8, 10 to 12 a.m. and 1 to 5 p.m. to show furniture. G. D. Shaw, Agt. 117c

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Found—Sum of money, Saturday night. Owner may have property by addressing Ernest Arnold, Fulton, R. D. 8. 117c

Girl Wanted—General housework on farm. Mrs. Stanley Holmes, Phoenix, R. D. 2. Phone 5621. 118

Rooms to Rent—Near Nestle Food. 554 S. 6th st. 117c

For Sale—Baby's bassinet; also toilet basket. 309 Pratt st. tf

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCally, 202 S. 3d st. tf

Rooms to Rent—with or without board. 220 West 1st st., north. 117c

Wanted—Girl for housework. D. L. Lipsky, 159 S. 4th st. 115

To Rent—2 apartments. Phone 3288. 120

Wanted — Dressmaking and plain sewing. Phone 3432. 116

Community Notes

Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Pratt of 4th st. spent Sunday with C. S. Pritchard's family on the Emery road.

* * *

Mrs. M. J. Harrington and daughter Freda, of West 4th, st., left this morning for Ithaca.

* * *

Invitations to the wedding of Miss Alice C. Raymond of Ballston Spa and Harry C. Webb of this city have been received.

* * *

Schenck Post, G. A. R., will meet Saturday night to complete plans for the observance of Memorial Day.

* * *

The Rev. C. F. Miller of Minetto spoke before the Salvation Army last night.

* * *

Does your neighbor disturb your early morning slumbers by whacking the parlor rug?

Cream Separators at cost. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Evening Times Subscribers are requested to advise this office if the carrier boy fails to deliver paper properly and with regularity.

"CIVIC NEEDS;" E. R. REDHEAD

(Continued from Page One)

ing fires often by reason of the size of many of the city water mains, which in case of a serious fire, prevent the throwing of a sufficient number of streams and without much force. A new modern fire engine should be procured to supplement the present inadequate facilities. The need of stringent building regulations was enforced. Disastrous conflagrations a short time ago in Salem and Chelsea, Mass., and recently in Colon, Panama, the result of thickly placed wooden buildings with shingle roofs, where fires fanned by a high wind soon wrought great destruction, were—referred to. Paper ballons last year, moving fire brands, at 4th of July time, caused a number of serious fires in several places.

Third. A public market conveniently located which should prove to be a magnet for the farmers and truck men and which should help to reduce the high cost of living—a profitable thing to both parties. But in connection with this market there should be a cold storage plant for perishable articles and for storing in season large quantities of fruits and vegetables which at a more favorable time would bring better prices, and also a hygienic ice machine of ten or more tons daily capacity, both of these becoming more and more a prime necessity in every city of any size.

Fourth need, a non-partisan city of municipal government; in other words, a strictly business administration of city affairs; a merchant marine; enlargement of army and navy, a high or low tariff, intervention in Mexico were great national questions, but far removed from purely local questions such as street paving, extension of water or sewer systems, a salaried mayor or common council, building a new bridge over a tail-race, should be decided as such on their local merits as business and not political questions. We need the same skill and energy and experience and efficiency in municipal as in private business. Moreover, there are some great inequalities in assessment at present, due largely to inexperienced assessors. There should be, at least, one assessor—a chief assessors—who should receive a good yearly salary and devote all his time to the study of assessment problems, a good judge of property values, fair minded and impartial and with firmness of character. Our assessors now evidently mean well but they have not sufficient information in many cases to act intelligently.

Fifth Need. A new High school on the Falley Seminary site was strongly urged and heartily applauded. The recent article published in our local papers from the pen of Ex-Mayor Conners was warmly commended, as a strong, fair, convincing presentation of the arguments or reasons in favor of the Falley Seminary site.

Sixth need given, development of the moral and religious nature of both young and old in better church attendance. Few Chambers of Commerce have committees on this subject, but why should there not be?

The material and intellectual are important but the moral and spiritual are more important and promote in a far greater degree the highest welfare of any community. Therefore, it is certainly fitting that any Chamber of Commerce whose purpose is the developing of the best in its field of activities should heartily second or even father "go to church" campaigns. If the morals of a place do not keep pace with the material advancement, there is no real progress.

THE QUIRK

CONTINUOUS 2 to 10:30 P. M.
Matinee, 5c.
Night: Balcony, 5c; Main floor, 10c.

TODAY
ROBERT HILLIARD'S GREAT SUCCESS "A FOOL THERE WAS"
Featuring THEDA BARA and ALL STAR CAST

WEDNESDAY
HALL CAINE'S Superb Love Story—8 parts "THE CHRISTIAN"
Featuring EDITH STOREY and EARLE WILLIAMS
Balcony, 5c; Main Floor, 10c.

THURSDAY
DOROTHY DONNELLY IN "THE THIEF"
DANIEL FROHMAN'S N. Y. Lyceum Theatre Success

FRIDAY
CHAS. RICHMAN "THE IDLER"

SATURDAY
"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"
with CLAIRE WHITNEY and STUART HOLMES

SUPREME COURT TO ADJOURN MAY 14th

Washington, May 4—No arguments will be heard in the Supreme Cout after May 14th, until the court reconvenes after its summer recess on October 12th. From May 14th until the court recess late in June, it will meet on alternate Mondays to announce decisiions. No cases of wide importance were decided today.

TO VOTE ON SUFFRAGE IN NEW JERSEY

Trenton, N. J., May 4.—The legislature met in special session shortly after noon yesterday. The Senate unanimously passed the bill fixing October 19th for the special election to submit women suffrage and two other proposed amendments to the voters.

BIG BRITISH LABOR STRIKE

2000 Engaged in Constructing Houses Demand Higher Wages

London, May 3.—Two thousand laborers who were engaged in constructing houses, to accommodate the workers at the Woolwich arsenal, the largest in Great Britain, went on strike today. The men demand higher wages.

War Bulletins

FRENCH

Paris.—The following official statement was issued by the war office today:

"There is nothing to report except the repulse of to German attacks last night——one against the British troops to the north of Ypres and the other against the French troops in the forest of Le Pretre."

The afternoon report follows:

"The Germans yesterday made two attempts with asphyxiating gases. One was to the north of Ypres, near St. Julien, and the other was to the south of Ypres, near Hill No. 60. Neither one accomplished anything.

"There is nothing to report from the rest of the front."

BRITISH

London.—There was given out today a British official statement dated May 3 and reading as follows—

"At seven P.M. on May 1 the Germans attacked Hill No. 60, southeast of Ypres, and yesterday evening they attacked in the neighborhood of St. Julien. These attacks were both repulsed. We lost no ground and we inflicted heavy casualties on the enemy in spite of the fact that he again used poisonous gases, emitted both from tubes in the trenches and from especially manufactured shells.

"A German aeroplane yesterday afternoon wasc hased by one of our machines to within rifle range of our trenches and then brought down by our fire."

GERMAN

Berlin (via London).—An important Austrian victory in the eastern campaign is announced in the communication issued today from German Army Headquarters. The statement is made that the Austrians have pierced and broken the entire Russian front in West Galicia. The ext of the official statement follows:

"In the western theatre of the war: Yesterday we successfully attacked in Flanders, to the northeast of the Poelcappelle-Ypres road, and took the farms of Fortuin, southeast of St. Julien.

"In the Champagne district we inflicted considerable damage on the enemy's positions at Ourchen, Souain and Perthes by successful mine explosions.

"Between the Meuse and the Moselle there were only artillery duels.

"Last night the French made unsuccessful attempts to attack our positions on the summit of Hartmans-Weilerkopf.

"A French flying machine landed yesterday at Hundlingen, to the west of Saargemund (in Lorraine). Both occupants were taken prisoner.

"A German airship squadron attacked the airship hangar and railway station of Epinal yesterday, apparently with good results.

"In the eastern theatre: During further pursuit of the Russians who were beeing in the direction of Rigo we yesterday captured four cannon and fous machine guns. We also took 1700 prisoners south of Mitau, so the total number of prisoners was increased to 3200.

"The Russian attacks southeast of Kalvaria failed, with heavy losses to themy. The Russians were driven back across the Skeainga. They left ...

"Northeast of Skierniewice the Russians also suffered a heavy defat in which they lost a great number in killed and 100 men taken prisoners.

"In the southeastern theatre, in the presence of the Austrian commander in chief, Field Marshal Archduke Frederick, and under the leadership of General Colonel von Mackensen, the allied troops yesterday, after bitter fighting, pierced everywhere and crushed the entire Russian front in West Galicia, from the neighborhood of the Hungarian frontier to the junction of the Dunajec River with the Vistula.

"Such of the enemy as succeeded in escaping are in hasty retreat toward the east closely pursued by the allied troops. The trophies of the victory cannot yet even be approximately estimated."

The victory in Western Galicia reported in the German announcement would appear to be of notable significance.

From the junction of the Vistula with the Dunajec to the Hungarian frontier is about sixty miles. After the surrender of the Austrian fortress of Permyslfi in Galicia, the Russian forces released from siege work in front of this position began moving to the south, in the direction of the Uzsok Pass, and to the west in the direction of Cracow.

That a great battle was being fought in Western Galicia was indicated in dispatches sent out from Berlin and Petrograd several days ago. It was then repotred that the Russians, in order to avoid the disastrous effect of the fire of the heavy Austrian artillery had evacuated all their positions at Turnow, which lies 135 miles to the west of Lemberg.

Official dispatches from Petrograd, under date of April 29, said that Austrians were concentrating their forces at Crocow and also in Western Galicia, evidently with the intention of undertaking a determined offensive against the Russians.

It evidently is the result of these various military activities that is reported in the announcement from Berlin.

Baled Hay, Straw and Shavings. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The following official communication was issued today:

"West of the Niemen on May 2 the engagement continued along the upper reaches of the River Sdeszupa. On the evening of May 1 a battalion of the enemy attacked the village of Sosnia, near Ossowetz, but was dispersed by the fire from the fortress.

"On the Bzura river important skirmishes occurred near the village Mitrovitza.

"Since the evening of May 1, from the lower Nida to the Carpathians in the region of Gladycheff an action of the greatest intensyt developed. On the left bank of the Vistula the night of the 2d we repulsed strong enemy attacks.

"In the region of Tarnow and further southward the artillery fire attained great violence and fierce isolated combats took place.

SHIRT FOR 7-FOOT WAIST.

Costs 495 Pound Man $11 and Is Biggest Ever Made.

What is believed to be the biggest shirt ever made has been turned out by a factory at Parsons, Kan., for George W. Nicklor of Ames, Ia., who is the biggest man in that state and is said to possess the biggest waist of any man alive.

The shirt is cut with a waist which lacks one inch of being seven feet. The collar is twenty-three inches and the chest sixty-six inches, with a twenty-eight inch arm. The shirt is made of cheviot and will cost Nicklor $11.

Nicklor has turned down numerous vaudeville offers. He weighs 495 pounds and is five feet six inches tall.

TO RAISE "SACRED LEGION."

Venizelos Says He Will Gather Greeks Here In America.

Greece's great statesman, ex-Premier Eleutherios Venizelos, is coming to America, he says, to raise a "sacred legion" to fight for Greece in Asia Minor.

Forced from office by a quarrel with the king, Venizelos is unable at present to bring about Greece's intervention against Turkey, but he doesn't intend to retire from active life.

His sacred legion will number 50,000 men drawn from Asia Minor refugees, as well as Greeks in the United States. He will use Cyprus and Egypt as bases for his corps, it is planned, and will operate against Smyrna, Broussa and Saloniki.

Tires, supplies, everything for the Bicycle at Bogue's, 61 First st.

Big Sale of Bicycles now on at Bogue's, 61 First st.

TOWELS ARE BOGUS BILLS.

Weaver Accurately Reproduced Details of Five and Ten Dollar Notes.

Secret service men at Washington are seeking the origin of two of the biggest specimens of counterfeiting ever brought to the attention of the treasury department. The counterfeits are Turkish towels, four feet long and two feet wide, remarkably accurate copies of $5 silver certificates and $10 gold certificates.

The weaving reproduced every detail of the genuine notes. Only one small omission was detected by Assistant Chief W. F. Moran.

Magnifying Glass Starts Fire.

A large magnifying glass, which caught the rays of the sun and focused them on a lace curtain, caused a fire in the home of Dr. Charles H. Brown, a dentist, at 2043 Bathgate avenue, New York city. The glass stood on a pedestal by the window. Firemen estimated the damage at $1,000.

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Teeth Put to Many Uses.

All Eskimos have good teeth, but they are subjected to severe usage, being used for pinchers, vises and fluting machines. The teeth are employed in drawing bolts, untying knots, holding the mouthpiece of a drill, shaping boot soles and stretching and tanning skins. When they become uneven from hard usage they are leveled off with a file or whetstone.

Big Sale of Bicycles now on at Bogue's, 61 First st.

"The New York Shop"

Our May Sale of Ready-to-Wear

Reduction Sale of New Suits, Coats, Dresses and Blouses. Sale Lasts This Week Only.

We are overstocked and for this sale will reduce prices that save you the Jobbers Profit.

All New Stylish Apparel, mostly received in the last two weeks. You will not find such bargains later in the season on such merchandise, of the Better Class, which costs you no more than the ordinary kinds.

25 NEW SUITS at this Sale for $10.00, $12.50, $15.75.

25 NEW COATS at this Sale for $5.75, $7.50, $9.98, $12.50 and better.

25 NEW DRESSES at this Sale for $5.00, $9.85, $12.50, $15.75 and more.

50 NEW BLOUSES, in the latest materials and colors and styles at this Sale for 98c, $1.50, $2.98, $3.50 and $5.00.

Our stock of Children's Muslin, Gingham and Crepe Dresses are also on sale.

25 New Children's Dresses at this sale for 98c.

Many garment specials in this Sale we cannot mention.

OUR STORE IS AND HAS BEEN BASED ON THE POLICIES OF:

1st. Correct styles. 3d. Satisfaction.
2d. Sterling values. 4th. One price to all.

M. J. McDONALD & CO.

ONEIDA STREET FULTON

COME IN AND LET US EXPLAIN OUR PROFIT SHARING PLAN TO YOU THROUGH NATIONAL MERCHANDISE STAMPS. ASK FOR THEM AT YOUR DEALER'S IN ALL LINES

THE ONYX STORE
announces its Formal Spring Opening
at 105 E. First St., Fulton, N.Y. on
Saturday, May Eighth,
Nineteen fifteen
You and Your Friends are Cordially Invited.

Orchestra in evening.
New and Appetizing Dishes and Fountain Dainties

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Why does the Evening Times get results? Because so very many subscribers say—"I hate to miss a single copy of your paper; I'd rather miss a copy of my 'Syracuse ———' than the Evening Times."

THE LATEST

REPORT OF ADVERTISING

Week of April 26 to 30—five days only—Total number of inches Display Advertising 1001

DAILY AVERAGE 200.2

Total number of inches advertising carried by the Evening Times during week of April 19 to 24—six days only—was 919 inches.

DAILY AVERAGE 153

INCREASE

Daily Average—47.2 Inches

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

FROM KEYBOARD TO VAST FORTUNE

Telegraph Girl Inherits Half of $22,000,000 Estate.

DUE TO AUNT'S ROMANCE.

With Income From Rich Mineral Lands in California, Tennessee and West Virginia, Mrs. Hawes Orders Big House, Bungalow For Her Parents and a 100 Foot Steam Yacht.

Stranger than fiction is the story of the change in the lot of Mrs. Lillian M. K. Hawes of Jacksonville, Fla. From an obscure telegraph operator she has jumped to the ownership of a half interest in a fortune of about $22,000,000 in copper, coal and timber lands.

Mrs. Hawes is a brunette thirty years of age. She was born in Bridgewater, Somerset, England, and came to the United States with her parents while a small child.

The vast property, which is shared equally by Mrs. Hawes and her brother, Thomas Hawkins, for the past eighteen years chief engineer of the Westchester Electric company, Mount Vernon, N. Y., consists of copper lands and mines in the Exchequer mining district, San Bernardino county, Cal., valued at about $6,000,000; also 400,000 acres of coal and timber lands in Franklin district, Marshall county, W Va., and ferro, manganese and iron properties in Tennessee and West Virginia, valued at $16,000,000.

Old Aunt Had Romance.

The story has its beginning in Great Britain, where many years ago Miss L. Atwell, the great-aunt of Mrs. Hawes was a much beloved companion and friend of Lady Towle, a wealthy and prominently social figure of England's aristocracy. When Lady Towle died she bequeathed to Miss Atwell a large sum of money.

The great-aunt was not without her romance. She had a girlhood sweetheart, a sea captain, who while on a voyage was lost with his ship and crew and nothing ever was heard of them again. The death of the captain nearly prostrated the young Englishwoman, and she came to America.

Here she was induced to invest her fortune in what was then considered waste land located in West Virginia, Tennessee and California. But, as has proved, the land needed but the Midas touch of modern scientific achievement to transform it into wealth beyond the dreams of avarice.

Began Work in Her Teens.

The great-aunt died March 4, 1914, at the age of ninety-seven years, having spent her life in solitude, refusing to be comforted for the loss of her girlhood sweetheart. Her only companions were Mrs. Hawes and her brother. The two children were always given to understand that they would some day come into possession of all her land.

Sixteen years ago the young Lillian obtained a position with the Postal Telegraph company in New York. She was then a girl in her teens.

Her parents live at 950 Washington avenue, Bronx, New York city, the father being now a retired business man. Nine years ago in New York she married Banks G. Hawes, whom she had known since she was four years old, now a successful architect and marine engineer.

Mrs. Hawes has purchased an eighty and one-half acre plot of land near Jacksonville, where she will erect a $35,000 residence. Ten acres are to be set aside for a winter home for her parents with a $7,000 bungalow. She has contracted with a New York boat builder for a 100 foot steam yacht, and she and her husband contemplate spending several months of every year cruising.

NEW COMET SOON VISIBLE.

Will Be Seen by Naked Eye, Though 40,000,000 Miles Away.

A new comet is due some time next month. It is rapidly approaching the sun and will be at perihelion about July 20.

It will pass nearest the earth the middle of June, when it will be about 40,000,000 miles away. Late in May it is expected to become a naked eye object.

The comet is in the morning sky, rising about midnight on May 1, and will be approximately on the meridian at 4 a. m. on that date. It was easily picked up with a four inch telescope early in March and will undoubtedly be found with any small telescope after May 1.

VIOLIN NETS $19,500 AT SALE.

Lord Newland's "Strad" Given to Red Cross, Breaks Record.

A Stradivarius violin presented by Lord Newlands to the Red Cross sale in London realised the sum of $19,500. [illegible] $12,500, and she put it up a second time. It then went for $7,000 to Mr. Brandt, who had previously advanced the bidding to $12,000.

This figure of $12,500 constitutes a record price for such a violin. The highest previous figure was [illegible] which for fifty years was in the collection of Count Cozio di Salabue.

THE JITNEY BUS.

The New Factor In Cheap and Rapid Transit.

Six months ago the term jitney was unknown in the east. Derived as it is supposed to be from a combination of the words jot and tittle, with the "ney" suffix as a diminutive, the word has long been in use on the Pacific coast. Now, however, it will appear that jitney is quite a common word, and with such busses operating in Philadelphia and other cities it may be said that this peculiar type of conveyance has come to stay. Briefly, the jitney bus is an automobile charging 5 cents per passenger, jitney being the slang for a nickel.

With the cost of automobiles constantly going down, there is no reason why there should not be a five cent fare for reasonable distances. During the past few weeks the jitney bus has appeared in cities all over the west. It is supposed to have originated in Houston, Tex. During one past month 800 of them have appeared on the streets of San Francisco. Other figures as given in the news columns of the paper are 100 cars in Kansas City, Fort Worth 141 and Seattle 300. Associations to operate jitney busses are forming in Milwaukee, Denver, Ogden, Omaha, Vancouver, Portland, Oakland, Des Moines, St. Louis, Joplin and Baltimore. Feb. 1 ten routes were established in Omaha. Kansas City has twenty-seven. At the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco 2,000 jitneys are expected to operate along the road to the exposition.

Street car men are alive to the situation, and measures are being taken to meet the new competition. The strap hangers of America are in glee over the new situation, which will give them the choice of auto buses or street cars. The present indication points to adoption of the auto bus lines in nearly every large city of the United States where the operating taxes permit.

While motor buses for carrying passengers have been established in European cities for many years, London depending largely upon them, the use of autos at the nickel fare usually charged by street car lines had never been generally tried out.

In Washington several 5 cent buses are in operation, but they had never been considered a success or a serious competitor with the street cars. It was in Phoenix, Ariz., that the present sweep had its origin. During a strike there in 1913 the 5 cent buses were put to work, and so successful were they that the other western cities adopted the idea, private capital coming forward when it was found that the small buses could be made to pay a profit.—Town Development Magazine.

A Municipal Pier and Railway.

The municipal pier recently dedicated in Santa Cruz is the result of the work of a committee of private citizens who realised the need for water transportation facilities in addition to rail facilities at Santa Cruz in order to forward the city's industrial interests. Santa Cruz in former years depended entirely upon the Southern Pacific railroad. The fine harbor which Monterey bay provides made shipping by water easily possible, however. The citizens therefore voted almost unanimously in favor of issuing bonds in the sum of $165,000 for the building of a municipal pier. The pier was completed in December. It is a little over half a mile long and eighty feet wide at its outer end. A railway, also municipally owned and operated, runs its entire length, and this connects with the Southern Pacific railroad at its shore terminus, also with the Ocean Shore railroad. Two lines of steamers now touch at the port of Santa Cruz. It is said that a decided improvement has already been observed in the city as a result of the construction of the municipal pier.

City Bureau of Foreign Trade.

The Houston (Tex.) chamber of commerce has added to its various departments that of a bureau of foreign trade in view of the probabilities that the trade relations between Houston and the Latin-American countries will undergo important developments that will open up vast new fields for the manufacturers and larger jobbing houses of Houston. The bureau is not restricted to Latin-American trade, however, but includes possibilities of trade with Japan and other countries. In addition to providing the bureau with a library, including commercial directories of the principal cities of those countries, arrangements have also been made under which the services of translators will be at the disposal of members of the chamber of commerce for writing letters in German and Spanish.

CHEERFUL SURROUNDINGS.

It is a prophetic fact that some of the biggest corporations in the country have come to believe that it pays to make the surroundings for their workmen pleasant and cheerful as well as sanitary. Flowers don't make plows, but they make more plows. In other words, the healthier and more contented a man is the more work—and better work—he can do and will do. [illegible] a workman a man may be, he is still human, and he cannot help but respond to his surroundings. If they are cleanly he will be cleanly; if they are cheerful he will be cheerful; if they are bright and energetic he will be [illegible]

DINERS HEAR TALK 3,500 MILES AWAY

American Publishers Get Concert by Phone From Fair.

BIG SURPRISE AT BANQUET.

Mayor of San Francisco Speaks Across Continent to Newspaper Men, Inviting All to Exposition—Cornet Solo and Song Are Heard—Mayor of New York Replies.

The surprise of the night at the banquet of the American Newspaper Publishers' association, in convention in New York city, when part of the program of speeches and cabaret took place 3,500 miles away, amazed as well as delighted those who heard it. It will go down in history as the first transcontinental dinner and concert.

At every place at the seventy-five tables was a telephone receiver, 600 in all. Scattered through the boxes were 125 more for the spectators. About forty other receivers were in the hall. At 8:30 the toastmaster gave the signal. Every receiver was raised, and the silence became intense.

Far away in the press building of the Panama-Pacific exposition George B. Pecheco of the San Francisco Bohemian club wet his lips and began to blow into one end of his cornet. From the other end came the sweet and shrill strains of "Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms," filling the room.

They didn't stop there, however. They leaped across the Rocky mountains, the Arizona desert and the plains on the other side of the Mississippi and burst upon the eardrums of 765 tense men and women who sat in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York.

Cornet Clear as if Near By.

When the cheering had subsided the hearers were astounded on being told where the player was. Every note had been heard as clearly and sweetly as if the cornet had been in one of the balconies overlooking the diners. Enthusiasm ran higher still when a voice over the wires said the cheering had been heard, and Mr. Pecheco was bowing in response.

It was not until later that it was made known how nearly the great surprise had escaped being a failure. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon, New York time, a hurricane swept down upon the country west of Cheyenne, Wyo., and ruined the connection. The telephone company had men ready to attend to such a trouble, however, and the wires were hastily put into place again. There was more than 3,500 miles of them to protect.

At the Pacific end of the wire were James Rolph, Jr., mayor of San Francisco; officials of the Panama-Pacific exposition and the members of the San Francisco Press club.

Mayor Rolph added to the delight of the banqueters over the novelty arranged for them by J. C. Cook, chairman of the dinner committee. Mr. Rolph talked for nearly fifteen minutes.

Words 3,500 Miles Long.

He said he knew the room the New York diners were in very well, as he had often eaten there. He thanked American newspaper publishers on behalf of his city for arousing the sympathy of the country for San Francisco after the fire and for helping to make the fair a success.

"This is the longest exposition speech ever made," said the voice in the west. "It is costing more than the pay of a grand opera star. But it ought; every word is more than 3,500 miles long. However, it is not the first time I have enjoyed long distance speeches.

"I get all the speeches of the world every morning and evening in the newspapers. But I wish I could take you all on a tour of the world here at our fair.

"Come on out," he urged. "Every nation of the world is here, and we're making Jules Verne look like a Long Island commuter."

After Dinner Talk Before Dining.

Charles K. Field, editor of the Sunset Magazine, next addressed the New Yorkers over the wire.

"In future," he said, "instead of hearing toastmasters at banquets say 'We have with us tonight' they will have to say 'Here's your party.' But I am in the west end of the dining room, and the waiters haven't brought me any food. Here I am making an after dinner speech and haven't had any dinner yet.

"It's a great thing to make an after dinner speech this way," continued Mr. Field. "Any one who wants to can leave without my knowing it, and therefore without insulting me, at any time he wants to. And that's an advantage in such a long speech as this. I started to speak at 6 o'clock, and now by your watches it is 9."

Afterward L. A. Larsen, editor of the Daily Pacific Builder, sang "I Love You, California," with such success [illegible] orously.

Mayor Mitchel of New York spoke over the wires and gave the thanks of the surprised diners. He congratulated Mayor Rolph upon the spirit and enterprise shown by the people of San Francisco in [illegible] the exposition [illegible] month or so.

HANNIBAL NEWS

Arthur Minar is ill with quinsy.

Mrs. Frank Cooper was called to Victory Monday to care for an uncle, R. Fleming, who is seriously ill with little hope of recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Brace Stevens of Hannibal Center are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son.

Mrs. Luella Farley had the misfortune to fall one day last week fracturing her left ankle.

Miss Ruth Bracket spent the past two weeks with friends in Fulton.

Mrs. Nelson A. Gardner has returned to her home at Gilbert Mills after spending some time with Mr. and Mrs. Elwin Gardner.

Alburtus Frost was in Oswego the first of the week to attend the funeral of Mrs. Lawrence Robinson.

Rev. Paul Brown is engaged in evangelistic work at Cicero.

The W. C. T. U. meeting at Mrs. Fred Lockwoods was well attended. A good program and a pleasant social time was enjoyed by everybody.

Miss Mary Adamy was the week-end guest of Mrs. Brace Stevens of Hannibal Center.

Mrs. J. S. Stevenson, Mrs. Fred Lockwood, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Ball, attended the Suffrage meeting at Oswego Monday evening, to hear Dr. Anna Howard Shaw speak.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mye Wieting of Watertown announce the marriage of their sister, Miss Josephine Brackett to Mr. Walter Allen Strange, both of Gordon, Colorado. The bride was ar ersident of this place a few years ago and has many friends to wish her a long life of wedded bliss.

Miss Sadie Adamy is teaching at Martville this week because of the illness of one of the teachers, Miss Clementine Green.

Mrs. Minnie Fullerton visited friend at Adams last week.

A. S. Guthrie is improving his home by adding new porches, also making the second story higher, which will add much to the appearance of the building.

J. L. Farnham has graded the lawn around his newly acquired property, corner of Fulton and Auburn sts., known as the Guthrie block, and will very soon begin the work of remodeling the house.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Peckham of Adams were guests of Mrs. Myrtle Darling last week.

Edmund Wells is still in a critical condition following a recent operation.

Verne Metcalf of North Hannibal is no better, his condition is considered serious.

The meeting of the Political and Domestic Economy Club was held at the home of Mrs. J. A. Naricon Tuesday, May 4; Mrs. B. A. Watzen had charge of the program.

P. A. Welling has offered one acre of land near Hannibal Center for forestry planting and it is expected that one of the professors of Syracuse University will visit Hannibal this month to oversee the planting of trees. The work will be done by the High school boys under the direction of the College of Forestry.

The High school recently received a box containing a collection of thirty-one of the common woods of New York, from the New York State College of Forestry, with a bulletin describing the same, which will be of great interest to the biology and farm mechanics classes.

Mrs. Charles Welsh of Rennelaer Falls is the guest of her children, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Wells.

A number of the members of Huldah Chapter, O. E. S., visited the Wolcott Lodge Friday evening by invitation. A fine banquet was served and a general good time enjoyed by everybody.

Hannibal Lodge I.O.O.F., celebrated the 96th anniversary of the founding of the order in America at the regular meeting Monday evening. A goodly number of the members and their wives were present. Refreshments and a program made a pleasant evening's entertainment.

Mrs. E. W. Adamy spent the week-en in Syracuse returning to Hannibal on Tuesday.

SOUTH GRANBY

The droughth was broken last Wednesday by two severe thunder showers followed by hail and lightning.

Mrs. H. Austin returned to her home last Wednesday to stay, the first she has been there since the early part of January.

Herman Austin was a week-end guest of his mother.

[illegible] Austic's Wednesday evening instead of Tuesday.

Mrs. Wilda Assenheimer will go to Oswego Wednesday to visit a friend, Mrs. Mabel Pare Walters, and from there will return to her home in Brooklyn, after staying two weeks with her parents.

Mrs. Cynthia Lampman, who has been spending some time with her sister, Mrs. John Ouderkirk, returned home Sunday.

Mrs. Sarah Crockford and granddaughter, Miss Ena Crockford, spent the week end with her daughter, Mrs. Nellie Dumars.

Ralph Brown has moved his family into Harlow Sperbeck's house where Hume Hunter lived.

Miss Sarah Omelia went away a week ago and it is rumored that she is married, but we cannot vouch for that.

Neal Andrews and his friend, Henry Parker, were over-Sunday guests of his brother, Fred Andrews.

Mr. and Mrs. Milo Austin called on their mother on their way home from Fulton, Sunday. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mitchell of Syracuse.

Mrs. Susan Stewart and Mr. James Ouderkirk an dhis mother, Mrs. Lydia Ouderkirk called on their sister, Mrs. Sarah Butler, who has been ill, but is improving slowly.

Mrs. Roma Degraff and little son of Baldwinsville, visited their grandmother Wednesday.

Mrs. Kitty Cook visited her son Willie, in Elmira, last week and were over-night guests of Mary Stege in Syracuse.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Cook were in Baldwinsville Monday.

S. E. Rowlee and his daughter, Mrs. Carrie Hannum were guests of her aunt, Mrs. Hannah Austin, Friday. Mr. Rowlee went to Syracuse and Mrs Hannum was on over-night guest of her sister, Mrs. Anna Foster, in Fulton.

Mr. and Mrs. Hannum have joined the Grange at Bowens Corners.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Darling and children Kenneth and Violet, visited their daughter, Mrs. Ralph Brown Sunday.

The fruit trees are blossoming early this year and give promise of a good crop of plums, cherries and pears.

Mrs. Assenheimer visited her cousin Hasea Fisher in Oswego over Sunday.

PALERMO

Miss Grace Miner of Oswego, who has been the guest of Miss Queenia Tooley, has returned to her home.

Mr. and Mrs. Milo Graves and family of Mexico were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn D. Trimble on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Max Vincent and family visited Mr. and Mrs. J. Hines at Gilbert's Mills on Sunday

Mrs. Lee C. Loomis and Mrs. F. H. Jennings visited Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Collins at Gilbert's Mills recently.

Several from this place attended the play given by local talent at Mt. Pleasant on Friday and Saturday evenings.

Willis Jennings who has been ill for some time still continues about the same.

Miss Lena Jennings and Mrs. Harlan Collins gave a kitchen shower on Thursday afternoon, at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Jennings, in honor of Miss Queenia Tooley whose marriage to Matthew Frawley is about to take place. The decorations in the diningroom were original and very unique, consisting of a large plateau of moss covering the dining table and in the center of which was a pretty miniature house standing on a green lawn and surrounded by a pool of water, representing the "House on the Island." This centerpiece was of much interest to the guests, as the bride-to-be is to make her future home on the island in the town of Palermo. Each guest was presented a booklet tied with green ribbon and sealed with a heart and contained a secret in rhyme. Upon being read it informed the guest of honor where to look for her gifts. She received many useful kitchen utensiles. A delicious luncheon was served.

Mrs. Glenn D. Trimble gave a variety shower at her home Saturday afternoon in honor of Miss Tooley.

VOLNEY CENTER

Rev. George Ward has resigned his pastorate at Bristol Hill owing to his ill health. Rev. Ward has preached here for the last five years.

Mrs. Frank Creimer spent the week end with her sister in Syracuse.

Master Edward Dingman spent Sunday with his uncle, Arba Simons, and family.

Thomas Kitts spent Sunday with his sister, Mrs. Frank Coffrey.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ives spent Sunday with Bert Ives and family.

Mrs. A. Albright has been spending [illegible]

Miss Nellie Rafferty spent Sunday with Mr. Fred Jewitt and family.

Clarence Wright spent Sunday with his cousin, Fred Johnston.

James Ross spent Sunday with his mother, Mrs. A. Ross.

BUNDY'S CROSSING

Duane Wells and Byron Wells wese in Phoenix on Tuesday.

Miss Goldia Graham was the guest of Mrs. Bryon Wills on Tuesday.

Miss Catherine Echard is recovering from an attack of pneumonia.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Thornsbury's little child is seriously ill.

Mrs. Samuel Graham and Goldia Graham of Battle Island called on friends here on Friday.

Mrs. Lewis Burchin entertained Mrs. John Larock and daughter of Fulton one day the past week.

Mrs. Lewis Burchin has sold a yearling to Edward Steward.

The farmers are sewing their oats this week.

Mrs. Lewis Burchin spent Sunday in Fulton.

Mrs. Mattie Dodge is ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Byron Wells and daughter, called on Mrs. Samuel Graham on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Rowlee and family and Miss Florence Leroy spent Sunday at Battle Island.

George Babcock has recovered from his recent illness so as to be home from the hospital.

Mrs. Edward Echard has been home the past week caring for her daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stevens of Oswego Center called at her brother, Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Dumont's on Sunday.

Miss Ira Dodge is ill at her home here.

Miss Greta Dodge is entertaining her cousin.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Echard and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Byron Wells and daughter, and Mr. Allen Spaulding were callers on Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dodge on Sunday.

Mrs. Fred Loughrey is quite ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Burchin were the Sunday guests of his sister, Mrs. Bert Thornsbury.

ESTERDAY'S RESULTS; STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Brooklyn.
New York at Philadelphia.
St. Louis at Pittsburgh.
Cincinnati at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Brooklyn, 3; Boston, 2.
Chicago, 5; Pittsburgh, 1.
New York, 3; Philadelphia, 2.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	12	4	.750
Chicago	11	6	.647
Cincinnati	9	8	.529
Boston	8	7	.533
St. Louis	9	10	.474
Brooklyn	7	10	.412
Pittsburgh	6	11	.353
New York	4	10	.286

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Washington at Boston.
Philadelphia at New York.
Chicago at New York.
Detroit at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

New York, 8; Philadelphia, 4
Boston-Washington, rain.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
New York	10	4	.714
Detroit	13	6	.684
Chicago	11	8	.579
Washington	8	6	.571
Boston	5	6	.455
Cleveland	8	10	.444
St. Louis	5	13	.278
Philadelphia	4	11	.267

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Brooklyn.
Pittsburgh at Newark.
Chicago at Baltimore.
Kansas City at Buffalo.

Results Yesterday

Baltimore, 7; Kansas City, 5.
Pittsburgh, 3; Brooklyn, 1 1st game
Brooklyn, 8; Pittsburgh, 7 2d game
Chicago, 7; Buffalo, 3.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Chicago	12	5	.706
Pittsburgh	11	8	.579
Newark	11	8	.579
Brooklyn	10	8	.556
Kansas City	9	9	.500
St. Louis	7	10	.412
Baltimore	7	12	.368
Buffalo	6	13	.316

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Montreal at Richmond.
Rochester at Providence.
[illegible]
Buffalo at Newark.

Results Yesterday

Jersey City, 2; Toronto, 1.
Buffalo, 3; Newark, 1, 12 innings.
Richmond, 7; Montreal, 5.
Providence-Rochester, cold.

Team Standing.

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	3	1	.750
Jersey City	3	1	.750
Richmond	3	2	.600
Toronto	2	3	.400
Montreal	2	3	.400
Newark	2	3	.400
Buffalo	2	3	.400
Rochester	1	2	.333

LEAGUE TEAMS AND NAMES THEY BEAR

Clubs	Nicknames
National League
New York	Giants
Boston	Braves
Chicago	Cubs
St. Louis	Cardinals
Brooklyn	Dodgers
Pittsburgh	Pirates
Philadelphia	Phillies
Cincinnati	Reds
American League
New York	Yankees
Boston	Red Sox
Chicago	White Sox
St. Louis	Browns
Philadelphia	Athletic
Cleveland	Indians
Detroit	Tigers
Washington	Senators
Federal League
Buffalo	Electrics
Brooklyn	Brookfeds
Baltimore	Terrapins
Kansas City	Packers
Newark	Newfeds
Chicago	Whales
St. Louis	Sloufeds
Pittsburgh	Pittfeds
International League
Newark	Sailors
Buffalo	Bisons
Richmond	Orioles
Montreal	Royals
Toronto	Maple Leaves
Providence	Clams
Jersey City	Pests
Rochester	Hustlers
State League
Binghamton	Bingos
Syracuse	Stars
Elmira	Colonels
Wilkesbarre	Barons
Scranton	Miners
Albany	Senators
Troy	Trojans
Utica	Utes

A Puzzler.

Little Raymond, although youthful, is a thinker. "Mother," he asked the other day, "what do cows eat and drink?"

"They eat grass and drink water."

"But, mother, how can they drink water and lay milk?"—Washington Post.

Pressed His Suits.

Mask—Who is that fellow coming out of your room with a suit?

Wig—That's my press agent.—Pennsylvania Punch Bowl.

Perversity.

One man went to business schools,
Learned to do each thing by book.
Another never studied rules,
What he liked he went and took.

The first man should have fallen through,
The second knew no word like "fail."
[illegible]
—Philadelphia Ledger.

Contrary.

Some men want to make hay in the rain and cut ice in August.—[illegible]

REEL FAVORITES OFF THE FILM

SYDNEY AYRES AND "BLOSSOM."

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Sydney Ayres as Dayton Blair, the foreman of the oil fields owned by his sweetheart's father, makes an impressive figure in his latest picture, "A Matter of Parentage." In this drama he has as an appealing little leading lady a tiny girl of about four years. The plot of the story reveals the adoption of the baby by Dayton Blair. Blossom, as he calls her, makes him very happy.

Lee Willard is quite an artist with the brush as well as in his profession. Until the filming of "Broncho Billy and the Revenuer" his accomplishments at drawing were unknown. But in this play Willard can be seen painting Mr. G. M. Anderson as "Broncho Billy" from life.

The photo entertainment, "The Birth of a Nation," combines a pictorial survey of civil war history and of Kuklux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. It cost to produce nearly $500,000.

It seemed that when the film director who produced "The White Goddess," the three act moving picture production, prepared to take the temple scenes, he secured as many natives of India as was possible. In his effort to secure the utmost realism, this director modeled his temple sets after the famous Temple of the Tooth, located in Kandy, Ceylon.

Cyrus Townsend Brady, the famous author, has written a one reel comedy, "Why Billings Was Late," which contains a superabundance of human interest. Billings' wife has the exasperating habit of taking her own time, but she always seems to get there just the same. Billings prides himself in getting there ahead of time. He fails, however, on this occasion, and his wife laughs best because she laughs last.

Every revolver carried by motion picture westerners has a pearl handle.

Eleanor Kahn and Jack Paul, two ten-year-old children, play a love scene in the photo play "The Little Straw Wife" with exceptional skill. The two children are sweethearts and enact one of the most beautiful scenes of boy and girl love ever portrayed on the screen. The same two characters in the play fourteen years later are portrayed by Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn.

What Lord Blarneyston Said

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

One evening at a theater Lord Blarneyston, chatting with an American friend who was spending a great deal of time and money on his lordship, seeing Mrs. Harkaway in one of the boxes, asked who she was and when told said:

"She's the most beautiful woman I've seen in New York, and there's no woman in England who can compare with her."

Such a remark made by a member of the London smart set was bound to be repeated from mouth to mouth. In a twinkling it permeated the social circle, the members of which were at once agog to see a woman whom Lord Blarneyston pronounced more beautiful than any woman in England. The first Sunday after the encomium had spread in society the church where Mrs. Harkaway worshiped was overflowing with strangers who went there to see her.

Of course his lordship's remark reached Mrs. Harkaway. It was her husband who told her, and he was proud to be the husband of the most beautiful woman in New York or London.

Mrs. Harkaway belonged to that class of New Yorkers who years agone were social leaders, but who now occupy back seats, the front seats being taken up by the commercial multimillionaire aristocracy of America. Why not use Lord Blarneyston's encomium to regain the position occupied by her ancestors? True, the ancestors of present day leaders had some of them sold meat and vegetables to Mrs. Harkaway's forefathers, to say nothing of one who had cooked the said meat and vegetables in her grandfather's kitchen. But times were changed. Present day aristocrats had assumed the leadership by virtue of their enormous wealth, and it was impossible to dislodge them. Possibly they would take in a woman whom an English peer had pronounced the most beautiful in New York or London.

After a consultation between Mr. and Mrs. Harkaway it was decided by the husband that the wife's chance for social prominence should be made available. Certain relatives of Mrs. Harkaway who had married into multimillionaire families were found to introduce her, and she was launched into society simply on the fact that Lord Blarneyston in order to compliment the city of the man who was dining and wining him had said that she was the most beautiful woman in New York or London.

The Harkaways had misgivings about entering the golden circle on a beggarly income of $10,000. They figured, however, that Mrs. Harkaway's beauty, certified to by a British peer, would be considered a quid pro quo for what they would receive and that they would not be required to give entertainments. In this they were correct. The difficulty in the multimillionaire set is to get persons to attend entertainments. But there was one thing, however, on which their calculations were in error. They thought that Mrs. Harkaway would be able to provide herself with costumes out of her husband's income, leaving enough for their other expenditures.

Possibly had Mrs. Harkaway been [illegible] other peer than Lord Blarneyston [illegible] pressed opinion of her beauty a few thousands dollars a year for costumes would have sufficed. But society expected the most beautiful woman to wear the most beautiful costumes. Besides, Mrs. Harkaway received the concentrated gaze of society not because she owned the highest bred dog in the universe, but because of Lord Blarneyston's remark. For this reason her costumes were of supreme importance. They would attract far more attention than her beauty. Therefore they must not only be superb, but in great variety.

Not only did Mrs. Harkaway's wardrobes cost a great deal of money, but at least one trip abroad a year was necessary to procure them. Then much more jewelry than she possessed was indispensable. Indeed, the Harkaways had not even prepared for the wife's entry into society before they saw that within a short time that which produced their income would melt away like ice under the rays of the sun. Nevertheless the preparations were made.

At the first function attended by Mrs. Harkaway she found herself the cynosure of all eyes. "That's the woman that Lord Blarneyston said was the most beautiful in New York or London," said everybody to everybody else. She stood in one position while a throng of persons passed her, ogling her as they would a freak in a dime museum.

It happened that Lord Blarneyston was still in New York and was at this assembly. A lady to whom he was talking called his attention to Mrs. Harkaway, remarking that she had been told she was the most beautiful woman in New York or London.

"I cawn't agree with that," said his lordship. "I think Mrs. Monkeranch far more beautiful."

The remark was overheard, and Mrs. Harkaway's beauty was blighted. She was dropped from society, fortunately in time to save her husband's fortune. She resumed her normal position, but somehow the spell of happiness that pervaded the Harkaway family was broken. There has never since been the same contentment.

Striking a Match in Wind.

Kephart in his book on "Camping and Woodcraft" says: "When there is nothing to strike it on jerk the head of the match forward through the teeth, or face the wind. Cup your hands back toward the wind, remove the right hand just long enough to strike the match on something very close by, then instantly resume former position. The flame of the match will run up the stick instead of blowing away from it.

"Change Seats."

As many seats as players save one. He who has no seat stands in the center, repeating the words, "Change seats," "change seats." All are on the alert to observe when he adds, "The king's come," when all change seats, and he must try to get one. If he should say, "The king has not come," the seats must be kept.

LEGAL NOTICES

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS

Notice is hereby given that an annual meeting of the stockholders of the Foster Brothers and Chatillon Company will be held on the 19th day of May, 1915, at two o'clock P.M., at the office of the Company in the City of Fulton, (formerly Oswego Falls), New York, for the election of Trustees or Directors, and the transaction of such other business as may lawfully come before such meeting. That at such meeting a proposition will be [illegible] said Company generally.

C. E. FOSTER,
Secretary and a member of said Corporation.

Dated, Fulton, N. Y., May 3, 1915.

SURE ITALY WON'T FIGHT FOR KAISER

Marconi Says His Country Will Aid Allies If She Enters War.

WANTS TO KEEP OUT OF IT

Italians Strongly Resent Germany's Treatment of Belgium, Wireless Inventor Declares In Interview, and Everything Is Now Ready Should Decision Come to End Neutrality.

On his arrival in this country William Marconi, the inventor of wireless telegraphy, was asked if he thought Italy would enter the war on the side of the allies.

"That is a question that is very difficult to answer," Mr. Marconi replied.

"The majority of Italians favor the allies. There can be no doubt of that, and a great many of them favor going to war on their side.

"There is also a large peace party in Italy which, while not favoring war, is nevertheless ready to stand behind the government in the event the step is taken. As for German sentiment in Italy, my own personal opinion is that it is negligible.

"We have no quarrel with Germany, and the alliance with her may have been beneficial to Italy, until militarism gained the upper hand in Germany. The Italian nation did not approve of this war, and as a member of the triple alliance, Italy felt that she should have been consulted. Had she been this war might possibly have been averted.

"Statements that Italy has been holding off in the effort to drive a hard bargain with Vienna are in my opinion unjust and untrue. I do not believe that my country has been trying to drive a hard bargain with Austria, but rather that Austria has been making advances in the effort to win the favor of Italy.

Resent Fate of Belgium.

"Italians do not feel that their relations with Austria have been any too pleasant or that Italy has been treated any too fairly by Austria. Italy has been irritated by Austrian encroachments, and by harsh treatment of Italians within the borders of the Austro-Hungarian empire.

"As indicative of Italian sentiment, I only have to call attention to the fact that there is in Italy a very strong Democratic element which belongs to what is known as the Social Democratic party. The majority of these Social Democrats are laboring men, and from the first they have been horrified at the treatment accorded Belgium.

"The invasion of that little neutral state by the Germans is something they cannot stand for, and if for no other reason they are against Germany because of this act against the Belgians. This is my own opinion, and in stating it I do so under the conviction that I know my own country pretty well.

"The Italians have always entertained an admiration for the great German military machine as a machine, but that is all. The methods of that machine have not the approval of the Italian people.

"But to revert to the question as to whether or not Italy will become a participant in this war. The military men say that Italy will go in, but some of the great politicians maintain that her entry is doubtful.

Will Not Help Germany.

"However, it is a fact that all preparations have been made and it is out of the question for Italy to go with Germany and Austria-Hungary. If she goes it will be with the allies. Of that I am certain.

"The Italian navy is fit and its officers and men well trained. A number of new ships have been commissioned, among them several Dreadnoughts. The commander of the fleet is the Duke of the Abruzzi, and Americans know what a fine and capable type of seaman he is.

"The economical situation in Italy is excellent. Recently a very good loan was floated without outside assistance, and I am convinced that the people are ready to make great sacrifices should it become necessary.

"Since the beginning of the war I am of the opinion that Italy has sincerely made every effort to remain in an honorable neutral position, and I hope the situation will so adjust itself that Italy can keep out of the war.

"I doubt if the great body of Americans appreciate the full extent of the great tragedy of Europe. If you could see the maimed and ruined I am quite certain that all America would be still more ardently for peace than is now the case. My sincere hope is that the American government and people will continue to exert every pressure to bring about a termination of the conflict."

D'ANNUNZIO TO BE SAILOR.

Poet Wants Experience For Poem on Modern Italian Navy.

Gabriele D'Annunzio has written the Italian minister of marine asking for enlistment as a simple sailor.

The war minister wished D'Annunzio to resume his rank as lieutenant of cavalry, but the poet wrote back that he wished to compose a naval poem on modern Italy or sink with his ship in the Adriatic, as did the Russian painter Verestchagin at Port Arthur.

BATTLE LINE IN EUROPE 1,000¾ MILES LONG.

Careful calculation shows that at the moment the great German drive began the battle lines in Europe covered the enormous stretch of 1,000¾ miles.

Among the allies the line of death was divided as follows:

French	544 miles
British	31½ miles
Belgians	17½ miles
Russians	887 miles
Germans	219 miles

In cost, loss of life, destruction of property and loss of production and trade the war is eating up more than $124,000,000 a day, experts say.

Belgium's [illegible] now estimated at [illegible]

"WE'RE TIRED, AREN'T YOU?" ASK GERMANS.

Letters Tied to Stones Flung at Night Into British Trenches.

Two letters tied around stones were thrown into the trenches of the Second British corps the night of April 12 and 13. One letter read:

Dear Honored Comrades—As this war has now been going on for about nine months and whole villages with their inhabitants have been devastated, it is now high time to put a stop to it.

We are all tired of this savage life, and you must be too. Our dear wives and children await and long for our return and yours must do the same.

Hoping that we may do some good by this, we remain with friendly greetings,

THE GERMAN SAPPING PARTY.

The other letter ran:

Dear French and English Comrades—It is just about time you stopped all this, for we think you will soon have had enough of your war. Our losses are great, and yours must be three times as big.

Every day it gets finer, and it would be better if we could be at home with our wives and children, who are waiting every day for us, as yours are waiting for you.

Let us have peace on earth before the cherry blossoms come out, but the sooner the better, or do you want to go on sitting forever in these damned trenches? With friendly greetings,

THE GERMANS.

DANCED WITH LAFAYETTE.

Centenarian Says People Aren't as Good Now as Years Ago.

Hale and hearty, her bright eyes sparkling happily, Mrs. Missouri A. Hawkins of 20 West One Hundred and Fortieth street, New York city, celebrated her one hundredth birthday by saying:

"People's morals aren't as good as they were years ago. We are living in a 'flyaway' age, with an astonishing lot of deviltry and slyness upsetting all the good in the world."

She recalled as her most pleasant experience her meeting with General Lafayette.

"I put on my best dress," she said, "and went to the hotel, where I shook hands with the great man. And what do you think?" she added. "I danced a minuet with him."

CAPTIVES START UNIVERSITY.

Germans Help Belgian Prisoners to Continue Their Studies.

A regular university is in operation in the prison camp at Soltau, Prussia, which contains several thousand captives. Lectures are being given in departments of arts, law and theology, and in a commercial school. There also is a preparatory department.

The university owes its origin to the fact that the Belgian prisoners include many professors and students of four Belgian universities. The students desired an opportunity to continue their studies. The classes were opened also to other prisoners.

The attendance in the preparatory department is particularly large.

FRENCH GET THEIR WINE.

First Gift Made to Men In Trenches Is 14,000,000 Liters.

French soldiers in the field are not to lack wine. Agricultural organizations, syndicates of buyers and others have united in an organization known as the association "Vin Aux Soldats" (Wine For Soldiers). The first gift was 1 per cent of the entire village of L'Herault. Inasmuch as the vintage this year was 14,000,000 hectolitres the gift to the army will amount to 140,000 hectolitres, or 14,000,000 liters.

The army authorities take charge of the transportation, and the wines are exempt from the sales tax.

New carload of Bowker's Fertilizers. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 4.—Fifty-nine amendments to the State Constitution have been presented by the delegates up to today and all have been referred to the various committees appointed by Chairman Elihu Root. The amendments cover a variety of subjects. Up to the present time these committees have not met to discuss the various amendments.

The procedure while different in a measure resembles the method used by the members of the legislature in dealing with bills; all amendments must be favorably reported by committees before they can be debated by the delegates on the floor. Prior to action on the part of a committee, hearings will be given if there is a request, upon any of the proposed alterations to the Constitution.

The amendments already submitted relative to changes in the judiciary law, are likely to bring to Albany many distinguished attorneys and jurists and hearings upon the proposed changes are quite likely to occupy considerable time.

Among the amendments to the judiciary law which have already been introduced, is one amending Article VI, providing for a probate division of the Supreme Court which division shall have transferred to it the duties now exercised by surrogates. A land division of the Supreme Court before which shall be tried all action dealing with real estate, is another amendment. A third amendment provides that judges of the Court of Appeals and the Supreme court may be nominated as other State officers, but that the chief judge of the Court of Appeals shall also nominate judges of the Court of Appeals and the Supreme court judges and that such nominations shall be certified by the Secretary of State. The names of each candidate designated in this way are to be placed in separate columns.

Another amendment to Article 6 is the proposal to create a court of Criminal Appeals to consist of the chief judge and four associate judges to be designated by the governor from among the judges of the Supreme Court. Such cort is to have exclusive jurisdiction of all appeals from judgment of orders in criminal actions in the courts of record.

The proposition of having the judges of the Court of Appeals and of the Supreme Court meet in a convention bi-ennially to adopt rules governing the practice and procedure in courts, such rules and procedure to have superceding effect of all statutes bearing upon the subject matter, is another important amendment. The chief judge of the Court of Appeals is to preside over the convention as proposed.

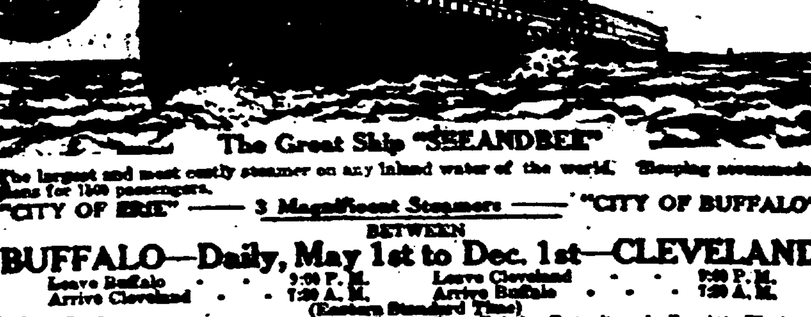
Still another amendment providing that the Court of Claims shall consist of three judges, hwo shall hold office until January first next succeeding of their present terms of office.

The prediction has been made that the amendment relative to the abolition of surrogates, will be adopted. A commission was named over a year ago which recommended many changes relative to the surrogate's court, yet by many of the delegates it is believed that the office of county surrogate is unnecessary. Naturally opposition to the amendment will be forthcoming.

DANIEL W. EDGECOMB DEAD

Fairfield, Conn., May 4.—Daniel W. Edgecomb, secretary of state in 1873, inventor, astronomer and manufacterer of telescopes, is dead at his home here, at the age of 75 years. Death occurred Saturday night in Bridgeport.

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND



The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"

The largest and most costly steamer on any inland water of the world. Sleeping accommodations for 1500 passengers.

"CITY OF ERIE" — 3 Magnificent Steamers — "CITY OF BUFFALO"

BETWEEN

BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND

Leave Buffalo 9:00 P. M. Leave Cleveland 9:00 P. M.
Arrive Cleveland 7:30 A. M. Arrive Buffalo 7:30 A. M.
(Eastern Standard Time)

Connections at Cleveland for Cedar Point, Put-in-Bay, Toledo, Detroit and all points West and Southwest. Railroad tickets reading between Buffalo and Cleveland are good for transportation on our steamers. Ask your ticket agent for tickets via C. & B. Line.

THE CLEVELAND & BUFFALO TRANSIT CO., Cleveland, Ohio

THE FULTON SALVAGE CO.

DEPARTMENT STORE — W. THIRD STREET AND BROADWAY

INTRODUCTORY RED STAMP SALE

Begins To-day offering Great Bargain Prices in all Departments all this week, to introduce The Greatest of All Profit-Sharing Plans. Free Books and Free Stamps—Ask for them

Note the Money Saving Prices on New goods this season. 20 per cent. Discount on our High Grade Suits for Men and Young Men. Many rare values in this lot.

A Leader in Men's Trousers: Regular $2.50, $2.25 and $2.00 grades at $1.69, all sizes.

SHOE DEPARTMENT

To acquaint you with our Shoe Department we quote the following very special values:

Hurd's Best dress Shoes for men and young men, in all leathers and sizes; regular $4.00 value at $3.49. Other linesof $3.00 and $2.50 values at $2.29.

Ladies' and Misses' Oxfords, regular $3.50 at $2.59. Regular $3.00 shoes at $2.29, and regular $2.50 shoes at $1.98; all sizes in tan, gun metal and patent leather.

Many other Special Values including latest styles in Ladies' and Misses tan and black. Also boys' and girl's School Shoes.

DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT

A Straight 10 per cent. Discount on Shirtwaists, Dress Skirts, ePtticoats, House Dresses, Kimonos, Aprons, Underwear, Yard Goods, etc.

A large shipment of Lace Curtains has just arrived as we are going to press. Prices not marked but they will be sold at very low prices in this Red Stamp Sale.

10%—CUT IN WALL PAPER—10%

Our immense stock of this season's new designs and patterns in Cut Out Borders and Binders. You will find in this great variety your choice from pantry to parlor.

Our Hardware, Furniture and House Furnishing Department offer the same money saving bargains. A mammoth order of Linoleums is due to arrive today and will be put on special sale at once.

A CARLOAD OF SCREEN DOORS AND WINDOWS

At prices never before heard of. We bought this lot at a very low figure and will sell any size door with trimmings at $1.00.

Window Screens, regular 40 and 35 cents sizes at 20c. Other sizes at 10 and 15 cents.

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your Merchants for National Red Stamps and insisting on getting them with everything you buy. If your merchant does not give you National Merchandise Stamps it is absolute proof that he does not appreciate your trade. Merchants who give National Red Stamps want your trade and are sharing their profits with you. Every full book of Red Stamps is worth $2 in cash or $2.50 in merchandise, dry goods, clothing, etc., or can be applied for $2.50 on purchase of larger amount or $2 on account. Full books will be redeemed by any merchant who gives National Red Stamps.

FREE COUPON

This Coupon good for 30 Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 8th.

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP — Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear — 106 Oneida St. Phone 3177

H. C. DANN & SON — City Meat Market — High Grade Meats at the right prices. — 11 South 2d St. Phone 42

A. ALDERMAN — Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes — 214 West First St.

JOHN CRAHAN — GROCERIES — 124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

J. BELASKI — GROCERIES AND MEATS — 174 West First St.

JAMES E. [illegible] — [illegible] — 518 South 1st St. Phone [illegible]

M. H. JOYCE — The New West Side Grocery — 518 West Third St. Phone 4260

J. R. WARD — GROCERIES—Open Evenings — 314 Seneca St. Phone 4450

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY — DEPARTMENT STORE — West Third Street and Broadway.

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps and Bargain Prices. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

Merchants wishing to learn more about this Wonderful Business Boosting Plan, call Mr. Beynon, at McDonald's New York Shop, Phone 3177

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 117 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1915 | Price One Cent

Salary Bill, Without Utmost Efficiency on the Part of Officials, Would Entail Upon Taxpayers a Burden Unbearable. Friday Night Your Last Chance to Protest Against This Feature of the Brown Bill.

Board of Aldermen Not a Unit With the Administration. A Natural Question is Asked; If Mayor and Aldermen Should Get Pay, Why Not the Members of Every City Board?

Pursuant to a notice which appears in another column of this paper, there will be a public hearing at City Hall Friday night on the Brown bill, which amends the city charter generally, providing among other things salaries for the Mayor and Council if the council sees fit to vote the salaries, said salaries to be voted two months before an administration takes office. The other provisions of the bill, which include the licensing of pool-rooms, billiard halls and bowling alleys; the appointment of a captain of police, and the clause empowering the council to borrow a sum not to exceed $20,000 if the council deems it necessary in a case of emergency, do not seem to meet the same opposition which is manifest against the salary provision.

It is understood that the salary provision will meet strong opposition both in the council ranks and from taxpayers. At a meeting held in the Chamber of Commerce rooms last Saturday night there was almost unanimous opposition shown against the salary provision by several representative taxpayers who are members of the chamber. Many arguments against the bill were advanced, some saying that the city was overburdened with debt to such an extent that the payment of any more salaries would not be good policy, others advancing the argument that the bill would create a dangerous precedent and that all boards would demand salaries if one board was allowed pay. The high tax rate was held up as another argument against the bill.

Aside from the administration the bill does not seem to have many firm supporters unless those who support it are doing so very quietly. The supporters of the bill advance the argument that salaries will attract good men into office, who will be willing to give more time to the work when they receive some renumeration.

Opponents of the bill claim that the renumeration must necessarily be so small that it would have no attraction except to parties whose time is worth but very little and who demand some renumeration for services tendered to the city once in a lifetime. Some of the Aldermen have come out in favor of the bill while others state that they are perfectly willing to serve the city to the best of their ability without salaries as the position calls for only a few hours' wor a month. One authority attempted to point out last night that the waste caused by the payment of claims after the paving of Oneida st, and Cayuga st. would not have occurred if paid men were in office, while this argumentwas ridiculed by opponents of the bill who averred hat a conscientious and intelligent citizen would act carefully and wisely in matters of that kind whether he received pay or not.

The supporters of the bill point out the fact that the Aldermen do not vote themselves the salary but vote it to their successors, while the opposing side meets this argument with the statement that the salary provision is unnecessary either now or five years from now, and the amount of the salaries however small could be expended to better advantage in laying sidewalks about the city or improving the streets. The bill contains no provision which limits the amount of the salaries, and farsighted taxpayers predict a continuous raise from year to year until the salaries reach metropolitan dimensions. The council would control the amount of the salaries absolutely and although $75 a year has been mentioned as the amount decided upon if the bill passes there is no assurance that the amount will not exceed that.

If the salary provision is successfully opposed the bill will be rejected in its entirety. Attempts to ascertain who drew up the bill and who prevailed upon Senator Brown to present it have been fruitless. In any event the Council Chambers tomorrow night will be the scene of a lively meeting and every taxpayers who has anything to say regarding the bill either pro or con, will be given an opportunity to speak.

BRITAIN MUST RAISE 5 BILLIONS OF DOLLARS TO MEET WAR EXPENSES

London, Wednesday.—Half an hour after Mr. Lloyd George's budget speech has been delivered in the House of Commons its immediate interest suffered a total eclipse, for the Chancellor of the Exchequer rose and made another speech, and in a thrice the house realized that the crushing new duties on spirits, wines and beers were dead, or if not dead, then moribund. If they still stand they stand tottering. From the first the new duties were doomed and only the extereme temperance members were able to discover any virtue in them.

The collapse of the government's measure to curb the use of liquor came after Lloyd George had made a remarkable speech in which he gave to the British public further insight into what the war is costing the nation.

The expenditure at present, Lloyd George said, was $10,500,000 daily, and he added that if the war continued for a year Great Britain's bill would be upward of $5,000,000,000. The debt of the country, according to Mr. Lloyd George, already had been almost doubled, and stood well above the $5,000,000,000 mark.

Comparing the financial problems of Great Britain and Germany, Mr. Lloyd George remarked that while British imports had increased enormously and exports had decreased considerably both the exports and imports of Germany had been cut off by the British navy.

KING OF ITALY IN ROME, READY TO MAKE DEMANDS

London, Wednesday.—Dr. Dillon, the Daily Telegraph's Rome correspondent, telegraphs:

"Signor Salandra's decision to advise the King to absent himself from the festivities at Quarto Sant Elena is generally ascribed to German influence. This view is unfounded. The decision was based precisely upon the critical condition of diplomatic affairs and their impending solution, during which the Kink and his Ministers must not be absent from Rome.

"The pourparlers with Austria cannot possibly lead to accord and the alternative is war, and nothing now remains but to reeognize the fact and act upon it. This recognition may take place at any moment."

Telegrams from Catania describing the treachery of native troops in Tripoli and the losses of the Italian affirm that among the captured prisoners or the dead who fought in the rebel ranks are some German officers attired in Turkish uniforms. No official confirmation of this statement has been received. If it proves correct it may give rise to diplomatic incidents and precipitate events.

All Prominent Stores to Remain Closed for Trade Monday Nights

The Monday night closing movement inaugurated by the Chamber of Commerce has finally met with the support of every merchant of prominence in the city and the new scheme will probably be put into practice next Monday evening. It is planned to close all the dry goods, haberdasher, hardware, jewelry and shoe stores at six o'clock, the same as any week night. The stores will remain open Saturday nights as before.

The plan met opposition at first among some of the prominent merchants who refused to sign the agreement drawn up by the Retail Stores committee. Hard work on the part of the members of the committe finally brought the recalcitrant merchants into line, however, and the clerks of all the stores which have decided to close are loud in their praises of the movement. Other cities the size of Fulton have never adopted the plan of transacting business Monday evening, but it has become the custom here because of the hours of mill employes who are unable to complete their purchases on Saturday.

Joseph H. Conners Headed Delegation Asking for Special Election to Vote Again Upon Purchase of Falley Seminary and Site.

The Common Council held its regular monthly meeting last night at the City Hall with every Alderman present. A delegation from the Board of Education presented a petition signed by 458 taxpayers requesting that the council call a special election for the purpose of voting once more on the Falley Seminary site for a high school. Headed by Joseph H. Conners they presented the petition and urged that the council consider the matter and call an election as sentiment at the present time seemed to be in favor of the Fallye site.

Mayor Fox, said that he, for one, was in favor of the Falley site, but that he believed that First Ward in particular was opposed to it, and as he noticed that the First Ward taxpayers were not very numerous on the petition he suggested that the committee do some missionary work on the West Side and obtain, if possible, the signatures of at least 50 per cent. of the taxpayers in the First Ward. The Mayor stated that he anticipated no difficulty at the polls if the First Ward favors the Falley site and advised that the signatures be obtained before the council calls a special election.

When he asked for the sentiments of the aldermen on the subject, Alderman Sullivan of the First Ward stated that he would not vote for a special election as the thing stood at present. "If you can get 50 per cent. of the people in my ward to sign your petition," said the Alderman, "I will agree to a special election, but as the things stand now, I would not vote for it."

Mr. Conners for the Board of Education said that he appreciated Mr. Sullivan's position and the missionary work on the West Side would start at once. The resolution for a special election was tabled until the next meeting of the council.

James Caffrey asked permission to build a garage on the rear on his property on South 4th st. Alderman Sullivan moved that he be given a permit provided the garage was built of fireproof material. Having several materials in mind, Mr. Caffrey was referred to the chief of the fire department who will decide which meets the requirements.

It was moved and passed that $75 be subscribed for Post Schenck, G. A. R., for Memorial Day.

It was moved that three commissioners be appointed to censor films showing in this city which have not passed some reputable board of censorship. The names of the censors will be appointed later. These men will serve without pay.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sundays at 46 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 45

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
R. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 27, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 5, 1915

Opinions

Can One

"Listen, hon," said one of the fair ladies in a musical comedy company playing an engagement not over a thousand miles from Little Falls, to Susie, the diningroom girl in a popular local restaurant, "never mind putting the tomatoes in a dish, bring them right in in the can." And the waitress, in deference to her patron's wishes, did exactly as she had been bid.

Now the question which arises is this: Has a new departure in gastronomics been sung up? Everybody knows that oysters are served in half their shells. It is popular to keep a lobster alive until the last possible minute, snuffing out his life with the boiling hot water from which he is carried to the table. Grapefruit, canteloupes and kindred animals are, of course, best when eaten from the rind. Timid persons have been known to extinguish fire on a Hungarian cocktail by shooting selzer water upon it. And are we now to eat our stewed tomatoes raw from the can, opened at the table side with merry clink of tin, faint reminder of the popping of a champagne cork? The epicurean intricacies of this problem are too gaffling for The Lounger to solve. Would our good old friend, Edward Bok, kindly stop sewing sacks for Belgians long enough to enlighten us on this question thru the columns of his estimable publication? —The Lounger.

"America First"

In his address of April 20 to the National Publishers' Association President Wilson said:

My interest in neutrality for the United States is not the petty desire to keep out of trouble, but I am interested because there is something so much greater to do than fight.

I am not speaking in a selfish spirit when I say that our whole duty, for the present at any rate, is summed up in this motto: "America first." Let us think of America before we think of Europe, in order that America may be fit to be Europe's friend when the day of tested friendship comes.

This sounds well. "America first," by all means. It would have sounded still better two years ago, when the only war in sight was the war started by Free-Traders against American labor and industry. Why not "America first" then as well as now? Better then than now. The sentiment would then have fallen more gratefully upon American ears than it can now fall upon the ears of the war-distracted peoples of Europe. "America first" would have saved the country from the blow inflicted upon American prosperity by the very worst Tarik law ever enacted. If only President Wilson could have thought more about "America first" at the right time; and less about the advantages which foreigners were going to reap from a "competitive" Tariff! The happiness of a phrase often depends upon the circumstances under which it is uttered. But we shall hear more of that phrase later on. "America first" will be extremely popular in 1916.

Special sale of Farm Wagons during month of May. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

$100 REWARD, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dread disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by all Druggists, 75c.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

WHAT IS THE LAW?

It is not an offense against the law for a newspaper to use its best judgment in making known to the taxpayers of this city those matters which concern their welfare, yet The Evening Times has been called to account for its publication of a report of the proceedings of a meeting whose membership was not pledged to secrecy. The result of that meeting was the discussion of a matter of more than unusual interest—a matter that affects the pocketbook of every voter, no matter whether he is the owner of houses and lots or one house and one lot. It was the question whether the mayor and the city's aldermen should receive for their services as officials a salary amounting to a nominal sum.

Under proper conditions The Evening Times favors salaried officials, but only under a form of government that spells for the highest form of efficiency, which is, managerial or the right kind of government by a commission.

That the proposed amendment to the Fulton City Charter does not embody the features of government by commissioners is obvious to the most astute person; that it is nothing less than a subterfuge, or pretext to fool all of the people for all time glares from every letter used to construct the wording in the amendment and the newspaper articles defending the contention of the exponents of the bill.

Mayor Fox was called to the meeting in question. He was asked to explain points relative to the proposed amendment to the City Charter. He failed to enlighten the membership of the committee comprising representatives of about 300 members of the Chamber of Commerce, who in turn are supposed to represent as their constituency the bone and sinew of the City of Fulton. All these facts and all that appeared in The Evening Times of Monday, May 3, have been obtained from a reliable source—a source that, when it comes to safeguarding the interests of the people rings like a piece of fine steel when struck by a hammer in the clear air on a frosty morning. This informant is fond of the light of day; he opposes secret motives and secret doings; therefore, he resolved to have placed before the hundreds of readers of The Evening Times a record of events of an evening spent in trying to extract from the Mayor of Fulton a lucid explanation of his pet hobby—the payment of salaries to certain of the city's officials, leaving out in the cold those men who are the main doers of the city's work, the Commissioners of Public Works. The Evening Times is not surprised at the attitude assumed by the Mayor at the Saturday evening meeting in the Chamber of Commerce rooms, for the reason that at least a month has passed by since this newspaper's columns were thrown open to that city official in which to make known the truth relative to the part he and his city attorney played in trying to boost the assessed valuation of property in a restricted section of Fulton. That the invitation has not been accepted is apparent to everybody, but why? that's the question. Why is not public business everybody's business? That is the question for the taxpayer to ask of the Mayor.

But reverting again to the subject—the statement in the first paragraph of this article, has The Evening Times committed an offense against the law by making known to the people who have a right to know the Mayor's opinion upon a subject for which he stands sponsor, and which, if it becomes a law, will affect the welfare of the twenty-five hundred homes in which The Evening Times is a regular visitor in this city? If the Mayor of Fulton chooses to set himself up as a pillar around whose feet we must do homage, waiting with bated breath for him to drop a choice morsel of news, is there reason why he should be protected from the limelight, in order that his pet measure may be relieved from the discussion it deserves?

The Evening Times has proof positive that the people of Fulton are opposed to secret and executive sessions. The people—the readers of this newspaper have for years been deprived of what is their right, to know of the happenings in the conduct of their business. The Evening Times makes this statement based upon the best evidence in the world—the unadulterated approval of its hundreds of readers, and what is more to the point, this newspaper does not propose to permit a man, or men, to usurp a power of censorship over its columns in any matter of business that may affect the taxpayers' interests.

The people of Fulton have a right to know all about the truth of the charges preferred and relating to the attempted boost in property valuations, as well as to the intent of the Brown Bill and the men who are responsible for its introduction into the Senate and Assembly. Why? Because it is not an offense against the law for a newspaper to make known to the taxpayers of this city those matters affecting their welfare and which would not otherwise be brought into the limelight; and further, because The Evening Times is the people's newspaper.

TANNER URGES SHORT BALLOT

Advocates Fuller Responsibility and Power With Executive—Cites Libel Suit Testimony

Albany, May 5.—Citing testimony adduced at the Barnes-Roosevelt libel suit as proof that at times neither the Governor nor the Legislature has been the real power in control of New York legislation, Frank C. Tanner, who succeeded William Barnes as chairman of the Republican State Committee last year, has issued a statement giving his views on how to prevent a recurrence of such conditions.

Primarily he would arm the Governor with the short ballot. In addition, he would eliminate the many overlapping and convicting powers of Government that now exist in various departments. As Mr. Tanner is chairman of the Constitutional Convention Committee on State officers, amendments looking to the establishment of these reforms are likely to be offered.

Incidentally, Mr. Tanner revealed that he has started reform at home by declining to use patronage for the promotion of legislation.

Criticised by Republicans

"For this," he said, "I was freely criticised by members of my own party."

Mr. Tanner was named chairman at the personal request of Governor Whitman when he was made the Republican candidate for Governor.

The great need, Mr. Tanner declared, is to place the Governor in a position where he can exercise the fullest power and where he will be directly responsible for the acts of his administration.

"To use a popular phrase," he said, "there is a 'twilight zone' between the various branches of the Government where apparently no one is responsible. This may not be cause of the 'boss system,' but it is a powerful ally to it.

One Thing Revealed by Trial

"It is not my intention to indicate any opinion as to the merits of the libel suit now being tried in Syracuse. It would be manifestly improper to do so, but both parties to this litigation have made the fact clear, although the construction placed upon the fact by each is different, that when Mr. Roosevelt was Governor of this State there existed a situation under which the real power did not lie either in the chief executive or in the Legislature elected by the people.

"In a speech before the Young Men's Republican Club, of January 8, 1915, before the Legislature began its session, I described the exact situation which has now been developed in court and indicated what I thought my duty as State chairman was. The words used were in part as follows:

"'But the spirit of the times has changed since the days of Mr. Platt. The demand that the Republican chairman should direct legislation has steadily decreased and his power has exercised less and less in that direction. The best political intelligence in the State places the responsibility for the passing of the laws and their execution where it belongs; that is, upon the Governor and the Legislature."

Against Party Patronage

"To stop this vicious system of using party patronage to control legislation—a thing which never was contemplated in our system of government—I adopted the very simple expedient of refusing to do it. For this I was freely criticised by many members of my own party. The remedy was not to interfere temporarily, but to create in the constitutional convention a new and scientific system, where both power and responsibility will be put where it belongs, upon the chief public servant who can be elected by the people and answerable directly to them. As long as we have, as at present, a loose-jointed and unscientific form of government, it is an invitation for those who have undoubted power in the control of patronage to assume functions which properly belong to elected officers.

"We have in a half conscious and tentative way recognized the need of greater centralized authority. The constitution provides that the Governor should make his recommendations to the Legislature and gives him the power of veto. The custom has sanctioned, moreover, what is known as 'administration bills,' that is, bills that are prepared under the authority of the Governor and introduced as his measures. We have gone so far as to give him the power of appointing officers like the Superintendent of Public Works, Commissioner of Highways, but without it in the case of the State Engineer. I could multiply these illustrations in other departments, but it is unnecessary.

"The principal work therefore of this committee, of which I am chairman, I think is first the reorganization of the functions of many State departments, and second the substantial shortening of the ballot, so that the people can act with greater intelligence and the Governor with greater authority. There is no question at all of taking the power away from the people. The real question is to simplify the machinery and make that power in the people effective."

For the Farmer:

Sherwin-Williams Paints
For Inside and Outside

Flat-Tone Wall Paints

Famous Belding Hall Refrigerators

New Perfection Oil Stoves
Just the Thing for Warm Weather

Fishing Tackle

Screens Screens Screens

A. M. Druse & Co.
"BUSINESS IS GOOD"

7 South First St. FULTON, N. Y.

For thrush use Hanford's Balsam. Get it into the bottom of the affected part.

Tires, Supplies, everything for the Bicycle at Bogue's, 61 First st.

SHIRT FOR 7-FOOT WAIST.

Costs 405 Pound Man $11 and Is Biggest Ever Made.

What is believed to be the biggest shirt ever made has been turned out by a factory at Parsons, Kan., for George W. Nicklor of Ames, Ia., who is the biggest man in that state and is said to possess the biggest waist of any man alive.

The shirt is cut with a waist which lacks one inch of being seven feet. The collar is twenty-three inches and the chest sixty-six inches, with a twenty-eight inch arm. The shirt is made of cheviot and will cost Nicklor $11.

Nicklor has turned down numerous vaudeville offers. He weighs 405 pounds and is five feet six inches tall.

TO RAISE "SACRED LEGION."

Venizelos Says He Will Gather Greeks Here in America.

Greece's great statesman, ex-Premier Eleutherios Venizelos, is coming to America, he says, to raise a "sacred legion" to fight for Greece in Asia Minor.

Forced from office by a quarrel with the king, Venizelos is unable at present to bring about Greece's intervention against Turkey, but he doesn't intend to retire from active life.

His sacred legion will number 50,000 men drawn from Asia Minor refugees, as well as Greeks in the United States. He will use Cyprus and Egypt as bases for his corps, it is planned, and will operate against Smyrna, Broussa and Salonlki.

For proud flesh use occasional application of Hanford's Balsam.

CASTORIA
For Infants and Children
In Use For Over 30 Years
Always bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

BUSINESS CARDS.

A. T. JENNINGS
Attorney and Counselor-at-Law
9 S. FIRST ST. FULTON, N. Y.

J. F. BROWN
PRACTICAL WATCHMAKER AND JEWELER
has a full line of Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry—at the lowest prices—consistent with quality and a fair deal.
7 S. FIRST ST., FULTON, N. Y.

GEORGE W. HACKETT
ENGINEER AND SURVEYOR
Surveys, Plans and Estimates for Sewage Disposal, Property Development.
Telephone No. 9
108 ONEIDA ST. FULTON, N. Y.

TOWELS ARE BOGUS BILLS.

Weaver Accurately Reproduces Details of Five and Ten Dollar Notes.

Secret service men at Washington are seeking the origin of two of the biggest specimens of counterfeiting ever brought to the attention of the treasury department. The counterfeits are Turkish towels, four feet long and two feet wide, remarkably accurate copies of $5 silver certificates and $10 gold certificates.

The weaving reproduced every detail of the genuine notes. Only one small omission was detected by Assistant Chief W. F. Moran.

Magnifying Glass Starts Fire.

A large magnifying glass, which caught the rays of the sun and focused them on a lace curtain, caused a fire in the home of Dr. Charles H. Brown, a dentist, at 2843 Bathgate avenue, New York city. The glass stood on a pedestal by the window. Firemen estimated the damage at $1,000.

You get your money's worth every time. Hanford's Balsam is guaranteed to cure ailments and injuries that can be reached by external application or your money will be refunded by the dealer. Getting a bottle now is like taking out insurance.

Health Promotes Happiness

Without health, genuine joy is impossible; without good digestion and regular bowel movement you cannot have health. Why neglect keeping bowels open and risk being sick and ailing? You don't have to. Take one small Dr. King's New Life Pill at night, in the morning you will have a full, free bowel movement and feel much better. Helps your appetite and digestion. Try one tonight.

All Kinds of
GARDEN SEEDS
by the ounce or pound at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

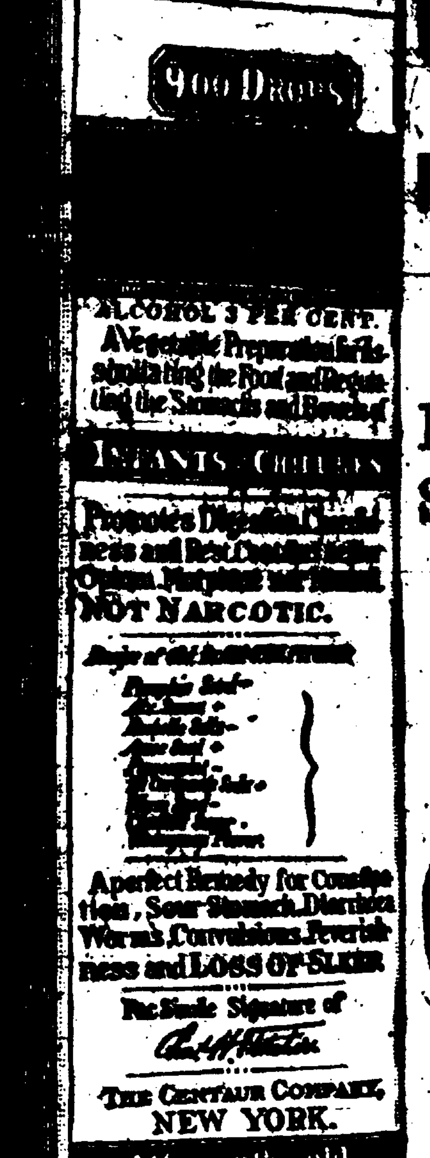
FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND

The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"

"CITY OF ERIE" — 3 Magnificent Steamers — "CITY OF BUFFALO"

BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND

THE CLEVELAND & BUFFALO TRANSIT CO., Cleveland, Ohio



Exact Copy of Wrapper.

CASTORIA

For Infants and Children.

Mothers Know That Genuine Castoria

Always Bears the Signature of

In Use For Over Thirty Years

CASTORIA

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

How an Aeronaut Was Captured

By MARTHA V. MONROE

Lieutenant Ben Harbeson of the United States aeroplane corps was called to the telephone.

"Well?"

"Mr. Harbeson?"

"Yes, I'm Harbeson."

"I'm Colonel Carrington. I've called you up to say that Jack is anxious to go up with you for a flight."

"What Jack?"

"My Jack."

The colonel was laboring under a delusion that Harbeson had been at his quarters and was familiar with his family. The truth was that the lieutenant had never been at headquarters long enough to make their acquaintance. There was a pause in the dialogue, Carrington expecting that his subordinate would offer to take Jack up with him, the lieutenant shrinking from the responsibility. Of course, the former had no authority to command the latter to do such a thing; he must volunteer.

"How old is Jack?" asked Harbeson.

"Eighteen."

"Marty?"

"Very."

"Well, I'm going up this afternoon for a short trip. I don't mind taking a passenger."

"Thank you. What time?"

"Three o'clock."

There were two goodbys and two receivers were hung up. Harbeson went away muttering to himself. He disliked to take any one up with him that he did not know and as to whose nerve he was ignorant. Indeed, he would have positively refused the request had it not been made by his commanding officer. As it was he could not very well refuse. He only hoped the boy would not get frightened or dizzy and bring about an accident.

Shortly before 3 o'clock Harbeson superintended the rolling of his machine from the sheds on to the level ground from which he proposed to make his start and was examining its parts to see if everything was secure when he saw a girl open the gate and come tripping over the turf toward him. She came up with a smile and saluted Harbeson in a very friendly manner.

"It's awfully good of you to take me up with you, Mr. Harbeson," she said.

"Take you up with me?" replied the lieutenant wonderingly.

"Why, yes," rejoined the girl, somewhat taken aback at his asking the question and his manner. "Didn't papa arrange it with you?"

"Colonel Carrington telephoned me that his son Jack wished to go up."

"I'm Jack," rejoined the girl, laughing. "My name's Jacquelin. Everybody calls me Jack."

Here was a dilemma. If he took the girl up with him and she should become panic stricken she might cling to him like a drowning person and be the cause of the death of both of them. If he sent her away he might offend his commander. He stood irresolute for a moment, then gave in to the girl, who was dainty and pretty as a shepherdess on the mimic stage.

After a few more minutes of search for weak parts in his machine Harbeson mounted to his seat, the girl climbed to the empty one beside him, there was a burring and a whirring, and [illegible]

Miss Carrington from the first showed no more sign of appreciation of danger than if she had been sitting in an auto.

"Isn't it nice!"

Harbeson was not yet an expert at driving an aeroplane and understood perfectly that any mismanagement on his part would cause a tragedy. He was not displeased that his companion was insensible to the danger so long as nothing unusual occurred. She chattered like a magpie, calling his attention to this and to that, just as though the sensation was as new to him as to her.

Presently there came a gust of wind that turned the aeroplane on its beam. Harbeson paled, while Jack caught her breath. But the moment the machine righted itself she clapped her hands delightedly, exclaiming:

"Wasn't that just too lovely for anything! Do it again."

Harbeson, whose heart was beating like a kettledrum, made no reply that could be heard, though he remarked to himself that if ever there was a fool it was the girl beside him. Nevertheless despite the shock he had received be almost smiled and could not help thinking that Jack was a very delightful fool.

The weather was a trifle gusty when they started, and in the upper air they found it more so. After having been nearly capsized Harbeson started to return. He was caught in another gust so severe that Miss Jack was this time suddenly made aware that she was likely to be spilled from a thousand feet up in the air.

Both her fair arms went around the lieutenant's neck.

Fortunately the machine righted itself. Miss Carrington suddenly became aware that she was embracing a man she had not seen an hour before. She released him and covered her face with her hands.

Harbeson is now a captain and one of the most experienced aero men in the United States service. He says that he never intended to marry and probably never would have married had he not been nearly strangled a thousand feet up in the air by a girl.

His wife's reply to the allegation is: "No such thing."

BLOWS OUT HIS HEART.

Miner, Brooding Over Europe's War, Uses Dynamite to Kill Himself.

As a result of brooding over the war in Europe, Joseph Hansock, a young German working as a miner at Homer, Pa., literally blew out his heart.

Dressed in his best clothes, Hansock attached a fuse to a stick of dynamite, touched a match to it and pressed the explosive close to his heart. His chest was shattered.

Franklin and the Balloon.

When the balloon was first discovered some one said to Franklin: "What will ever come of it?"

Franklin pointed to a baby in its cradle and said. "And what will ever come of that?"

Are You Rheumatic?—Try Sloan's

If you want quick and real relief from Rheumatism do what so many thousand other people are doing—whenever an attack comes on, bathe the sore muscles or joint with Sloan's Liniment. No need to rub it in—just apply the Liniment to the surface. It is wonderfully penetrating. It goes right to the seat of trouble and draws the pain almost immediately. Get a bottle of Sloan's Liniment for 25c of any druggist and have it in the house—against Colds, Sore and Swollen Joints, Lumbago, Sciatica and like ailments. Your money back if not satisfied, but it does give almost instant relief.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

BANISHING UGLINESS IN PORTLAND, ORE.

Work of Children In Transforming Unsightly Lots Into Blooming Gardens.

Portland, Ore., has taken the lead in the ranks of the United States for teaching its children the value of cultivating its soil and the vacant lot, brought about through the co-operation of the Portland Commercial club and adopted by the local school authorities.

In 1912 the first school garden on the Pacific coast, containing two acres in all, was established, giving Portland the proud distinction of originating the school garden idea.

Where was once the eyesore of the city, the unsightly lot and the dumping ground of disease breeding debris has now been transformed into flower and vegetable gardens by the pupils of the various school districts. The result today shows that in 1914 forty-three school gardens varying in size from 40 by 50 feet to two acres, averaging about 100 by 150 feet, covering a total of nearly sixteen acres, were participated in by 8,100 pupils, besides the 3,500 home gardens that were taken care of by the same number of boys and girls on the lots adjoining their homes.

It has resulted in the elimination of the unsightly eyesore, and the school gardens have been developed in Portland to a higher state of efficiency and of usefulness than in any other city in America and has so been acknowledged by the educational department of the United States government. The entire United States has adopted Portland's method of utilizing the vacant lot.

Every school this year has its one or more gardens. These gardens have not only instructed them as to the proper methods of cultivating the soil, but to earn them a profit as well. The boys and girls have been permitted to market their products at the local public market, a section being reserved for their use only, and keep the proceeds for their own individual needs.

Almost every variety of flower and vegetable has been grown by the pupils of the various school districts. Many of the children have taken practical advantage from the lesson learned at school and have started gardens of their own at their own homes.—Town Improvement Magazine.

A LOMBARD TOWER.

New and Novel Departure In American Architecture.

A new departure in American architecture has just been completed at the University museum in Philadelphia. It is an addition to the general structure in the shape of a lofty tower 100 feet in diameter, which, like the rest of the building, is inspired by the Lombard architecture of the fourteenth century. This tower is one of the few structures ever erected without regard to cost. The word to the architects and builders was to spare no expense to make of the tower itself all that art and money could achieve, for it is intended to be in and of itself one of the chief exhibits of the museum.

NEW TOWER OF UNIVERSITY MUSEUM, PHILADELPHIA.

The tower contains in its lower story a perfectly circular auditorium 100 feet in diameter, with a flattened dome all lined with tile of a peculiar construction to get the best acoustic properties. It is believed to be the finest auditorium in America. The upper story of the tower is 100 feet in diameter, 100 feet high, with a dome, and all lined with light gray tiling. It is lighted entirely from the top and is an amazing piece of architecture because of its beautiful tone and its admirable proportions. The walls are six feet thick. The room is for exhibition purposes. With the completion of this addition the museum authorities are preparing to spend a million dollars more in extending the galleries to accommodate the rapidly accumulating specimens of archeology and ethnology from all over the world.

TESTING MATERIALS FOR USE OF THE CITY.

Practical Services Rendered by the Cincinnati Bureau of City Tests.

The bureau of city tests (Cincinnati) aids the city in two ways. It helps the government to purchase the best materials by examining the dealers' samples and by making further tests from time to time enables it to receive supplies of good quality throughout the year. Cincinnati is one of the first large cities to purchase coal under competitive bidding in accordance with well drawn specifications. All its purchases are made on the British thermal unit basis. In submitting bids dealers guarantee a certain number of heat units a pound and a certain percentage of ash. The cost a heat unit in the various bids is then calculated and the contracts awarded. All moisture in excess of the amount normally present is deducted from the tonnage delivered. The result of this new system has been the receiving of a good uniform grade of coal.

The bureau tested the 450 or more carloads of cement used during the year for various city improvements. In spite of the fact that only standard brands which have proved dependable are used, eleven carloads of cement of poor quality were rejected.

By testing fire hose the city saved $11,000 on the contract of 1912 and about the same amount on that of 1914. The bureau analyzes samples without any knowledge of the bidders' prices, and contracts are let on a quality basis to the lowest bidder whose product conforms to the standard underwriters' specifications. The satisfactory performance of the hose under heavy duty has shown the value of these examinations.

In the case of lubricating oils, also, the contracts are let to the lowest bidder whose oil conforms to the specifications of the bureau. At one time twenty-six samples of oil were rejected, and it was necessary to advertise for new bids. The second set of samples were practically all up to the requirements.

The 1,164 samples examined during the past year cannot all be mentioned, but here are a few that were rejected as inferior: Paint, with over 20 per cent gasoline; sand, dirty, not well graded and unsuitable; anti-freezing compound, guaranteed free from calcium chloride, yet found on analysis to be composed entirely of calcium chloride and water; marble cleaner, high in price and consisting entirely of washing soda; woolen blankets, supposed to contain not more than 15 per cent of cotton, yet shown on analysis to have 30 per cent; sulphuric acid, containing such a high percentage of iron that it would have ruined the expensive storage batteries of the fire alarm telegraph system.—Science.

A Community Trust.

Following the general lines of the Cleveland foundation, which has been in existence a year, St. Louis is to have a community trust. The St. Louis Union Trust company, the oldest and largest trust company in Missouri, will administer the trust for the benefit of the present and future community.

The income derived from the trust fund will be expended for the social welfare of St. Louis, under the direction of a committee of five members, one to be appointed by the mayor, one by the judge of the probate court, one by the judge of the United States district court and two by the trust company. St. Louis hopes that it will equal if not exceed the remarkable success of the Cleveland foundation, to which, it is stated by the officers of the Cleveland Trust company, nearly $30,000,000 have been bequeathed during the first year of its existence.

Cleanup in Spokane.

Thousands of prizes, ranging from money to tickets to the "movies," are authorized by the "cleanup-paintup" committee of the city beautiful committee of the Ad. club of Spokane, Wash., which is in charge of the Spokane spring cleaning campaign. Prizes will be given for the best essays of a limited length on "How Best to Make Spokane Spick and Span," and the contest will be open to every school child in the city. Every child entering the contest will be obliged to sign the following pledge: "I promise on my honor to all the people of Spokane to do all in my power to further the work of the 'cleanup week' committee to the end that as a city Spokane may be truly spick and span. I promise to help clean up my own premises and not to throw bottles, cans or refuse of any sort on the streets, alleys or my neighbor's premises."

Trees Shade New Road.

The United States post highway which is being constructed between Austin and San Antonio, Tex., eighty-four miles, is to be beautified by the planting of shade trees along both sides the entire route. Local organizations have been formed in each county through which the road passes for the purpose of carrying on the work of beautification.

It is also planned to build rest houses on the new highway and to add to the comfort of travelers in every possible way. The cost of constructing the road is being borne in part by the federal government and in part by the counties through which it passes.

BALL THRILL KILLS WOMAN.

Excitement at Game Proves Fatal to Enthusiastic Fan.

In the crowd at the New York Polo grounds to see the game between the Giants and Phillies was Mrs. Susanna Wisnewsky, wife of Edmund Wisnewsky, a public accountant, and when the visiting team made two runs in the second inning excitement ran so high she sank back unconscious. Dr. Oscar Leisner, physician at the grounds, found her dead from heart failure.

Mrs. Wisnewsky was forty years old and an enthusiastic baseball fan.

No Use to Try and Wear Out Your Cold, It Will Wear You Out Instead

Thousands keep on suffering Coughs and Colds through neglect and delay. Why make yourself an easy prey to serious ailments and epidemics as the result of a neglected Cold? Coughs and Colds sap your strength and vitality unless checked in the early stages. Dr. King's New Discovery is what you need—the first dose helps. Your head clears up, you breathe freely and you feel so much better. Buy a bottle today and start taking at once.

LEGAL NOTICES

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS—STATE OF NEW YORK, Office of the State Commission of Highways, Albany, N. Y.—Pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 30, Laws of 1909, as amended by Chapter 646, Laws of 1911, and Chapter 80, Laws of 1913; sealed proposals will be received by the undersigned at their office No. 55 Lancaster Street, Albany, N. Y., at 1 o'clock P. M., on Tuesday the 18th day of May, 1915, for the repair of the following highways:

Oswego County Rep. Cont., No. 751; Class of Work, C. O. Appl.; Rd. No. 772; Name, Fulton-Hannibal, Pt. 1; Town, Granby; No. 825; Name, Fulton-Oswego; Town, Granby; Rep. Cont. 747; Class of Work C. O. Appl.; Rd. No. 654; Name, Oswego-Mexico, Pt. 2; Town, New Haven; Rd. No. 5044; Name, Mexico-Union Square, Pt. 1; Town, Mexico; Rd. No. 5221; Name, Union Square, Pulaski, Pt. 2; Town, Richland.

Maps, plans, specifications and estimates may be seen and proposal forms obtained at the office of the Commission in Albany, N. Y., and also at the office of Division Engineer Chas. J. McDonough, 433 S. Salina St., Syracuse, N. Y.

The especial attention of bidders is called to "Information for Bidders" in the itemized proposal, specifications and contract agreement.

Proposals for each road or contract must be presented in a separate sealed envelope endorsed on the outside with the name and number of the road or contract for which the proposal is made. Each proposal must be accompanied by a New York draft or certified check payable to the order of the State Commission of Highways for an amount equal to at least five per cent of the amount of the proposal which such draft or check accompanies.

This draft or check will be held by the Commission until the contract and bond are duly executed.

The successful bidder will be required to give a bond for fifty per cent. of the amount of the contract; such bond to be executed by a surety company to be approved by the Commission, or a bond secured by the deposit of collateral securities to be approved by the Commission.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids.

EDWIN DUFFEY,
Commissioner.

I. J. MORRIS,
Secretary.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.—STATE OF NEW YORK, Office of the State Commission of Highways, Albany, N. Y., pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 30, Laws of 1909, as amended by Chapter 646, Laws of 1911, and Chapter 80, Laws 1913, sealed proposals will be received by the undersigned at their office No. 55 Lancaster Street, Albany, N. Y., at 1 o'clock P.M., on Tuesday the 20th day of April, 1915, for the improvement of the following highways:

Oswego County: Rep. Con. No. 701; class of work, Bit. Mac. A. Resurfacing, Guaranteed; Road No. 653; Name, Granby Roads; Town, Granby. Rep. Con. No. 700; Class of Work Bit. Mac. A. Resurfacing guaranteed; Road No. 539; Name, Fulton-Volney; Town, Volney.

Maps, plans, specifications and estimates may be seen and proposal forms obtained at the office of the Commission in Albany, N. Y., and also at the office of Division Engineer Charles J. McDonough, 433 South Salina St., Syracuse, N. Y.

The especial attention of bidders is called to "Information for Bidders" in the itemized proposal, specifications, and contract agreement.

Proposals for each road or contract must be presented in a separate sealed envelope endorsed on the outside with the name and number of the road or contract for which the proposal is made. Each proposal must be accompanied by a New York draft or certified check payable to the order of the State Commission of Highways for an amount equal to at least five per cent. of the amount of the proposal which such draft or check accompanies.

LEGAL NOTICES

This draft or check will be held by the Commission until the contract and bond are duly executed.

The successful bidder will be required to give a bond for fifty per cent. of the amount of the contract; such bond to be executed by a surety company to be approved by the Commission, or a bond secured by the deposit of collateral securties to be approved by the Commission.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids.

EDWIN DUFFEY,
Commissioner.

I. J. MORRIS,
Secretary.

CITATION TO PROVE WILL—The people of the State of New York,—To Cyrus W. Phillips, Rochester, N. Y.; Anna Phillips Nagle, Minneapolis, Minn.; Ruth Winegar, Nutley, N. J.; Frank E. Winegar, New York, N. Y.; Minnie Wood Douglas, Nutley, N. J.; May Wood Taylor, St. Joseph, Mo.; George E. Wood, New York, N. Y.; Clinton R. Wood, New York, N. Y.; William H. H. Phillips, Washington, D. C.; Ordelia Carscallan, Carter, Mont.; Josephine M. Wood, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Kittie H. Haw, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Edwin Claire Wilde, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Mary Kidd, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Percy D. Wilde, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Flossie M. Wilde, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Rachael C. Davis, Toledo, Ohio; William B. Phillips, Toledo, Ohio; Elmer E. Phillips, Stockbridge, Mich.; Mary E. Ormsby, Stockbridge, Mich.; George H. Phillips, Stockbridge, Mich.; Frank L. Wright, Stockbridge, Mich.; Elpha L. Hutton, Stockbridge, Mich.; Bertha Lyman, Boise City, Idaho; Charles Shaw, Kansas City, Mo.; Ada M. Davis, Clear Lake City, Iowa; Kittie A. Davis, Clear Lake City, Iowa; Clinton L. Davis, Clear Lake City; Iowa; Ada Phillips, New Orleans, La.; Marion Phillips, New Orleans, La.; Mrs. Alexander Bozant, San Francisco, Cal.; M. Augusta Phillips, Toledo, O.; Ada Mason, Batavia, N. Y.; Kittie Look, Atlantic Highlands, N. J.; Cyrus Frederick Phillips, Rochester, N. Y.; Ross Phillips, Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Asa Phillips, Syracuse, N. Y.; Grace Phillips Bryant, Akron, O.; Frank Barnes, Fulton, N. Y.; Hiram Barnes, Little Falls, N. Y.; Loren Barnes, Syracuse, N. Y.; Fannie Barnes Danks, Springfield, Ohio; Fanny Barnes Burt, Hannibal, N. Y.; Edith Barnes, Fulton, N. Y.; Harry Barnes, Frankfort, N. Y.; Eleanor Tamlyn, Custer City, S. Dak.; Robert J. Jennison, Jamesville, Wis.; W. Harry Jennison, Los Angeles, Cal.; Minnie E. Roberts, Maywood, Ill.; Mrs. C. W. Warren, Waldron, Kan.; Ella Reed, Russell, N. Y.; Ransom Stewart, Russell, N. Y.; Orley Stewart, Russell, N. Y.; Hattie Hurlburt, Harrisville, N. Y.; Mary Curtis, Hermon, N. Y., Rebecca Durham, Fine, N. Y.; William Barnes, Harrisville, N. Y.; William Brown, Harrisville, N. Y.; Edwin Brown, Harrisville, N. Y.; Grace Shampine, Watertown, N. Y.; Helena Brown, Watertown, N. Y.; Minnie Brown, Harrisville, N. Y.; Earle Brown, Albany, N. Y.; Perry B. Hunter, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., Florence Haviland, Stockbridge, Mich.; Elmina Phillips, Syracuse, N. Y., and to Nettie Hunter, Carrie Hunter, Eva V. Hunter, Florence Hunter, Mary Ann Marlott, Alice C. Phillips, Virginia E. Phillips, George R. Phillips and Hamlin Phillips, whose several places of residence, if living, are unknown and cannot after reasonable diligence and diligent inquiry for that purpose be ascertained, and to the widows, surviving husbands, next of kin, heirs-at-law, legatees and devisees of such of the nine last named persons as may be deceased, if any, whose several names and places of residence are unknown and cannot after diligent inquiry for the purpose be ascertained:—heirs-at-law and next of kin and other persons interested in the probate of the last will and testament of Julia A. Broadwell, late of the city of Fulton, in the county of Oswego, New York, deceased, greetings:

Upon the petition of Arvin L. Rice of the city of Fulton, in the county of Oswego, New York, one of the executors named in a certain instrument in writing, purporting to be the last will and testament of said Julia A. Broadwell, late of the city of Fulton in the county of Oswego, and State of New York, deceased, and relating to both real and personal estate, praying to have said instrument in writing and the codicils thereto proved and recorded as a will of real and personal estate: You and each of you are hereby cited to show cause before the surrogate's court of the county of Oswego, at the surrogate's office in the city of Oswego, in the said county of Oswego, New York, on the 24th day of May, 1915, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, why said will should not be admitted to probate, and such of you as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your general guardian, if you have one; or if you have none, to appear and apply for one to be appointed; or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a special guardian will be appointed by the surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.

In Testimony Whereof, We have caused the seal of the surrogate's court of the county of Oswego to be hereunto affixed.

Witness, Hon. Clayton I. Miller, surrogate of our said county of Oswego, at the city of Oswego, in the said county, the 12th day of April, A. D., 1915.

(L. S.) H. E. KINMAN,
421-St Clerk of the Surrogate's Court

[B]NNER CLASS WILL GRADUATE

[Th]irty-Four Members Is the Total Number of Graduates In Local High School Class

Principal Wilcox announced five new members to the graduating class of 34 members which will be the largest class ever graduated from the high school.

The following is the complete list: Harold F. Caffrey, Leland T. Carner, Matthew B. Frawley, Harold N. Gillespie, W. Dempster Hill, Earl D. Hopkins, Ramon P. Lewis, Harry J. Lynch, Frederick B. Martin, Marshal G. Penfield, Bernard S. Reswick, Leland Root, Albert L. Sanford, Howard Shaff, Andrew M. Sharp, Edward K. Sullivan, Harold Thompson, James Harold Scholl, Eward Markey Pullen, Ethadne T. Austin, Margaret K. Clark, F. Eliza Hubbard, Rose M. King, Isabel Merriam, Eryma E. Paige, Lola B. Palmer, Amelia L. Rolfe, Lillian P. Simons, Jessie B, Wilcox, Muriel F. Winters, Esther M. Freeman, Kathleen M. Scanlon, Rose A. Walsh.

The first of the events connected with the graduating of the class of 1915 from the Fulton High school will be the prize speaking contest to be held in The Quirk on Friday, May 14.

The music for the occasion will be furnished by the High School Orchestra which is now under the instruction of Mrs. E. B. Owens.

The program containing the names of the participants and titles of selections follows:

The National Flag (adopted) ...... Beecher
Ramon P. Lewis
The Night of Mystery ...... Corelli
Leland T. Carner
Dollivar the Knight .... Anon
Harold F. Caffrey
The Empty Niche .... Anon
Howard Shaff
The Country Post Office .... Fisk
Jessie B. Wilcox
Maysie's Measles .... Burgess
Florence L. Moody
Coals of Fire .... Andrews
Lillian P. Simons
Mandy's Organ .... Higginson
Eryma E. Paige

The above are now under the instruction and training of Mrs. Lora White Kesler, teacher of elocution.

The first sale of tickets to the three commencement events—prize speaking, class night and commencement, will be held at 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon of this week when reserved seats may be selected.

ADVERTISED LETTERS

Men — Compo, George; Dawley, Herbert; Keller, Frank; Pearse, Frank Powelson, W. V. N.; Woods, W.

Women—Collins, Miss May; Kerszard, Miss Victoria; Stay, Norena; Balck, Mrs. A.; Clark, Mrs. Bard R.; Gilbert, Mrs. A. B.; Bilbert, Mrs. M. C.; Guiles, William; Reynolds, Mrs. Teo; Rowley, Mrs. Homer; Russell, Mrs. Della E.

The Glen Hatchery; Whiting Paper Co.; Porter & Co.; Herbetr Caugyona Kalcnik, Jimochuk; Botas, Yanaj; Aenmono, Nrocnumoi; Andro, Solowioff; Kukoiars, Ocnuieyrk; Maldovan, Klement; Renc, Maric; Mark, Ieonup; Toupkumr, Dominuy; Francesco, Bertocce.

Peter T. Conley, P.M.

MR. PECK IN HOSPITAL

The Rev. Charles L. Peck, whose illness dates back about one year, and who left the city recently to recuperate in Sandy Creek, has been removed to the Watertown hospital for special treatment. The popular pastor's many friends in Fulton hope for the speediest possible recovery.

New carload of Bowker's Fertilizers. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Best makes of Carriages. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Steer this way for the Insurance that spells peace of mind—our Automobile Accident and Liability Insurance.

The accident that generally occurs is the unavoidable one—but that does not stop the "hold up" suit that costs money to defend against—BUT our insurance protects you against property and personal damages and the company fights the case.

See us today for rates.

DAVID & MASON AGENCY
55 N. FIRST STREET

FULTON A. A. IS ORGANIZED

It's Tone is for Moral Uplift and Promotion of Athletics in General

The young business men and athletes of State Street M. E. church have organized themselves into a club for the promotion of their literary and athletic tastes and abilities. Their banner should be inscribed, "The Fulton Athletic Association," as it is under that name they propose to work, study and, last, but not least, play baseball.

A meeting of the new organization was held Monday night and another one will be held next Monday night, in the church, and thereafter meetings are scheduled for every other week. At the last meeting officers were chosen who will serve for three months and then a new set of men will be elected for another term of three months and so on. Joseph Johnson, Thomas Singleton, L. Thompson and Jesse Taylor, were elected president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer respectively. Walter Bryant is the sergeant-at-arms.

In order that the Fulton Athletic Association may attain the success it deserves, additional members are needed on the roster. That new names will be added seems to be a foregone conclusion, as already numerous applicants for membership are making inquiries—and no wonder, for it is well-known that the boys and young men of State Sstreet church know all about good times and how to make one feel at home in their social gatherings.

Another reason for the success of the new club is the small sum exacted as a membership fee, a sum that should not prove burdensome upon any candidate for honors.

Saturday afternoons have been left open by the baseball squad for challenges, and teams having open dates may address for games Manager Donald Allen of 409 South 6th st. An active season is predicted for the F. A. A. upon the diamond, as Manager Allen and Captain Taylor are stirring themselves to make their team one of the successes of Central New York.

Lawn Mower Hospital at Roy's Quick Shoe Repair, 110 Cayuga st. ad

LUCY MARSH, SINGER

Tonight's Concert in Oswego to Be Heard by Many Fultonians.

Tonight there will be a musical attraction at the State Armory, Oswego, of more than unusual merit, one which can easily be classed with the recent appearances here of the Russian Symphony Orchestra and Madame Schumann-Heink, the recital given by Miss Lucy Marsh, soprano, assisted by Miss Ingham; violinist, and Miss Zillah Halstead, accompanist. The program to be presented by Miss Marsh is one of varied beauty and it will be enjoyed by all. The recital will be the musical event of the spring and an affair which no person who loves the best in music can afford to miss. The program follows:

De Puis Le Jour (Louise) ...... Charpentier
(a) Lied der Braut .... Schumann
Nos. 1 and 2
(b) Zueignung .... Strauss
(c) Ein Traum .... Grieg
Violin solo, Deep River .... Taylor
Miss Ingham
(a) Sunshine Song .... Grieg
(b) Sacred Fire .... Russel
(a) Yesterday and Today .... Spross
(b) Memories .... Neidlinger
(c) Little Gray Dove .... Saar
(d) Sylve Lin .... Sinding
(e) A Birthday .... Woodman
Violin solo, Danse Tzigane .. Nacker
Miss Ingham
Printempts .... Stern

HANNIBAL MAN INTERESTED IN TREES

P. A. Willing of Hannibal is taking delight and interest in tree culture. Recently he set apart a fine, large piece of ground for the free use of public school pupils who desire to avail themselves of an opportunity to plant, cultivate and study trees.

The pupils of the Hannibal schools will begin at once under the supervision of an instructor in forestry from Syracuse University to set out trees furnished by the State.

FRAWLEY—TOOLEY

This afternoon at 1:30 o'clock at the Church of Immaculate Conception took place the marriage of Miss Queen ia Rose Tooley to Matthew Frawley of this place. Rev. John Lindsman officiated.

Mr. and Mrs. Frawley are well known in this vicinity and have a host of friends who wish them happiness and prosperity.

Mrs. Frawley was superintendent of public schools in Osemgo county. Mr. Frawley is a prosperous young farmer and owns a farm in Palermo where they will make their home.

WEATHER FORECAST

Partly cloudy tonight and Thursday.

Community Notes

Mrs. A. D. Clark, S. 4th st., left yesterday for Madison, Misconsin, where she will be the guest of friends and relatives for the month.

* * *

Local Suffrage workers will attend the gathering of Oswego and Onondaga suffrage women at the Kanatenah Club in Syracuse, May 15.

* * *

Charles Anderson of West 1st st. spent Sunday in Syracuse.

* * *

Mrs. Charles Boen of Syracuse was in the city Tuesday to attend the funeral of Edward C. Whitaker.

* * *

Mrs. John Finley of West 3d st. spent Tuesday with Syracuse friends.

* * *

The Modern Woodmen of America will entertain its members this evening by giving a dinner.

* * *

Mrs. William Fuller of Syracuse has been the guest of Mrs. F. E. Goodjon, Buffalo st.

* * *

Miss Ruth Brackett of Hannibal has been spending a few weeks with relatives in the city.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Palmer of Oneida st., have been entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Harry V. Palmer of Syracuse.

* * *

C. Brannigan of Hoboken is in the city called here by the death of his mother, Mrs. Woods, of West 4th st.

* * *

Mrs. Orin Bogardus entertained the Foreign Missionary Society of State st. church this afternoon at her home in S. 4th st.

* * *

N. L. Whitaker left Monday for Pittsburg where he will spend a few days on business. Mr. Whitaker expects to return to this city Friday.

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Hereafter the basis of adjustment will be:

In Ford sizes, plain tread, 6,000 miles; Kant Slip, 7,500 miles. All other sizes, plain tread, 5,000 miles; Kant Slip tread, 6,000 miles.

The word "adjust" is merely figurative, because in 1914 the total adjustment in Kelly-Springfield Tires for the whole United States was less than 1%. You get this unequalled service in uninterrupted mileage—not adjustment.

Before buying some other tire at a lower price analyze the basis of adjustment offered by the other maker—see what you really do get for less money.

Made to Make Good

Kelly-Springfield
Tires are built up to a standard—not down to a price

Distributors
THE OLMSTEAD COMPANY, Inc.
SYRACUSE, N. Y.

For Sale in Fulton by
F. D. VAN WAGENEN, Inc.

Colored Top Shoes

Are Correct Style for Spring and Summer

A Very Pleasing Assortment of the Most Popular Colors at Reasonable Prices

HERE ARE A FEW SPECIALS IN COLORED TOPS

Ladies' $5.00 Sand Color Top Patent Kid Shoes, button or lace	$3.95
Ladies' $4.00 Patent and Gun Metal, Sand and Putty Color Tops	$3.45
Ladies' $3.00 Patent and Gun Metal, Putty Color Top Shoes, button or lace	$2.29
Ladies' $4.00 Patent and Gun Metal Pumps, Putty Color Tops	$3.45

Visit our new store and see how well equipped we are to shoe your whole family

STRANAHAN & LOVE
15 E. First St., Fulton Formerly occupied by Morton & Shattuck

PALERMO

Chester Jewett, an old resident of town, is confined to the house by illness.

Mrs. John Bough has returned home from a two weeks' stay with friends at Caughdenoy.

G. E. Foster of Fulton spent Monday here.

Mrs. F. M. Hill of Phoenix is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Downs.

Rev. David Bland of Havana, Cuba, has been a recent visitor of his sister, Mrs. Charles Wetmore.

Matthe Frawley spent the week-end at Syracuse.

Mrs. Oscar Coville spent Wednesday and Thursday with Mrs. Fred Parsons.

Mrs. Belle Wheaton of Gilbert's Mill spent part of last week visiting friends here.

Mrs. John Bough was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. George Downs Monday.

Mrs. John Spencer of Fulton was a recent visitor at the home of her sister, Mrs. William Hodges.

Miss Blanche Collins has gone to spend several weeks with her sister, Mrs. Allen Dashman of Martville.

WHITCOMB

Mrs. John Lockwood entertained the Ladies' Birthday Club on Thursday of last week.

Ernest and Lillian Davis spent a few days with their sister, Mrs. E. Luke of Baldwinsvilee.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Davis were recent guests at W. Russels' of Jacksonville.

Mrs. Walter P. Reynolds set an incubator with 106 eggs and hatched 91 perfect chickens. Mrs. Reynolds evidnetally knows how to run an incubator. better than most people.

Miss May Whitcomb entertained guests from Fulton recently.

FREDERICK I. BAKER

Frederick I. Baker, 71, died last night at the home of his son, Fred Baker, 500 South 1st st., with whom he recently made his home.

Surviving are three sons, A. M. Baker and Eugene Baker, of Bennington, Vt., and Fred G., of this city, and one sister, Gertrude E. Baker, of Fort Ann.

Baled Hay, Straw and Shavings. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Free Demonstration

of The Sweeper Vac, 3 in one combination, will be given in your homes. Phone, call or write Mr. Rogers, Hotel Lewis.

Two men, hustlers, wanted to work on commission.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Thi establishment is now in its new quarters at

123½ CAYUGA STREET

and is prepared to continue its good service to all its patrons

D. RICHARDSON
Ladies'—Tailor—Gentlemen's
Dry Cleaning, Repairing, Dyeing

REALTY TRANSFERS

Joseph Masso has sold property at 7th and Seneca sts., Fulton, to Ambrose Pollock.

The Kidder Sanitarium has sold property at East 8th and Church sts. to F. E. Sweetland.

Henny Kinnie, of Volney, has sold property in Palermo to Edwin Langshore.

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Bogue's, 61 First st. adv

NOTICE OF MEETING

Notice is Hereby Given, pursuant to Sections 30 and 31 of the General City Law, that I have fixed Friday, May 7, 1915, at 8:15 P.M., at the City Hall in the City of Fulton, N. Y., as the time and place of hearing on Senate Bill No. 1943, entitled "An Act to Amend the Charter of the City of Fulton Generally."

At said time and place any person interested in said Bill will be given an opportunity to be heard.

Dated at Fulton, N. Y., May 4, 1915

FRANK E. FOX,
Mayor

EGG PRESERVER
by the qt. or gal. at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 73

HAPPY HOUR THEATRE
TODAY

"SHADOWS OF A GREAT CITY"
in Five Reels with Thomas Jefferson and Adelaide Thurston

"The Mysterious Contragraw" featuring an Aeroplane

Dips by Miss Marie Walcamp and others.

Overland Model 81

$795 f.o.b. Factory

VANWAGENEN, Inc. Agents

THE QUIRK
Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TO-DAY
Hall Caine's Superb Love Story
8 parts "THE CHRISTIAN"
Featuring Edith Storey and Earle Williams
Balcony, 5c; Main Floor, 10c

THURSDAY
Dorothy Donnelly in
"THE THIEF"
Daniel Frohman's N. Y. Lyceum Theatre Success

FRIDAY
Charles Richman in
"THE IDLER"

SATURDAY
"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"
with Claire Whitney and Stuart Holmes

Evening Times Subscribers are requested to advise this office if the carrier boy fails to deliver paper properly and with regularity.

Hand or Phone in Your Miscellaneous Want Ad copy for The Evening Times as early in the day as possible to insure insertion the same day.

No ads will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

For Sale—Ayles homestead and furniture, corner E. Broadway and 3d. W. J. Ayles will be on premises May 8, 10 to 12 a.m. and 1 to 5 p.m., to show furniture. G. D. Shaw, Agt. 117c

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Lost—A brindle bull dog, white breast. Answers to name of Dixie. Reward if returned to 1012 Emery st. Phone 1511. tf

Clark Irish Harp—Will sell cheap; brand new. Just the thing for a home. Address Z., Evening Times office. tf.

Found—Sum of money, Saturday night. Owner may have property by addressing Ernest Arnold, Fulton, R. D. 8. 117c

Girl Wanted—General housework on farm. Mrs. Stanley Holmes, Phoenix, R. D. 2. Phone 5621. 118

Lost—Kitten, white with blue eyes; answers to name of Muttie. Return to Virginia Spencer, 302 Academy. 118

Rooms to Rent.—Near Nestle Food. 554 S. 6th st. 117c

For Sale—Baby's bassinet; also toilet basket. 309 Pratt st. tf

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCully, 202 S. 3d st. tf

To Rent—5 rooms, upper flat. 412 Erie st. 122c

Rooms to Rent.—with or without board. 220 West 1st st., north. 117c

To Rent—2 apartments. Phone 3288. 120

OSWEGO NEWS

A number of men employed in the car department of the New York Central railroad shops were laid off Monday night. It is expected that they will be employed next month. There is plenty of work and a demand for rolling stock to handle grain at Buffalo, where boats are sometimes detained for a week discharging their cargoes because of congestion in the New York Central elevators, it is said, but the company cuts down the appropriation for shop work and the rilling stock has to wait until the appropriations are more liberal.

Monday four hundred men were laid off at the West Albany shops and it is said that at almost every junction point a reduction of the shop forces has followed that order.

* * *

Citations have been issued returnable June 7th in the estate of Sarah M. P[illegible], of [illegible], in which a contest has developed over the final settlement.

James R. Kelly, former Democratic Alderman of the Fourth ward, has been appointed assistant lockmaster on the barge canal at Schenectady and has left to accept his new position.

FINAL ACCOUNTING

Citations on a final accounting in the estate of Walter Boonsteel were issued yesterday, returnable June 7th. He left $379.45, of which $281 has been applied on debts. There are also claims of about $1,100 outstanding, including one of $225 by Louise McRae, and $378 by his father.

Chairs re-seated—cane, splint or leather; upholstering at reasonable prices. Wm. Lytle, 30[illegible] Pine st., Fulton. [illegible]

Man of Science to Lecture Upon Open-Air Public Schools

James Maddox, professor of science at Oswego Normal school, will deliver a lecture on "Tuberculosis and the Prevention of It," Thursday afternoon in the Public Library under the auspices of the Fulton Open-air school committee. Mr. Maddox is an interesting and fluent speaker, and he will illustrate his talk with stereopticon views, showing conditions which breed the dread disease and conditions which are to be desired. The interiors of various homes will be shown, the work of the nurses and the breeding places of the tubercular germs.

Admission to the lecture will be free and the general public is invited. It is expected that those who have children in the public schools here will make a special effort to attend. The lecture is one of a series planned by the Committee which will endeavor to impress the people of the city with the necessity of combating this disease at all times with every means possible. The Open-air committee is doing a great work here with the school, and its object in giving these free lectures is a commendable one. The lecture Thursday will begin at 8:15 in the evening.

PEACE PRAYER OF CARDINAL

Instructions Issued for Its Use During This Month—Decree of Pope

The following announcement regarding prayers by Roman Catholics for a cessation of the war in Europe, has been issued by the Catholics of the Diocese of New York by direction of Cardinal Farley, through decree of the Pope:

"By decree, dated April 9th, 1915, our Holy Father, Pope Benedict XV., has directed that the following prayer for peace, which was said on last Passion Sunday, be recited every day in all the churches and chapels of the world during the May devotions:

Prayer

Dismayed by the horrors of a war which is bringing ruin to people and nations, we turn, O, Jesus, to Thy most loving heart as to our last hope. O, God of Mercy, with tears we invoke Thee to end this fearful scourge. O, King of Peace, we humbly implore the peace for which we long. From Thy sacred heart Thou didst shed forth over the world divine charity, so that discord might end and love alone might reign among men. In this hour, made terrible with burning hate, with bloodshed and with slaughter, once more may Thy divine heart be moved to pity. Pity the countless mothers in anguish for the fate of their sons. Pity the numberless families now bereaved of their fathers. Pity Europe, over which broods such havoc and disaster. Do Thou inspire rulers and people with counsels of meekness. Do Thou heal the discords that tear the nations asunder. Thou who didst shed Thy Precious blood that they might live as brothers, bring men together once more in loving harmony. And as once before the cry of Apostle Peter "Save us, Lord; we perish." Thou didst answer with words of mercy, and didst still the raging waves, so now deign to hear our trustful prayer and give back to the world peace and tranquility. And do Thou, O, Most Holy Virgin, as in other times of sore distress, be now our help, our protection, and our safeguard. Amen.

"An indulgence of 300 days may be obtained once in the day, and a plenary indulgence may be obtained in the customary form of the Church by the faithful who have taken part for not less than twenty days in the recitation of the above prayer.

TRIAL DAY MAY BE SETTLED TOMORROW

The condition of the calendar of the Court of Claims in Syracuse makes it apparent that the Battle Island Pulp and Paper Company's claim will not be reach for some time. However, it will be taken up on Thursday and a date definitely set for the trial.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

"HIT THE SIGN, KID!"

Swatfester Who Does it Will Get an Overland Car.

When the curtain was raised on the 1915 National League season on Wednesday at the Polo grounds, ball fans and players were treated to a new one. Out in left field there flares a forty-foot sign proclaiming that the first New York player who hits it with fly ball is to be presented with a new Overland car.

The Overland dealer in the metropolis is the man who hit on this plan to stimulate the New York players in their "swatfests." Hit 'em out" will be changed from now on to "Hit that sign, kid," by the rabid rooters.

The distance of the big sign from the home plate is 394 feet, and there is ever likelihood of one of New York's big hitters pulling down the Overland car which is offered.

Before deciding on this move, Mr. Silver wrote the baseball writers on the New York dailies asking their advice on the matter, and they are of the opinion that the offer is a good sporting proposition. As one of the scribes put it: "It might be pulled right off the reel, and again it may drag along for quite a period."

JUDGE VANN IS HEARING CLAIMS

Judge Irving G. Vann, as referee, is hearing claims at Syracuse against the State for alleged damages from the barge canal construction done to property along the Seneca river at Baldwinsville. The Marvin claim was the first taken up. This claim is for $150,000.

The next scheduled for hearing is that for $200,000 presented by the Seneca River Power Company at Baldwinsville. Following this claim those from Seneca Falls will be considered.

Cream Separators at cost. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

EYESIGHT TROUBLE YOU ?

We make a Specialty in EYESIGHT TESTING SPECTACLES and EYE GLASS ADJUSTING

Wm. C. Morgan
Jeweler & Optometrist
Fulton, N. Y.

GAVE FRIENDS FAREWELL FEAST

Joseph Newton Has Accepted a Position at Augusta, Maine, As Supt. of Paper Co.

Last night at the Hotel Royal a sumptuous fish dinner was served to about fifty guests of Joseph Newton, Superintendent of the Granby Puly & Paper Company. The occasion of the dinner was in the nature of a farewell feast to many close friends of Superintendent Newton who will shortly leave the employ of the Granby company to take a position as general superintendnt of the Cushnoc Paper Company of Augusta, Maine.

Mr. Newton is well known in Fulton, having been born here, receiving his education in the public schools and at an early age entered the employ of G. P. Wells who owned the largest pulp mill in Fulton at that time. He also worked in the worsted mills and the Victoria Pulp and Paper Co., then sought a position as cutter boy in the Granby Pulp and Paper Co. Through steady application to business Newton was advanced successively from cutter boy to back tender then to machine tender and finally to superintendent, which position he held for fifteen years.

Mr. Newton while being a member of the Encampment of Canton I. O. O. F. endeared himself to all his comrades and became a leader among them. Shortly before Fulton became a city Newton was elected town collector which office he held with credit. He also was alderman of the 6th ward during 1910, 11, 12, 13 and supervisor of the 1st and 2d wards for one term. At the dinner many good wishes were expressed, all tending to show how well the retiring superintendent stood in the estimation of those under his supervision and the many close personal friends who were present expressed a keen regret at his leaving Fulton.

Mr. Newton will leave Fulton about the middle of the month and accept a position of increased responsibility, having full control over about 200 workmen in the Cushnoc Company, which manufacturers a high grade of pulp and paper for which special skill and years of practical experience is required. Those who are ecquainted with Superintendent Newton know that he will be as successful in his new position as he was in the one he is leaving and all join in wishing him good luck.

INCUBATOR EXPLODED; L. M. LOVE'S LOSS

Charles Love of the firm of Stranahan & Love, was called to Mexico yesterday by a fire and explosion at the home of his father, L. M. Love, who is well-known in this city. An egg incubator in the cellar of the house exploded Monday at midnight and the ensuing fire completely gutted the house. The occupants of the house were thrown into a state of paic by the terrific explosion and some were badly burned in making their escape from the dwelling. Prompt action by the fire department saved two residences which adjoin the Love home, but the fire raged so fiercely that Mr. Love's residence was completely destroyed.

The loss is estimated at $5,5000 and Mr. Love carried only $2,000 insurance. Nothing of value in the house was saved except small articles which the inmates were able to pick up as they escaped.

MOCK TRIAL SCHEDULED

A mock trial will be held Friday evening, May 7th, at the State street M. E. church, at 8 o'clock, by the Brotherhood classes of the First and State streets M. E. churches.

Mad at Paint

25c a gallon for paint is about $2.50 on the average job, and lots of men waited last year for that; but they didn't reckon: they got mad; wouldn't pay it.

There are times to get mad and refuse to pay: but when one's property needs protecting is no time to get mad and not paint.

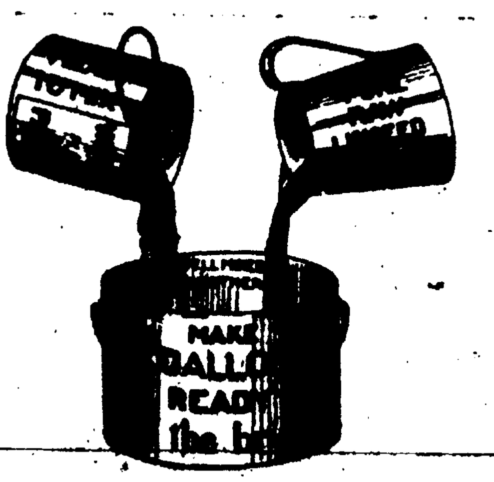
Besides, it costs more to get mad and wait than to paint.

Getting mad doesn't do any good to your property; paint does it good by keeping out water; no water no rot; no paint, some water and rot; and a little rot is more than enough to make a man liberal towards his painter and paint.

Paint costs not a cent. All the paint in the world, so long as it keeps out water, costs not a cent.

DEVOE

[illegible] P. SMITH Co. sell it



62 years of successful paint making is the history of Wadsworth Paint Works of Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE WADSWORTH IDEA

A gallon of Wadsworth Double-Thick Paint, a gallon of Pure Linseed Oil; stir the two together and what is the result?

Two gallons of liquid Paint ready for the brush at a saving of at least—

50c per gallon.

We want you to try Wadsworth Double-Thick Paint on at least one of your buildings, and compare the difference in cost between Wadsworth and the paint you used before, therefore, we will send you a trial order at a special price.

PEOPLE'S HARDWARE CO., Inc.

The Big Paint Distributors of Fulton

PALMER'S SUIT IN FED. COURT

Judge Ray Refuses to Discontinue Second Action to Permit Transfer

Utica, Wednesday. — Edwin F. Palmer of Fulton will have to try his damage suit against the D. L. & W. Railroad in the Federal Court, according to an opinion filed by U. S. Judge Ray in the court at Utica yesterday. The court refuses to discontinue the United States Court action, so that Mr. Palmer may try another action of the same sort in the State Supreme Court. The motion to discontinue was made by Piper & Pendergast of Fulton, representing Mr. Palmer, and was opposed by Lawyer Charles V. Byren of Syracuse.

Mr. Palmer brought suit in the State court for $5,000. Since the D. L. & W. is a Pennsylvania corporation, it got the suit transferred to the Federal Court. Then Mr. Palmer's lawyers started another suit in the State court, this time putting the damages at $2,950, which would bring the suit in the jurisdiction of the State court. Having done this, they made a motion to discontinue the Federal Court suit.

In his 10-page opinion Judge Ray denies the motion, unless the attorneys will stipulate to discontinue the second action in the State court and not to bring another action in any court. That would leave the plaintiff without any suit at all. He says that the suit can be quickly tried in Syracuse at the present term, or in the June term. The suit was first brought October 26, 1914, for personal injuries.

"The question is will this court lend itself to practices and evasions of the law of this kind," says Judge Ray. "It is useless for the plaintiff to contend that there was an error or mistake in demanding judgment, or in alleging amount of damages sustained. * * This court ought not to lend itself in any way to aid in a proceeding or a cause of a procedure adopted by the plaintiff for the express purpose of ousting this court of jurisdiction and in effect remanding the cause to the state court for trial through the guise of another action for the same cause. Such a subterfuge for [illegible]ing about a remand of a cause [illegible]wise impossible, ought not to [illegible] encouraged or sanctioned. * * * [illegible]dinarily a plaintiff should have the [illegible] to discontinue his action, but when it is done not for the purpose of forwarding justice but for the purpose of defeating justice and prolonging litigation and depriving the defendant of a substantial right, the court ought to put its face against it. * * * To grant this motion would operate as a fraud upon the rights of the defendant."

Buying Coal in May

Forestalls trouble and expense later in the year.

Let Us Fill That Bin at May Prices

THOMAS H. MARVIN
Broadway Coal Dealer

Tires, Supplies, everything for the Bicycle at Rogue's, 61 First st.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

THE ONYX STORE announces its Formal Spring Opening at 105 E. First St., Fulton, N.Y. on Saturday, May Eighth, Nineteen fifteen

You and Your Friends are Cordially Invited.

SOUVENIRS

Orchestra in evening.

New and Appetizing Dishes and Fountain Dainties.

Our Gloversville $25,000 Stock at 50c on the Dollar

Will be on sale tomorrow (Thursday) in our large basement. Take advantage of the hundreds of articles which we are selling for less than wholesale cost just at the beginning of the season.

Why pay more when you can buy it at Katz's for less?

The more you buy—the more you save.

Come and look around—you are welcome to look as to buy.

M. KATZ & CO.

"The Store that Makes Good."

Bowser Saves the Family

But the Cook Is Ungrateful and Quits Her Job.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mr. Bowser is not eccentric.

He is not irresponsible.

He has bought burglar alarms.

He has invested in nine kinds of fire escapes.

He has kept cows and pigs and chickens.

He has bought little less than a carload of patent cures.

He has, according to his diagnosis, had every ailment on the list of human ailments.

All this and a heap more, and yet he is not far ahead of the average husband.

It is that every new idea looks good to him, and he wants to be helping to shove the old world along.

The other afternoon as he sat in his office a sudden thought made him start and turn pale. He didn't wait two minutes before taking action. He rushed downstairs, rushed into a drugstore, rushed home.

"LET ME DRAW A PICTURE OF A MICROBE."

Mrs. Bowser noted his excited look and the package under his arm and was at the door to exclaim:

"If anything has happened why didn't you telephone me? What is wrong, and what have you got there? Don't keep me in suspense!"

"Don't ask me any questions now," he replied as he dropped his hat on the floor and looked around like a man in danger.

"Is anything wrong—are you sick?" she anxiously demanded.

"Don't say a word—not a word, and don't bother me for ten minutes. I hope I'm in time to avert the danger!"

She turned pale and fell into a chair, and he hurriedly broke the string securing the package, seized the three quart bottles which comprised its contents and rushed upstairs, down the back stairs, down into the basement and up again. A strange, disagreeable odor followed him as he hustled around. By the time he had returned to the sitting room Mrs. Bowser had recovered sufficiently to ask:

"Mr. Bowser, what on earth are you doing, and what in the name of goodness is that stuff?"

"What have I been doing? Saving our lives, Mrs. Bowser—saving our lives and every one under this roof."

"Why, I didn't know our lives were in danger."

"Of course not. If the house was on fire from top to bottom and the firemen pitching our furniture out of the windows, you might possibly realize the fact, but it has never struck you that death silently lurks in every room in this house."

"How you talk, Mr. Bowser! What has been the danger hanging over us?"

"Microbes, Mrs. Bowser!" he whispered as he sat down and wiped his heated brow. "Microbes and bacteria—millions of 'em!"

"It can't be!" she replied.

"Can't it! You know nothing whatever about it. I do, of course, but, having so many other things to attend to, this one slipped my mind until today."

"But what causes that terrible odor?"

"Nothing terrible about it, as I see. On the contrary, I rather like it. It is the odor of disinfectants, Mrs. Bowser—the odor of something which has no doubt saved our lives."

"How?"

"By killing off the microbes and bacteria, which would soon have entered our systems and produced terrible illness, if not death."

"Well, I suppose you know best," she said as she opened a window to let a yard or two of the carbolic smell dodge out.

"Certainly I do, certainly. All husbands do. Mrs. Bowser, let me draw you a picture of a microbe. You can then realize the danger which menaced us."

He drew a picture of that insect with his pencil, and as she surveyed it in surprise and disgust he continued:

"Nice thing to have about forty of those birds cantering around through your system, eh?"

"Where do they come from?"

"Sewer gas. By this time tomorrow the house would have swarmed with them, and nothing on earth could have saved us from typhoid fever or diphtheria. If the microbe was the only thing to look out for I shouldn't have been so anxious, but there is the bacteria."

"What's that?"

"Here is a picture of him. Comes in the same way, and his mission is to eat out the lungs. It is calculated that 2,000 of them will eat out the strongest man's lungs in a month."

"And they were in this house?"

"Yes, and ready to be absorbed into our systems. Not only ready, but anxious."

"You are sure you don't mean cockroaches? I saw two under the kitchen sink yesterday and was going to ask you to get some powdered borax."

"Mrs. Bowser," he began, as he stood up, "Are you growing soft in the top of your head? Do I know a Bengal tiger from a woodchuck?"

"I—I suppose so."

"But I don't know a microbe or a bacteria from a cockroach," he thundered.

"But I have never heard you speak of them before, and I—I"—

"Do you suppose that I or any other husband sits down and tells his wife all he knows?" he shouted. "Because I haven't told you that a jack rabbit's legs have three toes is that any reason why I haven't known it for forty years?"

"But this is medical science, isn't it?" she softly protested.

"And suppose it is. Do you suppose I've gone sloshing around all these years with nothing but a recipe for making soft soap in my head?"

She was silent, and after striding up and down the room a few times he halted before her and continued:

"A wife isn't expected to know these things, of course, but I'd be accounted a pretty husband and father and member of a scientific club if I didn't know all about microbes and bacteria."

"But that picture of a bacteria looks like a lobster," she persisted.

"Lobster! Looks like a lobster, does it? Very well, Mrs. Bowser, this discussion will end right here. It is plain enough that you haven't the necessary knowledge to appreciate it!"

"But don't you"—

"Never you mind, Mrs. Bowser. Let it drop right here. Is supper ready?"

The odor was so strong in the dining room that the butter tasted of it, and after supper the cook called Mrs. Bowser into the kitchen to ask:

"Is it going to be like this all the time?"

"Oh, no. Mr. Bowser had to kill off all the microbes and bacteria, you see."

"What's them?"

"He'll have to come in and explain."

"No need of it, ma'am, for my bundle is all made up, and I'm goin'. A man who'll drag dead cats through his own house would cheat a poor girl out of her wages at the end of a month. Microbes and bacteria, eh! I don't believe it. Let him show them to me up in the zoological gardens."

When Mrs. Bowser told Mr. Bowser what had occurred he bristled up, got red in the face and exclaimed:

"I see how it is. You couldn't carry your point with me, and so you went out and upset the girl. Mrs. Bowser, you are treading on dangerous ground. A husband may be a worm, but if that worm is stepped on too often he turns!"

And he clapped on his hat and walked over to his family drug store, and after peering into the window and seeing that the druggist was alone, he entered and asked:

"Doc, are you protected from microbes and bacteria here?"

"Thoroughly," was the reply.

"What do you use?"

"Why, every time you come in and go out I sprinkle the floor after you with catnip tea."

Mr. Bowser turned and went out into the night and leaned up against a fence, and in his inmost soul realized that he was a man with plenty of bacteria and microbes, but without a human friend.

And an owl lighted on a nearby telephone pole and hooted three hoots.

Force of Habit.

"See here, boss, I ordered tripe and beans with coffee, and the waitress has brought me a lettuce sandwich and a cup of weak tea."

"You must excuse her, sir. All due to absentmindedness. She's a former society girl, and she can't grasp the idea that a quick lunch is not a function."—Exchange.

Prudent Steering.

"Law, pa, what are you sneaking around the hall at this time of night with your shoes off?"

"Sh, sh, son! I don't want to run into the war zone."—Baltimore American.

Swollen.

Tramp—Could you spare me one of your husband's old hats, mum?

Woman—They would be too large for you. My husband is an actor.—Puck.

Looked New to Him.

Randolph—Is that Buxton's new girl with him?

Sylvester—Oh, no. That's just one of his old ones painted over.—Judge.

No Limit at All.

There's a time to work,
And a time to shirk,
And a time to go to school;
There's a time to fight—
When you're in the right—
And a time you'd best keep cool;
And a time to smoke,
And a time to joke,
And a time to take a chance,
But in this mad day,
So the folks all say,
It is always time to dance.
—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Nap Lajoie, Connie Mack's Cleanup Hitter.

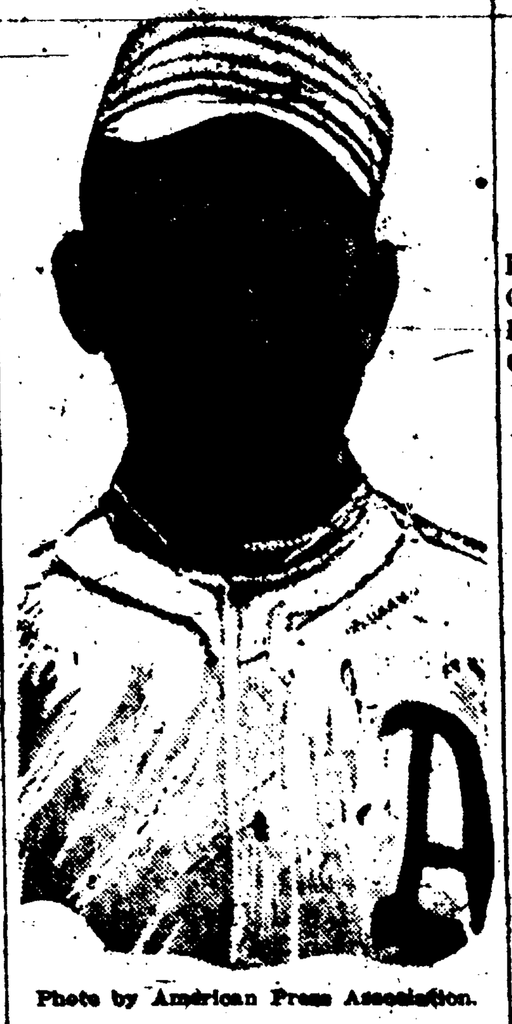

Photo by American Press Association.

Napoleon Lajoie, who plays second base on Connie Mack's reorganized Athletics, has fourth place in the batting order—the cleanup position. That was Frank Baker's old place, and he was mighty with the club. So far Lajoie has not been hitting up to his form, and the fans are disappointed. Doubtless the big Frenchman has slowed up a bit, but he is a natural hitter and before the season has gone far will likely get busy with his war club. Lajoie first broke into the big league as a member of the Philadelphia Nationals. That was away back in 1896, and since then he has been one of the most consistent heavy batters in the game. As a guardian of second base Lajoie has few superiors.

An Armless Golf Player.

In all probability the unique competitor in sports is Thomas McAuliffe, a Buffalo youth twenty-two years old, who, despite the misfortune of being armless, is nevertheless regarded as a golfer of no mean ability, says the New York Times. He lost his arms on Sept. 22, 1902, at the age of nine years, in a railroad accident.

In playing golf he holds the club between his cheek and shoulder and with the stick in this position has gone around the links of the Buffalo Country club in 108 strokes, a truly remarkable feat, considering the fact that 78 is bogy here. The Buffalo club's course is one of the best bunkered and trapped in the country.

With the combined swing and jerk of the body and shoulder he is able to give the ball an effective stroke. Both in 1912 and 1913 he won the second flight cup in the caddies' tournament and will attempt to win it again this year, for the third time. With driver, brassie, cleek or midiron he can drive 100 yards and about seventy-five yards with a mashie. At a distance of fifty yards or less he is remarkably accurate with the mashie and is almost sure to putt within a club's length of the hole.

Baseball For Chinese.

Under the patronage of the Chinese government and with the personal assistance of Wu Ting Fang, former Chinese ambassador to the United States, a baseball team of American born Chinese recently sailed from Honolulu on the steamer Mongolia for Shanghai by way of the Philippines and Japan. Their expenses while in China will be met by the Chinese government. The team will tour the principal cities of the interior with the object of introducing American athletics for the physical improvement of the youth of China.

Moriarty Picks Alexander.

George Moriarty, the Tiger third baseman, is the latest member of the Alexander Is the Best Pitcher In the World club. George says that he has hit against them all, but that Alexander the Great has it on the bunch when it comes to speed, control, curves and the rest of the twirling stuff.

Gymnasium For Creighton.

Creighton university of Omaha is about to erect a new gymnasium which will cost $175,000 and include swimming pool, handball court, basketball floor, roof garden, dressing room, quarters for indoor football workouts, shower baths and, in fact, all modern conveniences.

Indorses Baseball.

Dr. R. Tait McKenzie, physical director of the University of Pennsylvania, is a strong advocate of baseball. He says it is one of the best possible means for furthering the physical development of the young undergraduate.

Cricketers Bar Shirkers.

The London cricket clubs have decided to carry on the game this summer in spite of the war. Their teams will be composed of players not eligible for service, all the clubs agreeing that no place should be found for the shirker in any of this elevens.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS; STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Brooklyn.
New York at Philadelphia.
St. Louis at Pittsburgh.
Cincinnati at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Pittsburgh, 4; St. Louis, 3.
Brooklyn-Boston (rain).
Philadelphia-New York (rain).
Chicago-Cincinnati (wet grounds).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	12	4	.750
Chicago	11	6	.647
Boston	8	7	.533
Cincinnati	9	8	.529
St. Louis	9	11	.450
Brooklyn	7	10	.412
Pittsburgh	7	11	.389
New York	4	10	.286

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Washington at Boston.
Philadelphia at New York.
Chicago at Cleveland.
Detroit at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

Detroit, 3; St. Louis, 1.
Boston, 2; Washington, 0.
New York-Philadelphia (rain).
Cleveland-Chicago (cold).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
New York	10	4	.714
Detroit	13	6	.684
Chicago	11	8	.579
Washington	8	7	.533
Boston	6	6	.500
Cleveland	8	10	.444
Philadelphia	4	11	.267
St. Louis	5	14	.263

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Brooklyn.
Pittsburgh at Newark.
Chicago at Baltimore.
Kansas City at Buffalo.

Results Yesterday

Baltimore, 3; Chicago, 2.
Brooklyn-St. Louis (rain).
Newark-Pittsburgh (rain).
Buffalo-Kansas City (cold).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Chicago	12	6	.667
Pittsburgh	11	8	.579
Newark	11	8	.579
Brooklyn	10	8	.556
Kansas City	9	9	.500
St. Louis	7	10	.412
Baltimore	8	12	.400
Buffalo	6	13	.316

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Toronto at Jersey City.
Buffalo at Newark.
Rochester at Providence.
Montreal at Richmond.

Results Yesterday

Providence, 7; Rochester, 1.
Richmond, 10; Montreal, 6.
Jersey City-Toronto (wet grounds).
Newark-Buffalo (rain).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	4	1	.800
Jersey City	3	1	.750
Richmond	4	2	.667
Toronto	2	3	.400
Newark	2	3	.400
Buffalo	2	3	.400
Montreal	2	4	.333
Rochester	1	3	.250

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

Milwaukee at St. Paul—postponed, cold weather.

Kansas City at Minneapolis—Postponed, cold weather.

At Indianapolis—	R.	H.	E.
Columbus	2	10	1
Indianapolis	3	5	2

Batteries—Curtis and Coleman; Schardt, Willis and Blackburn.

At Louisville—	R.	H.	E.
Cleveland	3	6	5
Louisville	4	6	3

Batteries—Kahler and Deroght; Perry, Ellis and Crossin.

Big Sale of Bicycles now on at Bogue's, 61 First st.

Gasoline, Oils and Greases. VanWagenen, Inc. advl22

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

Ah! The Invigorating Whiff of the Pine Forest!

How it clears the throat and head of its mucous ailments. It is this spirit of Newness and Vigor from the health-giving Piney Forests brought back by Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey. Antiseptic and healing. Buy a bottle today. All Druggists, 25c.

Electric Bitters a Spring Tonic.

Did You Cut the Coupon?

Don't wait until it's too late to purchase appliances at greatly reduced prices.

A $5.00 ELECTRIC GRILL for $3.90
A $5.00 HEATING PAD for $4.00
12-inch ELECTRIC FAN for $14.50
16-inch ELECTRIC FAN for $19.50
THE EL-GLOSTOVE for.....$2.19

This Sale closes Saturday P.M.

Come in and see for yourself.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

ONEIDA STREET Phone 144

THE CHRISTIAN

Today's attraction at The Quirk theatre will be the Vitagraph Company's production of Hall Caine's superb love story, "The Christian," in eight parts and 500 scenes. An all star cast of Vitgraph players is headed by Miss Edith Storey and Mr. Earle Williams. More than 3,000 people are seen in the picture, which at once can be considered as the best acting picture ever made, as well as the most elaborate and careful presentation of any photoplay now before the public.

"The Christian," as a novel was a great success. Later, it was dramatized and it brought fame and wealth to Miss Viola Allen. Its present form is its best, inasmuch as the talky dialogue of the novel and drama have been eliminated and the many scenes which were omitted in the stage version, are utilized in the picturized version. It is a superb production of a wonderful story, and having been made by the justly celebrated Vitagraph Company, who provided itsb est players and the most sumptuous production they could conceive, it becomes a photoplay masterpiece.

Miss Edith Storey assumes the difficult role of Glory Quayle, investing it with a youthful abandon and a mature understanding seemingly impossible to register on the screen. Her work is marvelous, as evinced by the widespread commendation which her work has invariably received. She is "The Bernhardt of the Screen," and no finer selection could have been made for the great part. Her principal co-worker is Mr. Earle Williams, who portrays John Storm in a masterful manner, giving the character a human touch which is most appealing. Others in this wonderful cast are Charles Kent, James Lackaye, James Morrison, Harry S. Northrup, Donald Hall, Edward Kimball, J. W. Sambrooke, Miss Jane Fearnley, Miss Alberta Gallatin and Miss Carlotta de Felice.

Big Sale of Bicycles now on at Bogue's, 61 First st.

PUPILS WANTED IN VOCAL INSTRUCTION

Inquire

FRANC LALONDE

280 SENECA STREET

We Want Your

ELECTRICAL WORK

ALL SORTS OF SUPPLIES AND WORK WILL BE DONE IN A WORKMAN-LIKE MANNER.

D. B. KANE

Phone 1598 118 Oneida St.

M. KATRIB

Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing, Repairing. Ladies and Gents Tailor. All Work Guaranteed. Free Delivery

Phone 3353 21 1-2 So. Second st.

Up-to-Date Tailoring

in all its branches. Let me convince you by giving me a trial. The slogan

"TRADE AT HOME"

is good, but why not practice what you preach?

M. J. FELDMAN

Merchant Tailor

Over Whitaker and Bogardus

2d and Cayuga

Your Shoes Do They Need Repairing?

This is the best and quickest shop.

Wilson & Dwyer

207 Cayuga St.

Skates Sharpened too

The Longer You Wait

in saving money and starting a bank account, the longer it will take you to accomplish something worth while.

Why not begin today?

Start an account with us with the amount you can spare.

4% Paid in Our Interest Department

Which Do You Prefer?

The piercing tones of a band, or the mellow tones of the orchestra?

THE VITAPHONE

Is the "orchestra" type of a phonograph which reproduces every delicate sub-tone in a soft mellow blending that makes

The Vitaphone—a HOME machine

Perfection in tone reproduction. A human, natural, mellow tone, and yet a tone that never "grates".

H. J. HOWE

201 S. Salina Street DEMONSTRATIONS DAILY Syracuse, N. Y.

F. D. ROOSEVELT GIVES TESTAMONY

Corroborates Loeb's Story of Barnes-Murphy Deal

Franklin D. Roosevelt, former state senator and now assistant secretary of the navy, arrived in answer to a summons from the Roosevelt counsel. Mr. Roosevelt, it was said, was to testify regarding a deadlock in the Senate which ultimately resulted in selecting James A. O'Gorman to represent the State of New York in the United States Senate. Mr. Roosevelt, a Democrat, was the leader of an insurgent movement in the State Senate at that time.

Mr. Barnes arrived in cour when it was opened. He sat down in front of a pile of books which had previously been brought in and placed upon the table occupied by his counsel. Counsel for both sides entered into a brief conference with Justice Andrews.

When the conference was concluded, Stewart Hancock, of Colonel Roosevelt's legal staff, offered in evidence tabulations of bids covering a period of several years for departmental and legislative printing. The documents were received by the court.

Counsel for Colonel Roosevelt then renwed their effort of yesterday to get into the record a stipulation covering a judgment the state secured against the Albany Journal Company. The court received a part of the matter. Part of a stipulation made during the suit as admitted.

Young Roosevelt, who is tall, slim and erect, with a pair of Roosevelt eyes, made a good witness. He was the insurgent leader of the state Senate when Murphy tried to elect Wm. F. Sheehan to the United States Senate. He was trying to get an independent elected. He wanted Republican votes. And he went to Barnes for them. It was to Barnes he told what Grady had said to him of the bi-partisan agreement.

Barnes, according to Roosevelt, neither affirmed nor denied what Grady said.

It is the theory of the defense that Barnes continued to keep his hands off as agreed till the last moment, then released his followers when the jig was already up.

Next in importance to the testimony of the "fifth cousin by blood" of the defense, was the production of six letters passing between Barnes and Platt.

Barnes's part of the correspondence was filled with complaints to Platt, then in Washington, that Barnes was not "then getting anything like what he considered his share of the state printing." In one of them he spoke of a "characteristically insolent and insufferable" telegram from Quigg. This subterranean gentleman according to Barnes was interfering with Barnes's plans to get state work for his presses.

There was a great disturbance outside at this point. Two bands marched around the Court House playing popular airs. The sheriff was sent for after the shout "Hurrah for T. R." came floating in through the windows. The court ordered that the sheriff have the paraders arrested if the noise did not cease. A loookout of the window disclosed that hosts of students from Syracuse University were marching some place with banners and flags. Apparently the sheriff reached the street by that time for the uproar suddenly ceased.

A recess was taken ater a few more questions were asked.

WEST SIDE BLOCK BOUGHT BY L. P. SMITH

The Bartholomey block on the West Side has been bought by L. R Smith, head of the L. P. Smith Co., who has in view an idea to open there a branch hardware store. Upon this point Mr. Smith remains undecided.

Her Business.

"It's no use trying to steal a march on that pretty girl at the glove counter."

"Why not?"

"She has a way of making every one show one's hand."—Atlanta Constitution.

NEW ELECTRICAL SUPPLY STORE OPENS

W. J. Nicht, formerly of Auburn, has opened an up-to-date electrical supply store and contracting business on South 1st st., near Cayuga. Mr. Nicht is an electrician of many years' experience, having occupied positions of trust with the Klimer-Richardson Company, electrical contractors of Auburn, and other electrical companies. For many years Mr. Nicht managed branch stores for the Kilmer-Richardson Company.

Mr. Nicht recently resigned his position and decided to launch a business of his own, selecting this city from among several as an ideal spot. At present Mr. Nicht, who was recently married, is stopping with his wife at the Lewis House, pending the moving of his effects here, when he will take a house.

The establishment carries a full line of electrical supplies and will make a special feature of house wiring and automobile electrical work, including the charging of storage batteries.

OLD RESIDENT WAS LAID AT REST TODAY

The funeral of Mrs. Jane Brannigan who died Monday morning at her home, 412 West 4th st., was held today from her late residence at 9 o'clock and from the Church of the Immaculate Conception at 9:30: Rev. Father Lindsman officiated at the services at the church and the burial was made in St. Mary's cemetery. The pall bearers, friends of the deceased for many years, were William A. Pear, Thomas Sparks, M. E. Reynolds, John Hennessy, Patrick Casey and Daniel Mehegan.

Mrs. Brannigan was born in County Westmeath, Ireland, 1836, and when she was only a young girl she emigrated to this country, first taking up her residence in Oswego and later in this city. She had lived here 37 years. She is survived by three sons, Andrew, William and Christopher and four daughters Mrs. Clinton Ferris, Mrs. Peter Garman and Mrs. William Chappel, all of this city.

COAL AT PANAMA.

Mammoth Storage Plants Planned For the Canal Route.

Coal storing plants of mammoth magnitude are being planned on the Panama canal route. One of the storage plants is to be situated at Cristobal and another at Balboa.

It is planned to have a coal storage basin at Cristobal with a capacity of 290,000 tons and one at Balboa with a capacity of 160,000 tons. In each place the storage will be within a large basin made of re-enforced concrete, in which approximately half of the coal will be stored under water for use in time of war and the other half above water to be added to and taken from continually for the ordinary uses of commercial and government vessels.

It also is planned if the policy should be approved to be able to lease parts of the storage basin to such private coaling companies as may wish to maintain their own coal stores on the isthmus, but in such cases all of the handling will be done by the government plant, a suitable charge being made for the service.—New York Press.

Calling on Wilson.

The average person who calls on the president is in no hurry to leave, and the less important his errand the longer he takes to explain it. President Wilson listens patiently, although perhaps with little enjoyment; then he gets up and moves toward the door, and it must be a very obtuse person who cannot take the hint, and if something more than a hint is needed then the president shakes hands with him, but it is done graciously and in a way that is flattering to the person who without knowing it is being dismissed.—New York Telegram.

Our Cotton.

The United States department of agriculture reports that both long and short staple cotton in California yields 500 pounds to the acre, while in the next best record—that of Missouri—the yield runs 325 pounds of long staple and 385 pounds of short. The price of short staple in California is about the same as elsewhere, but that of long staple is higher than in any state except Florida.

A Freak of the Sea.

Like the ribs of a long dead giant so stand the rusty ribs of the U. S. S. Wateree, two miles inland, at the foot of the Andes, where the ship was deposited in 1868 by a monster tidal wave. The ship, with practically its entire crew abbard, was swept from its anchorage off Irica and carried inland, where it was left on an even keel, almost uninjured.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 5.—Believing that the length of the Constitutional Convention could be materially shortened were the delegates to assign to a committee composed of representatives from each of the nine judicial districts of the State, the duty of preparing an amended Constitution, Delegate James W. Whipple of the fifty-first senatorial district, has made this suggestion.

Delegate Whipple thinks that the Constitutional Convention as a whole is too large to do effective work without long deliberation upon inconsequental detail which under his plan would be unnecessary.

"Were a committee to be named, one from each judicial district, and empowered to draw up an amended Constitution, I am convinced that the work of the convention would be over in fifty days," said Mr. Whipple in discussing his scheme. "I have no doubt but that a new Constitution could be drafted in fifteen days.

Mr. Whipple says that if Senator Root were to be intrusted with the duty of preparing the amendments, a safe and speedy method of doing the major portion of the work of the delegates would result. He points out that as a Constitutional lawyer, Senator Root stands pre-eminent.

"All legislative bodies delegate its important duties to committees," continued Mr. Whipple. "Before the committees hearings are held and then the members vote either for the reporting of the proposition at issue or to retain it in committee. My plan is that the special committee of nine, with Senator Root of course as chairman, prepare the proposed new Constitution. I would then bring the document before the delegates as a whole for debate. It would then not be a question as to what should be incorporated in the document, but what should not be. There would be plenty of opportunity for those either in favor of or proposed amendments to be heard."

While the rules governing the Constitutional Convention provide that there shall be a certain number of committees and no such committee as is suggested by Mr. Whipple has been provided for, the rules could be altered to provide for such a committee.

The general impression is that the deliberations of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention will continue until the middle of September, yet there is nothing definitely known just what the length of the Convention will be in months. Up to the present the daily sessions have been brief and devoid of any particularly ardent arguments.

From today the various committes will work on the various amendments which have been referred for consideration and the Convention will take on a business-like aspect. Meetings of several of the most important committees have been announced. Next week it is expected that several hearings will be given.

Little is being heard concerning the plan to move the seat of the Convention to Saratoga Springs during the month of August. The rumor to this effect appears to be without foundation, though many of the delegates are far from being averse to adjourning to the attractive watering place. The proposition has not been discussed in open convention, however, although it has been talked over by the delegates.

Those You Know

Rev. F. F. Miller of Minetto was in thisc ity Monday, delivering an address in the evening.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Deuel and children have been recent guests of Mexico relatives.

* * *

Joseph Newton has resigned his position as superintendent of the Granby Paper Co., and taken a like position at Augusta, Maine.

* * *

Miss Mary Marsh and mother have returned to the city after an extended visit in the South.

Ah! The Invigorating Whiff of the Pine Forest!

How it clears the throat and head of its mucous ailments. It is this spirit of Newness and Vigor from the health-giving Piney Forests brought back by Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey. Antiseptic and healing. Buy a bottle today. All Druggists, 25c.

Electric Bitters a Spring Tonic.

Storage Batteries Charged

Let us wire your car for electric lights.
Batteries, fuses and lamps for autos.
Head quarters for artistic lighting fixtures and shades.

THE ELECTRIC SHOP

W. J. NICHT 22 S. FIRST ST.

THE FULTON SALVAGE CO.

DEPARTMENT STORE W. THIRD STREET AND BROADWAY

INTRODUCTORY RED STAMP SALE

Begins To-day offering Great Bargain Prices in all Departments all this week, to introduce The Greatest of All Profit-Sharing Plans. Free Books and Free Stamps—Ask for them

Note the Money Saving Prices on New goods this season. 20 per cent. Discount on our High Grade Suits for Men and Young Men. Many rare values in this lot.

A Leader in Men's Trousers: Regular $2.50, $2.25 and $2.00 grades at $1.69, all sizes.

SHOE DEPARTMENT

To acquaint you with our Shoe Department we quote the following very special values:

Hurd's Best dress Shoes for men and young men, in all leathers and sizes; regular $4.00 value at $3.49. Other linesof $3.00 and $2.50 values at $2.29.

Ladies' and Misses' Oxfords, regular $3.50 at $2.59. Regular $3.00 shoes at $2.29, and regular $2.50 shoes at $1.98; all sizes in tan, gun metal and patent leather.

Many other Special Values including latest styles in Ladies' and Misses tan and black. Also boys' and girl's School Shoes.

DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT

A Straight 10 per cent. Discount on Shirtwaists, Dress Skirts, ePtticoats, House Dresses, Kimonos, Aprons, Underwear, Yard Goods, etc.

A large shipment of Lace Curtains has just arrived as we are going to press. Prices not marked but they will be sold at very low prices in this Red Stamp Sale.

10%—CUT IN WALL PAPER—10%

Our immense stock of this season's new designs and patterns in Cut Out Borders and Binders. You will find in this great variety your choice from pantry to parlor.

Our Hardware, Furniture and House Furnishing Department offer the same money saving bargains. A mammoth order of Linoleums is due to arrive today and will be put on special sale at once.

A CARLOAD OF SCREEN DOORS AND WINDOWS

At prices never before heard of. We bought this lot at a very low figure and will sell any size door with trimmings at $1.00.

Window Screens, regular 40 and 35 cents sizes at 20c. Other sizes at 10 and 15 cents.

Our Hardware Department embraces a complete assortment of everything needful.

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your Merchants for National Red Stamps and insisting on getting them with everything you buy. If your merchant does not give you National Merchandise Stamps it is absolute proof that he does not appreciate your trade. Merchants who give National Red Stamps want your trade and are sharing their profits with you. Every full book of Red Stamps is worth $2 in cash or $2.50 in merchandise, dry goods, clothing, etc., or can be applied for $2.50 on purchase of larger amount or $2 on account. Full books will be redeemed by any merchant who gives National Red Stamps.

FREE COUPON

This Coupon good for 30 Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 8th.

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP
Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear
106 Oneida St. Phone 3177

A. ALDERMAN
Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes
214 West First St.

J. BELASKI
GROCERIES AND MEATS
174 West First St.

M. H. JOYCE
The New West Side Grocery
518 West Third St. Phone 4260

H. C. DANN & SON
City Meat Market
High Grade Meats at the right prices.
11 South 2d St. Phone 42

JOHN CRAHAN
GROCERIES
124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

JAMES J. KENYON
GROCERIES
518 South 1st St. Phone 3299

J. R. WARD
GROCERIES—Open Evenings
314 Seneca St. Phone 4450

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY
DEPARTMENT STORE West Third Street and Broadway

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps and Bargain Prices. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

Merchants wishing to learn more about this Wonderful Business Boosting Plan, call Mr. Beynon, at McDonald's New York Shop, Phone 3177

NINETEEN HUNDRED COPIES OF THE EVENING TIMES GO INTO FULTON'S HOMES DAILY. WATCH US GROW!

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 118 [illegible] THURSDAY, MAY, 6, 1915 Price One Cent

Newspaper Stories Have Misrepresented Fulton's Ministerial Association, Whose Members Did Not Take Official Action Upon Any Clause In the Brown Bill at Tuesday's Informal Meeting Held in Mayor's Home.

Ministers Object to Generalities Contained in the Brown Bill, Which, if it Becomes a Law, Will Permit Conducting Extreme Forms of Gambling, all at the Discretion of Who May Happen to be the City's Mayor. Ministers' Consultation Was for Out and Out Commission Government. Mayor Informs Them the Brown Bill is a Step in That Direction, Which Produces Merriment on All Sides.

Taxpayers of the city were dazed this morning by the number [illegible] of the [illegible] stories printed in regard to the Brown [illegible] which will come before the Common Council for a public hearing tomorrow night at the City Hall. According to a story circulated yesterday the Ministerial Association held a meeting Tuesday, and "after due consideration (according to one paper, registered their approval of the measure." Another paper stated that the ministers discussed the amendment and that they decided after talking it over that the city fathers should receive salaries. One more paper stated this morning that since the amendments have been fully explained through the Chamber of Commerce, the Ministerial Association and other sources the opposition that was apparent has subsided. This is really news of the most startling variety.

Knowing well the sentiments of the above papers, however, The Evening Times was not content to take all their statements for granted, was about to make an investigation when one of the members of the Ministerial Association walked into the publication office this morning and, after asking that his name be withheld, proceeded to tell just what occurred at the meeting. It appears that the meeting was held at the home of Mayor Fox, a fact which the other papers appear to have overlooked. "The ministers discussed the bill," said the authority, "but took no action as an association or otherwise." "The statements which have appeared in the Syracuse newspapers are absolutely unfounded and I do not know where these gentlemen obtained their information. I was present at the meeting and I wish to say that no action was taken. I have considered the matter, and personally I am not in favor of the measure which has met with so much objection. The private opinions of the rest of the members I do not know, but I do know that no official action was taken."

This statement coming from a minister of established reputation in thisc ity, sheds new light on the stories which have appeared in other papers.

Interested parties who have looked into the matter, however, place little credence in the stories of the other papers anent the ministerial meeting. The writer of one story is a paid member of this city administration and is an appointee of Mayor Fox. In another instance, the writer was very much opposed to the measure two weeks ago, and spoke his sentiments privately as well as publicly. He is known to be in opposition to the administration and its acts in the past. No one has advanced any reason why the titled papers should support the measure unless he has been misinformed. In the third articles referred to, the writer mentions the fact that a large delegation from the sixth ward will be on hand to urge the passage of the bill, as a much needed bridge in that ward can not be erected unless the provision which allows the city to borrow a sum not to exceed $20,000 is passed. The fact that such a bridge can be obtained at very little expense by a special election has evidently been overlooked, but some one has apparently tried to hood-wink the sixth ward people into believing that the bridge will not be built unless the bill passes. Alderman Foster brought up the question in a recent council meeting and asked why such a measure should be passed when the council can call a special election to take care of such emergencies. Mayor Fox had no argument other than to say that a special election would cost $60. A saving of that amount and five times that amount could be effected with very little trouble among several city departments. Alderman Foster objected to the measure because he said it established a dangerous precedent, and the council could raise money at any time it willed in the future by simply deciding that some situation, either ordinary or unusual, constituted an emergency. "The safest way," said Alderman Foster, "is an election." Alderman Foster's stand on the salary question has not been ascertained. Alderman Quirk has come out for the salary provision [illegible] states that he does not expect to be an alderman again, and it is almost certain that he will not be disappointed.

PASTOR HOLMES REFUSED TO ADVOCATE BROWN BILL

At noon today, Rev. H. D. Holmes, president of the Ministerial Association of Fulton, was interviewed on the subject. Mr. Holmes in very few words stated that the Ministerial Association took no action whatever, either for or against the bill officially or otherwise. Mr. Holmes' statement follows:

"The association was called together by Mayor Fox Tuesday afternoon. The bill was discussed and members of the association asked questions about the bill. Some portions of the bill were approved, others were opposed very strongly. No action was taken by the association. I, for one would not go before my people, as a minister and advocate the passage of the bill, because there are some portions of the bill which I do not approve of, and I know that no other member of the association will urge the passage of the bill. We felt that we did nt have the right to pass an opinion one way or the other. While it is a question whether or not salaries paid to the Mayor and Aldermen may result in better service by these officials that question is not for us to decide. I could not urge my people to saddle themselves with more taxes, as they are overburdened now. One clause in the bill, in my opinion would license games of chance in this city, and in spite of the fact that the Mayor stated that the clause did not read that way, I think it does. Of course, I do not approve of that and we can not support one portion of the bill and reject another.

"The newspaper accounts of the meeting have been reported inaccurately, whether purposely or otherwise, I do not know. I talked to a Syracuse newspaper representative over the telephone and told him just what I am telling you. I intend to call the gentleman up and ask him why he changed or neglected to print all that I said regarding the bill. The other papers did not interview me, and I do not know where they got their information. While there are several portions of the bill to be commnded thr there are on the other hand several parts of it which should be strongely opposed and I predict some lively opposition to the bill in the public meeting. The Mayor was asked who drew up the bill and he told the meeting who was responsible for it, but I am not at liberty togive the name of the father of the measure. I repeat—nothing was done officially or otherwise by the Ministerial Association at the meeting at Mayor Fox's home Tuesday and any newspaper account which states or intimates that [illegible]

(Continued on Page Five)

Collegians Had Easy Time Comparatively With Twirler Injured

Fighting against odds, the Fulton High school ball tossers bit the dust for the second time this season yesterday at Athletic Park, when the Syracuse Freshmen team took the locals into camp to the melancholy tune of 9-3. The defeat was an honorable one, however, and the locals are to be congratulated for the showing they made against the strong college team which has the advantage of superior coaching and training facilities.

Barnes, a diminutive youngster of sixteen summers, mounted the firing line for Fulton, incidentally making his debut as a twirler. To say that the kid put up a good game isp utting it mildly. For eight innings he held the Syracuse sluggers to five scattered singles and had his support been good, the visitors might not have scored. In the eighth, however, his arm had gone the route, and the collegians fell upon his slants with a vengeance. Two singles and a homer shattered his equilibrium painfully, and he was yanked. H. O'Brien, with a sore arm, took up the burden at that point, and allowed one score in the two remaining chapters.

The work of the visitors showed long, hard practice and careful training. They took no chances on the paths and the infield worked like a clock. Flower was not particularly effective and the locals hit him freely, but a Syracuse player was always in line to receive the pellet. Flower received errorless support and gradually improvd in the latter part of the game, until the locals had difficulty in finding him at crucial moments.

The visitors started work without any preamble. Feinmann perched on first after Keeler had booted his roller. Dunkle sacrificed and Brown flied out. Kean sent a warm one down the third base line and Keeler again fumbled while Feinmann scored. Beckwith grounded to Caffrey. For Fulton, Keeler grounded out but Bray lined a single into right field. Wilcox was not equal to the occasion and his feeble grounder was easy pickings for Flower. Martin lined out, Feinmann to Jackson.

The visitors netted two tallies in the second. Bedell reached first on Martin's error and went to second when Jackson rolled out. Connelly's hit sent Bedell over the rubber and Flower's double into right scored Connolly. Feinmann popped and Dunkle fanned. Fulton retaliated in this frame by hanging up a brace of runs. Barnes strolled, and stole second. Thompson singled and Barnes stopped at third. In sliding into second Barnes wrenched his ankle badly, but pluckily continued the game although his ankle bothered his work in the box considerably. Pullen flied out. Caffrey's hit sent Barnes and Thompson over. Keeler popped.

In the third Fulton scored once more. Bray got his second hit and stole second. Wilcox was an easy out, but Martin hit safely scoring Bray. Neither team scored in the fourth frame.

In the fifth Syracuse bunched two hits and made two more. Feinman was out on a pop fly. Dunkle tripled and scored on Keeler's error when Brown rolled to third base. Kean hit and Brown took third. Beckwith sent a high one into left and Brown scored on the throw in. A pretty double play pulled off by the visitors in this inning robbed the locals of a possible score. Keeler flied out to right but Bray walked. Wilcox hit to third base and the ball was whipped to second by Jackson catching Bray. In the sixth Flower tightened up and fanned D. O'Brien, Barnes and Thompson in order after Martin had been passed.

Fulton pulled a double in the seventh. Feinmann reached first on an error, as usual, and Dunkle was out, Martin to Caffrey. Feinmann attempted to score from second on the play and he was caught at home. Brown flied out.

Pullen hit for two bases in the seventh but ran the bases carelessly and was caught trying to steal home.

The eighth inning rolled around with the score 5-3 in favor of the visitors. Kean, the first batter, singled. Beckwith bunted and Bray juggled the ball until both men were safe. Bedell took hold of one and the ball cleared the right field fence on the fly. The Syracuse runners walked across the pan while Thompson [illegible]

(Continued on Eighth Page)

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 46

C. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Associate Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 6, 1915

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Ringworm.

There are few diseases of the skin easier to cure than ringworm of nonhairy parts of the body. It is, however, difficult to cure ringworm of the scalp and beard—especially the former. The reason for the intractability of ringworm of the scalp and beard is that the fungus (a vegetable parasite, the trichophyton) grows down into the hair follicles, and it is very difficult to make well recognized antiparasitics penetrate to the seat of the trouble without damaging the skin. It requires easily six months to a year of treatment to cure ringworm on the scalp or beard. Any one suffering from ringworm should place himself under the observation of a physician or a specialist on diseases of the skin if he wants to be cured. A plain sulphur ointment of one dram of sulphur to an ounce of benzoated lard, a small portion rubbed into affected localities night and morning, will usually and steadily cure ringworm of the nonhairy localities.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Automobiles and Baseball.

Somebody has discovered that the number of automobile owners in our country is nearly equal to the number of baseball patrons. In this connection it is suggested that, while the fans haven't the same cause for pride, they don't worry any over tire trouble. On the other hand, the car owners are not annoyed by outlaw leagues and umpires.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sadly Beautiful.

Some of the courtesies imposed upon armies and navies are at times beautiful in their expression. For instance, a Japanese warship the other day steamed about the spot where the F-4 went down. Its crew was drawn up in salute, and its flag was dipped in honor of the men entombed below.—Rochester Union and Advertiser.

A Seasonable Explanation.

Every woman wants a new hat that makes her look better than she looked in her old hat, which was more fascinating than the one she had before, and so on, back to the time she was an angel in appearance; hence the difficulty of finding a hat to suit.—Toledo Blade.

The Irish Tongue.

Seumas McManus declares that the Irish language is "the most forceful to curse, pray and make love in, as it is the most expressive," and he adds, "It has 305 terms of endearment for a girl." In that respect it runs a close race with Spanish.—Boston Globe.

Bulls and Bears.

They are getting so gay again in Wall street that seats on the Stock Exchange that were selling a little while ago for $35,000 have been bid up to $50,000. Still, a trifle like that can be made in a few minutes' operations—sometimes.—Philadelphia Press.

Let Us Be Thankful.

Summer colds are bad enough in all conscience, whatever that means, but let us turn to the silver lining of the cloud and cheerily reflect that there are no summer chilblains.—Boston Globe.

Emerging From Despotism.

Fifteen hundred arrests for bribery in the Japanese election show that Nippon is rapidly emerging from the gloom of despotism into the full light of self government.—Boston Transcript.

Looks Like a Sticker.

Jitney or nickelette bus or five cent automobile—the thing itself multiplies, and the name doesn't much matter. Still, it looks as if jitney will stick.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Crowded For Room.

Flower gardens in Berlin will be turned into vegetable gardens this year. Here they're turning 'em into space for garages.—Detroit Free Press.

Mean Graft.

Canada's war contract scandals remind us that the grafter and the vulture never rise above their natural instincts.—New York Press.

Fast Colors.

If the American chemists can make dyes soon enough to keep our bills from fading down they will furnish fast colors.—Boston Herald.

Gasoline, Oils and Greases. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

CHASING THE MIRAGE

A traveler in thirsty lands thinks he sees, in a swimming blue haze just over the horizon, the promise of waterbrooks. Soon, he believes, the anguish of parched throat and swollen tongue will be over. He shall loll on the green turf with pleasant breezes making sweet music in the leaves overhead, while the brook ripples over the stones and the birds sing and the heat of day is turned into moderate temperature. So he goes on and on, and the place where he wants to be goes on and on too, mocking him as he advances, till at last he despairs and perhaps surrenders to the inevitable.

Early last January there appeared in the Mayor's message, delivered to the Common Council of the City of Fulton, a mirage, faint at first, but as time elapsed the picture of a city willing and able to pay salaries to certain public officials has become stronger and stronger, until now, without any more publicity than the law allows, the mirage is impressive enough to mock the pursuers of the men who secured the introduction of the Brown Bill in the Legislature.

There is another side to the mirage that appears to attract the eye of the traveler seeking an attempt to buy inefficiency at the expense of the taxpayers, and which is not binding to the man walking in the desert of local political circles, viz: That salary makes the man. Salary does not make the man, and no one with a grain of common sense believes it does, nor can the same sort of man delude himself or others into a belief that were the City of Fulton to pay salaries to its Mayor and Board of Alderman, we should get one whit better service in return for the money expended than we now receive.

It has been figured by "an exponent" of the Brown Bill that in round numbers the total amount of money that would be disbursed by the city in payment of salaries to a Mayor and Board of Alderman might amount to less than $1000 annually, and yet the mirage pursues us and mocks us, for how are we to prevent under the terms of the Brown Bill annual increases of salaries as recompense for the "good men" who would be "drawn into office?" Does the reader know that the Brown Bill does not stipulate the amount of salary each official shall receive? And if it did, then what? Would a pro rata share of $1000 be large enough to induce the ideals of "good men" to shake the dust of business or employment from their feet and turn attention to the service of Fulton exclusively? Not much of it.

To the average "good man" salary for serving the city he loves is not much of an inducement. It is true that men having had opportunities in their lives that fit them for participating in the legislation needed by a city are in most instances loth to give their time to serve in public affairs, yet there are exceptions to the all too general rule. Can the reader draw upon his imagination to the extent of seeing such men lured by the mirage that has been and is in the eyes of the "exponents" of the Brown Bill? Is it good reasoning to think for a moment that men of the class described would forsake business and employment for a pro rata share of less than $1000? Would a pro rata share of less than $1000 influence a "good man," one who could and would put his foot upon an expenditure of more than $2000 to lower the grade of a street which did not need lowering, to give any more freely of his valuable time to serve the city upon the Board of Aldermen, or any other of the municipal departments?

Ask your neighboring business man, mechanic or manufacturer for an answer.

With one exception the directorate of the Chamber of Commerce is on record as opposed to that clause in the Brown Bill which would grant salaries to the Mayor and Common Council men. Those gentlemen have not objected to quizzing; they have nothing to hide. The Mayor of Fulton did object to being quizzed, and the people are wondering why the silence continues.

Has the January mirage led the "exponents" of the Brown Bill to go on and on until they reach the place where they must succumb to popular opinion and heed the cry for a form of government that can afford to entice efficient men into the service of the city?

Mr. Taxpayer, if you want efficiency in your municipal government, the Brown Bill, with the salary rider, will not give it to you. Be on hand at tomorrow night's public hearing, oppose the salary grab idea with might and main, then return to your home determined to fight from your tyesight future mirages. As soon as possible thereafter resolve to work for a form of government that can afford to pay salaries to men whose ill give value in the efficiency they afford the city.

SUMMER COURSES IN AGRICULTURE

Additions Made to Courses at Cornell's Agricultural College, Term Starts June 7

Twenty-four new courses have been added to those given during the regular summer term of the state college of agriculture at Cornell, according to an announcement which has just been made. The new term starts on June 7 and ends on September 22.

As stated in the announcement, "the primary purpose of the summer term is to take advantage of the growing season in teaching subjects to students regularly registered in either graduate or undergraduate classes." Opportunity is also provided for advance students, teachers, and for persons otherwise occupied during the winter months, to take long periods of special work.

Many Departments Offer Courses

Eighteen departments will offer instruction during the summer. Those which ill be open, and the number of classes ogered in each, are as followo:

Botany, 9; dairy industry, 1; drawing, 1; nature study, 12; farm crops, 4; farm management, 1; farm practice, 1; floriculture, 5; forestry, 8; landscape art, 1; plant breeding, 1; plant pathology, 4; pomology, 5; poultry husbandry, 8; rural education, 1; rural engineering, 5; soil technology, 5; vegetable gardening, 4; a total of seventy-six courses.

The department of forestry offering eight courses will give special instruction with accent on work in the field. The first six weeks' work in the department will be in Ithaca. The remainder of the term will be spent in camp on a large forest tract in the Adirondacks.

Tuition Free to New Yorkers

As in the other regular terms of the college the tuition will be free to residents of New York State. For non-residents, except those registered in the graduate school, the fee will be $62.50. Students in the summer term will be required to have two years of regular collegiate work, although special students not candidates for a degree will be admitted on the same conditions as for the regular spring and fall terms.

POLITICAL COMMENT

"The state owes the money. It must be paid. Why put off the evil day?"—Governor Whitman.

That sums up the case in a nutshell. While the responsibility for creating the present situation does not belong to the present administration, the responsibility for paying up does, and the administration is not trying to dodge it.

* * *

Mayor Mitchel of New York city in his anxiety to have the state levy no direct tax this year is likely to develop a situation that will embarass himself a good deal more than the Governor. The head of the financial department of his own city, Comptroller Prendergast, after a very deliberate study of the state's financial condition, sees conditions as they are and announces that the responsibility therefor rests not upon the present administration but upon the administration of Governor Glynn. Would a similar study of New York city's financial condition result in a similar findings. — that the responsibility for existing conditions rests upon a preceding administration?

* * *

For the first time in twenty years, the state is compelled to borrow money to carry on the business of the state from June 1st to the end of the fiscal year. This happened before under Governor Morton when he succeeded Governor Flower in 1895. Failure to carry a sufficient working balance in the state treasury is the cause.

* * *

The character of the appointments made by Governor Whitman of themselves entitle his administration to the support of the taxpayers who decided last fall that a change of administration was badly needed by the state.

* * *

Two very able representatives of Tammany, Senator Wagner and Assemblyman A. E. Smith are the fountain heads of all the criticism leveled at the present administration, with former Governor Glynn and Mayor Mitchel of New York city as active assistants. Messrs. Wagner and Smith are just as good members of Tammany this year as they were last year and the year before when Tammany ran the state just as it saw fit, and Tammany is just the same as it was last year and many, many years before. The conclusion is obvious.

* * *

"Simple and absolute chaos" no longer reigns in the administration departments of the state government. Since January first the daily scandal has failed to materialize. Public business is being transacted by the regularly constituted officials and not by scores of special commissions. Every department head whether newly appointed or holding over understands that he is in the office to transact the public business that legitimately falls within his jurisdiction. This fact is not made the subject of special messages, it is all in the day's work.

Opinions

Drink Not Only Cause

There is room to suspect that in his diagnosis of the troubles in shipyards and elsewhere in the United Kingdom, Lloyd-George has laid, as charged by the labor leaders, too much to the charge of intemperance and that other causes, too, contribute considerably to the prevailing slackness.

Will Crooks, a labor leader, speaking for his own constituency, attributes the conditions at the Woolwich Arsenal to a want of intelligent organization. Though nine months have passed since the war began, no facilities have as yet been provided for the men to get their meals, and this, he intimates, is but characteristic of many shortcomings to be found there and elsewhere. His own opinion is that accusations of excessive drinking "have been spread broadcast by employers to cover up their own shortcomings," and this opinion is apparently shared by other labor leaders, who are no less resentful of the general disposition to lay all the blame on the intemperate workingman.

Though there may be little ground for suspecting a deliberate conspiracy among employers, it is highly probable that conditions in the factories do contribute to the slackness observed there. The British Medical Journal suggested not long ago that the Government would do well to appoint a committee of physiologists to supervise ventilation and heating in places where men work and to advise generally on questions relating to fatigue. It anticipated the labor leaders in attributing the failure in the supply of munitions largely to strain from overtime and to the unsatisfactory conditions under which the work is done. "Many of the factories," it said, "are worked night and day, and new hands taken on in a factory where gunstocks are made have complained to us of the excessive closeness—the old hands, they say, will have the windows shut."

There are many other complaints no less considerable. Girl machinists are obliged to sit on benches in shifts of four hours morning and afternoon. They have not enough physical exercise to keep them in good condition. Working in badly ventilated, overheated rooms and without sufficient rest and recreation, neither men nor women can be exspected to keep up to the pitch required in these strenuous times. The conditions, moreover, are peculiarly calculated to promote drinking, and it is not at all unlikely that the intemperance complained of is in large measure a result of these conditions.—Utica Dispatch.

Politics or the People?

Mr. McAneny's analysis of the appropriation bills is ample justification for Mayor Mitchel's appeal to the Governor to delay action on financial matters until the city authorities have had a chance to be heard. Assumption of the necessity for a direct tax this year is based on the idea that each item in the appropriations as adopted by the Legislature is imperatively needed for the State's welfare and may not be one cent. If $10,000,000 and more can be chopped out of the bills, as Mr. Aneny says, reasons for the direct tax become mere excuses and imposition of the tax itself an outrage, not alone on this city but on the state.

Nobody—not even the legislators who voted for them—believes the appropriations cannot be pared down without detriment to the State's interests. It has grown to be legislative custom to "put it up to the Governor" when there is a question whether or not to adopt a bill authorizing spending of the state's money.

If the Governor favors the expenditure the lawmakers argue that their judgment has been vindicated; if he vetoes it they derive only a slightly diminished political advantage from from the circumstances, for they can shift responsibility for the loss of the "pork" to him.

The bills now pending before Governor Whitman are no exception. With a total of $65,000,000, against approximately $57,000,000 last year, they contain salary raises and department allowances which are manifestly as much patronage grabs as were the various "ripper bills" which displaced Democratic officials for the benefit of Republicans. How much of this they contain only officialdom has yet been able to estimate, for the printed copies of the bills are just off the press.

A direct tax of 1.7 mills will mean that next year's budget here will have to include $14,000,000 to pay the tax. That is, the city's tax rate will go up 17.5 points, to a figure which the Mayor well says will be "wellnigh confiscatory" of the property here, on its 100 per cent. valuation.

Governor Whitman has the choice between cutting down appropriations to a pointp ermitting him to veto the direct tax and approving this practical confiscation of city property. He has the choice between economy—rigid economy, which is an inseparable part of sound administraion—and money-grabbing which will handicap this city's development seriously and bring hardship to thousands of its citizens. He has the choice between helping to build up a party machine on public funds and curtailing this city's school facilities, its disease prevention and health propagation work, its recreation extension, its charitable activities.—N. Y. Tribune.

Special sale of Farm Wagons during month of May. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Bogue's, 61 First st. adv

Baled Hay, Straw and Shavings. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

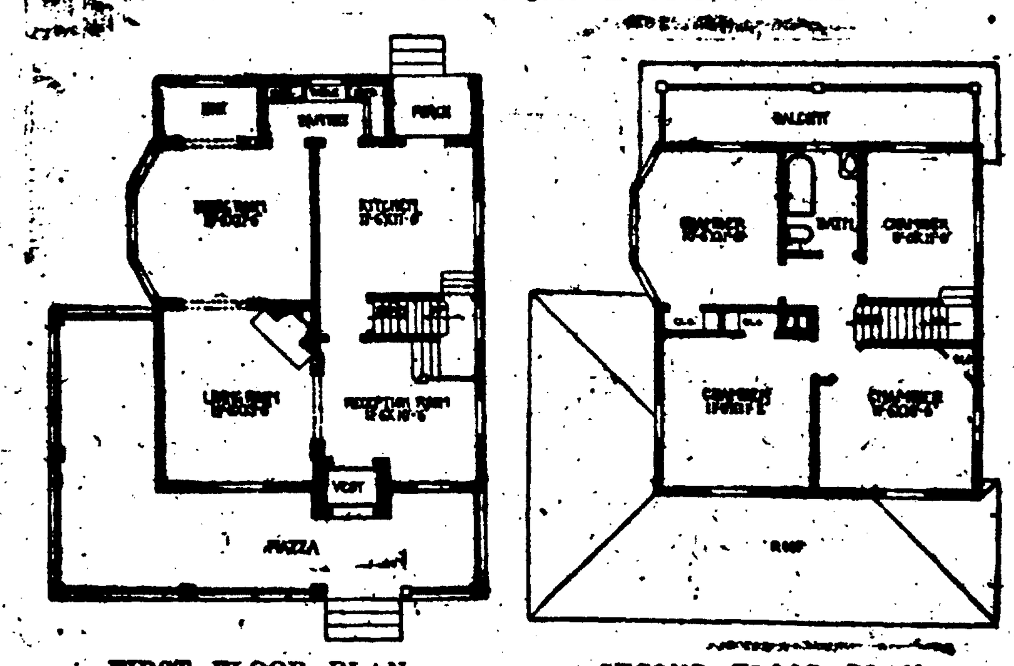
All Kinds of
GARDEN SEEDS
by the ounce or pound at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

EYESIGHT TROUBLE YOU ?
We make a Specialty in
EYESIGHT TESTING
SPECTACLES
and
EYE GLASS ADJUSTING
Wm. C. Morgan
Jeweler & Optometrist
Fulton, N. Y.

COLONIAL FOR THE LAKESIDE.

Design 627, by Glenn L. Saxton, Architect, Minneapolis, Minn.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.



FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

The wide sweeping porch is ideal for a lake dwelling. Size, 24 feet by 26 feet. First story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $2,000.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will furnish a copy of Saxton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains 310 designs costing from $1,000 to $6,000; also a book of interiors, $1 per copy.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Cross Questions.

To play this game it is best to sit in a circle, and until the end of the game no one must speak above a whisper. The first player whispers a question to his neighbor, such as "Do you like roses?"

This question now belongs to the second player, and he must remember it.

The second player answers, "Yes; they smell so sweetly," and this answer belongs to the first player. The second player now asks his neighbor a question, taking care to remember the answer, as it will belong to him. Perhaps he has asked his neighbor, "Are you fond of potatoes?" And the answer may have been, "Yes, when they are fried."

So that the second player has now a question and an answer belonging to him, which he must remember.

The game goes on until every one has been asked a question and given an answer, and each player must be sure and bear in mind that it is the question he is asked and the answer his neighbor gives which belong to him.

At the end of the game each gives his question and answer aloud in the following manner:

"I was asked, 'Do you like roses?' and the answer was, 'Yes, when they are fried.'"

The next player says:

"I was asked, 'Are you fond of potatoes?' and the answer was, 'Yes; they are very pretty, but they don't wear well.'"

The Wasps' Lesson.

An English gentleman lately took a small wasps' nest, about the size of an apple, and, after stupefying its inmates, placed it in a large cage inside of his house, leaving an opening for egress through the wall. Here the nest was enlarged to a foot in diameter, holding thousands of wasps. He was able now to watch their movements, and he noted one new fact—namely, their systematic attention to ventilation. In hot weather from four to six wasps were continually stationed at the hole of egress, and, while leaving space for entrance or exit, they created a steady current of fresh air by the exceedingly rapid motion of their wings. After a long course of this vigorous exercise the ventilators were relieved by other wasps. During cool weather only two wasps at a time were usually thus engaged.

When Spiders Molt.

When a spider is preparing to molt it stops eating for several days and fastens itself by a short line of web to one of the main lines of its snare, which holds it firmly while it proceeds to undress. The skin cracks all around the thorax and is held only by the front edge. Next the abdomen is uncovered. Now comes the struggle to free the legs. It works and kicks vigorously and seems to have very hard work. But continued perseverance of about fifteen minutes brings it out of the old dress. It seems almost lifeless and is limp and helpless for several minutes, but gradually it comes back to life and looks brighter and prettier than before. To young people this is an operation of extreme interest.

Game of Neighbors.

Arrange the chairs in a circle or in one or more rows, then blindfold one-half of the company (players will either volunteer or draw lots for the bandage) and conduct them to seats, leaving a vacant chair on the left of each. In perfect silence the nonblinded now take their seats on the empty chairs. The aim of the blindfolded is to find out who his or her neighbor is. To enable this to be done a chorus is started by the nonblindfolded only, who may, if they choose, disguise their voices. Some of the blindfolded are sure to identify their neighbors, and those who succeed in doing so are entitled to recover their sight and to bandage the eyes of their neighbors, who must take their places.

Hidden Planets.

Find the name of a planet in each of the following sentences. The letters that spell it are consecutive:

1. How can you mar so beautiful a picture?

2. Uncle Ruthven uses his horse daily.

3. Theresa, turn my music for me, please.

4. You ran us down like everything.

Answers.—1. Mars. 2. Venus. 3. Saturn. 4. Uranus.

Mounted Newsboys.

In Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay, many of the newsboys who deliver the afternoon papers are mounted on horseback. This city has a population of 300,000 and has extensive suburbs. It is through these suburbs that the newsboys ride. We doubt that they arrive much more rapidly than does the American boy with his bicycle.—American Boy.

My Roller Skates.

My roller skates are good as wings
To carry me about,
For kids they are the finest things
That ever were brought out.

Along the street, around the square,
On flying feet I go;
I use my good skates everywhere,
For walking is too slow.

If mamma sends me to the store
I take my skates along
And quickly reach the grocer's door
With my swift strokes and strong.

Then back again without delay
I speed o'er stone and brick,
That often I hear mamma say,
"How could you go so quick?"
—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Burdette and Riley.

Here is a gentle little story which Strickland Gillilan told. It concerns the late Robert J. Burdette and James Whitcomb Riley and happened during Burdette's last summer on earth.

Somebody said to Riley:

"There's one thing about Bob Burdette that particularly impresses me. When he says, 'God bless you,' he means it."

"Yes," replied Riley, "and God does [illegible] Dealer.

Good Form

Announcing an Engagement.

If you are to make the announcement at a luncheon of your friends, which is a very popular method of announcing one's engagement, you can very satisfactorily herald the announcement by some message written on the place cards. Choose place cards having some bridal or wedding design, such as a tiny bride and groom, wedding bells or hearts. The bridal couple is perhaps the most effective design.

Write across the back some such sentence as "Wedding bells are soon to ring." When the girls come into the dining room and see all these bride and groom cards they will naturally take them up and read what is written on the back. Then you may take your place standing at the head of the table and, holding up your hand, call attention to your engagement ring.

Or, if you prefer to make the announcement at an evening party, choose any game in which your guests have to select partners. Have provided as many cardboard hearts (such as attractive valentine cards) as there are couples. Have each heart cut into two sections on a zigzag line, each heart being differently cut. One-half of each card must be given to one of the girls and the other half to the young man who is to be her partner.

When it comes time to select partners and match up the sections of the cut hearts, let all of your guests, your fiance excepted, find their partners first. Then, taking the arm of your fiance, both you and he having a section of a heart of larger size than the others, step where you can stand in front of all your guests and holding up the two sections of the heart match them together, at the same time showing your engagement ring.

Or you might have two hearts wreathed together in some way with a satin ribbon and hold these up before your guests. They will at once understand the significance of the united hearts.

Things to Do and Not to Do.

A woman who is untidily or carelessly dressed is quite as rude as a man without a collar. He would never dream of going out without something around his throat, yet she will appear in public with a divorce in the region of the waist, a few buttons and hooks missing, her hair bundled up anyhow and her shoes down at the heel. Not only is she exceedingly unattractive, but she is being actually discourteous to the folk who are obliged to look at her.

It is usually either nervousness or thoughtlessness that prompts a woman to display her worst side to the world. She will take a seat that is offered to her in a crowded car without a word of thanks or else will make the chivalrous person feel still more embarrassed by a quick and emphatic refusal to profit by his generosity.

Or perhaps she will rush through swing doors without bothering to notice if any one is likely to be caught in the rebound, elbow people who are in her way, walk on the wrong side of the street or fail to remember that she must always bow first to her male acquaintances before they raise their hats.

Consideration for others and a desire to be inconspicuous always mark the well bred person in public. It is still more important that in the home this consideration should not be pushed aside like an irksome duty. It is a mistake to encourage indifferent manners toward those who are lived with day after day. It is just as much trouble to be rude as to be polite, and intimacy in the home should not be made the peg on which to hang countless petty bickerings and little errors in good manners.

Ignore Social Errors.

Do you know how to meet the social break—how to pass it off lightly or ignore it if it is made intentionally, or how to cover it or even to take it upon yourself if it is made blindly?

There is one sort of social break that takes a great deal of courage to meet in the tactful womanly manner, and that is the break when some one tells you something disagreeable she has heard about you. Besides the pain that such information always causes, there is always an element of curiosity that makes you yearn to hear all. But put down this curiosity; show the greatest indifference about any sort of slander that may be brought to your ears.

"Oh, please don't tell me. I like to be liked, you know," laughed a young woman when her neighbor volunteered some malicious gossip she had gleaned about her.

"Well, I'm sorry; that is my misfortune," you might say the next time your attention is called to the animosity of another toward you. Remember that the woman of social importance—the woman who has a place of consequence to fill anywhere—will always have fault found with her, and there are always plenty of persons who will bring you news of this fault on the slightest encouragement. Repeating this sort of gossip is one of the worst of social errors, and, no matter how high the social standing or how great the education of the person who repeats it, the part of the woman of refinement and tact is always to meet it by disregarding it.

CHIC STREET FROCK.

Early Summer Model of White Gabardine Shows Pleasing Details.

BRAIDED STREET COSTUME.

White is to be much worn this season, and many of the advance models are shown in the shops. The one shown here is of white gabardine richly braided. The blouse has long tight sleeves, and the box plaited skirt has side pockets, which are braided and tasseled.

One of the new white suits seen at a southern resort had an unusual belt. It was of dull white leather about two inches wide, perhaps narrower. It was fastened in front by means of a leather covered buckle, and on the left side, a few inches from the buckle, was a little pocket, just about the width of the belt. It clasped shut with a snap fastener.

White belts on blue serge suits are a feature of the spring modes. This striking contrast of the white against the somber background produces just the note of chic needed in the plain little tailor made suits.

Needlework Notes.

—To make a good oven cloth fold a worn Turkish towel double and stitch round the edges from corner to corner. Make a loop of tape or, quicker still for the busy woman, fasten a safety pin in one corner to hang the cloth by, and you have a most useful "oven" cloth with which to handle hot dishes from the oven or kettles on the top of the stove, hot plates, etc. Have it hung close by the stove so that it is always at hand.

Use old lace curtains for window cloths. They give the window an extra polish and are quickly dried. Old underwear if cut into shape and hemmed double make most acceptable wash cloths.

New York Ice Cream.

Fill a sherbet glass nearly full of vanilla ice cream; add three tablespoonfuls of ice cold grapejuice, crown with whipped cream and two maraschino cherries.

DON'T OVERPAMPER CHILD

Don't start out with the idea that because an only child is so very precious he is naturally delicate also. He is probably quite as strong as other little ones, but you will make him fragile if you take too much care of him.

Don't keep him all to yourself, but encourage him to mix with other children as much as possible. As he has no brothers and sisters, he needs a whole host of little friends to keep him in good spirits.

Don't wait on him hand and foot or call him "poor lamb" or spoil and indulge him "because he is the only one." If these things are permitted they will make him quite unfit to hold his own among other boys, and when he goes to school he will have a very miserable time indeed.

Don't interfere too much with his games and amusements. Children, even if they have brothers and sisters, often like to play alone. It is a mistake to think that an only child needs entertaining all the time. If you let him get into the habit of expecting this he will very soon become a nuisance to himself and every one else in the house.

THE JITNEY BUS.

The New Factor In Cheap and Rapid Transit.

Six months ago the term jitney was unknown in the east. Derived as it is supposed to be from a combination of the words jot and tittle, with the "ney" suffix as a diminutive, the word has long been in use on the Pacific coast. Now, however, it will appear that jitney is quite a common word, and with such busses operating in Philadelphia and other cities it may be said that this peculiar type of conveyance has come to stay. Briefly, the jitney bus is an automobile charging 5 cents per passenger, jitney being the slang for a nickel.

With the cost of automobiles constantly going down, there is no reason why there should not be a five cent fare for reasonable distances. During the past few weeks the jitney bus has appeared in cities all over the west. It is supposed to have originated in Houston, Tex. During one past month 800 of them have appeared on the streets of San Francisco. Other figures as given in the news columns of the paper are 100 cars in Kansas City, Fort Worth 141 and Seattle 300. Associations to operate jitney busses are forming in Milwaukee, Denver, Ogden, Omaha, Vancouver, Portland, Oakland, Des Moines, St. Louis, Joplin and Baltimore. Feb. 1 ten routes were established in Omaha. Kansas City has twenty-seven. At the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco 2,000 jitneys are expected to operate along the road to the exposition.

Street car men are alive to the situation, and measures are being taken to meet the new competition. The strap hangers of America are in glee over the new situation, which will give them the choice of auto buses or street cars. The present indication points to adoption of the auto bus lines in nearly every large city of the United States where the operating taxes permit.

While motor buses for carrying passengers have been established in European cities for many years, London depending largely upon them, the use of autos at the nickel fare usually charged by street car lines had never been generally tried out.

In Washington several 5 cent buses are in operation, but they had never been considered a success or a serious competitor with the street cars. It was in Phoenix, Ariz., that the present sweep had its origin. During a strike there in 1913 the 5 cent buses were put to work, and so successful were they that the other western cities adopted the idea, private capital coming forward when it was found that the small buses could be made to pay a profit.—Town Development Magazine.

A Municipal Pier and Railway.

The municipal pier recently dedicated in Santa Cruz is the result of the work of a committee of private citizens who realized the need for water transportation facilities in addition to rail facilities at Santa Cruz in order to forward the city's industrial interests. Santa Cruz in former years depended entirely upon the Southern Pacific railroad. The fine harbor which Monterey bay provides made shipping by water easily possible, however. The citizens therefore voted almost unanimously in favor of issuing bonds in the sum of $165,000 for the building of a municipal pier. The pier was completed in December. It is a little over half a mile long and eighty feet wide at its outer end. A railway, also municipally owned and operated, runs its entire length, and this connects with the Southern Pacific railroad at its shore terminus, also with the Ocean Shore railroad. Two lines of steamers now touch at the port of Santa Cruz. It is said that a decided improvement has already been observed in the city as a result of the construction of the municipal pier.

City Bureau of Foreign Trade.

The Houston (Tex.) chamber of commerce has added to its various departments that of a bureau of foreign trade in view of the probabilities that the trade relations between Houston and the Latin-American countries will undergo important developments that will open up vast new fields for the manufacturers and larger jobbing houses of Houston. The bureau is not restricted to Latin-American trade, however, but includes possibilities of trade with Japan and other countries. In addition to providing the bureau with a library, including commercial directories of the principal cities of those countries, arrangements have also been made under which the services of translators will be at the disposal of members of the chamber of commerce for writing letters in German and Spanish.

CHEERFUL SURROUNDINGS.

It is a prophetic fact that some of the biggest corporations in the country have come to believe that it pays to make the surroundings for their workmen pleasant and cheerful as well as sanitary. Flowers don't make plows, but they make more plows. In other words, the healthier and more contented a man is the more work—and better work—he can do and will do. No matter how good or how poor a workman a man may be, he is still human, and he cannot help but respond to his surroundings. If they are cleanly he will be cleanly; if they are cheerful he will be cheerful; if they are bright and energetic he will be that much more efficient.

THE NEW WALK.

The new walk which has appeared with the new skirts was at once adopted by the Frenchwomen on the Riviera.

And now in the Casino at Monte Carlo and on the Promenade des Anglais at Nice all the women of the allied nations and their American cousins are trying to imitate her movements.

Since women have accustomed themselves to tight skirts and semi-Japanese steps for so long, it will be rather difficult to change the way of walking all in a moment. The sport and the golf steps are even less desirable than are the little, short, quick steps of yesterday. It must be borne in mind that not only are the skirts full and, in the case of evening frocks, flounced, but also they are cut well above the ankle so that much attention must be paid to the feet.

The body is held very erect and the knees kept tight and what the dancing mistresses call "turned out." The steps must be medium in length and slightly springy. But care must be taken not to jerk or the skirt will not hang well, and there must be no suggestion of dancing in the movement; also the arms must on no account be allowed to swing. The correct movement requires practice and patience, but it may perhaps prove a distraction from war thoughts.—Monaco Letter in London Mail.

DOMESTIC DEMON.

Disorder Condemned by an Old Chinese Proverb.

"Invite not Disorder in thy home lest her demons lay it in waste."

This is a Chinese saying, so old that nobody knows now by whom it was uttered. But the sage who delivered it ages ago knew all there was to know of home life. He had looked into the hearts of men, women and children, and in thus personifying disorder it was plain he regarded the quality as the dire spiritual influence which all mismanagement would exert. The demons are not only those of violent and unruly tempers, but the harmful effects of confusion and wastefulness. Every unprofitable phase of home life was undoubtedly embraced in the profound saying, whose philosophy is as valuable today as it ever was.

To every woman who shall ever make a home this solemn injunction was spoken. It holds all the creed of home life, and so unto the end of time it will have meaning. In spite of diversified interests and activities, women are still the keepers of the home, and upon their wisdom and love and fidelity depend most of its comfort and peace and prosperity. They are the makers of the most telling laws in this sphere, and as their deeds are good or bad so the home takes its color from them.

DRESSING TABLE ACCESSORY

A Convenient Article For the Boudoir Made of Hand Embroidery.

Among the hundred and one things which adorn milady's boudoir a tray will always be found. This tray might be ornamental. More often it is simply useful. Pictured here is a tray which is at once useful and beautiful. As shown, it was made of yellow satin embroidered with dainty white daisies with black French knot centers. This oblong piece of yellow embroidered satin is slipped under the glass top of a tray frame, and a handsome dressing table accessory is the result.

HAIRPIN TRAY.

The Workbag.

Cross stitch in tones of blue continues to be very popular and is used chiefly on table linen, towels and pillows. This design is intended for a square or rectangular pillow; you can use it either as printed or turned in the opposite direction for the ends of a table runner.

Use any material, either white or oyster gray, and work the dark portion of the design in dark blue and for the gray use a light blue.

Baste a piece of canvas over the material and with the newspaper pattern as a guide count the threads as you work the stitches. If the weave of the canvas is finer than indicated in the design allow two squares of the [illegible] to one of the [illegible]. When finished unravel the canvas and remove without disturbing the cross stitch.

An Opportunity For Housewives

The big $25,000 stock of our Gloversville store—displayed in our basement—is going fast. The housewives of Fulton quickly recognized this great opportunity for saving money on Kitchenware, Decorative China, Curtains, Hosiery, Dry Goods, Etc., so you had better come soon as every day the stock gets smaller. These are staple, first quality goods, bought to sell at doubled the price. All prices are in plain figures.

50 Cents on the Dollar

Household Articles

Enamel Pie Tins, Bread and Cake Tins, Tin Saucepans, Forks, Can Openers, Clothes Pin Bags and hundreds of others 1c

Pudding Tins, Dippers, Dover Egg Beaters, Tin Teapots, Large Meat Forks, Soap Holders and a host of others.... 3c

Cake, Pie and Bread Tins, Dairy Pans, Covered Buckets, Mincing Knives, Sink Brushes, Oil Cans, 2-in-One Shoe Polish, pound of 20-Mule-Team Borax, etc. 5c

Large preserving Kettles, large Dippers, Collenders, Nickel Trays, Enameled Drinking Cups, large lip Saucepans, Angel Food Tins, etc.................... 10c

Women's Clothing

Aprons, Shirstwaists, Petticoats, Kimonos, Muslin Undergarments, Neckwear and many others 10c

Muslin Petticoats, Silk Waists, Sweaters, House Dresses, Silk Kimonos, Infants' Wear, Wash Dresses, Skirts, Children's Dresses, etc., formerly sold up to $2.00, on sale at................ 69c

Wmen's Wash Dresses, white and colored, Skirts, Coats, Children's Dresses, Kimonos, Silk Slips, etc., formerly sold up to $3.00, on sale at............. 88c

These High Grade Garments are good styles and are mostly single odd sizes, Dresses, Coats, Raincapes, Raincoats, White Coats, Skirts, Children's Dresses & Coats, formerly sold up to $7.50 $1.50

The above articles and prices are representative of our immense basement stock. Besides these we have thousands of others equally as good. Don't delay ---tomorrow may be too late for what you are looking for.

Manufacturer's overstock--100 New Spring Dresses, value up to $3, on sale Sat. at $1.25

M. Katz & Co.

Genuine gold filled Rings, value up to $1, on sale for one week only at . 19c

Department Store — 63-65 First Street

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 6—Senator Elihu Root, chairman of the State Constitutional Convention, is facing what he regards as a somewhat perplexing problem; the distinguished presiding officer is at a loss as to what to do with the numerous newspaper correspondeents who have been assigned to cover the deliberations of the one hundred and sixty-eight delegates Senator Root has devoted the greater portion of his public career to national politics and the ways and privileges of the men who write of federal affairs are familiar to him and his experience with New York State newspapermen and their methods of collecting the State news is limited in comparsion.

During the legislative session about fifty newspapesmen are sent to Albany to scan the political aspects of bills and debates. These half a hundred reporters are accorded practically the same privileges as the senators and assemblymen. They may interview the members during the course of the sessions, examine the bills and resolutions as they are introduced and wander about the senate and assembly chambers unchallenged.

Senator Root believes that such freedom is greatly to the detriment or order and dispatch and feels that he must curtail certain of the privileges heretofore enjoyed by the newspapermen.

In the assembly and senate chambers there are a limited number of seats, but since the sessions of the legislature continue generally until late in the afternoon, the same seats can be used by the representatives of both evening and morning papers, thus there has been no difficulty so far as the seating capacity of the two houses is concerned.

The sessions of the Constitutional Convention have thus far all been held in the morning and since there have been no late afternoon meetings, it has been necessary for the morning newspapermen to attend the morning sessions. As a consequence, the seating capacity of the Assembly chamber has been overtaxed.

Then too, there has been considerable conversation among the reporters which does not accord with the ideas of Senator Root. He also frowns upon the custom of interviewing the delegates upholding him in this.

In order to accommodate all of the newspapermen, Senator Root has suggested that in the Assembly chamber, a platform be built over the rostrum of the speaker. Upon this platform he would place the reporters.

Up to the present time no such proposition has ever been broached, yet the timeliness of the plan has appealed to the newspapermen who are doing the convention.

The cost of erecting the platform has not as yet been estimated; nor have the details been worked out. It will be large enough to comfortably seat at least forty of the correspondents. Possibly there will be enough room upon it for the entire fifty.

PARISH AID ELECTS OFFICERS FOR YEAR

Activity continues to mark all work connected with the Zion Episcopal church. The latest meeting of imporance to engage one of the auxiliaries was the annual business meeting of the Parish Aid Society held at the home of the Rev. Mr. peters, 3d and Cayuga sts., Tuesday evening, when the following officers were elected:

Mrs. John Henderson, president; Mrs. George W. Hackett, 1st vice president; Mrs. Frank Painter, 2d vice president; Mrs. F. L. Jennings, secretary; Mrs. Albert Ostrander, treasurer.

After the business session a delightgoing to be deprived of the home patiring officers.

"CAN HARDLY WAIT TO GET EVENING TIMES"

Joseph Newton, who will leave the city soon to take a position of responsibility in Augusta, Maine, is not made known last night at The Evenper— your home daily paper, as he flag into the new field of activity. ing Times office he wants Fulton's "Herald of Progress' to follow his flag into the new field of activity. Joseph's name stands now on the debit side of The Times' ledger, one year in advance.

THE THIEF

The Quirk Keeping Up Pace Set Early in the Week, in Character of Plays

Revival week at The Quirk is proving one of Manager Darleigh's strongest attractions. The character of the plays shown upon the screen speaks well, indeed, for the efforts made to give theatre goers the benefit of modern picture plays.

The Cast

Marie Louise Voisin .... Dorothy Donnelly
Richard Voisin ...... Richard Buhler
Raymond Lagardes (Their Friend) .... Edgar Davenport
Isabelle Lagardes (His Wife).... .... Iva Shepard
Fernand Lagardes (Their Son) .. .. Harry Spingler
Gondoin (The Detective) .... Geo. De Carlton

Gondoin, the detective, with a quiet smile of triumph on his face, is about to slip the hand cuffs on the wrists of Fernand Lagarde, the weak young fool who, fascinated by Marie Louise, is willing to go to any lengthss to win a smile from her. Horror-struck by the semmingly overwhelming proof that their adored and only son is the mysterious thief, Raymond Lagardes, and his family stand aghast. Marie Louise Visin, the beautiful young wife of Richard Voisin, the banker, watches with burning eyes as Fernand is about to be led away. Suddenly she breaks from her husband's restraining arms and shrieks hysterically:—

"It is I—I who am the thief! Fernand is innocent. He would sacrifice himself for me!"

This is the intensely dramatic climax of a situation that begins inevitably when Marie Louise, despite her large allowance, finds herself desperately in debt to dressmakers, milliners and modists. Her desire to retain the lasting love of her husband, who fairly worships her when she wears a becoming creation, and demands that she be the best dressed woman in their set, has led her to steal in the first place. The habit once established it becomes dreadfully easy to her to seize the chance to purloin whenever the opportunity offers. She grows bolder and more desperate as the ring she has forged about herself grows tighter. Fernand, crazed by his calflove of the woman of the world, is suspected by inspector Gondoin, the shrewd detective who has been called in to solve, if possible, the long series of baffling thefts.

Gondoin is taken into the house as an apparent guest. He shadows Fernand and becomes convinced that the love-sick youth is the thief. Marie Louise escapes suspicion, except by her husband. But even he is on the wrong track, for he attributes the mysterious source of the money that pays for her elaborate gowns, to an intrigue. Furiously in their bedroom at night, after they had returned from a gay party, he tries to wring the truth from her. Fernand learns that Marie Louise is the real thief, but fatuously, to prove his love, allows the guilt to be fastened upon himself. It is only Marie's sudden revulsion of feeling that makes her bare her soul at the eleventh hour and declare the truth. Richard, learning it, forgives her and they turn their faces toward South America and a new life together.

Community Notes

Mrs. Joel Parker of 206 Voorhees st., is entertaining her neice and nephew of Superior, Wis.

* * *

Let there be merriment at the news of a catch made by merchant Harris Rosenbloom, whose Waltonian ability while trying to snare a brook trout, in the Oneida river near Three River Point on Wednesday, resulted in the capture of a fine large shad. The catch was on exhibition in H. P. Allen store today.

* * *

Gervose Powell has returned to his home in this city after visiting his sister, Margaret at Augustinian Academy at Carthage, N. Y.

* * *

Ms. Gileas S. Pipe of S. 31 st., has returned from a visit with friends in New York city.

* * *

Sympathy for Louis Youngs of 502 Rochester st., is expressed on all sides because of the injuries he received yesterday at the Volney Paper Co.'s mill, when one hand became caught between cylinders he was operating. The hand clear to the elbow was badly lacerated.

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

New carload of Bowker's Fertilizers. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Sale of 50 Dozen Waldorf House and Porch Dresses

Dresses made of novelty silk, ginghams, Irish lawns, dimities, linen crash, crinkled seersuckers, checked ginghams, also plain black lawns.

Sizes 13 to 42. Dresses made to retail up to $2.50; on sale Saturday morning at 9 o'clock for................ 82c EACH

SEE THEM IN OUR FIRST STREET SHOW WINDOWS

J. C. O'BRIEN

ANNOUNCEMENT

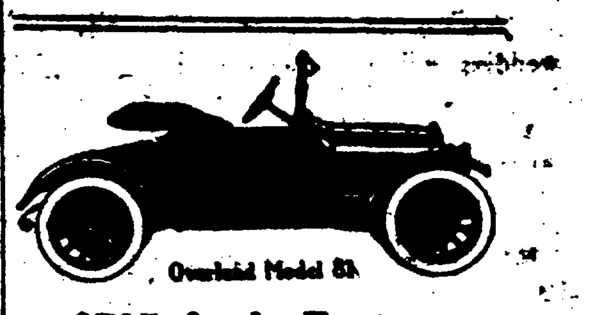
This establishment is now in its new quarters at

123½ CAYUGA STREET

and is prepared to continue its good service to all its patrons

D. RICHARDSON

Ladies'—Tailor—Gentlemen's
Dry Cleaning, Repairing, Dyeing



Overland Model 81

$795 f.o.b. Factory

VANWAGENEN, Inc. Agents

HAPPY HOUR THEATRE

TODAY

Two Reel Feature
"HIS CAPTIVE"
with Frank Lloyd
and Four Others

TOMORROW
"THE HEART-BREAKERS"
Big Two-reel Feature with Charles Ogle and Muriel Ostriche

"THE ANIMATED WEEKLY"
and Four Others

Admission 5c

Storage Batteries Charged

Let us wire your car for electric lights.
Batteries, fuses and lamps for autos.
Head quarters for artistic lighting fixtures and shades.

THE ELECTRIC SHOP

W. J. NICHT 22 S. FIRST ST.

THE QUIRK

Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TO-DAY
Dorothy Donnelly in
"THE THIEF"
Daniel Frohman's N. Y. Lyceum Theatre Success

FRIDAY
Charles Richman in
"THE IDLER"

SATURDAY
"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"
with Claire Whitney and Stuart Holmes

By Request
CHARLES CHAPLIN
in
"HIS NEW JOB"

NEW CRUSADE IS WANTED

Neatness, Cleanliness and Order Is a City's Real Asset

Utica, Thursday.—There was once in this city a crusade against loose papers in the streets. It was carried on with some vigor on the part of several organizations and finally extended to the schools. It was effective, and was a very great factor in making the streets, lawns and parks of this city more attractive. By slow degrees the effect of the crusade has disappeared, and the evil, while not as prominent as it was at one time, is again presenting itself in a manner that cannot be overlooked by those who have regard for the appearance of the city as a whole.

Tidiness always commends itself. It has a moral uplift, no matter where it makes its appearance—in home, office, street, park or bnsiness place. It may be that loose papers thrown in the streets or dropped by careless and unthinking people who have no thought but their own convenience, do not bring us ill health. Perhaps they are not to blame for the spread of scarlet fever, diphtheria, typhoid, tuberculosis or smallpox,and thehe has been no suggestion that they breed and feed these disorders; but it is very certain that they have their effect upon people from a moral standpoint. Those who are careless and unthinking in these matters become also careless and unthinking in other respects. They lost their abhorrenee of the run-down-at-the-heel appearance of a cityfi or of their own premises, or of their own persons, and when people get in that frame of mind they are but a short step from carelessness in business, and so they finally adopt slovenly habits, and general neglect.

Neat homes are inviting. Those who live in them are cheerful, happy and contented persons, and those who visit them always feel that they have passed through a pleasant experience. A neat place of business has about it an air of prosperousness, and those who work in neat rooms are inspired to greater endeavors, are rested thru their contact with order and feel lees fatigue at the end of the day. A neat town or city expresses the character of its people, gives notive to the world that those who live there are anxious to make a real gain for civilization and place their community in that high rank that distinguishes it and elevates it above the sordid, ragged, beggardly, filthy conditions that chacteride those cities of which we read in countries where the people are but little elevated above the cattle in closed yards or the swine confined in pens.

The outdoor season is at hand, and everyone who walks along neat streets or spends an afternoon or evening in the open parks where the trees, grass, walk,s groves, fountain basins or paths are orderly and unlittered, will recive greater benefit, gain better thoughts and be lifted higher in moral strength than could possibly be expected of those who are compelled to move through scenes marred by untidiness. One of the things which it has never been possible to explain is the inclination of many people to destroy, break, mar, kill, injure, deface, or in some manner befoul those things that are provided for their use and pleasure in parks and streets, or upon lawns or around public buildings. One may see upon almost any day in spring or summer places where people of supposed refinement have spent an hour or two in the open—some picnic party or family gathering—where the grounds are left in a state of disorder that might be expected had it been given over to the use of a drove of hogs. Or one may notice upon the sward of lawns and parks all through the city many places where old papers bags, boxes, the skins of fruit and great numbers of handbill advertisements have been thrown broadcast by those who do not think, or who do not care, for appearances, and who never give a thought to the fact that it is just such heedlessness, just such disregard as this that very seriously diminishes the fame of the city and the character of the individual.

There ought to be started a new crusade for tidiness of streets, lawns, parks and public places, and in some manner the individual ought to be made to know that the whole question of appearance depends entirely upon himself.

JAMES DOYLE

James Doyle, 80, died yesterday afternoon at the Lee Memorial hospital where he had been taken to receive treatment for an attack of pneumonia.

Mr. Doyle came to America from Ireland when about 10 years old. In early years he worked upon railroad constuction, later coming to Fulton. Here he acquired knowledge of the shoemaker's trade, engaging in business in Wall st. for about 50 years.

Mr. Doyle as considered the best known authority on Fulton history, his memory being clear on every detail. He was married to Catherine Delaney Doyle sixty-two years ago. He is survived by three sons, John, Edward and Bernard, and two daughters, Mrs. aCtherine Griffin and Ellen Doyle, and one sister, Mrs. Patrick Colman of Fulton.

The funeral will be held at 9.30 o'clock Saturday morning at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Rev. John L. Lindsman officiating. Burial will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

Her Business.

"It's no use trying to steal a march on that pretty girl at the glove counter."

"Why not?"

"She has a way of making every one show their hand."—Atlanta Constitution.

SUFFRAGE COMMITTEES

Appointed by Mrs. L. W. Mott For County Convention to Be Held in Syracuse.

Mrs. Luther W. Mott, Assembly district leader for the Oswego woman suffrage organization, has appointed the following committees for the county conventions to be held at the Kanatenah Club, Syracuse, May 15th, at 11 a.m.:

Executive—Mrs. William V. Burr, Oswego; Mrs. A. D. Clark, Fulton; Mrs. J. S. Stevenson, Hannibal; Mrs. A. C. Baxter, Scriba; Mrs. Emma Garlick, Cleveland; Mrs. G. H. Angevine, Constantia; Mrs. C. W. Bradbury, Altmar; Mrs. George A. Jackson, Palermo; Mrs. H. C. Low, Central Square; Mrs. R. W. Cagewin, Williamstown; Mrs. Oscar Green, West Monroe; Mrs. Harry Short, Bernhards Bay; Mrs. S. M. Barker, New Haven; Mrs. C. I. Miller, Pulaski; Mrs. G. R. Blount, Lacona; Mrs Charles F. Boyd, Granby Center, Mrs Ella Davis Montague, Orwell; Mrs Florence P. Corey, Pennellville; Mrs L. Carrier, Phoenix; Mrs Grace H. Bonner, Richland; Miss Mary A. Davis, Parish.

Reception—Mrs. John S. Parsons, Oswego; Miss Anna Richards, Parish; Mrs Ruth Hawkes, Phoenix; Mrs A. W. Wright, Richland; Mrs V. D. Pierce, Altmar; Mrs Harvey McMurchy, Fulton; Mrs F. Lockwood, Hanibal; Mrs Ann Blair, Cleveland; Mrs E. B. Reed, Constantia; Mrs E. V. Hamilton, Central Square; Mrs W. D. Rossa, Williamstown; Mrs Dellia Darrows, Granby Center; Mrs Jennie B. Stone, Scriba; Mrs Stevens, Fulton, Luncheon—Mrs. Alfred H. Ames, Oswego; Mrs Ida Edick, Parish; Mrs Charles Loomis, Phoenix; Mrs. Ella G. Finsted, Orwell; Mrs S. F. Thomas, Granby Center; Mrs F. G. Kelsey, Williamstown; Mrs Lydia Dilts, Fulton; Mrs Stoddard, Scriba; Mrs C. W. App, Cleveland; Mrs G. E. Field, Altmar; Mrs E. J. Burton, Palermo; Mrs Ella Wood, Central Sq.; Mrs Henry D. Tucker, Fulton; Mrs M. J. Smith, Constantia; Mrs C. A. Ten Broeck, Pennellville.

Press—Mrs. Seamans, Pulaski; Mrs U. Z. Maltby, Oswego; Mrs. Braun, Fulton; Mrs. John M. Gill, Oswego; Miss Carrie L. Clark, Phoenix.

Finance—Mrs. Francis D. Culkin, Oswego; Miss Anna Post, Oswego; Mrs H. Reswick, Fulton; Mrs. W. Barber, Cleveland; Mrs F. R. Wood, Constantia; Mrs J. Sterling, Altmar; Miss L. Jennings, Fulton; Mrs. H. Rathbun, Williamstown; Miss Minnie G. True, Granby Center; Mrs. George Lattimer, Orwell; Miss Alice Fish, Phoenix; Mrs E. E. Greenland, Richland; Mrs. Ella Tallcott, Parish.

Teeth Put to Many Uses.

All Eskimos have good teeth, but they are subjected to severe usage, being used for pinchers, vises and fluting machines. The teeth are employed in drawing bolts, untying knots, holding the mouthpiece of a drill, shaping boot soles and stretching and thawing skins. When they become uneven from hard usage they are leveled off with a file or whetstone.

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Clark Irish Harp—Will sell cheap; brand new. Just the thing for a home. Address Z., Evening Times office. tf.

Girl Wanted—General housework on farm. Mrs. Stanley Holmes, Phoenix, R. D. 2. Phone 5621. 118

Lost—Kitten, white with blue eyes; answers to name of Muttie. Return to Virginia Spencer, 302 Academy. 118

Desirable Offices to Rent—Inquire of Glenn A. Ryther, 59 S. 1st st., Fulton, N.Y 120

For Sale—High-class collapsible Go-cart, in good condition; cheap. 208 Highland st. 120

House to Rent—210 S. 3d st. Inquire D. C. Draper, 416 Rochester. 121

For Sale—Baby's bassinet; also toilet basket. 309 Pratt st. tf

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCully, 202 S. 3d st. tf

Rooms to Rent—with or without board. 220 West 1st st., north. 117c

To Rent—2 apartments. Phone 3288. 120

Those You Know

The "home paper" is your paper. Call 45 on the telephone when you have a news item of home folks.

* * *

The engagement of Miss Eva Morley and Ralph Wilcox was announced to their friends at a party given by Miss Grace Chesbro at her home in State st., Tuesday evening. The wedding will take place in June.

* * *

Mrs. George Pomphret is entertaining [illegible] Gillen of Syracuse.

* * *

Mrs. [illegible] Willard has recovered from a recent illness.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. George Grant were week-end guests of out of town friends.

* * *

Mrs. John Hollenbeck of Palermo has been the guest of Fulton friends.

* * *

Rev. M. G. Buck will make an address at the Baptist church day services at Baldwinsville, Thursday.

* * *

Orin Henderson has entertained Mr. and Mrs. Edward Henderson from Minneapolis, Minn., for some time.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Abbey have as guests, Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Distin of Mt. Pleasant.

* * *

Governor Ferris of Michigan, was in the city to attend the funeral of his brother-in-law, E C Whitaker

* * *

Mrs. George Simons of Oswego called on Fulton friends recently.

* * *

Miss Loretta Donahue of Walradt st., has been [illegible] Oswego friends.

Best makes of Carriages. VanWageenen, Inc. adv122

All Are Welcome

to attend the

Grand Spring Opening

of

THE ONYX STORE

Saturday, May Eighth

Nineteen fifteen

SOUVENIRS

[illegible] Full Orchestra

[illegible]

POLITICAL POT BEGINS TO BOIL

Both Great Parties Have Organized Press Associations; Funds Needed

Washington, May 6, (Special correspondence).—For the first time in American history a political campaign is beginning eighteen months in advance of the day of the National election. Republicans started activity by organizing the Republican Publicity Association, which announced its purpose to gather and disseminate information regarding the principles, policies and achievements of the Republican party, and to point out the defects and failures of Democracy.

The organizations was no sooner formed than the Democrats became active, and through former Representative A. Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania, soon to assume the office of Chief Justice of the Court of Claims, sent a circular letter to faithful Democrats throughout the country urging contributions to a fund for the purpose of counteracting the efforts of the Republican Publicity Association.

It is evident, therefore, that the relative merits of Republican and Democratic policies will be fully and freely discussed in 1915, instead of waiting until the summer of 1916 to submit facts and arguments to American voters.

Alarmed over the activity of the Republicans, Mr. Palmer sought to prejudice the American people against the leaders of that party by asserting that they were engaged in "fat frying." He overlooked the fact, of which American voters are fully aware, that the Democratic administration alone is in possession of the pan and controls the fire with which fat may be fried. Even though Republicans were so disposed, it would be impossible for them to bring pressure to bear upon large financial interests in order to secure campaign funds. The Democats are in absolute control of such governmental bodies as the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Reserve Banking System, and the Industrial Commission, as well as the Department of Justice, which conducts prosecutions of supposed violators of the law, and the Post Office Department which now assumes to declare what lines of business may be excluded from use of the mails. The reference to "fat frying" by Democratice leaders merely directs public attention to the indisputable fact that if any finaneial interest contributes money to any cause because of fear, that contribution will be made to a Democratic, and not a Republican fund.

However, the voters of the United States are chiefly interested in the accuracy of facts that may be submitted and the soundness of arguments that may be made. They will not permit the Democrats to dodge any issues by making vague references to "fat frying." Explanations of violation of campaign pledges will be read with more interest. Why the Democratic administration abandoned the pledge of economy is a question the American people desire to see answered. They would like to know what excuse, if any, can be given for destruction of the policy adopted by Republicans of building up a strong diplomatic service free from politics or personal favoritism and on a standard that commanded the respect of all the leading nations of the world. And, most of all, the American people will want from the Democratic administration a thorough discussion of the effects of the Democratic tariff law which wrought havoc with American industry until the European war served as a bar to foreign importations and afforded American industry protection from cheap foreign competition. American business men will also expect the Democratic administration to explain why the postal service has been permitted to deteriorate when that service is of utmost importance to the speedy transaction of private as well as public business.

These are only a few of the problems that will be presented for the consideration of leaders of the Democratic party, but they are of such importance to the American people that any attempt at evasion will not serve to deflect attention from the main issues.

* * *

Speaking to the members of the Associated Press, at its recent meeting in New York, the President said that no nation is competent to sit in judgment upon another. He was referring, of course, to the European war; but probably every man in the company thought of [illegible] of Mexico [illegible] Mr. Wilson says no nation is competent to exercise is one which he has persistently attempted to impose upon Mexico. He has declared that Mexico must have not only the kind of government which he prefers, but that such government must be composed, not only of the kind of men, but of the very men whom he favors. The judgment which he denies to a nation he reserves for himself. The habits of a lifetime are not easily overcome—the schoolmaster's least of all.

* * *

Trans-Atlantic steamship owners figure that the European war will save $275,000,000 to the American people by shutting off tourist travel. The tourist will enjoy superior scenery and get the benefit of more healthful outings without carrying to foreign countries a quarter of a billion dollars of money nneded by American enterprise. In effect, it is an application of the principles laid down by Abraham Lincoln in his discussion of the tariff—that if we buy goods abroad, we get the goods and the foreigner gets the money, while if we buy at home, we have both the goods and the money. American tourists will get both health and pleasure, and America will keep the $275,000,000.

* * *

In private enterprise, explanations and excuses don't go. The employer of a traveling salesman doesn't want explanations; he wants orders. The manufacturer doesn't want excuses; he wants buyers. The employe who comes back with excuses instead of orders, soon loses his job. The Democratic administrations has had many explanations for the business depression that followed its accession to power. First it was "psychological," then a "state of mind," then finally the European war furnished a plausible excuse. But the American people, like all good business men, want public servants who deliver results, not explanations and excuses.

* * *

The Post Office Department started a free employment bureau and then discharged hundreds of its own employes. Think of the irony of it!

Pastor Holmes Refused to Advocate Brown Bill

(Continued from Page One)

the association approved of the bill is inaccurate and not to be credited."

Mr. Holmes further stated that the wording of section three of the bill would allow the Mayor, if he saw fit, to license a faro table in any saloon or public house of the city, or in any circus that might show here. The section reads as follows: (the portion in capitals is the one to which Mr. Holmes refers) To suppress disorderly houses, houses of ill fame, gambling, gaming tables, and all instruments and devices employed in gambling; to license, REGULATE OR RESTRAIN bowling, pool and billiard playing, and PLAYING OF GAMES OF CHANCE in public places.

ELOPEMENT POSSIBLE

Yesterday two of Fulton's thorobreds disappeared from their respective homes. They were "Dixie," a blooded French brindle bull dog, and "Muttie", a blue eyed white kitten. The former, the proud possession of George Moore of Emery st., and the latter the pet of Miss Virginia Spencer.

The absence of both pets was noted yesterday morning. Last evening's Times carried the two "lost ads." and in response Mrs. Fred Ure notified Dixie's owner this morning that Dixie is safe and sound in the Ure home. No word from Muttie has been heard. It is just possible the two started out into the wide world and finding it much too big started back, and as the streets bear no markers of course as a natural result the Times carried two "lost ads." last night.

Has anybody seen Muttie? If so "scat" her in the direction of Miss Virginia's home and receive her heartfelt thanks.

WEATHER FORECAST

Rain tonight and Friday; moderate shifting winds.

VISITING BALL PLAYERS WERE ENTERTAINED

The members of the Syracuse Freshmen baseball squad were the guests of the Fulton High School Athletic Association at a dance given at the Public Library last evening. About fifty young people enjoyed the affair and Miss VanBuren and Mr. Reynolds furnished the music.

The party broke up just before midnight in order that the Syracuse visitors might catch the last trolley. The committee in charge comprised Messrs. O'Brien, Webb, Martin and Fairchieves.

"BOSS RULE IS NECESSARY"

William Barnes Said Riff-Raff Couldn't Be Trusted

The nature of boss and machine rule as outlined by William Barnes was given by Theodore Roosvelt at yesterdays trial.

The Colonel went upon the stand at the end of a day congested with testimony about public printing and public money. He related what he alleged to be the substance of conversations he had with the former chairman of the Republican state committee over a period of from 1898 until he left the White house., H told his story with all the forcefulness at his command. In part, it follows:

"Mr. Barnes and I had many conversations upon the nature of the boss and the domination of the machine. There was more than one conversation concerning the franchise tax bill. Theer were some before Payne was removed; they were in the spring of 1899 and again in the beginning of 1900. Those conversations were upon the power of and the necessity for the machine under our system of party government.

Talked in Many Places

"Generally, our conversations were held in the executive mansion at Albany; wew ere entirely alone. Others weer held in the Governor's and the secretary's chamber in the executive offices at the Capitol. We were entirely alone then too. At one time Mr. Barnes said it was necessary that the head of the organization should have complete control and he instanced Albany county. He said the riffraff could not be trusted to handle political affairs without a leader. He said they would misconduct themselves at the expense of property and that the government could not go on.

"Hhe said it was not necessary for the boss to issue order to executive officials and legislators and that they foundd out for themselves that if they did not support the organization they could not get bills thru, they would not be renominated and they could not secure funds with which to arry on campaigns. He said it was to their interest to lnd out what they should do and then do it.

"Mr. Barnes said: "You know the Senator does not bully. He does not have to." He said it was quite sufficient to have it underatood that if a man did not stand by the organization he got punished."

Roars of laughter came from the spectators, interrupting the Colonel.

Before he began to testify the attorneys for both sides engaged in a discussion with the court as to whether his evidence should be in mitigation of damages or justification. The Roosevelt lawyers wanted the Colonel's testimony to be admitted in both mitigation and justification, but Mr. Barne's attorneys argued that it should be only in mitigation. Justice Andrews, tentatively ruled with Mr. Barnes's counsel, but said that there was a possibility that the testimony might develop to be competent in justification. Then the first question was asked the Colonel. He was on the stand for less than an hour.

LOCAL CLERGYMAN AT BALDWINSVILLE CHURCH

Rev. M. G. Buck, pastor of the First Baptist church, will speak at Baldwinsville this evening before the annual meeting of the Baptist church of that place. Mr. Buck's address will be based on the words of Matthew XIII, "The Picture Gallery of the Church."

The meeting today will include addresses by other prominent missionaries both this afternoon and evening, and a supper will be served by the Ladies' Aid of the church at 6.30 o'clock.

"The New York Shop"

Our May Sale of Ready-to-Wear

is now in full swing and will be continued this week.

All New Stylish Apparel

25 NEW SUITS at this sale $10,00, $12.50 and $15.75.

25 NEW COATS at this sale $5.75, $7.50, $9.98, $12.50, $15.75 and up.

25 NEW DRESSES at this sale $5.00, $6.75, $9.85, $12.50, $15.75 and better.

Many NEW BLOUSES of the latest designs and materials at this sale at 98c, $1.50, $2.98, $3.50 and $5.00.

we are showing an EXTENSIVE LINE of DAINTY GOWNS in the new effects, colors and materials; VERY SUITABLE for the GIRL GRADUATE or the PRIZE SPEAKER.

NOTICE—Our store, commencing Monday, May 10, will be closed at 6:00 p. m. every day except Saturday.

M. J. McDONALD & CO.

ONEIDA STREET FULTON, N. Y.

Ask for National Merchandise Stamps, they save you

NEW YORK WOMAN GIVES AUBURN SEMINARY CHAIR

Auburn, N. Y., May 6.—Through the gift of Mrs. John S. Kennedy, of New York City, a chair of religious education will next fall be established at Auburn Theological Seminary. This was the announcement of President Stewart today in the course of the Seminary's 97th commencement exercises. The incumbent of the new professorship will be chosen within a few weeks.

A large number of eminent clergymen and religious workers are in Auburn this week, besides Dr. John H. Finley, New York State Commissioner of Education, who will speak at the alumni luncheon.

In the course of an address on church unity the Rev. Dr. John Scrimger, principal of the Presbyterian College, Montreal, criticized the priestliness in some Protestant sects and then denounced Unitarianism as a creed that "has never proved fatal to spiritual life in general."

Despite this criticism Dr. Scrimger insisted that church unity is not only possible but very likely to come about. He declared that even without the "high church" sects and Unitarianism church unity would come because "the great mass of protestantism still marches within the evangelical lines, including the Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, and Baptist churches of almost all shades, likewise the laity, if not the clergy, of the Episcopal and Lutheran churches in both worlds."

Dr. Scrimger concluded "The present condition of Christendom is something of a scandal owing to its divisions. The East is divided from West and has been so for a thousand years. The moment they begin to propagate themselves either at home or abroad they come into conflict with each other and strive to undo each others work."

AN ENGAGEMENT

Mrs. Anna Van Buren Makes Known Approaching Marriage of Daughter.

Announcement cards have been issued by Mrs. Anna Van Buren, informing the many friends and relatives of the family that Miss Lois E. will in the near future become Mrs. Charles E. Lott. No definite date has been set for the wedding, but in the meantime there are to be numerous entetraigments in honor of Miss Van Buren, to be given by the young women in whose circles she is a most popular member.

Mr. Lott is assistant in the dyeing department of the American Woolen Mill.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Equip your doors and windows with our PERFECT SCREENS

L. P. SIMTH CO.
Your Hardware Dealer

EGG PRESERVER

by the qt. or gal. at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

Evening Times Subscribers are requested to advise this office if the carrier boy fails to deliver paper properly and with regularity.

NOTICE OF MEETING

Notice is Hereby Given, pursuant to Sections 30 and 31 of the General City Law, that I have fixed Friday, May 7, 1915, at 8:15 P.M., at the City Hall in the City of Fulton, N. Y., as the time and place of hearing on Senate Bill No. 1943, entitled "An Act to Amend the Charter of the City of Fulton Generally."

At said time and place any person interested in said Bill will be given an opportunity to be heard.

Dated at Fulton, N. Y., May 4, 1915.

FRANK E. FOX,
Mayor

GOSSARD CORSETS

"They Lace In Front"

In selecting a Gossard Corset you rest assured of three things—comfort that is felt, style that is authoritative and an aid to health that is accepted by doctors and nurses everywhere.

Let your next corset be a GOSSARD

Dix Millinery Store

Only Two More Days

Of the Big Cut Price Appliance Sale

A Chafing Dish worth 12.50 for	$7.40
Saute Pan worth 10.00 for	$6.00
Bell Ringing Transformers now with Coupon	$1.75
Good Toaster for	$1.65

A great variety to choose from. Sale closes Saturday p. m. Buy your hot weather helps now and save money.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

ONEIDA STREET Phone 144

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Why does the Evening Times get results? Because so very many subscribers say—"I hate to miss a single copy of your paper; I'd rather miss a copy of my 'Syracuse ———' than the Evening Times."

THE LATEST

REPORT OF ADVERTISING

Week of April 26 to 30—five days only—Total number of inches Display Advertising 1001

DAILY AVERAGE 200.2

Total number of inches advertising carried by the Evening Times during week of April 19 to 24—six days only—was 919 inches.

DAILY AVERAGE 153

INCREASE

Daily Average—47.2 Inches

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

SNAPSHOTS OF NOTABLE PERSONS

A. Mitchell Palmer, Chief Justice Court of Claims.

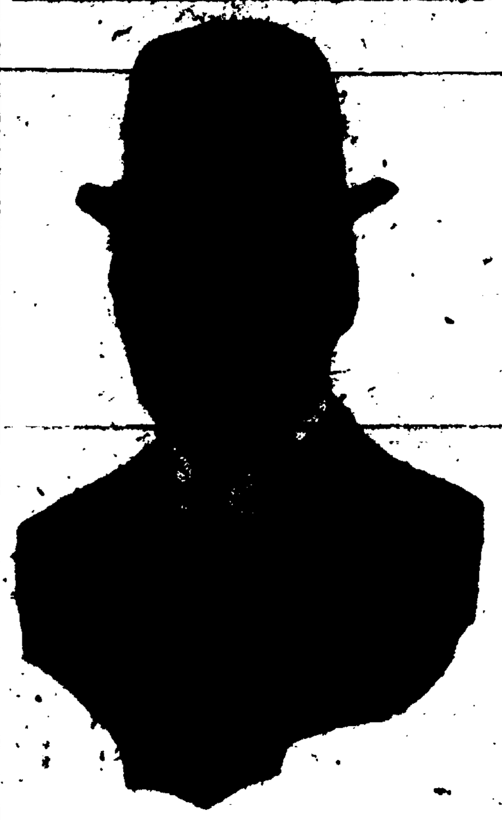

Photo by American Press Association.

Alexander Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania, who was recently appointed chief justice of the federal court of claims, finished his third term as a representative to congress on March 4 last. Last fall Mr. Mitchell went before the people of Pennsylvania as a candidate for the United States senate on the Democratic ticket, but was beaten at the polls by Boies Penrose, Republican, who has held down the job since 1897.

During Mr. Palmer's career as a congressman he was active and aggressive and became one of the recognized leaders of his party. He was a steady and forceful worker for President Wilson at the Baltimore convention and since the advent of the present administration has been one of Mr. Wilson's most trusted allies on the floor of the house.

Judge Palmer is credited with defeating Charles M. Schwab in a labor inquiry. When the Democrats of the Sixty-third congress met in caucus Leader Underwood, who called Palmer his "strong right arm," nominated him for caucus chairman, and he was unanimously elected. As such it was his duty to preside over the Democratic caucus in the house more than any other chairman ever did, for the great tariff and currency bills were both debated and considered line by line in Democratic caucus for weeks, entailing much labor for Mr. Palmer.

A native of Stroudsburg, Pa., Judge Palmer was educated at Swarthmore college, from which he was graduated in 1891 with the highest honors in his class. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1893. Judge Palmer has practiced his profession with success and is a director in several industrial and financial institutions. He is now chairman of the executive campaign committee of the Democratic national committee.

Ruler of the Hellenes.

When the allied fleets began smashing the forts of the Dardanelles the people of Greece believed that the time had arrived when the Hellenic nation should abandon its policy of neutrality and enter the war against their ancient foes, the Turks. King Constantine, however, against the sentiment of parliament and the entire Hellenic race, asked for the resignation of Premier Venizelos, who favored entering the conflict. This action raised a storm of protest from the people, who believed that Greece should join the triple entente in the desperate struggle against the Turk.

KING CONSTANTINE OF GREECE.

King Constantine of Greece was born in Athens in 1868. During the wars of 1912-13 he won great popularity for the services he rendered in two successive campaigns. He succeeded to the throne in March, 1913, his father, King George, having been assassinated at Saloniki, which had been captured from the Turks. King Constantine was married in 1889 to Princess Sophia, a sister of the German emperor. The wedding was attended by the kaiser and members of the royal families of every court in Europe. Soon afterward Sophia renounced her Lutheran religion and took that of her husband, thereby deeply offending her brother and others of her family.

JOKE WAS ON SCOTCHMAN.

Young Recruit Didna Ken Whether Here Was Fool or Not.

Miss Henrietta Koechlin, one of the American Red Cross nurses, has brought home a book filled with jottings written for her by the wounded soldiers she nursed in England.

One of the stories was written by Jock Chalmers, a piper in the Gordon highlanders, who began his career in the Chitral campaign in India in 1895 and has been in everything since, including the Matabele, Egyptian and Sudanese campaigns and the Boer war.

The piper wore eight medals and the Distinguished Service order. The sight fascinated a young Scottish soldier, who stood for an hour and gazed open mouthed at Jock's brave array. This got a little monotonous for the piper, and on the second day he asked: "What are you looking at so hard? Do you take me for a fool?"

"I dinna ken; I'm only here twa days," was the reply.

FLEET SAILS CANAL JULY 4.

Cabinet's Decision Takes Navy, Army and Goethals by Surprise.

Part of the national celebration of July 4 this year will be that the Atlantic fleet will pass through the Panama canal that day. The decision of the cabinet came as a complete surprise to the navy and apparently to the war department as well.

So far as the physical difficulties likely to be faced in sending so large a fleet through the canal are concerned, Major General George W. Goethals, governor of the canal zone, still refuses to accept responsibility for the readiness of the waterway. Slides are likely to occur at any time, he says.

The fleet will go all the way through the canal and will continue up the Pacific coast, according to Secretary Daniels.

GARDEN CLUB IN SPOKANE.

Vacant Lots and Back Yards Are Cultivated and Beautified.

This, the fifth year of the Spokane Home Garden club, organized and conducted by the Young Men's Christian association and the Spokesman-Review, finds the club serving as a model for similar civic movements all over the country. More than fifty cities have written to the Y. M. C. A. for details of the plan by which for the past four years Spokane young people have welcomed the warm spring days by converting cluttered back yards into copiously herbiferous gardens. Letters have come from districts as widely separated as the Adirondack mountains and the Sacramento valley. Women's clubs, civic uplift organizations and other branches of the Y. M. C. A. have written for information.

It is in the cultivation of vacant lots and back yards that the Home Garden club has during the last few years shown its value as a city beautiful aid. Besides removing from the public eye a great many unsightly lots on which the accumulation of winter refuse was thick, the club last year produced vegetables whose total value is estimated by Secretary G. A. Forbes of the Y. M. C. A. at $6,000.

Active co-operation is being given by the federal government, which, through the department of agriculture, is organizing the boys and girls of many cities into garden clubs, potato clubs, corn clubs and the like. T. J. Newbill of the department of agriculture will represent the government in Spokane this spring and will advise the Home Gardeners in matters pertaining to gardening efficiency. Mr. Newbill says: "I find that boys and girls make a more profitable circle than grownups for the distribution of government seeds and literature. They are more in earnest, and they are not so likely to disregard the instructions of government experts."

NEW COMET SOON VISIBLE.

Will Be Seen by Naked Eye, Though 40,000,000 Miles Away.

A new comet is due some time next month. It is rapidly approaching the sun and will be at perihelion about July 20.

It will pass nearest the earth the middle of June, when it will be about 40,000,000 miles away. Late in May it is expected to become a naked eye object.

The comet is in the morning sky, rising about midnight on May 1, and will be approximately on the meridian at 4 a. m. on that date. It was easily picked up with a four inch telescope early in March and will undoubtedly be found with any small telescope after May 1.

VIOLIN NETS $19,500 AT SALE.

Lord Newland's "Strad" Given to Red Cross, Breaks Record.

A Stradivarius violin presented by Lord Newlands to the Red Cross sale in London realized the sum of $19,500.

It was first sold to Lady Wernher for $12,500, and she had it put up a second time. It then went for $7,000 to Mr. Brandt, who had previously advanced the bidding to $12,000.

This figure of $12,500 constitutes a record price for such a violin. The highest previous figure was $10,000, paid for the Messiah violin, dated 1716, which for fifty years was in the collection of Count Cozio di Salabue.

His Left.

"Did he waive his right?"

"No. He shook his left fist in my face."—New York Press.

SURE ITALY WON'T FIGHT FOR KAISER

Marconi Says His Country Will Aid Allies If She Enters War.

WANTS TO KEEP OUT OF IT

Italians Strongly Resent Germany's Treatment of Belgium, Wireless Inventor Declares in Interview, and Everything Is Now Ready Should Decision Come to End Neutrality.

On his arrival in this country William Marconi, the inventor of wireless telegraphy, was asked if he thought Italy would enter the war on the side of the allies.

"That is a question that is very difficult to answer," Mr. Marconi replied.

"The majority of Italians favor the allies. There can be no doubt of that, and a great many of them favor going to war on their side.

"There is also a large peace party in Italy which, while not favoring war, is nevertheless ready to stand behind the government in the event the step is taken. As for German sentiment in Italy, my own personal opinion is that it is negligible.

"We have no quarrel with Germany, and the alliance with her may have been beneficial to Italy, until militarism gained the upper hand in Germany. The Italian nation did not approve of this war, and as a member of the triple alliance, Italy felt that she should have been consulted. Had she been this war might possibly have been averted.

"Statements that Italy has been holding off in the effort to drive a hard bargain with Vienna are in my opinion unjust and untrue. I do not believe that my country has been trying to drive a hard bargain with Austria, but rather that Austria has been making advances in the effort to win the favor of Italy.

Resent Fate of Belgium.

"Italians do not feel that their relations with Austria have been any too pleasant or that Italy has been treated any too fairly by Austria. Italy has been irritated by Austrian encroachments, and by harsh treatment of Italians within the borders of the Austro-Hungarian empire.

"As indicative of Italian sentiment, I only have to call attention to the fact that there is in Italy a very strong Democratic element which belongs to what is known as the Social Democratic party. The majority of these Social Democrats are laboring men, and from the first they have been horrified at the treatment accorded Belgium.

"The invasion of that little neutral state by the Germans is something they cannot stand for, and if for no other reason, they are against Germany because of this act against the Belgians. This is my own opinion, and in stating it I do so under the conviction that I know my own country pretty well.

"The Italians have always entertained an admiration for the great German military machine as a machine, but that is all. The methods of that machine have not the approval of the Italian people.

"But to revert to the question as to whether or not Italy will become a participant in this war. The military men say that Italy will go in, but some of the great politicians maintain that her entry is doubtful.

Will Not Help Germany.

"However, it is a fact that all preparations have been made and it is out of the question for Italy to go with Germany and Austria-Hungary. If she goes it will be with the allies. Of that I am certain.

"The Italian navy is fit and its officers and men well trained. A number of new ships have been commissioned, among them several Dreadnoughts. The commander of the fleet is the Duke of the Abruzzi, and Americans know what a fine and capable type of seaman he is.

"The economical situation in Italy is excellent. Recently a very good loan was floated without outside assistance, and I am convinced that the people are ready to make great sacrifices should it become necessary.

"Since the beginning of the war I am of the opinion that Italy has sincerely made every effort to remain in an honorable neutral position, and I hope the situation will so adjust itself that Italy can keep out of the war.

"I doubt if the great body of Americans appreciate the full extent of the great tragedy of Europe. If you could see the maimed and ruined I am quite certain that all America would be still more ardently for peace than is now the case. My sincere hope is that the American government and people will continue to exert every pressure to bring about a termination of the conflict."

D'ANNUNZIO TO BE SAILOR.

Poet Wants Experience For Poem on Modern Italian Navy.

Gabriele D'Annunzio has written the Italian minister of marine asking for enlistment as a simple sailor.

The war minister wished D'Annunzio to resume his rank as lieutenant of cavalry, but the poet wrote back that he wished to compose a naval poem on modern Italy or sink with his ship in the Adriatic, as did the Russian painter Vereschagin of Port Arthur.

STRICKEN FIELDS IN EUROPE SEE MANY STRANGE WAR CONTRASTS

Soldiers Play Games and Follow Their Trades With Joy and Profit in Trenches in Lull of Battle.

Beg Friends to Send Them Flowers to Plant on Comrades' Graves and Decorate Their Camps.

NOW that the gentle touch of spring is in the air the buds are bursting on the shrubs and trees of the battlefields, crops are sprouting and the wild flowers are beginning to bloom amid the graves of the fallen warriors. Nature's seasons pay no heed to war.

Contrasts such as these are one of the most striking features today on the stricken fields of Europe. Yet contrasts in the war, strange as they seem, are perhaps the most natural outcome of the strained conditions under which the vast hordes of men are living.

German soldiers, for instance, are begging friends to send them flower seeds to plant on the graves of comrades and to decorate the trenches and camps.

Held in the trenches—frightfully bored. Between times they are drenched and stabbed by rheumatism and sometimes starved and often shot at. But mostly they are bored. They have nothing to do—nothing at all. They just sit and talk. By and by the man in the middle has heard all the man on the left and the man on the right can tell him. Then they just sit.

Enjoy Mouth Organs.

A thoughtful German woman sent a present which probably saved many a mind. Her gift was 300 mouth organs.

The new German bath train has also received a warm welcome from the men in the trenches. It consists of three water cars with a capacity of

Photo by American Press Association.

BRITISH NAME MESS HUTS AFTER GREAT LONDON HOTELS.

15,000 gallons, two bath cars with thirty shower baths, two dressing cars, four storage cars for clean uniforms and underwear, and one storage car for discarded clothing that is to be disinfected. It can provide shower baths and clean outfits of underwear for 1,200 men in ten hours.

A soldier wrote from the front that Private A. C. White, with no friends, was "the loneliest man in the British army," and had been so upset he was in the hospital. "What he needs is not pills, but sympathy," the letter read. Since then Private White has received 800 letters, cards, papers and packages of delicacies.

Died as He Won Game.

Sergeant A. Vanoode of Brussels during a lull in the hostilities proposed a game of chess to a fellow enthusiast, a French comrade named Dussaixe. This was played upon a pocket chessboard and proceeded without incident to black's seventeenth move, when the sentinel sounded an alarm. Vanoode at once made his way to his post at the extremity of the trench, Dussaixe calling after him, "J'aurai vain—" ("I shall win"). But the sentence was never finished, for with a terrible crash a shell exploded in the trench, killing him instantly. The chessboard was kept by Vanoode, who was wounded. It shows that by his eighteenth move Dussaixe would have won.

"Come out, you Canadians; come out and fight!" was the challenge which the Germans issued the first night the Canadian division entered the trenches in Flanders. In his official record "Eye-witness" reports that the Canadians were annoyed at this, because they considered "the Germans were presuming upon a slight acquaintance." He adds, "Now, the trenches in normal times have their own code of manners and of amenity, and this challenge was and is regarded as impertinent."

A German soldier's letter, published in the Berliner Zeitung am Mittag, says:

"Inasmuch as there is nothing that can be bought in the villages just behind the German front, coin has lost all its value. On the other hand and in the same proportion the value of the cigar has increased. It now forms the basis of the entire trade here.

"It makes no difference whether you have a fine cigar or one of the cheap [illegible] variety, such as those of which you can buy three for 5 pfennig at the village shop, their buying power and value are the same.

Use Cigars as Money.

"So there has developed on the basis of the 'single cigar standard,' as one might say, a very lively system of barter in commodities which for the most part come as loving gifts from home. A slice of salami sausage as big as your hand costs four cigars. A flask of cognac, irrespective of brand, costs thirty cigars.

"Whoever wants to have his boots shined and cleaned of the muddy real estate that cakes them can have them polished splendidly for two cigars. Thus we have reverted to that primitive medium of exchange that is found only among nature's people, where mussels and like articles take the place of money."

Photo by American Press Association.

FRENCHWOMAN PLANTING FLOWERS ON SOLDIERS' GRAVES.

Under the uniform of the soldier various trades and professions are hidden, all of which prove useful, in one way or another in camp or trench. The woodcutter of last year still goes on with his woodcutting. Several infantrymen spend their nights fishing for eels. A fair night's catch is fifty, which sell for about 4 cents each.

Mechanics employ their spare time manufacturing tinder boxes and other articles out of old cartridge cases. One can obtain penknives, pencil cases, scissors, cigarette holders and a variety of similar articles.

Agricultural workers spend their spare time helping the farmers with whom they are billeted. Soldier barbers do a roaring trade and find customers among the civilians as well as the military. Tailors and bootmakers also find many occasions to use their skill.

Make War Souvenirs.

Leather workers gather up old pieces of leather from discarded harness or equipment and make it up into pocketbooks or cases for various articles. Soldiers with a fair education find plenty of work teaching French to the English soldiers or vice versa. Some of the English soldiers number among their pupils several civilians, all of whom are eager to master the intricacies of English, and a fair proportion of these civilian pupils are of the fair sex.

The military authorities thus far have had no occasion to notice these little side employments, which are not exactly allowed by military rules. They prefer to close their eyes, however, as long as the work helps to keep the soldier busy and happy.

In the German trenches grand opera is sung over a telephone, not only in the evenings but even in the midst of battle. "Die Walkure" and "Tristan und Isolde" are the most popular, together with old German folk songs.

But when the men sing they usually choose "Morgenrot," the song of the soldier who is to die at sunrise; "Es Geht bei Gedaempfter Trommel Klang," the song of the soldier condemned to be shot; "O Strassburg, O Strassburg!" the song of the relentless captain, who would not release the boy to his parents because "there must be soldiers at Strassburg." They also sing of home and parents, the parting for the war, the lads who will never return.

The Indian cavalry, back at the front with the warm weather, spend much of their spare time in feats of horsemanship. Hundreds of dusky horsemen sweep into lines of imaginary Germans, slashing right and left with their sabers. Their control of their horses is superb, and the spirit and agility they display astonish the French onlookers.

In addition to lance work, such as tent pegging, the Indians give exhibitions of fancy riding, the equal of which is seen only among the cowboys of the far west or the Cossacks of Russia.

A young Canadian who, with a Scotch friend, joined the French Foreign legion has written home, telling how he missed his first shot.

"We were not far from the German line when dawn began to break," he writes. "Presently at about seventy-five yards distance we saw a couple of German soldiers. They were absolutely unarmed, their tunics were open, and they were digging up some peasant's potatoes. I whispered to Mac to take the man on the left, and I drew a bead on the other. But when I'd got that far I couldn't finish the operation. I had never fired at a man before, and I simply couldn't shoot in cold blood an unarmed man digging potatoes.

"I lowered my rifle and turned to Mac to tell him how I felt and saw that he, too, had lowered his. He had felt the same as myself."

Pluck shows itself in all sorts of contrasts in the field.

A French patrol came upon five Germans. Two they shot, two got away, and the fifth they surrounded. When he had used all his cartridges he took his rifle by the muzzle and stood at bay. The Frenchmen got nearer and shouted to him to surrender. His only answer was that it was "a disgrace for a German soldier to be a prisoner."

Could Not Make Him Squeal.

The patrol then rushed in. The German lay about him lustily; and when he was down and could do nothing else he bit the French sergeant's hand to the bone. They took him back to their own lines, but no word of information could they get out of him.

One of the curious happenings of the war is the capture of seven Bavarian soldiers in the Argonne by a solitary French soldier. The Frenchman came suddenly on the Bavarians and called on them to surrender. They did not know French, but they threw up their hands all the same, and the Frenchman started to bring them to the French lines.

At intervals along the route he shouted out to men of his regiment, apparently concealed on each side of the road, and as these answered back the captured Bavarians followed their captor with the greatest docility.

When the Frenchman arrived in the French lines with his prisoners the

Photo by American Press Association.

SNIPER IN TREE WATCHING ENEMY'S TRENCHES.

captain of his regiment was astonished.

"You captured them all alone?" he asked incredulously.

"Yes, captain," the Frenchman replied, "but it was not so very difficult. I'm a ventriloquist."

But almost equally picturesque achievements are officially recorded. Corporal Fuller and Private Barber, both of the British Grenadier guards, who threw grenades with such effect at Neuve Chapelle that numbers of the enemy surrendered to them individually, have been awarded Victoria crosses for their feats of conspicuous bravery.

The official record says that when his comrades reached Barber they found him quite alone with the enemy surrendering all about him. Fuller also alone intercepted a party of the enemy which was trying to escape along a trench. He killed the leader with a bomb. The rest of the party, numbering nearly fifty, saw no way of evading Fuller's bombs and surrendered.

King Cuts His Menu.

Table expenses at Buckingham palace have been reduced from $8 to $1 a person each day since the war started and the dinner courses cut from twelve to five. The menu cards are written by hand to curtail expenses, and for three successive dinners cold roast beef was the only meat served.

"London not yet Germany," was the laconic correction of a French clerk's error by a British postal official. An envelope sent from Paris was addressed "Victoria street, London, Allemagne." The letter reached its destination uncorrected by the French postmen. The British simply marked it "Not yet."

A British sailor on duty in the North sea has written to his wife to say that if his new baby is a boy it is to be christened Thomas Torpedo.

A baby girl at Maesteg, Wales, has been christened Mary Allies.

A Swansea couple have decided to call their baby Dardan Ella.

The Society of Netherlands Bulb Growers, The Hague, Holland, has decided to sent cut flowers as gifts to the hospitals for the wounded of the belligerent nations. The International women's congress will pay the upkeep cost and purchase the bulbs, hyacinths, as their grant to the [illegible] for the hospital wards.

Boomerang Advice

By SARAH BAXTER

"Dearest," said George Harding the day after the return from their honeymoon as they were opening their accumulated mail at the breakfast table, "here's a letter from Charlie Webster. I wrote him while on our journey how transcendently happy I was"—

"You didn't leave me out, did you, lovey?"

"Oh, certainly not. Charlie writes that he is envious of me and wishes I would tell him how I got you. He says he has been waiting for several years for some nice girl to show a preference for him, but thus far there's nothing doing."

"Nothing doing! I should think not. Does he suppose a girl is going to make love to him while he sits nodding? When you write him again tell him that he must have decision, concentration."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean this: The first girl he sees that he feels he'd like to marry let him show his admiration in his expression. If he has been introduced he may do this in one way; if not, in another. Should he meet her in the street or in company he should pursue her till he has learned who she is, then never let up till he has made her acquaintance. We women like to be hunted. It gratifies our pride."

Now, George Harding's business led him to be much on the road. A few days after his return from the wedding journey he gave his wife a couple of dozen kisses and started on a trip. He had enjoined her to go out whenever she had an opportunity, and since she was not only a devoted autoist, but an excellent driver, she attempted to kill loneliness by afternoon spins into the country. On one of these spins her machine stopped in the middle of the road and, like a balky mule, would go no farther.

The first auto that came along was driven by a gentleman, who pulled up, lifted his cap and asked if he could be of service. Mrs. Harding was a very pretty woman, and the troubled look that appeared in her liquid eyes was enough to soften a heart of brick. The gentleman's eyes expressed admiration in a marked degree. He left his car beside the road and proceeded to make an investigation of the lady's vehicle. Finding that the trouble would compel its removal by outside power, he proposed to secure a rope and pull it to a garage. Anything he suggested was acceptable, and after a hunt for a stout rope in the houses along the road the attachment was made and the journey commenced, the man driving his car, the lady at the wheel of hers. Reaching a garage, her car was left there, and the gentleman begged permission to drive her home.

Mrs. Harding had received admiration in her day, but never anything so suddenly developed as this. It was plain to her that her new found admirer was taking her home by a roundabout way, the necessity for which he attributed to the roads. After an hour's drive that could have been done in ten minutes they pulled up at the Harding residence, the stranger helped the lady out, and, after thanking him for his kindness, she ran up the steps.

The next afternoon what was her surprise on looking out a front window to see her car stop at her door, driven by the gentleman who had rescued her at the wheel. He sprang out, came up to the house and rang the bell. She opened the door herself and received the announcement from her admirer's lips that, fearing she might wish for her car, he had brought it home to her.

In recognition of so much kindness what could she do but ask him in? He gladly accepted the invitation and, seated tete-a-tete with her, spent an hour in bliss for himself and in relieving ennui for the lady. Though recently married, she had not yet got used to turning away the devotion of another man than her husband. When her visitor departed his eyes expressed such a longing to be permitted to call again that Mrs. Harding could not refrain from giving it.

When George Harding returned from his trip his wife casually mentioned her automobile mishap, but, fearing to excite his jealousy, refrained from entering into particulars. Charlie Webster informed his friend that during his absence he (Charlie) had put in practice Mrs. Harding's advice and had profited by it. Indeed, he was plucking up courage to offer his love to a lady and ask her to be his wife. The proposition might seem sudden, and he expected to be refused, but he would act on Mrs. Harding's advice and stick to it.

A few evenings after this George Harding left his wife for a short time. When he returned what was his surprise to see his old friend, Charlie Webster, sitting in the drawing room with Mrs. Harding. She appeared to be a bit rattled, and the two men looked at each other in astonishment.

"This is the gentleman," said the wife, "who was so kind to me when my car broke down."

There was an embarrassed silence for a few moments, when Harding said:

"And you, Charlie, have found a lady to your taste. I wish you success." And, with flashing eyes, he turned on his heel and went upstairs.

There was a [illegible] the matter for some time, but eventually Webster was excused since he had acted upon the advice of Harding.

BATTLE LINE IN EUROPE 1,668¾ MILES LONG.

Careful calculation shows that at the moment the great German drive began the battle lines in Europe covered the enormous stretch of 1,668¾ miles.

Among the allies the line of death was divided as follows:

French	544 miles
British	31½ miles
Belgians	17¼ miles
Russians	857 miles
Germans	219 miles

In cost, loss of life, destruction of property and loss of production and trade the war is eating up more than $124,000,000 a day, experts say.

Belgium's losses are now estimated at $2,600,000,000.

"WE'RE TIRED, AREN'T YOU?" ASK GERMANS.

Letters Tied to Stones Flung at Night Into British Trenches.

Two letters tied around stones were thrown into the trenches of the Second British corps the night of April 12 and 13. One letter read:

Dear Honored Comrades—As this war has now been going on for about nine months and whole villages with their inhabitants have been devastated, it is now high time to put a stop to it.

We are all tired of this savage life, and you must be too. Our dear wives and children await and long for our return and yours must do the same.

Hoping that we may do some good by this, we remain with friendly greetings,

THE GERMAN SAPPING PARTY.

The other letter ran:

Dear French and English Comrades—It is just about time you stopped all this, for we think you will soon have had enough of your war. Our losses are great, and yours must be three times as big.

Every day it gets finer, and it would be better if we could be at home with our wives and children, who are waiting every day for us, as yours are waiting for you.

Let us have peace on earth before the cherry blossoms come out, but the sooner the better, or do you want to go on sitting forever in these damned trenches? With friendly greetings,

THE GERMANS.

DANCED WITH LAFAYETTE.

Centenarian Says People Aren't as Good Now as Years Ago.

Hale and hearty, her bright eyes sparkling happily, Mrs. Missouri A. Hawkins of 20 West One Hundred and Fortieth street, New York city, celebrated her one hundredth birthday by saying:

"People's morals aren't as good as they were years ago. We are living in a 'flyaway' age, with an astonishing lot of deviltry and slyness upsetting all the good in the world."

She recalled as her most pleasant experience her meeting with General Lafayette.

"I put on my best dress," she said, "and went to the hotel, where I shook hands with the great man. And what do you think?" she added. "I danced a minuet with him."

CAPTIVES START UNIVERSITY.

Germans Help Belgian Prisoners to Continue Their Studies.

A regular university is in operation in the prison camp at Soltau, Prussia, which contains several thousand captives. Lectures are being given in departments of arts, law and theology, and in a commercial school. There also is a preparatory department.

The university owes its origin to the fact that the Belgian prisoners include many professors and students of four Belgian universities. The students desired an opportunity to continue their studies. The classes were opened also to other prisoners.

The attendance in the preparatory department is particularly large.

FRENCH GET THEIR WINE.

First Gift Made to Men in Trenches Is 14,000,000 Liters.

French soldiers in the field are not to lack wine. Agricultural organizations, syndicates of buyers and others have united in an organization known as the association "Vin Aux Soldats" (Wine For Soldiers). The first gift was 1 per cent of the entire village of L'Herault. Inasmuch as the vintage this year was 14,000,000 hectolitres the gift to the army will amount to 140,000 hectoliters, or 14,000,000 liters.

The army authorities take charge of the transportation, and the wines are exempt from the sales tax.

Big Sale of Bicycles now on at Bogue's, 61 First st.

FROM KEYBOARD TO VAST FORTUNE

Telegraph Girl Inherits Half of $22,000,000 Estate.

DUE TO AUNT'S ROMANCE.

With Income From Rich Mineral Lands in California, Tennessee and West Virginia, Mrs. Hawes Orders Big House, Bungalow For Her Parents and a 100 Foot Steam Yacht.

Stranger than fiction is the story of the change in the lot of Mrs. Lillian M. K. Hawes of Jacksonville, Fla. From an obscure telegraph operator she has jumped to the ownership of a half interest in a fortune of about $22,000,000 in copper, coal and timber lands.

Mrs. Hawes is a brunette thirty years of age. She was born in Bridgewater, Somerset, England, and came to the United States with her parents while a small child.

The vast property, which is shared equally by Mrs. Hawes and her brother, Thomas Hawkins, for the past eighteen years chief engineer of the Westchester Electric company, Mount Vernon, N. Y., consists of copper lands and mines in the Exchequer mining district, San Bernardino county, Cal., valued at about $6,000,000; also 400,000 acres of coal and timber lands in Franklin district, Marshall county, W. Va., and ferro manganese and iron properties in Tennessee and West Virginia, valued at $16,000,000.

Old Aunt Had Romance.

The story has its beginning in Great Britain, where many years ago Miss L. Atwell, the great-aunt of Mrs. Hawes, was a much beloved companion and friend of Lady Towle, a wealthy and prominently social figure of England's aristocracy. When Lady Towle died she bequeathed to Miss Atwell a large sum of money.

The great-aunt was not without her romance. She had a girlhood sweetheart, a sea captain, who while on a voyage was lost with his ship and crew and nothing ever was heard of them again. The death of the captain nearly prostrated the young Englishwoman, and she came to America.

Here she was induced to invest her fortune in what was then considered waste land located in West Virginia, Tennessee and California. But, as has proved, the land needed but the Midas touch of modern scientific achievement to transform it into wealth beyond the dreams of avarice.

Began Work In Her Teens.

The great-aunt died March 4, 1914, at the age of ninety-seven years, having spent her life in solitude, refusing to be comforted for the loss of her girlhood sweetheart. Her only companions were Mrs. Hawes and her brother. The two children were always given to understand that they would some day come into possession of all her land.

Sixteen years ago the young Lillian obtained a position with the Postal Telegraph company in New York. She was then a girl in her teens.

Her parents live at 950 Washington avenue, Bronx, New York city, the father being now a retired business man. Nine years ago in New York she married Banks O. Hawes, whom she had known since she was four years old, now a successful architect and marine engineer.

Mrs. Hawes has purchased an eighty and one-half acre plot of land near Jacksonville, where she will erect a $25,000 residence. Ten acres are to be set aside for a winter home for her parents with a $7,000 bungalow. She has contracted with a New York boat builder for a 100 foot steam yacht, and she and her husband contemplate spending several months of every year cruising.

Artists In Mother-of-pearl.

The incrustations of precious woods with mother-of-pearl is in Hanoi, French Tonquin, an important industry, an entire street, known as the "street of the inlayers," being devoted to it. Landscapes gleaming in the sun, sheaves of many colored flowers, the most delicate arabesques and many other beautiful things are evolved by the deft and pliant fingers of the artificers, and marvelous cabinets and other articles are fashioned and put together without the aid of nails by dovetailing and lacquer paste.

Collegians Had Easy Time Comparatively

(Continued from Page One)

the spectators a little amusement by attempting to hurdle the fence.

O'Brien, who had been warming up for some time relieved Barnes at this point and "Ober" signalized his entry by making two wild heaves that allowed Jackson third base and home. After that he settled down and fanned the heavy-hitting Connolly. Folwer singled but the worst was over, Feinmann and Dunkle hitting straight up.

Don O'Brien put hope in the hearts of the fans for a few moments in the final canto when he walloped the pill for three sacks, but H. O'Brien flied out and Thompson and Pullen showed their lack of sympathy by whiffing and popping out respectively.

The Fulton infield seemed to have an off-day, errors being very plentiful. Caffrey alone was exempt and "Specs" played his corner like a veteran accepting fifteen chances, many of which were very difficult, without an error. He also managed to get a hit out of three chances. Pullen's work on the defensive was good, and Captain Bray handled Barnes in good style, coaching the youthful twirler at the critical stages to good effect.

Jackson, the Syracuse first sacker, handled himself well, while Kean and Flower starred with the willow. The visitors claimed that they had only four regulars in the line-up and that the majority of the men were playing unaccustomed positions. They showed class, whatever the case may be.

Small consolation for Stauring.

The score:

Fulton

	AB	R	H	PO	A	E
Keeler, 3b	4	0	0	2	1	4
Bray, c.	3	1	2	3	2	1
Wilcox, 2b.	4	0	0	0	2	1
Martin, ss.	3	0	1	1	5	2
D. O'Brien, cf.	4	0	1	1	0	0
Barnes, p.	2	1	0	0	2	0
Thompson, rf.	3	1	1	0	0	0
Pullen, lf.	4	0	1	6	0	0
Caffrey, 1b.	3	0	1	13	2	0
H. O'Brien, p.	1	0	0	1	0	0
	31	3	7	27	14	8

Syracuse

	AB	R	H	PO	A	E
Feinmann, ss.	5	1	0	3	1	0
Dunkle, rf.	4	1	1	3	0	0
Brown, cf.	5	1	0	0	0	0
Kean, lf.	5	1	2	1	0	0
Beckwith, 3b.	4	1	1	0	2	0
Bedell, 2b.	4	2	1	2	0	0
Jackson, 1b.	4	1	1	11	1	0
Connolly, c.	4	1	1	7	1	0
Flower, p.	4	0	2	0	6	0
	39	9	9	27	11	0

Score by innings:

Syracuse	1 2 0 0 2 0 4—9
Fulton	0 2 1 0 0 0 0 0 0—3

Summary—Home run, Bedell; three base hits, D. O'Brien, Beckwith, Dunkle; two base hits, Pullen, Flower. Struck out—by Barnes, 2; by H. O'Brien, 2; by Flower, 6. Bases on balls—off Flower, 4. Sacrifice fly, Beckwith. Stolen bases—Connolly, Bray, Martin (3), Barnes, Thompson. Passed balls—Bray, 2; Connolly, 1. Double plays—Beckwith to Jackson to Bedell; Martin to Caffrey to Bray. Umpire, Rigler.

GAMES WANTED

Fulton Team Between Ages of 14 and 17 Years May Secure Games

Earl C. Perrett, of 112 West 2d st., Oswego, informs The Evening Times that he manages the Ontario baseball team of that city, adding that he challenges any Fulton team whose members are between 14 and 17 years old to play two games, one in Oswego and one here.

This is an opportunity for the new F. A. A., organized from the membership of the State Street M. E. church. Manager Allen, get your eye on the Ontarios.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS; STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

New York at Boston.
Philadelphia at Brooklyn.
St. Louis at Pittsburgh.
Cincinnati at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

New York, 4; Philadelphia, 2.
Boston, 6; Brooklyn, 1.
Chicago, 5; Cincinnati, 0.
Pittsburgh-St. Louis (cold).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	12	5	.714
Chicago	12	6	.667
Boston	9	7	.563
Cincinnati	9	9	.500
St. Louis	9	11	.450
Brooklyn	7	11	.389
Pittsburgh	7	11	.389
New York	5	10	.333

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at New York.
Washington at Philadelphia.
Chicago at Cleveland.
Detroit at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

Philadelphia, 2; New York, 1.
Boston, 1; Washington, 0.
Cleveland, 1; Chicago, 0.
Detroit, 5; St.t Louis, 2.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Deroit	15	6	.714
New York	10	5	.667
Chicago	11	9	.550
Boston	7	6	.538
Washington	8	8	.500
Cleveland	9	10	.474
Philadelphia	5	11	.313
St. Louis	5	15	.250

Big Sale of Bicycles now on at Bogue's, 81 First st.

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Brooklyn.
Chicago at Baltimore.
Pittsburgh at Newark.
Kansas City at Buffalo.

Results Yesterday

St. Louis, 3; Brooklyn, 0.
Baltimore, 4; Chicago, 3.
Newark-Pittsburgh (wet grounds).
Buffalo-Kansas City (wet grounds).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Chicago	12	7	.632
Pittsburgh	11	8	.579
Newark	11	8	.579
Brooklyn	10	9	.526
Kansas City	9	9	.500
St. Louis	8	10	.444
Baltimore	9	12	.429
Buffalo	6	13	.316

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Toronto at Jersey City.
Montreal at Richmond.
Rochester at Providence.

Results Yesterday

Jersey City, 6; Toronto, 3.
Providence, 2; Rochester, 1.
Montreal, 10; Richmond, 3.
Newark-Buffalo (wet grounds)

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	5	1	.833
Jersey City	4	1	.800
Richmond	4	3	.571
Montreal	3	4	.429
Newark	2	3	.400
Buffalo	2	3	.400
Toronto	2	4	.333
Rochester	1	4	.200

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

Kansas City-Minneapolis—rain.

At Indianapolis—

	R.	H.	E.
Columbus	3	6	5
Indianapolis	5	9	3

Batteries—O'Toole and Robertson; Merz and Blackburn.

At Louisville—

	R.	H.	E.
Cleveland	4	7	2
Louisville	5	6	2

Batteries—Brenton and Devoght; Middleton and Crossin.

At St. Paul—

	R.	H.	E.
Milwaukee	8	11	1
St. Paul	7	10	0

Batteries—Slapnicka, Hovlik and Hughes; Karger, Steen, Leifield and Johnson, Marshall.

Tires, Supplies, everything for the Bicycle at Bogue's, 81 First st.

Cream Separators at cost. Van-Wagenen, Inc. adv122

JAPAN DECLARES MARTIAL LAW ON ONE PENINSULA

Tokio, Thursday.—The Official Gazette today publishes an imperial ordinance sanctioning the application of martial law and the military requisition law of the Kwang-tung Peninsula and the South Manchuria Railroad.

The Elder Statesmen, it became known last night, are strongly opposed to sending an ultimatum to China. The government here is powerless before this opposition, and the probability is that the Premier, Count Okuma, resigned today.

The deliberations between the Japanese officials concerning the situation were continued all night. The Emperor presided at a Cabinet Council.

It is reported that the Foreign Office has sent telegrams to all consuls in China instructing them to prepare their nationals for possible leaving the country. Japanese at Mukden have been asked to hold themselves in readiness to withdraw to places near the South Manchurian railroad.

The complete decisions of the Cabinet are expected tonight. The press says forty-eight hours will be the limit of the proposed ultimatum. Newspapers characterize as insulting the insistence of China that Japan's offer to restore Kiaochao be reduced to writing.

HEARS TURKS DECIDE TO IGNORE GERMAN ADVICE

London, Thursday.—Ernest A. Hill telegraphs to the Daily News from Athens:

"The Turkish General Staff has not accepted the suggestion by German officers that if, or when, the Allies force the straits the Turish army should be transported to the Asiatic side to continue the fight. On the contrary, the view of Enver Pacha and of Talaat Bey that Constantinople ought to be defended has been adopted, the idea being that when the straits have been forced the Turks will be able to make a separate peace if Constantinople should continue to hold out.

"I am reliably informed that in the event of Italy renouncing her neutrality Greece will follow with similar action."

RUSSIANS AND AUSTRIANS IN BATTLE ON NIDA

Frederick Rennet, correspondent of the Daily News at Petrogrds, telegraphs:

"All German movements in the East now are of immense forces from Cracow, especially to the southward. Since Sunday there have been sharp and separate engagements at Tarnow and Gorlice, in Galicia, and Bartfeld, in Hungary.

"The Russian army has driven the Austrians westward from the rihgt bank of the Nida. A battle involving enormous numbers now is beginning and it is believed General Litzingen's Bavarian army, which last week abandoned an attempt on the Stryj roads, now is hastening westward to fill the right wing of the German line.

"The demonstration in Northwest Russia doubtless is intended to detain a large Russian force available for battle between Cracow and the Carpathians. This German move has failed completely. The cavalry turned back on Monday from a point south of the line of Libau-Mitau, abandoning a number of light guns which the Russians sent to Riga.

"Neither the German fleet nor transports have been seen off the coast, although a Russian torpedo squadron is searching for them."

COLLEGE BASEBALL

At Andover, Mass—Phillips Andover, 6; New Hampshire State, 1.

At New Haven—Williams, ; Yale, 2.

At Medford—Boston College, 2; Tufts, 1.

At Washington—Washington and Lee, 3; Catholis University, 1.

At Annapolis—Navy, 7; University of Pittsburgh, 2.

At Swarthmore—Penn., 3; Swarthmore, 1.

At Chicago—University of Chicago, 1; Chinese Athletes of Hawaii, 0.

At Amherst—Springfield Y. M. C. A. College, 3; Mass. Agri., 1. Brown, 6; Amherst, 1.

At Hanover—Dartmouth, 13; Norwich University, 2.

At New York—St. Johns College, 9; Stevens Institute, 3.

At West Point—West Point, 9; Penn State, 4.

At Princeton—Princeton, 3; Lawrence, 0.

One Thing He Couldn't Do.

Milking a cow is not an easy task for an unpracticed hand. Leslie Stephen, the famous English literary light, was once on a long tramp in Switzerland, accompanied by his friend, Dr. Morgan. They missed their way and found themselves parched and hungry, far from any dwelling place. At length they came across a cow, from whom they determined to extract some nourishment, but after trying their best for an hour, each holding on to her horns in turn, they had to abandon all hopes of milk. This, remarks Dr. Morgan, is "one of the very few occasions on which I ever saw Stephen fairly thwarted."—London Spectator.

More Miracles Ahead.

Who can predict what the future will be, in view of what has already occurred in this generation of miracle working? New inventors, standing on the shoulders of those who so transformed things during the last half century, will doubtless learn still greater secrets of nature. Much of our worry over posterity is idle. While we are handing down many serious problems for posterity to wrestle with, we are also giving it the richest legacy any generation has ever had. Thanks to our inventions, the youth of tomorrow will live more before he attains his majority than "Methuselah did in all his stagnant centuries."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Breaks the Silo Record.

So far as is known, the silo which John Edwards, who lives near Englewood, Kan., is building will be the largest in the world. It will be fifty feet high, fifty feet across and fifteen feet in the ground. When completed it will hold 2,500 tons of ensilage. Mr. Edwards owns 10,000 head of cattle.—Kansas City Journal.

New Territory North of Siberia.

Valuable discoveries of new land north of Siberia, says Reuter, have been announced as the result of the hydrographical work in those seas of the Russian ice breakers Taimyr and Vaigatz. The new territory stretches for some 200 miles.—London Chronicle.

Size of Zeppelins.

Zeppelins vary in diameter and length, but most of them are of large size, being almost as big as battleships. The Deutschland, for example, is 485 feet long and 40 feet in diameter, with a capacity of 23,000 cubic yards and a lifting power of 44,800 pounds.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Louis D. Brandeis, Special Treasury Counsel.

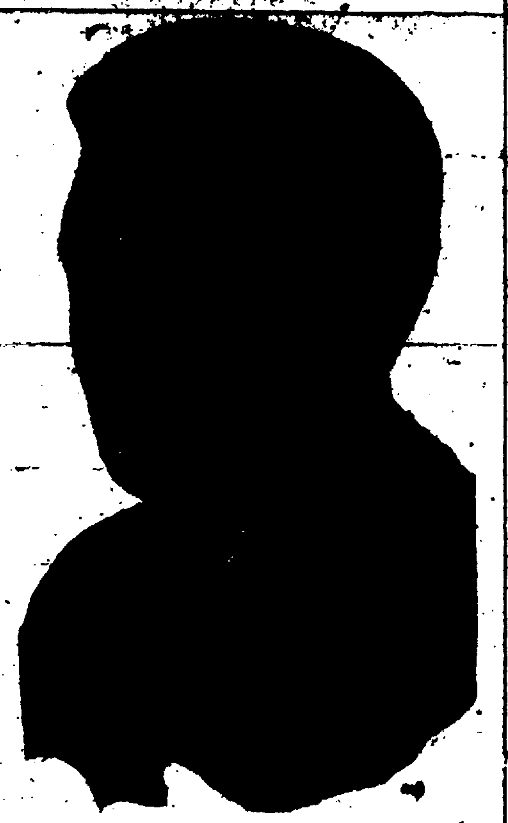

Photo by American Press Association.

In the trial of the suit instituted by the Riggs National bank of Washington against officials of the United States treasury department Louis D. Brandeis of Boston will act as special counsel for the accused officials. The bank has accused Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, Treasurer John Burke and Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams of conspiracy to wreck it.

For many years Mr. Brandeis has been a national figure in American public life. He is an advocate of social reforms, a publicist of renown, a lawyer of distinction, who has served as special counsel for the government in many celebrated cases. Mr. Brandeis is regarded as an expert in legislation and administration efficiency.

While Mr. Brandeis is largely a product of New England, he is not a Yankee. He was born of German-Jewish parents in Kentucky in 1858. After a preliminary education in Germany he went to Harvard Law school, was a professor there for awhile and then began practice in Boston. Soon he was recognized as one of the most successful lawyers and acquired one of the biggest practices in the city. Although a man in public life, Mr. Brandeis is not in politics. His use of politics has been merely as a means to the end of pushing social and economic movements. Several years ago his admirers tried to get him to run for mayor of Boston on a nonpartisan ticket, but failed to get him interested.

Kinsman of the Czar.

Recent [illegible] from the scene of war operations in Poland have made mention of Grand Duke Dimitri of Russia, who was attached to the army which invested Przemysl and compelled the capitulation of that fortified city. Grand Duke Dimitri is a cousin of the czar, being a son of Grand Duke Paul, brother of the late Czar Alexander III. He was born near Moscow on Sept. 6, 1891, his mother dying six days later.

Photo by American Press Association.

GRAND DUKE DIMITRI.

Like all of the Muscovite grand dukes, he was educated for a military career, and after graduating from the war college he entered the cavalry. After serving as a subordinate for a time he was appointed aid-de-camp to the adjutant of the Eleventh regiment of Grenadier guards and later was made captain in the Second regiment of the fusileers of the Imperial guard. Since hostilities began he has been on the fighting line and recently was decorated as knight of the order of [illegible]

LIQUEFIED GAS IS NEW WAR WEAPON

Germans Begin Great Drive by Aid of Deadly Fumes.

NOT BOMBS BUT BOTTLES.

Correspondent With French Army, Describing Novel Arm Which Depends Upon Utilizing the Wind, Says Men Killed Turned Black at Once and Others Were Incapable of Defense.

A correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle with the French army described the new weapon by means of which the Germans won the first step in their great fresh drive for the coast of the English channel. He declares that liquefied chlorine gas was liberated from steel bottles.

On the evening of April 22, he says, the French soldiers who manned the first line trenches saw rising from the German trenches, a short distance away, a number of white fuses, evidently intended as signals. Almost at once all along the German trenches a thick curtain of yellow smoke arose and was blown gently toward the French trenches by a northeast wind.

This curtain, which advanced like the "yellow wind" of northern China, offered this peculiarity—that it spread thickly on the ground, rising to a height of sixteen feet only.

The French soldiers were naturally taken by surprise. Some got away in time, but many, alas, not understanding the new danger, were not so fortunate and were overcome by the fumes and died poisoned. Among those who escaped nearly all cough and spit blood, the chlorine attacking the mucous membrane. The dead were turned black at once.

Rush Followed Fumes.

The effect of this poisonous gas was felt over about six kilometers of ground in length by two kilometers deep. Farther than that the gas was too much diluted with air to kill, but suffocated many.

About fifteen minutes after letting the gas escape the Germans got out of their trenches. Some of them were sent on in advance with masks over their heads to ascertain if the air had become breathable.

Having discovered that they could advance, they arrived in large numbers on the area on which the gas had spread itself some minutes before and took possession of the arms of the dead men. They made no prisoners. Whenever they saw a soldier whom the fumes had not quite killed they snatched away his rifle and threw it in the Yser and advised him ironically to lie down "to die better."

These were not asphyxiating bombs that the Germans used. They were big, re-enforced steel bottles of gas, compressed at high pressure, which the Germans placed on top of their trenches, and of which they opened the taps when it seemed to them that the wind coming from behind them would carry on the poison to the enemy's trenches.

May Kill Own Men.

It is possible that the use of their own chlorine gas may one day turn against the Germans themselves. Should the wind veer suddenly they would be the first victims of their attempt, he concludes.

In a special article on the German successes near Ypres, the Frankfurter Zeitung says:

"It is indeed possible that our bombs and shells rendered it impossible for the enemy's troops to remain in their trenches or artillery positions.

"It is even probable that, in point of fact, projectiles emitting poisonous gases were employed by us, for the German army command has permitted no doubt to exist that, as a reply to the treacherous projectiles of the English and French, which have been constantly observed for many weeks, we on our side also would employ gas bombs or whatever one may call them.

"The German army command, moreover, referred to the fact that from German chemistry considerably more effective substances might be expected, and our army command was right."

A Dutch correspondent telegraphs that certain Germans have confided to him that the Germans intend to continue the use of asphyxiating gas and expect that it will prove their final means of victory.

Calls It Last Crime.

The Paris Temps in commenting on this latest innovation calls the use of asphyxiating gas the last crime left for the Germans to perpetrate and says they will stand dishonored in history because of it.

The German official explanation is that The Hague convention ruled against the use of asphyxiating projectiles and that therefore the convention was not abused. They say that the German troops did not fire such bombs.

In this explanation the Temps finds hypocrisy and duplicity, because, it says, The Hague interdiction was not aimed at any special engine for spreading asphyxiating gas, but against the use of asphyxiants in general.

If half of what has been said of the efficacy of the Turpin asphyxiating shells is true, says the Journal des Debats, there is no doubt that France will be able to make war with these latest methods on a certain [illegible]

NINETEEN HUNDRED COPIES OF THE EVENING TIMES GO INTO FULTON'S HOMES DAILY. WATCH US GROW!

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 119 — Established, Dec. 17, 1914. — FRIDAY, MAY 7, 1915 — Price One Cent

Census Figures Give Fulton's Bonded Indebtedness as $561,246.51, Which is Larger Than Some State Cities Twice as Big. Bonded Indebtedness is Down to the Minute; Population is According to Census of 1910

Your Alderman Should Be Asked to Scan the Annexed Table of Figures Before Cast- His Vote For or Against the Brown Bill at Hearing.

The Brown bill will come before the Common Council of Fulton tonight for a public hearing, at which time any taxpayer or citizen who has any remarks to make for or against the bill will be given an opportunity to speak. Without stretching the truth a particle, it can be said that the bill will meet some lively opposiion from many prominent taxpayers, who have announced their intention of being on hand to voice their sentiments. Many of these men have never before interested themselves in any similar bit of legislation, but the publicity given this measure has aroused them to action.

The bill provides for salaries to the Mayor and Aldermen, if the council sees fit to vote the salaries and it is this measure which seems to meet with the most strenuous opposition. The bill further provides for the licensing of poolrooms, billiard halls, and bowling alleys; the appointment of a captain of police, if the council sees fit; and the uthority to borrow an amount not to exceed $20,000, if the council deems any emergency requires it.

The first and last clause meet with the greatest opposition. The supporters of the bill claim that a small yearly salary which if placed would insure untiring service and care from the city officials in the supervisiion of city government. The last clause, it is claimed, will enable the council to vote the money to repair several bridges which are in bad shape at the present time.

The opponents of the bill point to the charter which empowers the council to call a special election by which money can be raised to build bridges or repair them at any time, if the people of the city deem it necessary. The opponents of the measure say that this emergency and any similar emergency is well taken care of at present by the charter and no amendments are necessary. As for the salaries, many taxpayers are of the opinion that this city is far enough in debt now without adding another burden to the load, and that a small salary will not influence the right kind of city official to give any better service to his city, than if he were acting without pay, as has been the case in the past.

The high-tax rate prevailing here, and the fact that the city is heavily in debt is a silent argument for the opponents of the bill. No other city of this size in the state is so heavily burdened as Fulton is and to make this statement clear, some cities of this size or larger, and the bonded indebtedness of each one is shown. The tax rate of Fulton is $35.40 on the West Side and $[illegible] on the East Side of the river. This is $10 higher than the tax rate in Buffalo, and $20 higher than that of New York city.

The bonded indebtedness of the several cities according to the State census is at present:

City	Population, 1910	Bonded Indebtedness
Fulton	10,480	$561,246.51
Johnstown	10,447	$264,769.00
Oneonta	9,497	$345,305.00
Oneida	8,313	$245,475.00
Plattsburg	11,138	$346,800.00
Little Falls	12,273	$403.092.00
Watertown	26,730	$364,322.00
Glens Falls	15,243	$393,050.00
Gloversville	20,642	$747,800.00
Ogdensburg	15,933	$444,742.00

It is significant that Fulton is in debt further than Little Falls which has a larger population; Watertown, with almost double the population; Glens Falls, with a larger population; Ogdensburg also larger, and that [illegible] is almost as large as this city.

When the Brown bill comes up for its hearing tonight these facts will be given prominence, and they are very strong arguments against the Brown bill or any other measure which would add another burden to the taxpayers of this city. If the bill contains any redeeming features, they are in the minority in the opinion of many prominent taxpayer. The bill will either be accepted as it stands or rejected in its entirety, when the council takes action after the hearing.

GERMANS SINK 3 SHIPS IN BRITISH WATERS

A German submarine sank a trawler by shell fire in the North Sea on Wednesday. A Danish steamship was sunk in the same area either by a torpedo or a mine and a submarine sank a British schooner off the Irish coast. So far as was known last night, these three vessels constitute the day's toil of the zone warfare. No lives were lost.

The steamship Cathay, from Copenhagen for Chinese ports, went down in twenty minutes. Her passengers and the crew, totaling forty-three persons, took to the small boats and all were landed safely at Ramsgate yesterday. They were unable to say whether a mine or a submarine sank the vessel.

The schooner Earl of Latham was sunk by a German submarine [illegible], on the Irish coast. The crew was permitted to take to small boats and was rescued by a trawler.

[illegible]

ALLIES PRESSING ONWARD ALONG THE PENINSULA

London, Friday.—Slowly but surely the troops of the Allies are conquering the Gallipoli Peninsula on their way to Constantinople, aided by war ships in the straits and the Aegean Sea.

In a statement made in the House of Commons the British Premier, told the progress of the operations up to last Sunday. He described the movements of the troops as continuing "under highly satisfactory conditions," saying in part:

"At daybreak of April 25 the landing occurred, the troops making use of six landing places. By nightfall 29,000 men had been disembarked in the face of a fierce opposition by infantry and artillery intrenched behind successive lines of wire entaglements.

"The leading troops of the Twenty-ninth division were held up all day to west of Sedd-ul-Bahr, but at sunset they succeeded in a fine attack along the heights, which made possible the taking of a good position covering the disembarkation of the remainder of the division.

"The landing brigade of the Australian and New Zealand corps went ashore at Gaba Tepe at half-past four o'clock in the morning in complete silence. The enemy opened a heavy fire at point blank range, but the beach was rushed with good effect and the attack was carried out with the utmost dash up the slope.

"By the evening of April 27 the Twenty-ninth division was firmly established across the Gallipoli Peninsula, having advanced two miles from the point of landing. They were poined by French troops, who, having fulfilled the task of silencing the hostile batteries on the Asiatic coast which interfered with the landing on the Gallipoli Peninsula, had recrossed the straits.

"The disembarkation continued on April 28 and 29. By May 2 a further advance had been made by the French and British troops on the Southern end of the Peninsula, and the Australian and New Zealand corps had been reinforced by the Royal Naval division. The positions everywhere had been consolidated.

"In the successful performance of this, one of the most difficult operations of the war—a landing on an open beach in the face of [illegible] courage and skill.

Russia Officially Denies Defeat in Western Galicia

Washington, Friday.—The Russian Embassy today received the following dispatch from the Russian Minister of Foerign Affairs:

"The reports from Berlin and Vienna of a victory gained by the Germans and Austrians in Western Galicia are absolutely unfounded. The battles that are proceeding now in that region give no foundation whatever to talk even of a partial success of our enemies. You are asked to contradict most emphatically the reports by the Germans.

(Signed) "SAZANOFF."

London, Friday—Frederick Rennet telegraphs to the Daily News from ePtrograd:

"The separate artillery engagements along the Donajec are merged into a great fierce infantry battle. The Austro-German force attacked the Russian positions on the south bank of the Vistula, but at nightfall the Russians charged and drove the force from the immediate Russian base. In the extreme south in this section the Russians were successful, but in the middle region they retreated bfore an immense mass of fresh German reinforcements to defend their second line. It is expected the battle will last for several days."

CHINA MUST ACCEDE TO JAPANESE DEMANDS

Peking, Friday.—The Japanese Legation has informed the Chinese Foreign Office that Japan would be unable to accept the further concessions offered on Thursday by China and would present an ultimatum before three o'clock this (Friday) afternoon unless the twenty-four demands were accepted by China without qualification.

China reiterated, regarding Shantung province, that she would grant to Japan everything that already had been granted to Germany there by treaty.

China agreed to grant to Japan the right to work mines in South Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia; that all disputes between the Japanese in Manchuria of whatever nature shall be under Japanese jurisdictionffi that schools and hospitals may lease land from the Chinese, thereby reserving land ownership; to grant a concession to Japan to build the Nan Chang-Chaochow-Fu railway if Great Britain consents to the release of China from the negotiations begun concerning this railroad two years ago. The Japanese claim they requested the concession for this railroad in 1907.

It is said that the Chinese government has resolved to communicate with the United States, Great Britain, Russia and France on receipt of the ultimatum, and that the nature of this communication will depend upon the nature of the ultimatum.

METHODIST PASTOR GOES TO OGDENSBURG

The Rev. S. T. Dibble, who resigned his partorate of the Potsdam Methodist Episcopal church two weeks ago, has been taken to the St. Lawrence State Hospital at Ogdensburg. He was accompanied there by his son, Walter S. Dibble, President of the Onondaga Photo-Engraving Company of Syracuse, following an examination made by Syracuse physicians.

"I can not, of course, say how long my father will be there," said Walter S, Dibble, of Syracuse over the telephone. "We consider that he is in very bad condition and has been for some time past. It is a nervous and mental breakdown."

It is said that Mr. Dibble has been [illegible] for a little over a year and his friends attribute his trouble at Potsdam to this cause. He resigned the pastorate at Potsdam shortly after the conference at Oswego. He went at once to Syracuse and remained with his son several days, but returned to Potsdam last week and packed his household goods. Part of them he stored in Potsdam and part were shipped to Syracuse. His friends say that he burned up a considerable quantity of his goods, including a number of his sermons and his life insurance policies. This is pointed to as another indication of his unsound mental condition. Mr. Dibble is sixty-four years old.

WEATHER FORECAST

Strong southeast winds; moderate southeast gale, diminishing Rain and cooler tonight. Saturday fair and cool.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and [illegible] Times
Published Daily, except Sunday, at [illegible] First Street, Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated
Telephone [illegible]
C. WILLIAM [illegible], President and Editor
R. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. [illegible], Treasurer
Entered as second-class matter [illegible] at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under [illegible] 1879.
May 7, 1915

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

TIMELY TOPICS.

Our Big Heart.

"The Almighty heart is still stronger than the almighty dollar." No spellbinder made the statement. No politician made it as an appeal for votes. A foreigner said it the other day in a foreign country, in praising the stand this country has taken on the European war. Here and there across the water we still have a friend.—Detroit News.

Knows All About It.

A woman writer, unmarried, tells in a Chicago paper that she will "lay bare relentlessly the weaknesses which make for unhappiness in married life." Yep, it takes an unmarried person to "lay bare relentlessly the weakness that make for unhappiness in married life."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Dope Fiends.

Those early impressions that the drug users had quit appear to have been too early. It is now feared that the worst is not yet known. Many cities report an astounding increase in the number of cases found by the police and hospitals. The evil was attacked none too soon.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

The Unpopular Weather Man.

The government weather bureau, which has trouble enough making correct forecasts for one day, is taking a fearful risk when it issues weekly predictions for the benefit of farmers and shippers. But it might as well be hanged for a sheep as a lamb.—New York Sun.

The Bystander's Lot.

So long as Uncle Sam must be an innocent bystander he should felicitate himself that he can do his bystanding 3,000 miles away from the scene of [illegible] instead of next door to it. The neighbors to a first class row may be hit by flying brickbats.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Poetic License.

One interesting instance of poetic license is the way William Watson speaks of a man going out to meet the enemy with a whetted glaive, whereas really he lies on his stomach in one of the trenches and shivers in his wet khaki pants.—Ohio State Journal.

Different Shots.

The difference between stock exchanges and traction lines is striking. In the one you have to have a seat before you can hand over your cash. In the other—well, it's on the contrary quite the reverse.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Laconic.

Kitchener of Khartum knew just what to do when he heard that a distinguished and recently married officer was being visited by his wife at his headquarters in the field. "One of you must come home," he wired.—Boston Globe.

A Long Felt Want.

Edison is said to have perfected an invention for keeping the air in submarines pure. We wish he would do as much for offices, hotels, city halls, prisons and other airtight compartments above water level.—New York Sun.

Toys and Titles.

The recent meeting of the American toy manufacturers in Chicago calls attention to the fact that we can manufacture every sort of toy in America that is made in Europe—except titles of nobility.—Chicago Herald.

Swat the Flies.

Swat the flies before they are born. You can do that by swatting the filthy places where the flies are hatched and brought into existence by the hundred thousand to torment humanity.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Passing of the Crown.

The emperor of Japan is to be crowned next November. The ceremony ought to be interesting, as the signs of the times are that it is going to become rarer and rarer.—Baltimore American.

Never Pays to Argue With 'Em.

If a woman wants to paint her face it's none of the state's business, declares a Cincinnati woman. And the state will probably drop the subject right there.—Knoxville Sentinel.

Baled Hay, Straw and Shavings. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

THE MINISTERS' SIDE

The statement made by representatives of Fulton's Ministerial Association, including its president, the Rev. H. D. Holmes, which was printed in last night's Times, that the gentlemen wholly disapproved the use of their names in connection with that portion of the Brown Bill relating to the payment of salaries to Mayor and Aldermen, did not come as a surprise to their friends in this city. It now develops that the ministers of Fulton have not given their endorsement to the salary clause, and furthermore, they speak in terms of unmistakable condemnation of the movement to place the city at the mercy of an official who, if he were to see fit, could make possible gambling upon a scale so large that the city might be disgraced for all time. The attitude of the ministers of Fulton has been made very clear. They cannot approve the Brown Bill, because in spite of the Mayor's contention that the bill does not give an opportunity to license gambling, they see between the lines and read that it does. But the ministers of Fulton are up against the same blank wall as the rest of the citizenship, in that they must swallow the Brown Bill in its entirety or they must reject every feature of its provisions.

Since the Mayor retains silence, preferring to keep his own counsel rather than to let into his confidence the taxpayers of Fulton, it is a hard matter to determine whether the Brown Bill was purposely made to carry the joker, or whether its sponsor—whoever he may be—committed one more of those funny jumbles for which bill drafters have become famous.

But the hour has grown late. The Brown Bill has passed Assembly and Senate, and if it receives the endorsement of Fulton's Aldermen at tonight's meeting Governor Whitman will more than likely sign the measure which has been described by Mayor Fox as a step toward modern municipal government, but which is in reality as near to the type of government wanted by the best element of Fulton's citizenship as The Evening Times is to learning why Mayor Fox ordered increased assessment upon certain property valuations.

The Mayor has chosen to remain silent upon public matters, and in the words of a very rich and consequently powerful man who has since died, "The public be damned," he continues to treat the taxpayers in a manner that is belittling beyond measure.

It is indeed a late hour for the taxpayers of this city to rise upon their toes against the Brown Bill, but it is not a moment too late for them to send up a howl of protest to each and every Alderman, asking them to have sent back to Albany the latest piece of bad legislation, Senator Brown's bill that includes among its clauses a provision for the payment of salaries to certain city officials.

The hearing is scheduled for this evening. It's your privilege to be on hand, or to forever hold down a bleacher seat.

TIME AND PLACE

Count the chuckles of life. Smile out loud. Spread the sunshine of laughter all through the open. Ease the old journey in life by telling something funny. A good hearty laugh will reach out and throttle real logic. Successful speakers will tell you that a touch of humor will often drive home an argument—more often than reason.

The benevolent microbes of mirth are hostile to disease. The wise doctor will tell you of the therapeutic value of fun. Medicine has been known to fail as against melancholia. A well-balanced brain and a healthy body are almost always possessed by a man who laughs a lot.

But if there is anything that turns your stomach, it's the person who sets his teeth together and withdraws his lips and grins in that sardonic style—that ghastly joke called a smirk.

Make merry. Hold a jubilee. Roar. Let the heart leap through the throat just as often as this side-splitting speel strikes you. But remember this: The business office is no place in which to tell things that tickle this triumphant spark-plug—laughter. There is a time and a place for fun, for smart stories. The time is after closing hours of business. The place varies.—Silent Partner.

HUMANE HUNDAY HAS BEEN SET FOR MAY 23

"Humane Sunday" will be observed throughout the country on May 23. Rev. Harry Westbrook Reed of Watertown has sent out letters to all the ministers of that county requesting them to make their sermons with the idea of this work. Rev. Mr. Reed is president of the local S. P. C. A. The work of the society is in the interest of small children and dumb animals. It is the idea to install in the minds of all that mercy and kindness must and should be used at all times with the animals and children because of their inability to care for themselves.

WOODS WORK FOR FORESTERS

Cornell Offers Instruction in Camp in Northern Mountains

Ithaca, Friday.—Beginning June 7 the department of forestry at Cornell will offer instruction during a full summer term, in addition to the regular winter terms heretofore conducted.

The first six weeks of the term, it is announced, will be spent at Ithaca, and the remainder of the time, up to September 22 will be in camp on a large forest tract in the Adirondack mountains. The courses offered form a regular part of the specified work for professional students of forestry in the college, though the courses will be open also to those who have had three years' instruction at Cornell, or its equivalent. The subjects include timber utilization and measurement, silviculture, forest management, and advanced research into various other forest problems.

Because of the advantages of summer work, especially in a fully timbered area such as the Adirondacks, certain of the courses offered will be given during the summer term only.

Woods Work Required

In addition to the summer work in the woods the students are required to spend the ensuing fall in getting practical experience in the logging woods, returning to Ithaca to finish their college course in the spring. Those who take graduate tarining for the degree of master in forestry, must have an additional summer term in the camp in the woods and then one more term at Cornell, to be graduated in February in time for the examinations for the federal forest service, or for the beginning of spring activities in state or private employ.

The alteration of class room and laboratory study with practical work in the field during the final years at the university is believed by those in charge of the course to offer a desirable arrangement not from the standpoint of thorough instruction in forestry, but also it is said to appeal to men seeking thorough technical training.

Opinions

The Careless Word

Few men who talk so much as Colonel Roosevelt say less which comes back to plague them. It seems, however, that in going a little farther than the amenities required in commenting upon Lincoln's letter to Thurlow Weed, William Barnes's grandfather, the colonel put his foot in it. Expressing the hope that Barnes would be a Weed and not a Platt may have been a thoughtless expression, but it offended the sons of the late senator who interpreted it as a slur upon the memory of their father, the man to whom Mr. Roosevelt owed his political prominence. As a result the sons took to Syracuse hundreds of letters which passed between the litigants and the senator. This correspondence, it is anticipated, will be embarassing to even so resourceful a man as the distinguished defendant.

Up to this point in the Syracuse trial it seems as though the entire effort was being made to show that the colonel is righteous and infallible. The defense is charged with showing that Barnes is bad. It has given him a clean bill of health in stipulating that nothing in the alleged libel was intended to reflect upon Barnes's personal honor or probity. It has not done much by implication to reflect upon his political integrity. Mr. Roosevelt's courage at San Juan, his confessed code of perfection in public affairs, his missionary work with the bosses, etc., may help in mitigation of an intemperate attack, but they do not count in pestification. Pretty soon some real evidence must be offered to fasten Barnes's corrupt alliance with Murphy or the plaintiff will not be obliged to swear witnesses.

It is remarked by public men and newspapers that Loeb is the only man who has known the colonel as long as five years, who has had any degree of intimacy with him, who has appeared to defend him. Loeb acted as though he didn't like the job, but having been the colonel's goat so many years he could not fail him in his need. Newcomb, Davenport and the other men now surrounding the colonel have only become his intimates since he parted company with the men he preferred to associate with in politics. They are the sort he never noticed when the bosses could be depended upon. It is strange indeed that a man who has been governor, who has been President, who has given offices to 40,000 men, in his extremity is receiving succor only from the Duells, Davenports, Newcombs and the little fry who shine in reflected light. Did a man of so great importance fail to attach with hooks of steel, other men of importance?—Meadville Press.

Justice Hughes Withdrawal

Justice Charles E. Hughes's announcement that he "wholly disapproves the use of his name in connection with the Presidential campaign" is as positive as he could make it, but it will not eliminate him from the discussion of Presidential possibilities. He declares that not only has he no desire to re-enter politics, but "as a member of the Supreme Court he is not available." He is not a candidate in any sense and "cannot permit his name to be used."

Justice Hughes made his position relative to the Presidential nomination perfectly clear in 1912, when he told friends who spoke of the possibility of his nomination at Chicago that he was entirely out of politics and would not permit the use of his name under any circumstances. He also said: "I hope that, as a Justice of the Supreme Court, I am rendering public service and may continue to do so for some years, but the Supreme Court must not be dragged into politics, and no man is as essential to his country's well-being as is the unstained integrity of the courts."

Undoubtedly this attitude of Justice Hughes is itself one of the reasons that he has been talked of as a strong candidate. That his decision is plainly final will bring relief to Democrats who hope for the re-election of President Wilson and fear especially the possbility of Justice Hughes's nomination — Herald-Despatch.

New carload of Bowker's Fertilizers. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Teeth Put to Many Uses.

All Eskimos have good teeth, but they are subjected to severe usage, being used for pinchers, vises and fluting machines. The teeth are employed in drawing bolts, untying knots, holding the mouthpiece of a drill, shaping boot soles and stretching and tanning skins. When they become uneven from hard usage they are leveled off with a file or whetstone.

Have The Evening Times to Read Before Eating Your Supper

With all the news about people you know and affairs in while you are interested.

¶ THE EVENING TIMES is regular in its delivery, and is on sale at the newstands of V. C. Lewis, Conley Bros., Wm. Murphy and Charles Brooks, East Broadway; J. W. Gillard, West First Street.

¶ Ask for and insist upon getting, taking no other, newspaper than your home newspaper,

The Fulton Evening Times

Steer this way for the Insurance that spells peace of mind—our Automobile Accident and Liability Insurance.

The accident that generally occurs is the unavoidable one—but that does not stop the "hold up" suit that costs money to defend against—BUT our insurance protects you against property and personal damages and the company fights the case.

See us today for rates.

DAVID & MASON AGENCY
[illegible]

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In Equal Suffrage Kansas, according to the report of the Kansas Board of Control, divorce is on the wane. Not only was the number of divorces in 1914 proportionately less than in 1913, but seven counties were entirely immune.

* * *

Judge Snell of Tacoma who in a recent statement said that woman suffrage was a failure in the state of Washington has been shown by the president of the Susan B. Anthony Council of Women Voters to have reason for not being fond of the woman voters. She it was who did not vote for him when he was a candidate for U. S. Senator in the primaries. It appears that the disapproval is mutual.

* * *

In Massachusetts, Congressman Dietrick has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Governor. It indicates the strength of the woman suffrage movement in that state that he has thought it worth while to include woman suffrage in his platform.

* * *

Senators Wagner and Sullivan of the New York Legislature are reported as voting for the bill to provide women police for New York city as a joke and its passage is said to have been the surprise of the Senate.

Thus the women won their bill because politicians did not regard indirect influence as strong enough to fight. The contempt of the enemy opened the road to victory.

In Warren, Ill., on May 1, Mrs. A. B. Canfield became mayor. As she had run a millinery store for 24 years, the voters thought she could run the town. As the salary was but $12, it seemed a safe sum for a woman to have. As she was 74 years old, she was both mature minded and free from domestic cares. As a lineal descendant of John Quincy Adams her incumbency is regarded by the voters as lending distinction to Warren.

* * *

The Northern Budget of Troy, N. Y., has proved again that the arguments of the enemy is the long suit of the suffragists. A few weeks ago, in its desire to be impartial, the Northern Budget issued an anti-suffrage edition. In it the antis put their choicest bits including what Elihu Root thought about it in 1893, and pictures of beautiful antis and their children, not even omitting their dolls. Arguments designed to stay the flood of democracy were neatly arranged with many facts showing the failure of woman suffrage in the West, and the lifelong regret of the westerners over granting it.

Then the Budget took a straw vote among its readers by means of a blank ballot which had to be cut out and mailed with a two cent stamp to be counted. Over 2,000 persons voted and the result stood over two to one in favor of suffrage.

* * *

On May 8 which a beneficent congress set apart as mothers' day, from thousands of pulpits all over the land, ministers will be asking for the vote for mother.

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Bogue's, 61 First st. adv

KEEP YOUR FOOTWEAR IN HARMONY WITH THE SEASON

$3.45

A Combination of Gray Cloth and Gun Metal. Ask for No. 772. No. 773 in tan.

Lay away those warm uncomfortable High Shoes and settle your feet down into a pair of cool, easy fitting Oxfords

WE HAVE SOME NEAT ONES, AND LIKE ALL OUR OTHER SHOES, THEY ARE MADE IN OUR OWN FACTORIES FROM LEATHER TANNED IN OUR OWN TANNERIES

$3.45

A Dainty Shoe for Dainty Women. Patent Colt Shoes always look well. Our No. 0211 will add greatly to any costume.

51 SOUTH FIRST STREET FULTON, NEW YORK

HOME ECONOMY INSTRUCTIONS

Smith-Lever Funds in 33 States Plan to Increase Net Income

Washington, May 7.—The Smith-Lever Act provides for extension work in agriculture and home economics, but it does not specify what proportion of the funds shall be used in home economics. The State agricultural college extension directors are being urged by women's organizations of various kinds to allot a certain specific portion of the Smith-Lever funds for work with women. In view of this fact, it is interesting to note the amount of money actually being put into this work by the agicultural colleges, for the most part in co-operation with the United States Department of Agriculture. Data taken from the records of the department and relating exclusively to work of this kind in the 33 Northern and Western States show the following distribution of funds:

(1) For meetings and movable schools at which demonstrations are given in cooking, sewing, household conveniences, and for the organization of women's clubs to study home economics..	$81,555
(2) For canning clubs to teach girls and women how to prevent many of the wastes of the farm by canning and preserving fruits, vegetables, and meats by cheap and rapid commercial processes..	56,197
(3) For county agents who help farmers and their wives to increase the net income of the farm, and thus make possible the introduction of labor-saving conveniences and other improvements into the home	1,027,312

From the above it will be seen that there is being spent a total of $137,752 directly and $1,027,312 indirectly on lines of work affecting the farm home. The former amount is equal to 42 per cent. of the Smith-Lever fund available this year for extension work in the 33 northern and western States, while the latter is more than three times the entire Smith-Lever fund available to all of these States for the year 1914-15.

Need for Careful Planning

Matters that just now are concerning extension directors in the North and West are how best to approach the home economics problems of the country and what kind of an organization to develop for carrying on the work. Shall there be developed a woman county agent who shall work with farm women in some such manner as the county agent works with men? Just what, in detail, shall such a woman do? How shall she organize her work and how go about it? Shall it be required that the county pay a part of her salary and expenses, as in the case of the county agent? What training and qualifications shall be required of women agents who take up the work as county agents as a permanent life work. Women agents are very likely to leave the service to manage homes of their own. In view of this fact, how shall the work be organized? The Washington office will welcome comments and suggestions from all county agents and extension workers who have given attention to this matter.

Objections to Farm Life

The chief objections of women to country life are usually (1) the generally small returns in farming, (2) the drudgery of farm work, and (3) the social isolation. More money for home conveniences and greater efficiency in household management both have in view the lessening of the drudgery of farm work and the securing of certain periods of leisure to farm women, which may be used in productive, social, and recreational ways.

Fundamental Home Matters

Extension work designed to be fundamentally helpful to farm women would seem, therefore, to include within its scope certain matters, as follows:

1. Plans to increase the net income of the farm.—Farm women need more money for home purposes. The purchase of home conveniences, the installation of water, sewerage, lighting, and heating systems, kitchen and other conveniences, and the bringing of literature and music into the home are, in the majority of country homes, dependent upon greater net profits in farming. Knowledge of these conveniences and other desirable things is good, but money to buy these desirable things is a vital necessity if country life is to be made as acceptable to women as town life. The county agent is giving especial attention to this phase of the work.

2. Plans to teach and demonstrate efficiency in farm home management. These include such matters as wholesome food properly prepared and served in adequate supply and variety, throughout the year, the care of the home and the family linen and wardrobe, the care and management of children, and sometimes the handling of certain farm enterprises like poultry and eggs, milk and butter, the garden, small fruits, etc. Efficiency in farm home management contemplates the maximum of accomplishment with the minimum of effort to the end that the farm family may find satisfaction and contentment in the home, and that the time of the farm woman may be conserved.

3. Plans for leisure and development.—The farm woman needs time for reading, self-development, child teaching, social life, and recreation.

In the development of home-economics demonstration work, there needs to be kept in mind the point of view that the problems of country women must chiefly be solved by country women. The county agent movement in some sections of the North and West started out primarily as a city man's movement, but it has succeeded in exact proportion as the farmers of the county have taken hold of the work and made it their own.

Co-operation of City Women

City women can help in the development of the forthcoming demonstration work in home economics for country women. One of the ways in which city women can be of direct help in the movement is through greater social intercourse with farm women, through direct purchases of poultry, eggs, butter, fresh and canned fruits and vegetables, and by co-operating with them in the maintenance of rest rooms, nurseries, etc., for farm women when they come to town. But farm women need and how to meet these needs are matters which must be worked out chiefly by farm women themselves. The critisism sometimes heard with reference to much of our home-economics teaching is that such teaching is done primarily from the standpoint of the town woman. The country woman's problems are the problems of the country and must be approached from that standpoint.

A LIVING TORPEDO.

That Odd Fish, the Electric Ray, Is a Terror In His Own Way.

There is a queer fish, bearing the name torpedo, that in its own peculiar way is a good deal of a terror. This is the torpedo, or electric ray, a dweller in the southern seas, which grows to a large size, sometimes weighing seventy or eighty pounds. This peculiar fish has a nearly circular body, a short tail and a very small mouth.

The back is brownish in color, and the underneath parts are white.

The torpedo obtains its name from its power of giving a violent shock, similar to an electric shock, to anything with which it comes in contact. Whenever an enemy approaches the fish emits from its body a kind of electricity, which incapacitates the attacker immediately.

In capturing its food the torpedo finds this power of use. Being very inactive, it cannot pursue the small fish which form its diet, so it lies in wait until they swim close by and then throws out its powerful shock, which instantly renders them helpless.

If a person touches this strange fish he is attacked by cramp, which affects the stomach, producing a kind of convulsion. For this reason the torpedo is sometimes known as the "cramp fish."—London Answers.

THE YELLOW FLAG.

A Ruse That Once Saved a British Ship From Capture.

An effective ruse de guerre in the way of flag flying was that practiced in the Mediterranean at the beginning of the last century by Lord Dundonald while cruising in the British ship Speedy. This little brig had captured so many of the enemy's merchantmen that a Spanish frigate was specially fitted out, disguised as a merchantman, to bring her to book.

Dundonald, in order to deceive the merchant craft of the enemy, adopted similar tactics and disguised the Speedy as a Danish merchant brig. The two disguised boats soon sighted each other. Dundonald at once gave chase and discovered his mistake when the Spaniard suddenly revealed her true nature and started lowering a boat to examine the Speedy's papers.

But Dundonald was equal to the occasion. He hoisted the yellow flag—signal of sickness. And when the Spanish boat was within hail an English officer in Danish uniform shouted that they were only two days out of Algiers. As the plague was raging in Algiers, the ruse was completely successful.—London Chronicle.

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

EARLY SUMMER OUTFITS NOW

Traveling Outfits—Afternoon Gowns Easily Packed—Three-Piece Dresses—Color Combinations

New York, Mary 7.—Few dresses are as altogether satisfactory to the woman who requires the utmost wear from her clothes as a stylish well designed silk suit in three pieces.

From a famous Freench maker is a costume of black faille, that soft slightly corded silk which divides the honors with taffeta this season—Two wide long tunics cut to points and pleated at the sides, top a narrow hem which swings well above the ankles; the top part is a Grecian chemise quite short, of vermicelli lace just off a white tone. Black velvet ribbon crossing the figure in the traditional classic manner, over the shoulder and under the bust, is caught in the middle by a circlet of pearls mounted on ebony.

McCall Design

The coat of the black silk is short and fastens demurely to the neck, to hide the floating flimsiness beneath.

A More Ornate Rig

This dress has the skirt of black silk with broad blue satin stripes running crosswise the gathers well adjusted to the normal waist line. The blouse is a combination of cream net and thin lace, with a high collar that does not meet in front but is joined there by a twisted cravat with handkerchief ends of black satin.

The fronts of the blouse also refuse to meet which is one of this season's tricks. The sleeves are long and tight fitting with frills of lace over the wrists, and there is a half lining of palest pink satin that passes under the arms—the belt of folded black satin ribbon ends in a cockale bow at the side. The jacket that makes this blouse wearable in the street, is a short affair of black satin slashed at the sides, and trimmed with small jet buttons. It fastens up to the chin.

Taffeta Frocks

Taffeta is perhaps the leading favorite this season, and frocks of it are made in innumerable varieties of cut and trimming, from the plain full skirt topped with suspender straps of the material, to be worn with waists of net, lace, chiffon or batiste, concealed beneath a matching silk bolero or topped with one of the stylish coats of covert fancy checks, or velvet cords, which are an invaluable part of the outfit, for motoring, traveling and all sorts of informal out door purposes.

Lighter Coats

Summer coats of taffeta and silk Shantung, as well as of various linen and cotton weaves suitable for such garments, are shown in attractive assortment.

Black taffeta rather leading but colors also well endorsed especially in blue and dark chocolate tones. Shantungs in natural shades are handsomely tailored, in Norfolk pleats and side pleated models, and gain considerable style and emphasis from bright colored linings and handsome buttons, though many of the best coats are unlined and confined to self color.

Blue and black is a favorite combination, especially blue serge or gabardine with black taffeta.

Blue and sand color is another revival, and for evening coral pink silk and grass green tulle is fetchingly combined by a Fench maker.

Black and white holds the first place in favor just now though we are promised an all white summer season.

Verona Clarke.

Cleveland Centenary.

There is strong sentiment in Cleveland, O., in favor of commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city by the dedication of the new public works, which are now practically completed at a cost of $15,000,000. Mayor Baker and President Thwing of Western Reserve university are strongly in favor of the celebration.

STYLE SPARKS.

Three piece costumes were displayed at many of the spring openings. These included usually coat suits of serge and taffetas, gabardines and taffetas and voile and taffetas combined in self colors only.

The frock in one piece was the usual arrangement, with a smartly cut dressy coat to match for wear with the gown.

Sports suits are being made of tweeds, serges and corduroys.

Favored styles are the gored circular skirts of fairly heavy weight materials with a coat designed along English shooting coat lines. This offers an inverted plait at the back and one each side of the front portions. These plaits extend to the waist line only, where the coat finishes with a smoothly fitted circular cut peplum.

Patch pockets of large dimensions are fashion features which distinguish the styles of many of the latest suits. As [illegible] with skirts favored in [illegible] by the addition of two more.

GARDEN CLUB IN SPOKANE.

Vacant Lots and Back Yards Are Cultivated and Beautified.

This, the fifth year of the Spokane Home Garden club, organized and conducted by the Young Men's Christian association and the Spokesman-Review, finds the club serving as a model for similar civic movements all over the country. More than fifty cities have written to the Y. M. C. A. for details of the plan by which for the past four years Spokane young people have welcomed the warm spring days by converting cluttered back yards into copiously herbiferous gardens. Letters have come from districts as widely separated as the Adirondack mountains and the Sacramento valley. Women's clubs, civic uplift organizations and other branches of the Y. M. C. A. have written for information.

It is in the cultivation of vacant lots and back yards that the Home Garden club has during the last few years shown its value as a city beautiful aid. Besides removing from the public eye a great many unsightly lots on which the accumulation of winter refuse was thick, the club last year produced vegetables whose total value is estimated by Secretary G. A. Forbes of the Y. M. C. A. at $6,000.

Active co-operation is being given by the federal government, which, through the department of agriculture, is organizing the boys and girls of many cities into garden clubs, potato clubs, corn clubs and the like. T. J. Newbill of the department of agriculture will represent the government in Spokane this spring and will advise the Home Gardeners in matters pertaining to gardening efficiency. Mr. Newbill says: "I find that boys and girls make a more profitable circle than grownups for the distribution of government seeds and literature. They are more in earnest, and they are not so likely to disregard the instructions of government experts."

New Styles For Mexican Judges.

President Gonzales Garza has issued a decree prescribing the dress that must be habitually worn by judges. The dress includes black Quaker hat, black frock coat, white shirt and cravat, black gloves and black walking stick. The emblem of justice embroidered in gold must be worn on the lapel of the coat.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Ringworm.

There are few diseases of the skin easier to cure than ringworm of nonhairy parts of the body. It is, however, difficult to cure ringworm of the scalp and beard—especially the former. The reason for the intractability of ringworm of the scalp and beard is that the fungus (a vegetable parasite, the trichophyton) grows down into the hair follicles, and it is very difficult to make well recognized antiparasitics penetrate to the seat of the trouble without damaging the skin. It requires easily six months to a year of treatment to cure ringworm on the scalp or beard. Any one suffering from ringworm should place himself under the observation of a physician or a specialist on diseases of the skin if he wants to be cured. A plain sulphur ointment of one dram of sulphur to an ounce of benzoated lard, a small portion rubbed into affected localities night and morning, will [illegible] ringworm of the [illegible]

NEW SHIPMENT OF SAMPLES

We will continue this offer one week more.

[illegible] THIS ADV.

DO OVER [illegible] a piece of [illegible] AT OUR EXPENSE

[illegible]

Kyanize

For Floors and all Woodwork

[illegible]

HULETT-TAFT CO.

[illegible] Oneida Street

PAPER DAY RECEIPTS

Net Profit Realized Amounted to $19.-18, Which is Less Than Upon Other Occasions

In spite of last Saturday's gentle showers that fell nearly all of the time while old newspapers were being gathered by the VanWagenen truck, and which should have resulted in increasing the weight of the loads of papers, the net profit from the sale of the old newspapers and magazines to the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Co., was smaller than heretofore. Heretofore it has been the practice of the big pulp mill to pay a higher price—30 cents, for each hundred pounds of papers, but this year the price was made 15 cents lower, or 35 cents per each hundred pounds. Notwithstanding the decreased profit, Mrs. George E. True, whose energetic work to make paper day a huge success is extremely thankful to the people who contributed the material for this last sale of old papers, etc., for the benefit of the Lee Memorial hospital.

Gasoline, Oils and Greases. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Sale of 50 Dozen

Waldorf House and Porch Dresses

On Sale Tomorrow Morning

Dresses made of novelty silk, ginghams, Irish lawns, dimities, linen crash, crinkled seersucker, checked ginghams, also plain black lawns.

Sizes 13 to 46. Dresses made to retail up to $2.50; on sale Saturday morning at 9 o'clock for................ 89c EACH

SEE THEM IN OUR FIRST STREET SHOW WINDOWS

J. C. O'BRIEN

TWO LUDINGTON HEIRS WANTED

Information Concerning Two Daughters of Moses Ludington Wanted by Attorney

Through the medium of The Evening Times, a San Francisco attorney, Sidney McM. Van Wyck, Jr., continues to seek the legitimate heirs of Moses Ludington who died about fifty years ago in California.

Recently articles bearing upon persons who to be heirs to the estate left by Moses Ludington were published in these columns, with the result that the San Francisco attorney has been in communication with the persons who came to light as probable heirs of the Ludington estate, by reason of the publicity given their claims in this newspaper.

This morning's mail brought the following interesting letter from Mr. VanWyck:

San Francisco., Cal., April 30, '15,
Editor Evening Times:

Much obliged to you for sending me copies of the papers of April 17th, 22d and 23d containing articles in reference to the heirs of the late Moses Ludington.

I am doing the best I can to get in contact with his heirs in order that the estate here may go to the parties entitled. I have written to both Mrs. G. A. Washburn of Jersey City and Charles P. Ludington, of Hull, Canada, both of whom are mentioned in your paper as possible heirs.

It is a difficult matter to get information regarding the descendants of a man who has been dead for possibly half a century, especially when the inquiries are made by one not a relative and with very little information as a basis.

The postal card you sent me written by Mrs. Charlotte Highriter mentions two daughters of Moses Ludington, one Sabrina, who married William Chesbro and another Cordelia. Possibly you may know something of these daughters or their descendants.

Any further information you may be able to furnish will be greatly appreciated.

With best wishes to yourself and for The Times,

Sidney M. van Wyck, Jr.

If any of the readers of The Evening Times remains in possession of further information bearing upon that desired by the western attorney it is advisable to direct the reply to Sidney McM. van Wyck. Jr., 519 California st., San Francisco.

CORRESPONDENTS SHOULD NOTICE THIS STATEMENT

The Evening Times is the recognized people's paper and is at the service of the people—willing at all times to defend the taxpayers' interests, yet this newspaper must refrain from accepting for publication communications bearing unknown names, or nom de plumes, or anonymous signatures. If the writers of communications intended for publication desire The Times to withhold from publication their real names a request to that effect is sufficient—the confidence will not be betrayed; but under no circumstances does the publisher of this or any other reputable newspaper assume the responsibility of receiving for publication a communication without full knowledge of the writer's name.

This morning's mail brought to this office a letter signed "Taxpayer." The letter's contents deserves public notice, but it was unaccompanied by the writer's real name, and will not be published until the writer of it sends to this office his or her real name.

As before stated The Evening Times, if requested, will not print the name of the writer of the letter, but the newspaper must have something tangible as an evidence of good faith.

RECORDS [illegible] BEST DEFENSE

The Albany Evening Journal Records Show Barnes Got $10,000 Salary

The minute book of the Albany Evening Journal, a record taken from William Barnes' own newspaper office showed at the Barnes-Roosevelt trial that from October, 1899, to September, 1901, the Albany editor was in receipt of a $10,000 salary from J. B. Lyon. This information dropped like a bomb into the Barnes' camp.

Lyon, who operated as the J. B. Lyon Company, was doing much of the state printing at that time. And it was in December, 1899, that Barnes wrote to Roosevelt, then governor-elect, urging him not to advocate a state printing house, because it might destroy Barnes financially.

The evidence adduced today is in the form of a resolution passed by the Journal Company, of which Barnes is and was the predominant holder. That such an action was taken was admitted by the plaintiff's lawyers.

in connection with the letter to Roosevelt this evidence becomes the most important that the defense has thus far produced. It followed the last day of a vain effort to bring any direct proof that Barnes had figured in dealing with the printing ring.

The case was drawing to a close. It looked like a hopeless case before the minute book produced the apparently routine resolution which proved to be the biggest bomb of the battle.

Naturally neither Barnes nor his lawyers had any comment to make on the subject. They are in court, and in court they must make their explanations. One of the lawyers for Barnes however intimated that the resolution had no connection with the libel and is admitted subject to being stricken out. If it is not stricken out it's explanation will doubtless be a chief feature of Mr. Barnes' testimony.

The minute book on whose pages this record was spread was brought into court on subpoena several days ago. The Roosevelt lawyers spent some time in examining it. This morning, as a result of a charge by Mr. Ivins that the defendant's lawyers are taking undue advantage of the opportunity to inspect the books, all the books were brought into the court room.

Mr. Ivins made no effort to prevent the introduction of the resolution in evidence. When it had been read he admitted that it had been passed. Mr. Barnes did not bat an eye when it was being read. Sitting at the end of his lawyer's stable he continued to make sketches of the flocks of sheep which has been his favorite pastime since he has been in court. He appeared untouched by any irritation and left the court with the easy smile of a man whose turn at bat is soon coming.

Determined to make as much progress as possible, the justice, who has been liberal in his rulings, tightened up today and held proceedings down to narrow limits. The somewhat scattering shots at the printing target he confined to such as at least hit in the county with the target.

When the evidence that looked cumbersome was introduced, the Judge wanted to know what it was; and if the lawyers could not tell him, it went out. His Albany ruling saved three or four days' time. His refusal to let one of the lawyers read all the printing laws saved another half-day.

The Roosevelt lawyers promise to finish tomorrow. That they still have something up their sleeve is promised by the assertion of Mr. Bowers in court today that he might introduce evidence which might justify the inference that the plaintiff had improperly influenced the State Printing Board, which consists of controller, secretary of state and attorney-general.

"THE HORSE TRADE"

Brotherhood Closes With Debate Tonight Upon Swapping Horses.

It was Abraham Lincoln who advised us to not swap horses while crossing streams, but it remains for the astute embryonic attorneys at tonight's mock trial to tell all about "The Horse Trade," the subject upon which an accused person is to undergo the agonizing ordeal of facing judge, witnesses, attorneys and curious spectators. The trial takes place at the State Street M. E. church, and the offense and defense will be taken by the Brotherhood classes of the First M. E. and State Street M. E. churches.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 7.—According to the calculations of Dr. Albert W. Ferris of the State Reservation at Saratoga Springs, the delegates to The Constitutional Convention will drink four glasses of spring water every day for one hundred days when the weather is ordinarily warm, and five glasses when it is extremely warm.

Dr. Ferris has not idly calculated, he has assiduously figured out how much the State is going to make providing the thirst of each delegate measures up to what as a physician he believes it ought to be while he is occupied with his duties at the Capitol.

The State of New York is the owner of all the mineral and spring ater that flows at Saratoga, yet the State must purchase it if it hopes to supply it to the delegates to the convention. Dr. Ferris says that it will cost from $3.50 to $4.00 a day for one hundred and sixty-eight delegates to stroll over to the coolers annon and drain a glass of pure water.

It is planned to place twenty-seven coolers in the committee rooms and the Assembly chamber and kep them filled with spring water during the life of the convention. If all of the coolers are emptied each day, the State will make a profit of about three cents upon each cooler.

In speaking of the water he hopes to supply from theh Saratoga Reservation, Dr. Ferris said that it was a soft, sweet spring water, not unlike Poland water. "It is entirely free from mineral properties," said he and extremely palatable."

The water will be shipped from Saratoga to Albany each day by auto truck, providing the State decides to buy it from itself at $3.50 or $4 a day. These trucks are the property of the State also.

When it became known that the delegates to the Constitutional convention would very likely remain in session until September, bids for the water privilege began to be sent in to the secretary of the convention. Then it was that Dr. Ferris bestirred himself and begun his calcuations to see how much should be supplied each day. He figured that if the State were to purchase water it would be a very nice thing if the money so expended could revert back to its own coffers, consequently he made the above figures.

Of course the delegates and clerks of the Constitutional convention will be served with the water free, it is quite probable that visitors to the Capitol and the spectators at the sessions each day will be able to get in on the supply without either criticism or the knowledge of Dr. Ferris. Such a condition of affairs, however, might upset his careful reasoning and might cause an unusually thirsty delegate to forgo his allotted portion.

The majority of the State departments are supplied with spring water and it may be that in the future the supply will come from the Saratoga Reservation. Dr. Ferris will recommend this course at any rate.

During the legislative session, hundreds of bottles of Saratoga Vischy are supplied free to the members of both senate and assembly. The State foots the bill, however.

Individual paper cups are to go with the water so that the most fastidious of the delegates need not shrink from the water coolers when the free Saratoga water is ready for sampling.

CANDY SALE, BENEFIT OF A PIANO FUND

Smith's hardware store will be the scene, tomorrow, of a display of confectionery, made and to be sold by the pupils and faculty of the Erie st. school. Every cent realized at the sale will be placed to the credit of the piano fund of the school.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Milnes of West 2d st. entertained over Sunday their daughter, Miss Edith Milnes, of Syracuse.

REFRIGERATORS
PERFECTION OIL STOVES
Screen Doors and Windows
FISHING TACKLE

A. M. DRUSE & CO.

7 South First Street

Correct Dress for Women

"The New York Shop"

SPECIAL FOR SATURDAY

BEAUTIFUL NEW MODELS IN SPRING COATS [illegible] the most popular shades and effects, consisting of checkes, [illegible] and plain materials. Your choice for this day .... [illegible]
Most of these coats would retail ordinarily at $12.50 [illegible] $[illegible].75.

M. J. McDONALD & CO.

ONEIDA STREET FULTON, N. Y.

ASK FOR NATIONAL MERCHANDISE STAMPS
THEY SAVE YOU 2-1-2% ON YOUR PURCHASES

THE IDLER

Another Popularity Week Feature at The Quirk Theatre

The Cast

Mark Cross, The Idler .... Mr. Charles Richman
John Harding, (Later Sir John Harding, Bart.), Mr. Walter Hitchcock
Simeon Strong ... Mr. Stuart Holmes
Lady Harding, Miss Cathrine Countiss
Her Sister ..... Miss Claire Whitney
Her Mother .... Miss Maude Turner Gordon
Her Father .... W. T. Carlton

"The Idler," William Fox's production extraordinary, to be released by the Box Office Attraction Company, which will be seen at the Quirk Theatre, today, is one of its author's, the well-known dramatist, C. Haddon Chambers, greatest triumphs. "The Idler" is Mark Cross, a young man of good family, who in a wild fit of daredevilty has emigrated from London to the far west. John Harding, also well-born of wealthy parents, but disinherited, and a poor clerk, is also seeking his fortune in the gold fields. One day Harding receives a letter from London solicitors informing him that his father has died and that he is now Sir John Harding, Bart. He sets out at once to make his preparations for his return to civilization and to take up the station in life that is rightfully his. But that very day he becomes involved in a quarrel with Felix Strong, the young brother of a minor named Simeon Strong, and Felix is shot accidentally during the dispute. Harding is accused of murder, but flees to England in time to escape the vengeance of a possé, headed by Simeon Strong, who is determined to avenge his brother. Years after in London, Harding, who has married the girl both he and Cross were in love with before they emigrated, comes face to face with Cross and Strong, who have become partners and have "struck it rich." In order to win Lady Harding for his own Cross allows the evil side of his natnre to get the upper hand of him and plots to have Strong kill Sir John in a duel. Strong slaps Harding in the face in the foyer of the operahouse in order that he may involve him in "an affair of honor" and avenge his brother's death by killing Harding. Cross in the meantime lures Lady Harding to his rooms where Sir John comes to seek her. She hides in Mark Cross' bedroom, but reveals herself at a dramatic moment when Harding shouting "Curse you, I'll kill you!" springs at Cross' throat. Her splendid nature, as shown in her denunication of both men, one as a husband without faith in his wife and the other as the would-be destroyer of a home, overcomes them with shame. They shake hands and Mark, parting forever with Lady Harding, orders his valet to pack his things for he is off "on a long trail."

DAMAGE CASE MAY 31

Syracuse, May 7.—When the claim of the Battle Island Paper Company against the State for about $1,800,000 for alleged damages to the plant because of barge canal operations was called yesterday, the date of the trial was set for May 31. Judge Rodenbeck announced that after this term another would be held in Rochester and at the conclusion of that session the court would be divided and part of it sent to Syracuse for the special purpose of trying the Battle Island case.

CEMETERY ASSOCIATION WILL MEET TUESDAY

Members of Volney Center Cemetery Association are requested to meet Tuesday next at the home of Mrs. T. C. Boigeol, 412 Oneida st. Officers will be elected at the meeting and a social time will follow.

FRESH PINEAPPLES, ORANGES BANANAS AND GRAPEFRUIT

at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

ANNOUNCEMENT

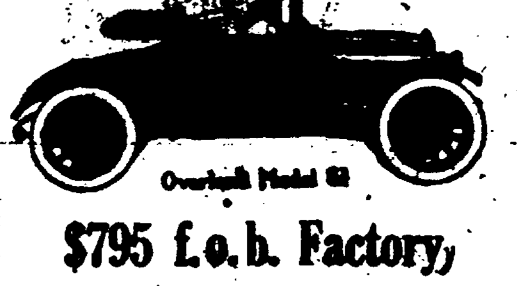
This establishment is now in its new quarters at

123½ CAYUGA STREET

and is prepared to continue its good service to all its patrons

D. RICHARDSON

Ladies'—Tailor—Gentlemen's
Dry Cleaning, Repairing, Dyeing



Overland Model 83

$795 f.o.b. Factory

VANWAGENEN, Inc. Agents

THE QUIRK

Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TO-DAY	SATURDAY
"THE IDLER" with CHAS. RICHMAN and CATHERINE COUNTISS	"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW" with Claire Whitney and Stuart Holmes
A Gorgeous Picturization 375 Scenes	By Request CHARLES CHAPLIN in "HIS NEW JOB"

The Boston Candy Kitchen

Fresh Fruit Specials for Saturday

Bananas at ....15c and 20c a dozen
Oranges at.............20c, 25c, 40c, 50c and 60c dozen
Fresh Pineapples............................2 for 25c

CANDY SPECIALS

Delicious Home-made Fudge and Nougatine at 20c pound

A fresh consignment of Welch's Grape Juice
in pints, 25c; quarts, 50c; and half gals. $1.00

Pure, Wholesome Ice Cream Fine Candies

ANDRIANOS BROS.

25 FIRST STREET FULTON, N. Y.

Here the SONORA!

In addition to playing the wonderful new PATHE RECORDS, the SONORA will play Edison, Victor, Columbia—in fact any disc record made—with a clear and mellow tone.

Hear this new machine at C. A. Beckwith's Shoe Store or at 310 Third Street.

Unusually Easy Terms

C. R. RUDD, Agent

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

Fresh Strawberries

BOSTON AND HOME LETTUCE, CELERY, ASPARAGUS, RADISHES, CUCUMBERS, GREEN ONIONS, TOMATOES, GREEN PEPPERS, RHUBARB, NEW CABBAGE.

Everything for the Sunday Dinner

LaPORTE'S GROCERY

Oneida St. Hello 75

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 68 1st st. tf.

Clark Irish Harp—Will sell cheap; brand new. Just the thing for a home. Address Z., Evening Times office. tf.

Desirable Offices to Rent—Inquire of Glenn A. Ryther, 59 S. 1st st., Fulton, N.Y 120

For Sale—High-class collapsible Go-cart, in good condition; cheap. 208 Highland st. 120

Marine Engine—For sale; 2 h. p.; boiler; oil burning; complete from stacy to propeller. 307 Cayuga st. 121

House to Rent—210 S. 3d st. Inquire D. C. Draper, 416 Rochester. 121

For Sale—Baby's bassinet; also toilet basket. 309 Pratt st. tf

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCully, 202 S. 3d st. tf

To Rent—2 apartments. Phone 3288. 120

Those You Know

Mrs. Charles Atwood of Gansevoort st., will leave soon for the Adirondacks.

* * *

Mrs. W. F. Hill of Gansevoort st. has returned from a visit with out-of-town friends.

* * *

Mrs. Elmer Goodjon of Syracuse is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Croak, Cayuga st.

* * *

Dr. H. M. Doane and Mrs. G. C. Chauncey will attend the dinner tonight given by the Syracuse Suffrage organization to Mrs. Charles Whitman, wife of the Governor.

* * *

Tomorrow at sunrise the gun will be fired which will announce the formal arrival of straw hat season.

MOTOR CYCLE TURNED BRONCHO

Officer Boland Thrown From Motor Cycle, Sustaining Cuts and Bruises

Patrolman Boland of the police department was the victim of a painful and perhaps serious accident yesterday noon at the fair grounds. He was riding a motorcycle around the track at a fair rate of speed when he became confused in the control. He turned the gas control intending to stop the machine, but instead of turning off the gas he opened the throttle wider and the machine shot ahead at a great speed, plunging into the fence. The officer was thrown over the fence by the force of the collision and sustained severe bruises as well as a long gash along the face under the left eye. His hands were cut and one of his shoulders which received the full impact of the collision is badly strained and at first it was feared that his collar-bone had been broken.

The owner of the machine was standing nearby and he immediately summoned assistance and the injured man was taken to his home in a carriage. A medical examination disclosed no broken bones but the shaking up Mr. Boland received will necessitate retirement from his duties for some time.

The police department has ordered a motorcycle which will be used to control traffic in the city and to prevent violations of the speed law. All of the officers will be required to ride the motor in turn and several of the force have practiced on borrowed machines at the fair grounds in order that they might be ready to take up the traffic work when the new police motor arrives. Officer Boland had spent several hours trying out a friend's machine before the accident, and had experienced no difficulty in controlling it.

STATE STREET SCHOOL ARBOR DAY PROGRAM

The following Arbor Day program was given by the State st. pupils today:

Song—Star Spangled Banner.
Salute to the Flag.
Song—The Nest, 2d grade.
Recitation—Dandelion, Joseph Hillick
Arbor Day Song, 5th and 6th grades.
Recitation—Robin Red Breast, Molly Gayer.
Poem—Woodman, Spare that Tree, 4th grade.
Recitation—The Heart of the Tree, Frances Farvalora.
Hark, I Hear a Merry Song, 3d grade.
Dedication of the Vine, Percy Grier to represent the June graduation class.

Miss Percy Grier, ho will graduate this year from State st. school made the dedication speech, when the graduating class planted a vine and dedicated it to Miss Ada Wright, fifth grade teacher. Miss Grier said:

"As represetative of the graduating class of 1915, I wish to express in a small way the appreciation and love which we feel for one of our faculty whom, in an educational way, we are plannning to leave in June.

"The influence which she has upon us is one that is bound to instill principles of right living and as such that it must bear its mark upon us throughout our lives.

"In apprecaition, then, of what she has meant to us in our course through this school, we, the class of 1915, would dedicate our vine to Miss Ada Wright."

State street pupils and their respective instructors are expressive always of energy in school circles.

DEFECTIVE FLUE CAUSED MEXICO'S RECENT FIRE

The newspaper stories relating to the origin of the fire which destroyed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Love of Mexico, are denounced by Charles Love of Stranahan & Love, as being untrue. Mr. Love informs The Evening Times that his parents did not have, as reported, an incubator in the cellar of their home; that the fire did not greatly damage the first floor of the house; but that it did burn the upper portion, which bears out the common belief that a defective flue caused the fire. The Times is happy to do its share in correcting the erroneous news that was sent abroad.

EYESIGHT TROUBLE YOU ?

We make a Specialty in
EYESIGHT TESTING
SPECTACLES
and
EYE GLASS ADJUSTING

Wm. C. Morgan
Jeweler & Optometrist
Fulton, N. Y.

HAPPY HOUR THEATRE

TONIGHT

Charlie Chaplin in a new Comedy
THE HEART BREAKERS
A College Comedy in two reels.
THE ANIMATED WEEKLY
BUTLER'S BUSTED ROMANCE and others

TOMORROW

VIOLET MERSERSAU in THE BROKEN TOY
A modern Society Drama in two parts and others.
Admission 5c
WATCH OUR SUNDAY BILL

Community Notes

Mrs. W. H. Cushman of Schenectady is the guest of Fulton friends.

* * *

Mrs. Calvin S. Dines delightfully entertained the members of the W. Side P. T. Embroidery club at her home in Hannibal st. Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Seamans of Oswego was a guest of the club. A pleasant and profitable afternoon was enjoyed. Tea was served at 6 o'clock.

* * *

The Friendly Nine B. C. club was entertained at the home of Mrs. James McCoy in Hannibal st. Wednesday afternoon.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Summerville of West 1st st. have been guests of friends at East Syracuse.

* * *

Miss Hannah Perkins of Hannibal has been at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Perkins, having been called there by the death of her nephew, George Perkins.

* * *

Mrs. Colby of Gansevoort st. has returned from a brief vacation spent in Syracuse.

* * *

John Gibbons of West 1st st. is ill at the City Hospital.

* * *

Mrs. Byron McClosky will give a recital at the public library this evening. The public is invited and no admission will be taken.

* * *

The local grange will serve a supper at their hall in South 1st st. tomorrow evening.

* * *

Mrs. C. E. Stevens is in Niagara Falls, having been called there by the death of a relative.

* * *

Local W. C. T. U. members attended a group meeting at Caughdenoy yesterday.

* * *

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church will hold a food sale tomorrow at the Palmer-Hope hardware store, in 1st st.

CANAL LANDS COME TO SCHEM

Papers Filed Yesterday Remove Obstacles to Building Fulton's New Hotel

A deed conveying abandoned canal lands on First almost opposite Rochester st., which were the property of the State of New York, to E. J. Schem of this city, was filed in Oswego yesterday. The conveyance was made with the provision that Mr. Schem drain the lands should it ever become necessary.

This action is taken to indicate that Mr. Schem is about to begin work on the new hotel which he has been contemplating for some time. A modern structure has been planned, and the architect's work is is finished. Some weeks ago activities on the ground gave rise to a report that work had been started but Mr. Schem stated at the time that no work would be commence on the hotel until the title to the land had been fully decided. Now that the state has deeded the canal lands to the Fultonian, it is rumored that the excavation for the foundations of the building will begin inside of a month's time.

The plans provide for a six story building of large dimensions, with every modern convenience installed. The structure will be on ornament to the city when completed and will be a fitting companion to the Quirk theatre building and the bank building directly opposite. It is probable that stores will occupy a portion of the ground floor with the hotel lobby, writing rooms and dining hall on the mezzanine floor.
mezzaine floor.

"MUTTY" RETURNS

Virginia Spencer's Blue Eyed Persian Kitten Gets Back Home.

B-r-r-r-r-b-r, rang The Evening Times' telephone early this morning, and a voice anounced that "Mutty" arrived home from her rambles in the wide world. The voice was that of Mrs. Frederick G. Spencer, who told that "Mutty" was found near the State street church, yesterday, by Marion Little, daughter of Deputy County Clerk John J. Little, and returned to her anxious owner, Virginia Spencer.

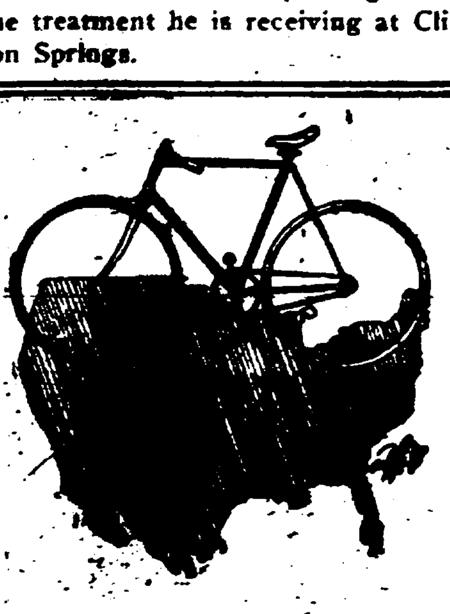
The sequel to the story is that The Evening Times carried a lost ad, Wednesday, and yesterday the story of the possible elopment of George Moore's French bull pup and "Muttie" was announced. These announcements were sufficient to attract the the attention of the finders of the escaped pets, and now joy reigns supreme in the two house holds.

Evidently "Muttie" had been "waiting at the church" as "Dixie", the bull dog probably at the eleventh decided against a "dog and cat life."

FRANK D. HARDING

Word is received in this city of the death of Frank G. Harding. Mr. Harding died Thursday in St. Johnsville, N. Y. He was at one time a resident of Fulton, in the employ of William C. Morgan, jeweler, as an engraver. He was a member of Fulton Chapter, No. 167 R. A. M.

Arthur Gilbert is improving under the treatment he is receiving at Clifton Springs.



Another Carload
BICYLES
TIRES
SUPPLIES
We Buy, Sell and Exchange Bicyles
BOGUE'S
61 First Street

Our $25,000 Gloversville Stock

is selling fast in our large Basement. Have you been in? If not, you have missed as much, if not more as we, as your dollar can buy fully two dollars' worth of good reliable merchandise.

Specials for Saturday

10c HUCK TOWELS at... 7c
15c LARGE TOWELS at 10c
15c and 19c RIBBONS at 10c
25c RIBBONS at..........19c
10c Ladies' Handkerchiefs at 5c
$1.25 and $1.50 Muslin Petticoats at 89c
$2.00 Silk ePtticoats at...$1.25
Assorted lot of Kid Gloves in 12 and 16 button lengths, also 2 clasp and long Silk Gloves, to $3.00, per pair.............69c
75c Silk Gloves, per pair.....49c
Odd 50c, 75c and $1.00 Silk Gloves, in all colors, pair, 29c

Clean-Up Prices on All Tailored Suits

$12.00 SUITS at..........$6.00
$15.00 SUITS at..........$9.98
$20.00 SUITS at.........$13.50
$25 to $30 SUITS at.....$19.50

Millinery

Misses' and Children's $3.00 Trimmed Hats at $1.98
Special lots of Untrimmed and Trimmed Hats at $1.25, $1.75, $1.98, $2.25 and $2.98

Genuine Gold Filled Rings

Values to $1.00

19c

We don't claim these are solid gold Rings, but for beautiful setting, rich looking stones and, to service that is sure to satisfy—they indeed can be Pretty as the costliest jewelry, you can wear them side by side without fear. Some Sterling Silver styles are among them, also plain bands. Tremendously attractive for 19c

Rose Bushes & Shrubs at 10c

Fresh from the nurseries, all healthy and will blossom this year.

Fine $3.00 Dresses at $1.25

On Sale Saturday at 9 a.m. Manufacturer's Overstock. Come early—get your size

WHY BUY ELSEWHERE WHEN YOU CAN BUY FOR LESS AT

M. Katz & Co.'s

Department Store 63-65 First Street

PANTOMIME AND SALE

The Camp Fire Girls and Boy Scouts of the First Methodist church will give an entertainment in the Brotherhood rooms next Wednesday evening, May 12th, at 8 o'clock.

The program includes a pantomime play entitled "Thei Toy Shop" and musical numbers by the girls' symphony orchestra and the State street school orchestra; the Camp Fire girls in "The Mystic Fire Songs;" banjo and bells, selection by Fred Smith and Clark Morrill; vocal duet by two young women, music and words by Mrs. I. O. Hyde.

Various booths with good things to eat and sell will be provided to tempt the audience.

We are Agents for
CHASE & SANBORN'S
Fine Teas and Coffees.
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

Evening Times Subscribers are requested to advise this office if the carrier boy fails to deliver paper properly and with regularity.

The City Market

WORTHY OF THE NAME

Fresh Meats—Pork, Beef, Lamb, Veal.
Fresh Killed Poultry. Fish.
Green Onions, Radishes, Rhubarb, Lettuce.

Special No. 1. Best Oleomargarine, 25c pound.
Special No. 2. Regular 35c Coffee for 27c pound

Only One More Day

Of the Big Cut Price Appliance Sale

A Chafing Dish worth 12.50 for $7.40
Saute Pan worth 10.00 for $6.00
Bell Ringing Transformers now with Coupon $1.75
Good Toaster for $1.65

A great variety to choose from. Sale closes Saturday p. m. Buy your hot weather helps now and save money.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY
ONEIDA STREET

TO-MORROW, SATURDAY, MAY 8

Onyx Store Grand Formal Opening

EVERYTHING NEW SOUVENIRS

The following selections are a few that will be played by Buell's Orchestra interspersed with all the late popular music

Lucia di Lummermour........ Donizetti
High Jinks .... Frime
Lustspiel Overture .... Keler-Bela
Bohemian Girl........ Balfe
Rigoletto .... Verdi
High Roller .... Stahl
Faust .... Gounod

1?? First Street THE ONYX Fulton, N. Y

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Why does the Evening Times get results? Because so very many subscribers say—"I hate to miss a single copy of your paper; I'd rather miss a copy of my 'Syracuse ———' than the Evening Times."

THE LATEST

REPORT OF ADVERTISING

Week of April 26 to 30—five days only—Total number of inches Display Advertising 1001

DAILY AVERAGE 200.2

Total number of inches advertising carried by the Evening Times during week of April 19 to 24—six days only—was 919 inches.

DAILY AVERAGE 153

INCREASE

Daily Average—47.2 Inches

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Nap Lajoie, Connie Mack's Cleanup Hitter.

Photo by American Press Association.

Napoleon Lajoie, who plays second base on Connie Mack's reorganized Athletics, has fourth place in the batting order—the cleanup position. That was Frank Baker's old place, and he was mighty with the club. So far Lajoie has not been hitting up to his form, and the fans are disappointed. Doubtless the big Frenchman has slowed up a bit, but he is a natural hitter and before the season has gone far will likely get busy with his war club. Lajoie first broke into the big league as a member of the Philadelphia Nationals. That was away back in 1896, and since then he has been one of the most consistent heavy batters in the game. As a guardian of second base Lajoie has few superiors.

An Armless Golf Player.

In all probability the unique competitor in sports is Thomas McAuliffe, a Buffalo youth twenty-two years old, who, despite the misfortune of being armless, is nevertheless regarded as a golfer of no mean ability, says the New York Times. He lost his arms on Sept. 22, 1902, at the age of nine years, in a railroad accident.

In playing golf he holds the club between his cheek and shoulder and with the stick in this position has gone around the links of the Buffalo Country club in 106 strokes, a truly remarkable feat, considering the fact that 78 is bogy here. The Buffalo club's course is one of the best bunkered and trapped in the country.

With the combined swing and jerk of the body and shoulder he is able to give the ball an effective stroke. Both in 1912 and 1913 he won the second flight cup in the caddies' tournament and will attempt to win it again this year, for the third time. With driver, brassie, cleek or midiron he can drive 100 yards and about seventy-five yards with a mashie. At a distance of fifty yards or less he is remarkably accurate with the mashie and is almost sure to putt within a club's length of the hole.

Baseball For Chinese.

Under the patronage of the Chinese government and with the personal assistance of Wu Ting Fang, former Chinese ambassador to the United States, a baseball team of American born Chinese recently sailed from Honolulu on the steamer Mongolia for Shanghai by way of the Philippines and Japan. Their expenses while in China will be met by the Chinese government. The team will tour the principal cities of the interior with the object of introducing American athletics for the physical improvement of the youth of China.

Moriarty Picks Alexander.

George Moriarty, the Tiger third baseman, is the latest member of the Alexander Is the Best Pitcher In the World club. George says that he has hit against them all, but that Alexander the Great has it on the bunch when it comes to speed, control, curves and the rest of the twirling stuff.

Gymnasium For Creighton.

Creighton university of Omaha is about to erect a new gymnasium which will cost $175,000 and include swimming pool, handball court, basketball floor, roof garden, dressing room, quarters for indoor football workouts, shower baths and, in fact, all modern conveniences.

Indorses Baseball.

Dr. R. Tait McKenzie, physical director of the University of Pennsylvania, is a strong advocate of baseball. He says it is one of the best possible means for furthering the physical development of the young undergraduate.

Cricketers Bar Shirkers.

The London cricket clubs have decided to carry on the game this summer in spite of the war. Their teams will be composed of players not eligible for service, all the clubs agreeing that no place should be found for the [illegible] in any of the elevens.

TIME TO BALK.

The Chinaman Thought the Missionary Was Going Too Far.

Dr. Frank Garrett, who has been a missionary to China for the last seventeen years, says that the first thing you have to do is to get the Chinese viewpoint. Like many of their customs, it seems to us upside down. In the United States if you call a man a liar you are likely to get into serious trouble. In China the man would be rather complimented than insulted.

A missionary had established a little church somewhere in the interior and put a native preacher in charge while he visited some other mission points. When he returned he missed one young man from the congregation. The native preacher said they had put him out of the church.

"Why, what was the matter? What did he do?" asked the missionary.

"He stole a bamboo rod," returned the preacher.

"Why," answered the missionary, "a bamboo rod is worth only about 10 cents. Don't you think you were a little severe?"

"No, no," and he shook his head indignantly. "We can't have a thief in the church. The Bible says a thief can't go to heaven, and we couldn't have any one in the church who couldn't go to heaven. Besides, it would give us a bad name in the community."

"Well," returned the missionary, "the Bible says a liar can't go to heaven. Are you going to turn the liars out too?"

"Oh," cried the preacher, "that's different! Entirely different! We all lie."—Youth's Companion.

OLD TIME MANNERS.

Rules of Good Behavior In the Early Eighteenth Century.

In a work entitled "Youth's Behavior," published in 1706, there is this injunction to young gentlemen, "Put off thy Cap or Hat to persons of Desert as are Churchmen, Justices and the like, turning the Cap or Hat to thy halfwards; making a Reverence, bowing thyself more or less according to the custom of the better bred."

In the midst of remarks which indicate the utmost refinement we come suddenly upon such directions as this:

"'Tis not manners as soon as you are set at Table to bawl out, 'I eat none of this, I eat none of that, I care for no Rabbit; I love nothing that tastes of Pepper, Nutmeg, Onyons,'" etc.

After stating that "some have been so refined in Foreign parts that they will neither be covered, nor sit with their backs to the picture of an eminent Person," the writer goes on to remark that "there are some who eat with that eagerness and impatience, they put themselves out of breath and will pant like a broken winded Horse, but these are not to be indured."

He also warns his pupil thus:

"When you are talking to any one do not Continually punch him in the side, as some people do; who, after every sentence keep asking the person they are conversing with, 'Did I not tell you so?' 'What say you, sir?' and in the meantime they are every moment jogging and thrusting him with their elbows, which cannot be considered as a mark of respect."

Lincoln Among Other Men.

Some years ago a series of pictures was printed showing Lincoln in many attitudes, either alone or in company with statesmen or military men in Washington or in camp. Attention was called by the writer, who had assembled the pictures, to the singular isolation and dignity of Lincoln when taken with any group of men. They, almost without exception, showed that they were conscious of observation, attitudes were studies, and the effort to look well in the picture was often evident. No matter in what company he was, the president seemed not to be conscious either of the artist, of himself or of the men who surrounded him. He stood or sat alone, as if he were an impersonal figure representing native strength and unique sublimity of character.—Christian Register.

A Cautious Reply.

At West Point they tell a story of a man known as Ginger, on account of the peculiar color of his hair, who graduated at the foot of his class after six years at the Point.

Ginger distinguished himself while reciting to an instructor in ordnance by a remarkable answer to the question "How many pieces will a twelve pound shell burst into?" the average number having been determined well by experiment. After due reflection Ginger lifted his eyes to those of the instructor and replied:

"Not less than two."—New York Times.

Hard Both Ways.

"When children want to marry they sometimes have a hard time in getting their parents to consent."

"Children have no kick when it comes to being hard hearted. When parents want to marry they almost never succeed in getting the children's consent."—Pittsburgh Post.

Famous Literary Compositions.

"Destroy this letter."

"I, John Doe, being of sound body and mind, do make and declare this to be my last will."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me."

"Please remit."

"R. S. V. P."—Milwaukee Free Press.

The child lives in the future, the old man in the past. The wise man lives in the present.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Making an Oak Stain.

To make old oak of ash, elm, box alder, chestnut, maple, yew and sycamore wood use a solution of copper acetate or iron acetate. Either of these can be made by allowing a strong acid to come in contact with copper or iron. Acetic acid, or vinegar, will do for the acid. The chemical can be obtained from a local druggist if it is not desired to make the stain. By varying the strength of the solution several shades may be obtained. A weak solution of iron acetate gives various brown hues. As the strength of the salt increases by concentration the shades of brown darken.

How Blued Steel Is Produced.

Heat bluing, which is familiar to every one, is applied to watch and clock hands, buttons, buckles and a large variety of steel articles and gives a finish of a pleasing blue or black color, which is not, however, so very resistant to corrosion. It is produced in several ways, such as dipping the parts in a bath of molten saltpeter, heating them on an iron plate in the air or tumbling them in a sheet iron barrel heated by a gas flame. Revolvers and similar parts are very often given a fine blue finish by heating in charcoal.—Engineering Magazine.

Protecting the Bed Hammock.

Owing to the size and weight of a bed hammock it is generally left outside in all kinds of weather. A good plan is to fasten two awning pulleys to the ceiling of the porch over the hammock so that a rope may be run through them; then attach hooks to the ends of the rope for hooking into the lower part of the hammock. The hammock can then be pulled up close to the ceiling when not in use so that it will be out of the sun and rain.

Furnace For Soft Metals.

Experimenters desiring to make small castings of zinc, brass, copper and other metals of low fusion point will find the simple furnace illustrated suitable to their requirements, says Popular Mechanics. The body of the furnace was made of an old ten gallon milk can, which was lined on the inside with fire brick, whereupon a base about four inches high was built up with the brick in the bottom for the crucible. A crucible six inches in diameter and eight inches high was set on the built up base, then two walls of fire brick were built up on each side of the crucible to within four inches of the top of the shell. The cover for the top is lined with fire clay.

FURNACE MADE OF MILK CAN.

A hole three inches in diameter was cut in the shell on one side and a four inch hole on the other. These holes should be located so that the smaller one enters the side at the center of one compartment formed by the walls and crucible, and the other makes an outlet in the other division, both holes being near the bottom of the can. The flame from a Bunsen burner, A, is directed through the smaller hole against the crucible and by the walls deflected upward along the side of the crucible and over the top, thence down the opposite side and out.

Mixing Battery Solution.

To secure uniformity of solution the water and acid should be well mixed before pouring it into the battery cells. In mixing the water should be placed in a porcelain or enamel ware dish and the acid added slowly, stirring continuously with a clean wood paddle. Mixing causes the mixture to become quite warm, and the solution should not be placed in the cells until it has cooled down.—Automobile Dealer.

Winds Favorable to Forest Fires.

The weather bureau has recently made some study of the meteorological conditions favoring the occurrence of forest fires and has tentatively established a special service for issuing warnings of the hot, dry winds which seem to be a frequent antecedent and accompaniment of such fires in the valuable timbered regions of the west.

Bending Lead Tubes.

When small lead tubing is bent with sharp turns it will frequently crack or break unless special precautions are used to prevent it. One of the cheapest and simplest methods to overcome the difficulty is to wind the place with several layers of fine flexible wire before trying to make the bend.

When Cylinders Misfire.

As a rule, when missing occurs in one cylinder at slow speed and [illegible] at that speed the fault [illegible] top while a spark gap in the plug of that cylinder.

Bowser Saves the Family

But the Cook Is Ungrateful and Quits Her Job.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mr. Bowser is not eccentric.

He is not irresponsible.

He has bought burglar alarms.

He has invested in nine kinds of fire escapes.

He has kept cows and pigs and chickens.

He has bought little less than a carload of patent cures.

He has, according to his diagnosis, had every ailment on the list of human ailments.

All this and a heap more, and yet he is not far ahead of the average husband.

It is that every new idea looks good to him, and he wants to be helping to shove the old world along.

The other afternoon as he sat in his office a sudden thought made him start and turn pale. He didn't wait two minutes before taking action. He rushed downstairs, rushed into a drugstore, rushed home.

"LET ME DRAW A PICTURE OF A MICROBE."

Mrs. Bowser noted his excited look and the package under his arm and was at the door to exclaim:

"If anything has happened why didn't you telephone me? What is wrong, and what have you got there? Don't keep me in suspense!"

"Don't ask me any questions now," he replied as he dropped his hat on the floor and looked around like a man in danger.

"Is anything wrong—are you sick?" she anxiously demanded.

"Don't say a word—not a word, and don't bother me for ten minutes. I hope I'm in time to avert the danger!"

She turned pale and fell into a chair, and he hurriedly broke the string on opening the package, seized the three bottles which comprised its contents and rushed upstairs, down the back stairs, down into the basement and up again. A strange, disagreeable odor followed him as he hustled around, and by the time he had returned to the sitting room Mrs. Bowser had recovered sufficiently to ask:

"Mr. Bowser, what on earth are you doing and what in the name of goodness is that stuff?"

"What have I been doing? Saving our lives, Mrs. Bowser—saving our lives and every one under this roof."

"But I—I didn't know our lives were in danger."

"You'd suppose not. If the house was on fire from top to bottom, and the firemen pitching our furniture out of the windows, you might possibly realize the fact, but it has never struck you that death silently lurks in every room in this house."

"How you talk, Mr. Bowser! What has been the danger hanging over us?"

"Microbes, Mrs. Bowser!" he whispered as he sat down and wiped his heated brow. "Microbes and bacteria—millions of 'em!"

"It can't be!" she replied.

"Can't it! You know nothing whatever about it! I do, of course, but, having so many other things to attend to, this one slipped my mind until today."

"But what causes that terrible odor?"

"Nothing terrible about it, as I see. On the contrary, I rather like it. It is the odor of disinfectants, Mrs. Bowser—the odor of something which has no doubt saved our lives."

"How?"

"By killing off the microbes and bacteria, which would soon have entered our systems and produced terrible illness, if not death."

"Well, I suppose you know best," she said as she opened a window to let a yard or two of the carbolic smell dodge out.

"Certainly I do, certainly. All husbands do. Mrs. Bowser, let me draw you a picture of a microbe. You can then realize the danger which menaced us."

He drew a picture of that insect with his pencil, and as she surveyed it in surprise and disgust he continued:

"A fine thing to have about forty of those things cantering around through your system, eh?"

"[illegible] do they come from?"

"[illegible]. By this time [illegible] would have [illegible] them, and nothing on earth could have saved us from typhoid fever or diphtheria. If the microbe was the only thing to look out for I shouldn't have been so anxious, but there is the bacteria."

"What's that?"

"Here is a picture of him. Comes in the same way, and his mission is to eat out the lungs. It is calculated that 2,000 of them will eat out the strongest man's lungs in a month."

"And they were in this house?"

"Yes, and ready to be absorbed into our systems. Not only ready, but anxious."

"You are sure you don't mean cockroaches? I saw two under the kitchen sink yesterday and was going to ask you to get some powdered borax."

"Mrs. Bowser," he began, as he stood up. "Are you growing soft in the top of your head? Do I know a Bengal tiger from a woodchuck?"

"I—I suppose so."

"But I don't know a microbe or a bacteria from a cockroach," he thundered.

"But I have never heard you speak of them before, and I—I"—

"Do you suppose that I or any other husband sits down and tells his wife all he knows?" he shouted. "Because I haven't told you that a jack rabbit's legs have three toes is that any reason why I haven't known it for forty years?"

"But this is medical science, isn't it?" she softly protested.

"And suppose it is! Do you suppose I've gone sloshing around all these years with nothing but a recipe for making soft soap in my head?"

She was silent, and after striding up and down the room a few times he halted before her and continued:

"A wife isn't expected to know these things, of course, but I'd be accounted a pretty husband and father and member of a scientific club if I didn't know all about microbes and bacteria."

"But that picture of a bacteria looks like a lobster," she persisted.

"Lobster! Looks like a lobster, does it? Very well, Mrs. Bowser, this discussion will end right here. It is plain enough that you haven't the necessary knowledge to appreciate it!"

"But don't you"—

"Never you mind, Mrs. Bowser. Let it drop right here. Is supper ready?"

The odor was so strong in the dining room that the butter tasted of it, and after supper the cook called Mrs. Bowser into the kitchen to ask:

"Is it going to be like this all the time?"

"Oh, no. Mr. Bowser had to kill off all the microbes and bacteria, you see."

"What's them?"

"He'll have to come in and explain."

"No need of it, ma'am, for my bundle is all made up, and I'm goin'. A man who'll drag dead cats through his own house would cheat a poor girl out of her wages at the end of a month. Microbes and bacteria, eh! I don't believe it. Let him show them to me up in the zoological gardens."

When Mrs. Bowser told Mr. Bowser what had occurred he bristled up, got red in the face and exclaimed:

"I see how it is. You couldn't carry your point with me, and so you went out and upset the girl. Mrs. Bowser, you are treading on dangerous ground. A husband may be a worm, but if that worm is stepped on too often he turns!"

And he clapped on his hat and walked over to his family drug store, and after peering into the window and seeing that the druggist was alone, he entered and asked:

"Doc, are you protected from microbes and bacteria here?"

"Thoroughly," was the reply.

"What do you use?"

"Why, every time you come in and go out I sprinkle the floor after you with catnip tea."

Mr. Bowser turned and went out into the night and leaned up against a fence, and in his inmost soul realized that he was a man with plenty of bacteria and microbes, but without a human friend.

And an owl lighted on a nearby telephone pole and hooted three hoots.

Force of Habit.

"See here, boss, I ordered tripe and beans with coffee, and the waitress has brought me a lettuce sandwich and a cup of weak tea."

"You must excuse her, sir. All due to absentmindedness. She's a former society girl, and she can't grasp the idea that a quick lunch is not a function."—Exchange.

Prudent Steering.

"Law, pa, what are you sneaking around the hall at this time of night with your shoes off?"

"Sh, sh, son! I don't want to run into the war zone."—Baltimore American.

Swollen.

Tramp—Could you spare me one of your husband's old hats, mum?

Woman—They would be too large for you. My husband is an actor.—Puck.

Looked New to Him.

Randolph—Is that Buxton's new girl with him?

Sylvester—Oh, no. That's just one of his old ones painted over.—Judge.

No Limit at All.

There's a time to work,
And a time to shirk,
And a time to go to school;
There's a time to fight—
When you're in the right—
And a time you'd best keep cool;
And a time to smoke,
And a time to joke,
And a time to take a chance,
But in this [illegible]
So the [illegible]
It is always [illegible].
—[illegible]

CHARMING CREATION.

Street Frock Which Has Many Salient Style Points.

CHIC AND SMART TOILET.

Never in one season has there been such a diversity of fashions. The frock shown in the illustration has many new and striking style points, most salient of which are the pockets. Everything this year has pockets. Belts, separate skirts, shirt waists and sports coats revel in them, and the dressier garments have adopted them also.

This gown is of blue gabardine, a fabric and color which are very popular this season. The waist is in semi-coat effect, and the sleeves are the new and very popular bell shape. A beaded belt confines the front, and the back of the bodice is rather intricately draped. The tunic is full and is finished by a hem, while the narrow underskirt, which shows all the way up the front, has a corded French hem as a finish.

AMERICAN UNIFORM.

What Milady Would Wear Were She to Take Up Arms.

If the American woman is suddenly called upon to take up arms in defense of her native land she will be prepared in so far as an attractive uniform is concerned. Blue, of course, is the prevailing color in feminine uniforms. The material is gabardine of the spring weight, which readily lends itself to plaiting schemes. The plaits are found chiefly in the skirts, always very full and nearly always of ankle length, for the high topped shoe goes with the military uniform walking costume, and that shoe is so trim that to conceal any part of it would be a pity. One of the plainest of these models has a skirt so severely cut that, while it fits without a wrinkle over the hips, it falls in loose pleats below them. They do not drop inward about the ankles, however, although there is no apparent scheme for making them stand out.

Hats and Parasols Match.

Throughout the past winter we became accustomed to the sets consisting of matching toque, muff and collar—of fur, chiffon, velvet and satin. Now we shall see matching hats and parasols to use with thin frocks. They are very pretty, and often figured chiffon is employed in their making—over silk for the parasol, over straw for the hat.

JEWELRY CHANGES.

Since so many of the spring fashions boast of peasant origin the jewelers have bethought themselves to put out copies of peasant antique brooches suitable to accompany the quaint frocks and blouses of the period. Many of these introduce a note of color, and the design is unusual in its metal combinations. Much of this jewelry has come direct from Europe, and others represent domestic copies of the same.

Quite new are the pearl and jet neckties represented in long, single strings of pearl beads not larger than the size of seed pearls and finished with cut jet beads or fringe or double twisted chains of alternate black and white with dainty pendant.

These neckties are designed to be fastened in front with a double twist like a man's cravat, hence the [illegible]. These are of unusual interest [illegible] bearing [illegible] dominant [illegible] of white and black [illegible].

ANCIENT MEDICAL SKILL.

Peru Had Clever Physicians and Surgeons Ages Ago.

Both cocaine and quinine were first discovered and used by the prehistoric inhabitants of Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia. A cup made from the wood of the tree yielding quinine was filled with water and allowed to stand overnight. In the morning the liquid had become saturated with the medicinal properties possessed by the wood and the bitter contents were drunk. The quassia cups sold in drug stores in this country during the past century were the early method used to administer quinine.

The leaf from the tree giving cocaine is chewed today by the Indians living in the mountainous districts of Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia. It acts as a heart stimulant in those high altitudes and deadens the pangs of hunger so frequently felt by the half starved natives.

The Chumus, who lived in Peru, according to some authorities, 2500 years before Christ and whose dominions extended into Bolivia, Ecuador and parts of Brazil and Colombia, had a pharmacopoeia of their own. Most of the articles used by them as medicines aeons ago are used by the physician of today. Their surgeons were highly skilled too. I have seen skulls dug up in their old cemeteries that showed their owners during life had been injured many times in battle by blunt instruments, presumably clubs, and their lives had been saved by trephining. I recall one skull with four silver plates, several with three, very many with two and hundreds with one.—Leslie's Weekly.

SKILL OF THE BEAVER.

As a Canal Digger He Is an Engineer of Rare Ability.

According to a legend, the beaver is supposed to be a reincarnation of man, put back on earth to expiate past offenses by work, and in some of the early drawings it is depicted with the face of a man. And when we consider its extraordinary intelligence and skill as woodcutter, engineer (dam and canal maker), house builder and food storer the notion does not seem at all farfetched. Describing the canals which the animals make by scooping out the earth with their hands, A. R. Dugmore in the "Romance of the Beaver" remarks:

"It might be presumed that these canals are only run through level country, but here is the greatest evidence of the engineering ability of the beavers: They build their canals uphill by means of weirs or dams, the distance between them varying according to the gradient. Yet they never work uphill unless it is made absolutely necessary by the contour of the land. The width of these canals is usually about three feet, with a depth from one to three feet, seldom deeper except when small pools are made, evidently with the idea of providing a hiding place in the event of danger. The direction of the canals must necessarily be variable. Wherever conditions are favorable they are as straight as though laid out by human engineers, but when there is any advantage to be gained by curves they make curves."

The Almanac Trust.

The sale of almanacs was once a lucrative monopoly. Queen Elizabeth granted the sole right to publish "almanacs and prognostications" to the Stationers' company, and James I. extended the privilege to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, but for centuries only these three bodies were permitted to issue printed calendars. The monopoly ended when the claim of the king to the privileges of granting or withholding permission to issue calendars—a survival, perhaps, from days when kings asserted their right to regulate all things, including even the times and seasons—was definitely disproved and proclaimed nonexistent. Now anybody can say who's who anywhere.—London Spectator.

Munchausen.

"The Travels of Baron Munchausen," as we have them, are a compound from a great variety of sources. The first installment, which professes to be based on the real baron's own tales, is scarcely a quarter of the whole, and even this has been traced in great part to various German, Italian and Portuguese origins. Afterward the author cribbed avowedly from Lucian and added a second volume intended as a satire on Bruce's "Travels." Most of the early editions were entitled "Gulliver Revived; or, the Vice of Lying Properly Exposed."—London Tatler.

How It Works Out.

"I'll never forget the favor you have done me," said the man who doesn't mind asking for what he wants.

"Don't say that," replied the cold blooded person. "When a man keeps brooding over an obligation he's almost sure to get resentful instead of appreciative."—Washington Star.

He Was.

"Jane, what time is it?" called down the irate father.

"I don't know, pa. The clock isn't going."

"But I am," spoke up the young man, who could take a hint.—Detroit Free Press.

Paradoxical.

She—These functions are so unnatural, people pretending to be something that they really aren't. He—Well, [illegible].—Puck.

[illegible]

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Sanitary Garbage Can That Is Hidden From View.

There is a new garbage receptacle that supports the pail on a stand at a point where it cannot be readily reached by roving animals, and in addition to this it guards it from becoming accidentally knocked from its proper place. When the bucket is in its place the outlet is concealed behind a semicircular shield which closes on a hinge at one side and is supplied with a locking device on the other side. This shield not only protects it from view, but also keeps water from it, which is extremely desirable from a sanitary point of view.

Kitchen Helps.

To prevent the gravy soaking through the bottom crust of meat pies brush over the crust with white of egg.

After frying onions pour a little vinegar into the frying pan, let it get hot and it will remove all smell from the pan.

When washing coarse clothes use soft soap, as it will go further than the ordinary yellow and is more efficacious.

Do not leave wooden tubs to dry or they will quickly crack and come apart. Keep a little water always standing in them.

When baking custard pies put one-third teaspoonful of baking powder in custard. It makes it nice and firm.

Currant Pudding.

Cover one quart of cleaned red currants with water and let them boil till the juice has been well drawn out. You may help by mashing berries with a spoon; then strain liquid. You will have about one and one-half quarts of juice. To this add two cupfuls of sugar and six even teaspoonfuls of corn starch dissolved in cold water. Stir while it thickens and until it's done, which takes only a little while if you use a saucepan instead of double boiler. A little piece of stick cinnamon may be added while cooking. Put into an earthen (not tin) mold and serve ice cold with sugar and cream.

A Cake Baking Hint.

Raisins and currants have a habit of sinking to the bottom of a loaf of cake, no matter if they have been floured or some other means taken to prevent their doing so. At last, it is said, a way has really been found which will make them stay where they ought to. Put the raisins and currants in a dish and set it on the back of the stove; stir them occasionally and see that they do not burn. When thoroughly heated add them to the batter.

Meat Rolls.

Sift two cupfuls of flour twice with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one of salt and chop into this two tablespoonfuls of lard and one of butter. Moisten with milk (about one-half cup) and roll out one-half inch thick into oblong shape. Spread with chopped, cooked meat, well seasoned and moistened with stock. Roll up like jelly roll, brush over with milk and bake in moderate oven. Serve with tomato sauce.

Care of Table Linen.

Keep in mind the fact that linens will last longer if they are folded a different way each time laundered. Take a napkin, for example. One time it can be folded in four sections, the next time into triangles and the next time in three sections.

Special sale of Farm Wagons during month of May. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

SLY WINK SAVES "CORPSE."

Lumberjack Found Coffin In Morgue Cozy Place For Nap.

A "wink" probably saved William Kincade of Engadine, Mich., from being buried alive.

Kincade, who is a lumberjack, had come to Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., seeking work. After amusing himself in true lumberjack fashion he wandered into a morgue and crawled into a coffin to sleep. Morgue employees, after closing several caskets, approached the one that held the drowsy jack. The woodsman turned over and winked.

He was released from the police court after pleading guilty to a charge of intoxication.

Clock Knocks Him Out.

Smith J. Noe of Sayville, N. Y., veteran of the civil war, was winding his grandfather's clock just before going to bed when the ratchet slipped. The spring unwound with such violence that two of his fingers were broken by the pin, and he was sent sprawling across the floor.

WORD WORRIES WAR OFFICE.

British Puzzled Whether to Make It "Embuss" or "Embus."

A question of orthography is exercising the authorities at the British war office.

Since they have been using the London auto busses for the troops in France it has been necessary to employ some word in orders to indicate the getting into and getting out of those vehicles. A battalion is instructed to "embuss" at a certain point and to "debuss" at another. The spelling has been questioned in Whitehall. It is argued that it ought to be "embus" and "debus."

Surgeon Left Glass In Body.

Mrs. Anna M. Rogers, wife of a civil engineer of New York city, has won a verdict of $2,000 against Dr. James D. Voorhees for negligence in leaving broken glass in her body after an operation.

Best makes of Carriages. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

NEW COMET SOON VISIBLE.

Will Be Seen by Naked Eye, Though 40,000,000 Miles Away.

A new comet is due some time next month. It is rapidly approaching the sun and will be at perihelion about July 20.

It will pass nearest the earth the middle of June, when it will be about 40,000,000 miles away. Late in May it is expected to become a naked eye object.

The comet is in the morning sky, rising about midnight on May 1, and will be approximately on the meridian at 4 a. m. on that date. It was easily picked up with a four inch telescope early in March and will undoubtedly be found with any small telescope after May 1.

VIOLIN NETS $19,500 AT SALE.

Lord Newland's "Strad" Given to Red Cross, Breaks Record.

A Stradivarius violin presented by Lord Newlands to the Red Cross sale in London realized the sum of $19,500.

It was first sold to Lady Wernher for $12,500, and she had it put up a second time. It then went for $7,000 to Mr. Brandt, who had previously advanced the bidding to $12,000.

This figure of $12,500 constitutes a record price for such a violin. The highest previous figure was $[illegible], paid for the Messiah violin, dated [illegible], which for fifty years was in the collection of Count Cozio di Salabue.

Australia.

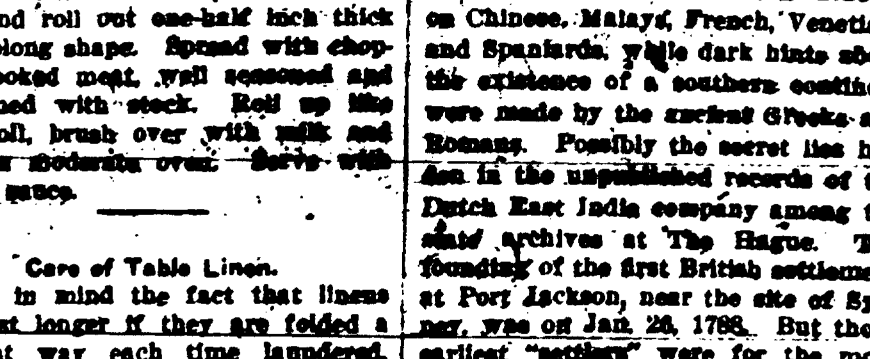
Nobody quite knows who discovered Australia. The feat has been fathered on Chinese, Malays, French, Venetians and Spaniards, while dark hints about the existence of a southern continent were made by the ancient Greeks and Romans. Possibly the secret lies hidden in the unpublished records of the Dutch East India company among the state archives at The Hague. The founding of the first British settlement at Port Jackson, near the site of Sydney, was on Jan. 26, 1788. But those earliest "settlers" were for the most part involuntary colonists, being composed mainly of transported convicts.—London Mail.

Her Ideal.

He—What is your masculine ideal?

She—A man who has both sand and dust.—Chicago News.

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND



The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"

[illegible]

"CITY OF ERIE" — 3 Magnificent Steamers — "CITY OF BUFFALO"

BETWEEN

BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND

[illegible]

WALL PAPER

A 10% Discount

on all cash purchases in this line tomorrow, May 8th.

Let us give you estimates on Painting, Decorating and Paper Hanging.

HULETT-TAFT CO., Inc.

208 ONEIDA STREET

GRAND JURY MAKES REPORT

Twelve Indictments Returned —Non-Suit Granted at Pulaski

The Grand Jury which has been in session for the past three days reported yesterday to Justice Hubbs in Supreme Court, handing up eight indictments of which eight were sealed. District Attorney Culkin stated that arraignments would be made Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Bench warrants were issued for the defendants mentioned in the sealed indictments. The following open indictments were found:

Albert Lalonde, Oswego, unnatural crime; William Lewis, Oswego, burglary third degree and grand larceny second degree committed at Mullin's cafe, East First st.; Merritt Miller, Fulton, burglary third degree and grand larceny second degree; Freed Rosa, Oswego, attempted burglary.

Edgar Munson, a Syracuse real estate man and a formere resident of Mexico, was the defendant in an action started in Supreme Court. Justice Irving G. Hubbs presiding. The plaintiffs were George H. Blowers and Hannah M. Blowers. When the plaintiffs rested this afternoon a nonsuit was granted. Attorney Jerome B. Cooper of Watertown represented the plaintiffs and Miller & Bentley of Pulaski appeared for the defendant.

A settlement was reported in the case of the Read Machine Company against the Massaro Macaroni Company of Fulton, an action to recover money damages for alleged breach of contract. K. T. Jennings of Fulton was the attorney for the plaintiff and Claude E. Guile of the same city represented the defendant company.

Justice Hubbs denied the motion of John T. Broomel of New York, attorney for Thereaina Carobine of the same city and who is thee defendant in two similar actions for recovery for money damages for aleged breach of contract. The plaintiffs are, William H. Jones and Fred W. Rowe, both of New Haven and the motion was opposed by their respective attorneys, Thomas L. McKay and Francis D. Culkin, both of Oswego.

Both cases were by stipulation referred and Justice Hubbs appointed Attorney Nathan B. Smith as referee in both cases. The referee occupied the bench throughout the day, a number of witnesses being called. The proceeding was adjourned to May 26 at the New York office of Attorney Broomel.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

At Indianapolis—	R.	H.	E.
Louisville	5	11	1
Indianapolis	1	8	3

Batteries—Northrup and Clemons; Willis, Cantwell and Gossett.

At Columbus—	R.	H.	E.
Cleveland	9	14	2
Columbus	4	7	3

Batteries—James and Bassler; Schneiberg, Boothy and Coleman.

At Milwaukee—	R.	H.	E.
Kansas City	3	10	1
Milwaukee	10	13	1

Batteries — Sanders and Moore; Young and Hughes.

St. Paul-Minneapolis—Wet grounds

NOTICE OF MEETING

Notice is Hereby Given, pursuant to Sections 30 and 31 of the General City Law, that I have fixed Friday, May 7, 1915, at 8:15 P.M., at the City Hall in the City of Fulton, N. Y., as the time and place of hearing on Senate Bill No. 1943, entitled "An Act to Amend the Charter of the City of Fulton Generally."

At said time and place any person interested in said Bill will be given an opportunity to be heard.

Dated at Fulton, N. Y., May 4, 1915.

FRANK E. FOX, Mayor.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS; STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

New York at Boston.
Philadelphia at Brooklyn.
St. Louis at Pittsburgh.
Cincinnati at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Philadelphia, 3; Brooklyn, 1.
Pittsburgh, 9; St. Louis, 3.
New York, 3; Boston, 1.
Chicago-Cincinnati (wet grounds).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	13	5	.722
Chicago	12	6	.667
Boston	9	8	.529
Cincinnati	9	9	.500
St. Louis	9	12	.429
Pittsburgh	8	11	.421
New York	6	10	.375
Brooklyn	7	12	.368

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at New York.
Washington at Philadelphia.
Chicago at Cleveland.
Detroit at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

New York, 4; Boston, 3.
Washington, 11; Philadelphia, 3.
Chicago, 10; Cleveland, 4.
St. Louis-Detroit (wet grounds).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Deroit	15	6	.714
New York	11	5	.668
Chicago	12	9	.577
Washington	9	8	.529
Boston	8	8	.500
Cleveland	9	11	.450
Philadelphia	5	12	.294
St. Louis	5	15	.250

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Buffalo
Kansas City at Broklyn.
Pittsburgh at Baltimore.
Chicago at Newark.

Results Yesterday

Kansas City, 4; Buffalo, 2. (first game.)

Buffalo, 4; Kansas City, 1. (second game).

Brooklyn, 3; St. Louis, 2.
Pittsburgh, 5; Newark, 3.
Baltimore, 9; Chicago, 8.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Chicago	12	9	.600
Pittsburgh	12	8	.600
Newark	11	9	.550
Broklyn	11	9	.550
Kansas City	10	10	.500
Baltimore	10	12	.455
St. Louis	8	11	.421
Bucalo	7	14	.333

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Toronto at Providence.
Montreal at Jersey City.
Buffalo at Richmond.

Results Yesterday

Jersey City, 1; Toronto, 0.
Rochester, 2; Providence, 0.
Montreal, 14; Richmond, 9.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Jersey City	5	1	.833
Providence	5	2	.714
Richmond	4	4	.500
Montreal	4	4	.500
Newark	2	3	.400
Buffalo	2	3	.400
Rochester	2	4	.333
Toronto	2	5	.286

College Games

At New Haven—Yale, 5; Lafayette, 2.

At Middlebury, Vt.—Middlebury, 5; New Hampshire State, 3.

At Princeton — Penn. State, 3; Princeton, 1.

Lawn Mower Hospital at Roy's Quick Shoe Repair, 110 Cayuga st. ad

Cream Separators at cost. Van- [illegible]

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Nap Lajoie, Connie Mack's Cleanup Hitter.

Photo by American Press Association.

Napoleon Lajoie, who plays second base on Connie Mack's reorganized Athletics, has fourth place in the batting order—the cleanup position. That was Frank Baker's old place, and he was mighty with the club. So far Lajoie has not been hitting up to his form, and the fans are disappointed. Doubtless the big Frenchman has slowed up a bit, but he is a natural hitter and before the season has gone far will likely get busy with his war club. Lajoie first broke into the big league as a member of the Philadelphia Nationals. That was away back in 1896, and since then he has been one of the most consistent heavy batters in the game. As a guardian of second base Lajoie has few superiors.

An Armless Golf Player.

In all probability the unique competitor in sports is Thomas McAnliffe, a Buffalo youth twenty-two years old, who, despite the misfortune of being armless, is nevertheless regarded as a golfer of no mean ability, says the New York Times. He lost his arms on Sept. 22, 1902, at the age of nine years, in a railroad accident.

In playing golf he holds the club between his cheek and shoulder and with the stick in this position has gone around the links of the Buffalo Country club in 106 strokes, a truly remarkable feat, considering the fact that he is bogy here. The Buffalo club's course is one of the best bunkered and trapped in the country.

With the combined swing and jerk of the body and shoulder he is able to give the ball an effective stroke. Both in 1912 and 1913 he won the second flight cup in the caddies' tournament and will attempt to win it again this year, for the third time. With driver, brassie, cleek or midiron he can drive 100 yards and about seventy-five yards with a mashie. At a distance of fifty yards or less he is remarkably accurate with the mashie and is almost sure to putt within a club's length of the hole.

Baseball For Chinese.

Under the patronage of the Chinese government and with the personal assistance of Wu Ting Fang, former Chinese ambassador to the United States, a baseball team of American born Chinese recently sailed from Honolulu on the steamer Mongolia for Shanghai by way of the Philippines and Japan. Their expenses while in China will be met by the Chinese government. The team will tour the principal cities of the interior with the object of introducing American athletics for the physical improvement of the youth of China.

Moriarty Picks Alexander.

George Moriarty, the Tigers' third baseman, is the latest member of the Alexander is the Best Pitcher in the World club. George says that he has hit against them all, but that Alexander the Great has it on the bunch when it comes to speed, control, curves and the rest of the twirling stuff.

Gymnasium For Creighton.

Creighton university of Omaha is about to erect a new gymnasium which will cost $175,000 and include swimming pool, handball court, basketball floor, roof garden, dressing room, quarters for indoor football workouts, shower baths and, in fact, all modern conveniences.

Indorses Baseball.

Dr. R. Tait McKenzie, physical director of the University of Pennsylvania, is a strong advocate of baseball. He says it is one of the best possible means for furthering the physical development of the young undergraduate.

Cricketers Bar Shirkers.

The London cricket clubs have decided to carry on the game this summer in spite of the war. Their teams will be composed of players not eligible for service, all the clubs agreeing that no place should be found for the [illegible]

THE FULTON SALVAGE CO.

DEPARTMENT STORE — W. THIRD STREET AND BROADWAY

INTRODUCTORY RED STAMP SALE

Begins To-day offering Great Bargain Prices in all Departments all this week, to introduce The Greatest of All Profit-Sharing Plans. Free Books and Free Stamps—Ask for them

Note the Money Saving Prices on New goods this season. 20 per cent. Discount on our High Grade Suits for Men and Young Men. Many rare values in this lot.

A Leader in Men's Trousers: Regular $2.50, $2.25 and $2.00 grades at $1.69, all sizes.

SHOE DEPARTMENT

To acquaint you with our Shoe Department we quote the following very special values:

Hurd's Best dress Shoes for men and young men, in all leathers and sizes; regular $4.00 value at $3.49. Other linesof $3.00 and $2.50 values at $2.29.

Ladies' and Misses' Oxfords, regular $3.50 at $2.59. Regular $3.00 shoes at $2.29, and regular $2.50 shoes at $1.98; all sizes in tan, gun metal and patent leather.

Many other Special Values including latest styles in Ladies' and Misses tan and black. Also boys' and girl's School Shoes.

DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT

A Straight 10 per cent. Discount on Shirtwaists, Dress Skirts, Petticoats, House Dresses, Kimonos, Aprons, Underwear, Yard Goods, etc.

A large shipment of Lace Curtains has just arrived as we are going to press. Prices not marked but they will be sold at very low prices in this Red Stamp Sale.

10%—CUT IN WALL PAPER—10%

Our immense stock of this season's new designs and patterns in Cut Out Borders and Binders. You will find in this great variety your choice from pantry to parlor.

Our Hardware, Furniture and House Furnishing Department offer the same money saving bargains. A mammoth order of Linoleums is due to arrive today and will be put on special sale at once. Paints, Oils, etc.

A CARLOAD OF SCREEN DOORS AND WINDOWS

At prices never before heard of. We bought this lot at a very low figure and will sell any size door with trimmings at $1.00.

Window Screens, regular 40 and 35 cents sizes at 20c. Other sizes at 10 and 45 cents.

Our Hardware Department embraces a complete assortment of everything needful.

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your Merchants for National Red Stamps and insisting on getting them with everything you buy. If your merchant does not give you National Merchandise Stamps it is absolute proof that he does not appreciate your trade. Merchants who give National Red Stamps want your trade and are sharing their profits with you. Every full book of Red Stamps is worth $2 in cash or $2.50 in merchandise, dry goods, clothing, etc., or can be applied for $2.50 on purchase of larger amount or $2 on account. Full books will be redeemed by any merchant who gives National Red Stamps.

FREE COUPON

This Coupon good for 30 Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 8th.

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP
Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear
106 Oneida St. Phone 3177

H. C. DANN & SON
City Meat Market
High Grade Meats at the right prices.
11 South 2d St. Phone 42

A. ALDERMAN
Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes
214 West First St.

JOHN CRAHAN
GROCERIES
124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

J. BELASKI
GROCERIES AND MEATS
174 West First St.

JAMES J. KENYON
GROCERIES
518 South 1st St. Phone 3299

M. H. JOYCE
The New West Side Grocery
518 West Third St. Phone 4260

J. R. WARD
GROCERIES—Open Evenings
374 Seneca St. Phone 4450

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY
DEPARTMENT STORE — West Third Street and Broadway

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps and Bargain Prices. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

Merchants wishing to learn more about this Wonderful Business Boosting Plan, call Mr. Beynon, at McDonald's New York Shop, Phone 3177

NINETEEN HUNDRED COPIES OF THE EVENING TIMES GO INTO FULTON'S HOMES DAILY. WATCH US GROW!

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 120 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1915 | Price One Cent

Brown Bill Gets Support of Five Aldermen; Mr. Foster Voting Against the Measure; Sentiment of Citizens For and Against Bill About Evenly Divided.

Not All of the Councilmen Came Prepared to Vote Upon Bill on Its Merits or Demerits

The Brown bill, an act to amend the charter of the city of Fulton generally passed the City Council last night at the City Hall by a vote of five to one, Aldermen Quirk, Distin, Sullivan, Baker and Gardner voting for the measure and Alderman Foster voting against it. The bill passed after an hour's discussion by a number of citizens who packed the council room to its capacity.

Citizens and taxpayers began to gather at eight o'clock, the time set for the meeting, but those who came at that time were obliged to cool their heels for an hour, while the Mayor, City Attorney and four Aldermen conferred in the city clerk's office behind closed doors, and with the shade drawn low. The star chamber idea is not an uncommon one, but frequenters of council meetings remarked the fact that the shade was drawn, which was unusual. However, at the hour of nine, the Mayor appeared followed shortly after by the Aldermen. In the interim several of the taxpayers had hastened to other engagements, evidently considering their presence unnecessary.

The Mayor occupied a few minutes in reading the bill to the assemblage and then called for arguments against the measure. A deathly stillness prevailed and the rush of the water over the lower falls could be distinctly heard. (We expect contradiction here, as the water did not flow over the falls yesterday.) The Mayor repeated the question twice and then a taxpayer asked what the resolution was, informing the Mayor that if sentiments were to be expressed on a resolution, there must be a resolution.

Dr. A. L. Hall was the first taxpayer to make any statement [illegible] the bill. The gentleman asked several questions [illegible] the amount of salaries to be paid and why [illegible] necessity for a measure empowering the council to raise funds in case of emergency. The Mayor answered the first question by stating that he did not know that the council intended to pay any salaries but the provision was in the bill to permit them to, should they ever wish it. The Mayor also explained that the council could not vote salaries to themselves but to their successors. Dr. Hall asked if there were any jokers in the bill and he referred to the gambling clause which reads, "To license, regulate or restrain bowling, pool and billiard playing and playing games of chance in public places." The City Attorney informed him that "any person who thought that meant licensing gambling did not know what he was talking about," and added: "The State forbids gambling." The City Attorney also explained the provision which empowers the council to borrow a sum not to exceed $20,000 "to meet an emergency caused by fire, flood or any other cause which endangers life or property." At first the City Attorney stated that there was no way by which the council could raise funds at present, if no money was at hand, to meet such an emergency. Then a taxpayer asked if such money could not be raised by a special election. The City Attorney admitted that it could, but said that a space of from three to four weeks might intervene before a special election could be called. Alderman Foster replied by saying that that length of time might also intervene before the council could borrow funds even if it voted them.

Attorney W. S. Hillick was given the floor at this point. Mr. Hillick spoke for fully five minutes in commendation of the bill. He stated that he thought that the bill had been misrepresented to the people of the city, and while he did not state what agency misrepresented the bill, it is assured that he referred to this paper. Mr. Hillick said that salaries should be paid, in his opinion, to the aldermen who worked hard for their constituents and devoted their time to the city government. He was of the opinion that even greater power should be given to the aldermen than that which they now possess as they are elected by the people and the people must trust them. Mr. Hillick said that he had no idea there was any opposition to the measure, but he had not read it fully until last evening and after reading it he was more satisfied than ever that it was a just measure. He intimated that the aldermen had gathered together and had discussed the bill and consequently it must be satisfactory. Here it might be added that Alderman Foster stated in his address before he voted against the bill, that he had not read the bill thoroughly and had not received any copies of the bill through the mail or otherwise. He intimated that he knew nothing about the bill, and Alderman Distin before voting also intimated that he was not familiar with the bill, saying that up until hearing the arguments last night some portions of the bill were not clear to him, but since he had heard the arguments for and against certain portions of the bill and had heard it explained thoroughly, he was willing to vote for it. The statements of these two aldermen seem to vary with that of Mr. Hillick, who, while he did not state outright that the aldermen had fathered the bill, intimated that they were thoroughly familiar with it.

After Mr. Hillick had concluded William J. Lovejoy asked to be heard. He said that the city was overburdened enough now with debts, that the tax rate was high and that he doubted very much if a small salary would improve the calibre of the men who were to serve the city, either on the board of aldermen or in the mayor's chair. He was of the opinion that a salary might even work for harm, by attracting men unfitted to the work, but who would be willing to run for any office which drew a salary.

Mr. Hillick stated here that he had been a member of a Republican committee at one time and several names had been proposed in a convention as mayoralty candidates. Mr. Hillick said that the committee, upon interviewing several of the possible candidates, was informed that these men "could not afford it." He said it cost a man money to be Mayor and that many good men turned down the position because their finances would not permit. In his opinion, a salary, enough to cover expenses, which he placed at $300 or $400 a year, would make it possible for desirable men, who are not wealthy, to accept the office.

Mr. Lovejoy, resuming, asked the City Attorney to read the clause which referred to poolrooms, and, after it had been read, asked if that clause did not license poolrooms. The City Attorney stated that it did not.

At this point, Alderman Foster was heard to ask if the meeting could not be adjourned for a week, as he wished to see some of his constituents and learn their sentiments regarding the measure. No one seconded the motion.

The Mayor then read a list of the third class cities in the state, the most of which, he said, paid their aldermen as well as the mayors. The aldermen's salaries ranging from $75 to $500 a year, and the mayors' salaries from $200 to $5,000 a year. Every city on the list is larger than Fulton and Mr. Lovejoy asked the Mayor about the population of the cities mentioned, some of which total 40,000 people. The Mayor said he did not know the population of these cities and was not qualified to make comparisons, but that all the cities mentioned were third class cities.

Dr. Haviland spoke in favor of the bill, voicing sentiments for a commission form of government, and said he was in favor of a commission form of government even if the city had to pay the Mayor a large salary. He said the Mayor deserved a salary for his time [illegible]

TIME WILL PROVE WHICH SIDE IS RIGHT

The members of the Board of Aldermen seem to have settled the questions of salaries for city officials once and for all time. Of course, as Mayor Fox pointed out last night, the council may not decide to vote its successors any salaries and perhaps future councils may never take action. The Mayor stated that he did not know for a certainty that the members of the council contemplated voting salaries.

Letting that issue pass for the present, the meeting last evening afforded those present the opportunity of making an interesting comparison. Three Syracuse newspapers came out openly in favor of the bill. Two Fulton newspapers had nothing to say in favor of or against the bill and one Fulton newspaper opposed it. Nevertheless, it can be said in all truth that fifty per cent. of those in attendance last evening were opposed to the bill. Five men spoke in favor of the bill and four spoke against it. The others in the assemblage did not voice any sentiments. Those who spoke against the bill did not make any remarks which would lead anyone to beelieve that they were misinformed, in fact, they probably knew the bill and its contents better than some of the aldermen present, in spite of the fact that one of the supporters of the measure intimated that the aldermen had formulated the bill. And there were many present who did not favor the bill, but were either awed into silence or decided that argument was futile.

All the gentlemen present had [illegible] newspapers. Here the comparison can be made—when The Fulton Evening Times can put a matter like the Brown bill before the people of this city in its right and oppose it, and can, by its efforts, arouse taxpayers sufficiently to protest against a measure of the kind, while three powerful out of town papers which are circulated here devote almost as much space to supporting the bill, and can produce only an equal number of advocates of the bill—it speaks well for the efforts of The Evening Times. Of course, it can not be said that the circulation of The Evening Times equals that of the three Syracuse papers combined, but the influence The Times wielded in the matter of the Brown bill certainly equalled the influence wielded by the three opposing papers. And time will prove which side is right.

Another Star Chamber Session, at Which Not All the Councilmen Were Present, Preceded Public Hearing.

well as the aldermen. Irving Galusha was called upon for a few words, and he also approved of the bill.

A. E. Worden, a local business man, spoke against the bill in a decided fashion. He deplored the fact that salaries were necessary to entice good men into an office which called for only a few hours' time a week, and also stated that the city was in debt now almost to the limit and no measure which would increase the debt should be passed.

Several other taxpayers gave their opinions, with the sentiment about evenly divided. The following gentlemen spoke against the bill: Edward Waugh, L. W. Emerick, A. E. Worden, William J. Lovejoy. The following gentlemen expressed themselves as pleased with some portions of the bill, but opposed to others: A. W. Wiltsie, Dr. A. L. Hall. The following gentlemen openly favored the bill: Irving Galusha, Dr. Haviland, George Mason, W. S. Hillick and A. P. Bradt. Publisher A. P. Bradt stated that his conscience would feel better if the Mayor and Aldermen were getting salaries.

It was after ten o'clock when the vote was taken and Aldermen Distin was the first on the roll call. As stated before, he said that he had some doubts about the bill all along but now that he had heard the bill explained and understood it thoroughly he would vote for it. Alderman Sullivan of the second ward voted for the bill without any remarks. Alderman Baker also voted for the bill making no statement. Alderman Foster said that he opposed the bill for several reasons; it would add another burden to the taxes, and a special election was a perfectly efficient means of raising money for an emergency; that he had no desire to draw a salary, for coming down one evening a week and devoting his time and his energies as best he could to the work of the city, and expected no reward for his services; that the bill gave the council too much power in the matter of raising funds, inasmuch as many occurrences could be construed as emergencies; and he closed by voting "No" to the bill.

Alderman Quirk, on the other hand, voiced his approval of the bill; said it was a good thing and that he approved of the salary clause; that the clause which would permit the raising of money in case of emergency was a good one and the licensing of pool-rooms, and he closed his remarks by voting for the bill. Alderman Gardner of the sixth ward, when called voted "Yes."

Alderman Sullivan moved to adjourn and the Brown bill hearing was over. The bill will now go to Albany for the signature of Governor Whitman.

THIEVES ENTER CLOTHING STORE

Amdursky's Store Entered and Articles of Clothing Valued at $50 Taken

The clothing store of H. Amdursky on 1st st. was entered and robbed last night some time after midnight. The thieves effected an entrance by breaking a pane of glass in a cellar window, and then forcing the door leading from the street floor into the cellar stairway. Mr. Amdursky advised the police of the robbery this morning, but he was not able to state just how much the prowlers took with them. It is reported that two suitcases are missing, several suits of clothes, neckties and other wearing apparel to the extent of $50.

The Amdursky robbery is the third case of its kind to be reported in the downtown section in a week. A week ago a thief entered the Westover pool room and made off with several cartons of cigarettes and tobacco and what loose chance was in the till at the time, and on the same evening two men attempted to break into the garage of L. J. McQuade, proprietor of the Clark House. The McQuade garage houses a new car and it is thought that the thieves contemplated the theft of the auto. They were frightened away by employes of the Onyx store, and their identity has not been learned.

The Westover robber has not been found and the police have been quietly workin gon the case for the past week without any result. The thieves who entered the Amdursky store left no tangible clues, other than finger-prints on the doors and windowsill. The second floor of the building is occupied by two families and no one in the house heard the glass break. The telephone building which is always occupied by one or more night operators is next door, but the robbers did their work so quietly that the police have as yet disnovered any one who heard them at work.

ATHLETIC DINNER

Fulton A. A. Will Dine and Listen to Addresses.

Topical topics will comprise the program of entertainment at tonight's meeting of the Fulton A. A., to be held in the club rooms of the State Street M. E. church. Prior to the impromtu addresses the young men will sit around a festive board to enjoy the eatables provided by the committee.

This dinner and social time indicates that the Fulton A. A. will become a factor in the development of church club life at State and 4th streets.

WEATHER FORECAST

Generally fair tonight and Sunday; somewhat cooler [illegible]

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 64 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 45

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. E. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 8, 1915

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

Opinions

Soil Survey of Oneida County

Elsewhere in this issue will be found an account of the results of the soil survey made by the United States Bureau of Soils in co-operation with the New York State College of Agricure which will soon be published by the Federal Government.

As will be seen by perusal of the synopsis furnished by the Department of Agriculture, the survey goes into many important and interesting matters. Not only does it furnish a detailed description of the 58 soil types found in the county and their agricultural uses, but methods of treatment and the values are given for each type. The report also discusses the agricultural his tory of the county.

With the report will be bound a colored map showing the location of the different important soils and the location of schools, churches, public roads, railroads and water courses.

A general distribution of this report when it is issued, throughout the county should be provided for.—Utica Herald.

Italy and the Final Plunge

After about nine months of vacillation, ratiocination, procrastination, negotiation and preparation Italy the subtle, Italy the calculating, appears about ready to cast her lot on the side of war with the Powers comprising the Triple Entente.

Failing to obtain her lost provinces on the Adriatic from Austria, she is once more on the brink of war, not as a matter of broad principle for a free Europe but because she has a good opportunity to get back what she lost.

All the dispatches recently indicated that Italy would go forward. A great game has been played. Germany has urged Austria to go to extreme lengths in an effort to satisfy the Italian demands. But they have not been enough. At the same time, having in mind the tradition that the Italians for long generations have sought to be on the winning side, every thing has been done to impress the government at Rome with the invincibility of German and Austrian arms. Forthis purpose the most tremendous efforts have been made by the Germans on the western front, and when all the facts are known it probably will be found that the most desperate fighting and the most appalling losses of life ever known in the world have marked the struggle of the last two or three weeks around Ypres. So, too, the loudly trumpeted victory over the Russians in Galicia. This victory is much to be doubted, and its effect is already lost at Rome, where the facts are known.

It is apparent that Italy has closely cast her lot with Serbia as well as Roumania, and her disposition of troops would seem to contemplate assistance to the Allies against Turkey as well as against her tribal enemy Austria.—New York Herald.

A Cleaner Town

A few years ago men were inclined to consider lightly the printed exhortations of municipal leagues and other civic organizations to keep streets and lawns free of the small debris which accumulates so readily and which the individual can by little effort do away with to a great degree. They sai dthat the movement started from a lot of women who had nothing else to do. They classed the originators with those business men who have East Aurora platitudes suspended over their office desks. But today vigorous men look at this thing in an altogether different light. They see what it has accomplished and they acknowledge the opportunity for greater accomplishment.

That is a timely symposium of injunctions which Mrs. V. P. Abbott, chairman of the civic improvement committee of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, has sent to the women's clubs of the state for endorsement. Here are the resolutions which it is proposed to send to each child attending school with the request that they pledge themselves to obey them:

I want our town to be clean and beautiful and I promise to do all I can to make it so, especially in the following way:

I will not throw litter of any kind, or dirt into the streets or on the lawns.

I will not deface hedges, fences or sidewalks.

I will not unnecessarily cross or trample down grass or grass plots.

I will not break down shrubbery or flowers.

I will help to keep both the front and back lawns of my house as clean as possible.

I will always remember that this is my town and I will help make it clean and attractive.

The expressions are well phrased and their adoption in Watertown now is especially timely at this clean up season of the year. It is constant reiteration that brings results in matters of this character. The day is gone by when we consider a man feeble of fibre because he stoops to pick up a bit of paper or holds a torn-up envelope in his hand until he reaches a rubbish receptacle.

"Keep off the Grass" signs are observed in a different spirit today than ever before. The general public realizes now that the injunction is made in order to insure a more attractive community and not simply because some individual wants his own grass protected. The spirit of keeping off the grass is well set forth on a small sign board on the lawn of a Christian Science church in a large American city. The sign board does not bear the characteristic phrase, "Keep off the Grass," but instead the phrase, "Please assist us in maintaining an attractive lawn."

THE LETTER BOX

The Evening Times is in receipt of a letter signed "Taxpayer," which is not admissible to these columns because the writer has failed to provide his or her truly name in addition to the nom de plum. Inasmuch as the letter contains a number of valuable suggestions for the improvement of the city, it is not deemed a violation of newspaper ethics to quote from the letter.

One assertion made in the letter is that it is impossible to beautify the city because boys, dogs and cats make the work impossible.. The writer of the letter impresses upon us that while boys have a right to live, they should be compelled to show upon the streets some of the training they receive in the schools and in the home. Furtheromre, the writer favors a good place for the boys to play, so that one may walk upon the streets without fear of flying base balls. This writer appears to be more anxious to have a beautiful town than a "good" town. In this The Evening Times takes issue with the writer, for the reason that it is next to impossible to attain the one without first securing the other. In the first place, a good newspaper, printed and published right at home—your home—in your town, is in the right position to make the town "good." To accomplish this result, clean politics is the first requisite of a "good" town.

"Taxpayer" is altogether right in demanding the things he or she does, but how can any town expect to accomplish commercial and other advantages unless all of us know that the city is politically clean? Cleanliness being akin to godliness, "Taxpayer," in this instance, is referred to the work that is being carried on, in a quiet manner, by the "good" citizens of Fulton who hope to make the town "good" by making it clean politically.

This same "Taxpayer" would have a tag day to provide funds for laying cement walks in beautiful East Park, believing that few persons would fail to respond to the appeal for money—a commendable motion indeed, but why not go further, now that the Brown bill is up to the Governor for his signature? Why—now that future mayors and aldermen shall be designated to receive remuneration for services performed—not insist upon providing the men who labor on our streets with stenographers? Would this not be a step toward greater efficiency and, perhaps, economy?

Yesterday's mail brought to The Evening Times office another communication, which cannot be published for the reason named in the heading of this article. This last writer complains of the factory smoke nuisance in the city. And in the same paragraph he or she says something about one of the city's policemen, who, it appears, was not the personification of politeness upon a certain occasion. The writer of this latter complaint is advised that The Evening Times proposes to suggest to Chief of Police Dyer that he secure at the Public Library one or more copies of Lord Chesterfield's letters to his son, hand one copy to each officer as he leaves the station for his beat, and watch the officer from a dark corner to see what effect the book may have upon the guardians of the peace. Politeness on the force is essential.

Referring once more to "Taxpayer's" letter, who recommends that our Chamber of Commerce shall make its plans practical if it wants the co-operation of the people. The Evening Times asks the writer and other complainants this one question, do you think that the Chamber of Commerce should undertake to iron out everything in this city just like a laundryman irons your shirt?

A Square Deal for Suffrage

What the suffragists appealed to the Constitutional Convention for is what every fair-minded citizen, whether "pro" or "anti", must desire. They ask simply that the suffrage amendment adopted by two Legislatures and now to be submitted to the voters in November shall have a square deal. The question of enfranchising women is too big and too vital for any other treatment.

Under the provisions of the constitution, any amendment made by the convention to Section 1, Article 2, which contains the qualifications of voters, would supersede the equal suffrage amendment adopted by the Legislature. Since that must be submitted to the voters, it would profit the suffragists nothing if the convention adopted the same amendment—it would only divide the suffrage vote between the proposed new constitution and the separate suffrage amendment.

The Republican platform of 1914 recommended that "the Constitutional Convention deal with the subject in such a way as to insure, in any event, the submission of this question to the electors of the state in 1915 as a separate proposition without recommendation by the party for or against it." That recommendation is the only fair and honorable way to treat the matter, and there should be no question of the convention's following the party platform's suggestion. Like the Republican party, the Democratic party is pledged to a submission of the suffrage question to the voters this fall. Neither party could afford, and surely they cannot desire, to have this issue voted on under any but the fairest possible conditions.—New York Press.

Japan's Ultimatum to China

Only one fact stands out clearly in the diplomatic controversy between Japan and China which the former power now seeks to terminate by threatening a resort to force. The fact is that Japan is taking advantage of the situation in Europe to press demands on China which would certainly not be pressed if the hands of Great Britain, France, Russia and Germany were not tied by the preoccupations of the Great War.

Japan aspires to be the dominant power in the Far East and to establish a commercial, if not a political, suzerainty over peaceful, inert, undeveloped China. In seeking special advantages and privileges in Chinese territory the Japanese are only following the example of the European nations. The powers if Europe were forehanded in establishing themselves while China was still a political No Man's Land—an easy prey to foreign incursions. Japan came into the competition late, but has pursued the policy of absorption keenly and resolutely. She has acquired Formosa, annexed Korea, expelled Russia from the Liao-Tung peninsula, developed a sphere of influence in Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia and taken the Tsingtau concession away from Germany. here can be no question and opportunities in China, or that she will go as far in that direction as Chinese passivity and the non-interference of the United States and the European powers will allow.

No effective resistance to Japanese aggression is to be expected from the Chinese Republic itself. The Chinese government, although facing for two or three generations the peril of foreign invasion, has never taught the people the duty of self-defense. It has neglected to develop either a feeling of patriotism or a sense of danger. The great mass of the Chinese will accept foreign rule submissively. They have no national spirit and their ignorannce of their own strength is so great that they came to even grasp the irony of the spectacle of a little nation like Japan, with 70,000,000 inhabitants, domineering over a big nation like their own, of 400,000,000 inhabitants. It is much as if the United States should let itself be dragooned and dictated to by Mexico or Canada.

The only serious obstacle to Japanese penetration in China is the possible non-complaisance of other interested powers. Japan pledged herself in the treaty of alliance with Great Britain "to recognize the independence and territorial integrity of China." She also accepted the Open Door programme formulated by Secretary Hay. The question now at issue is whether the demands made on the Chinese government violate those diplomatic engagements. Japan and China have given out different versions of the demands and most comment on the extent of Japanese aggresion has been based on a draft issued in Peking which Tokio declares to be inaccurate.

Japanese diplomacy is astute, and even if the Chinese version of the demands is correct there might still be room for a contention on Japan's part that they do not affect the independence and territorial integrity of China and do not slam the Open Door in the faces of the treaty nations. So far as concerns the articles which refer to Manchuria, Shangtung and Tsingtau—all now within Japan's recognized "sphere of influence"—other nations can find little ground of offence. And it is, perhaps, the spirit rather than the letter of the broader demands, affecting the whole of China which outside powers will consider repugnant to the common understanding that China is to have a fair opportunity to develop into an independent modern state.

The other world powers may not be greatly concerned if China and Japan can reach an agreement which, while satisfying Japan, will not impair Chinese soveringnty. But any attempt on Japan's part to impose terms by war and to make that war an occasion for further spoliation of China would undoubtedly be resented by the United States, Great Britain, Russia and France, whose aim it has been to create a status quo in the Far East under which China might enjoy peace and selfgovernment and all foreign interests in the republic should be impartially solidified and protected. Japan will risk universal condemnation if she seeks to impose her will on China simply because most of the treaty powers have their hands full.—New York Tribune.

Special sale of Farm Wagons during month of May. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Children Cry
FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

Expert Advice For the Automobile Owner

Queries and Replies Covering Matters of Importance to the Man Who Runs a Car

How can one ascertain when a storage battery is fully charged and when it is fully discharged?

By testing the solution with a hydrometer. When fully charged the solution will show a gravity reading between 1.280 and 1.300 on the Baume scale. A battery is said to be discharged when its gravity has dropped to 1.150 or under on this scale.

I would like to know what to use to take off different kinds of renickeling that I have used on the brass parts of my car—something that will restore and not harm the original brass surface.

The coat of nickel which is deposited over the brass will have to be eaten off by acid or else scraped off mechanically. The acid will have a more even action and is recommended by large brass companies. The acids used are a mixture of nitric and sulphuric in even quantities. After the acid has eaten through the nickel it will leave the brass and then the acid is washed off and the brass repolished. To get a very good job it would be better to have the brass rebuffed.

Is it practicable to charge batteries with the generator on the car? If so, how often and how long should the engine be run?

During the winter the battery should be charged every two weeks. You can use the generator on the car for this. The engine should be run long enough to cause the battery to show a gravity of between 1.280 and 1.300.

I recently disconnected the pump and magneto shaft on my car to take up a little play, and also adjusted the carbon brushes. I am getting a good spark and at the right time, but when I try to crank the motor it kicks back. Can you tell me where the trouble is likely to be?

The cause of the trouble is that the spark is advanced far enough for ordinary running, but is too far for cranking. The result is that the spark occurs before the piston has reached upper dead center, and the explosion instead of forcing the motor ahead throws it back in the reverse direction. The magneto should be so arranged that the spark occurs at full retard on exact dead center. Magnetos are generally set so that the brake in the primary breaker box occurs at this point.

My radiator was frozen and now leaks when warm. What can I do?

Temporary relief will be obtained by using cornmeal, the method of application being to drop a handful or more into the radiator, when the circulation of the water will naturally tend to collect the substance around the hole, thus plugging the leak. There are a number of radiator compounds on the market which may be of value.

Will you please give me a solution to my troubles with carbon? I find it necessary either to burn or scrape out the carbon from my motor at least every 400 miles, sometimes less. I have tried all kinds of oils with various results, the more expensive oils giving the best. Have also tried different size jets in the carbureter, putting kerosene in the intake every week while the engine is hot, carrying the oil level about half full, etc., but to no avail.

The cause of carbonization in this motor is probably due to too much oil being pumped into the cylinders. This would be due to the gauge on the oil base not registering correctly and hence bringing the oil level too high. It is suggested that you empty all the oil out of the oil base, cleaning it thoroughly with kerosene and then refilling with twenty-one pints of engine oil. If the gauge does not register full at this point bend it until it does.

Is there any need of having the sediment washed out of a storage battery before it short circuits, or should it be cleaned at regular intervals, even though it seems to be in perfect condition?

An ignition battery with rather thick plates may not need cleaning if the sediment trap for one year or perhaps two. In starting and lighting batteries the period is longer, and usually the plates need replacement when the sediment trap is filled to any extent.

What may be the cause of the brakes not being effective, and how may it be remedied?

The common cause of brake slippage is due to oil on the brake bands. This oil makes its way from the differential housing to the brake bands and causes the brake drum to slip. Poor adjustment of the brake rods will cause poor performance. Take a squirt gun, fill it with kerosene and empty the contents upon the brake bands. This will tend to dissolve any grease or oil upon them.

Will you tell me where the oil works out of front gears?

Most likely a new gasket is needed between the timing gear cover and the crank case. It is possible also that the oil leaks from the pump shaft or crank shaft. There are packing glands to prevent oil leaks at these points, and these should be tightened.

I have an air cooled engine and wish to thoroughly clean it of carbon. Would it be possible to clean carbon out by putting the cylinders into a pail of kerosene and leaving them for about a day?

As long as you are going to remove the cylinders it is best first to soak them in kerosene, as you suggest. This will probably not remove the carbon, but will merely loosen it. It should be taken off by scraping with a soft, blunt metal tool such as a screw-driver. It should not be hard to reach the corners when the cylinders are removed.

What is the difference in construction between ordinary and cord tires?

Ordinary tires use a fabric carcass or one made of a tough grade of duck or canvas, while cord tires are built up on a cord carcass, the latter usually being woven in such a way as to impart great diagonal strength, rendering the tire less susceptible to vertical stress than with some other constructions.

Will you please explain the difference between the dual, double, single, two point and duplex electric ignition systems?

The dual system employs two independent sources of current, but uses a common set of spark plugs and a common high tension distributer. The double system employs two independent systems throughout, with two sets of spark plugs, two sources of ignition, two coils and two distributers. The single ignition system has but one source of current, one transforming system, one distributer and one set of plugs. Two point ignition is where two sparks occur at the same time in the cylinder. It must of necessity, therefore, involve two sets of plugs and synchronized distributers.

Duplex ignition is that in which both a battery and magneto current source are used, but in which the battery is connected with the magneto armature in such a way that it can produce a high tension spark by means of the secondary winding of the magneto or aid the primary at low motor speeds.

I have found that the higher test gasoline I use the more power I get and the hotter my engine gets. Will I injure my motor by using a mixture of motor and [illegible] gasoline, if the water [illegible] and does not boil? The dealer tells me his motor gas tests 64 and the illuminating gas 72-76 and sometimes more.

As long as the cooling water does not boil it is certain that the motor is operating within the safe range of temperature.

Can you tell me about what the pressure per square inch is on the piston of a motor at the time of firing; also the pressure at the time the exhaust valve starts to open?

The pressure per square inch at explosion depends upon the motor itself to a large extent, but on ordinary four cycle gasoline engines, operating at a mean effective pressure of ninety pounds to the square inch and a terminal pressure of forty pounds to the square inch, the combustion pressure on a good average card taken by the manograph would be about 300 pounds to the square inch.

When running on the level or down grades at a fair rate of speed there is a singing noise that seems to be on the left side of my gear box, but going up grade I can run as fast as I desire and the noise is not there. I can give the car a good start down grade and free the engine and do not hear it any more until I engage the clutch again. It does not seem to injure the pulling at all, but it seems as if there were some parts rubbing. This has been in the car for a long time.

From the description which you give it would seem that the noise is produced by the drive shaft pinion and the differential gear not meshing properly. In order to overcome this it will be necessary for you to install special heat treated parts. The fact that the pinion and gear are not meshing properly causes a misalignment which sets up vibration, producing the humming or singing noise.

Why and how does a four cycle engine back fire in the intake manifold from a lean mixture when the engine is cold and spark retarded?

A mixture which is too lean may not explode, or, if it does, the explosion will be a poor one in which part of the mixture burns slowly with a flame. The flame sticks to the cylinder wall until the inlet valve opens, and then the inrushing fresh charge also is ignited, causing an explosion of the gases in the inlet manifold and mixing chamber.

I would like to know whether I could not substitute a six volt storage battery for the four dry cells used for ignition on my car?

Rather than go to the expense of a storage battery for this work, it would be probably better for you to use more dry cells and connect them in parallel. The quality of current from the storage battery would be apt also to burn out the points of the breaker mechanism.

CHINTZ FURNISHING

Beautiful Fabric Well Liked For Boudoir and Bedroom.

NEVER SO CHARMING AS NOW.

The Material Which Has Been Lent a Romantic Charm by Its Use In Old English Country Houses Is Now Coming Into General Use In This Country.

Patterns of chintzes and cretonnes were never prettier than they are this season. Most of the new patterns are large, but there are still many charming patterns of chintz printed in the small block designs. Probably these old English patterns will remain a part of the stock in trade in chintz and cretonne for years, now that they have been so definitely revived. They are always suitable when a small patterned chintz is required.

In the illustration is shown one of these chintzes fashioned into a window draping quaintly charming. Valance and side curtains are draped over hemstitched lengths of dimity.

This year, too, there are some very attractive designs with the pictorial patterns—of trees and landscapes, in tapestry fashion. They are especially suitable with colonial furnishings, and a white enameled, mahogany furnished bedroom with white paneled walls hung with one of the chintzes of this type would be charming.

The fad for black that came from Vienna by way of Paris into the world of interior decorating a few seasons ago has become a concrete factor in the patterning of chintz, and this spring there are many good designs that have much black in their coloring. Very often a definiteness and character can be gained by the use of a black and white chintz that no other colors could give.

Decorators and furniture makers realize each season more fully the decorative value of chintz, and this spring there are many new bits of boudoir and bedroom furniture upholstered in or made of chintz.

There are many charming lounging chairs—some on the conventional lines of the French chaise lounge, some consisting of a comfortable deep upholstered chair of some sort with a wide, comfortable foot rest that is placed close against the chair and supports the knees, legs and feet.

CHINTZ VALANCE AND SIDE CURTAINS.

White enamel furniture is often furnished with cushions and other embellishments of cretonne. One bedroom set shows chairs of white enamel cushioned in a chintz of rose, yellow—of a deep, soft shade—and dull blue. The writing desk, dressing table, bureau and bedside stand are all topped with glass, under which is a panel of chintz.

There is a screen with chintz panels, too, and various boxes and bags and cushions of the material add to the general effectiveness of the idea. Chintz curtains hang at the sides of the windows, with ivory white net over the glass to tone with the enamel.

One of the new ideas in bedroom furnishings is a hanging cupboard of chintz. This cupboard, of course, is washable, and it can be folded into small space. Therefore it would be ideal for the woman who stays at a hotel in the summer.

The shelves of the hanging cupboard are big enough to hold hats, underwear, shirt waists in neat piles and all the accessories of women's dressing. There are little clasped pockets on the inside of the cupboard occasionally, and these can be used to hold hairpins, handkerchiefs, manicure articles and other little knickknacks. The shelves are stiffened with boards, so that they are quite firm, but when the cupboard needs laundering the boards can be removed.

We are all used to the pretty and convenient little stands of enameled wood that hold boxes of cretonne. These stands are made in various shapes—for window seats, for dressing table, and just in the most convenient shapes to hold hat boxes or long flat boxes that accommodate blouses and light frocks.

Then there are the thousand and one little boxes and bags that add color to a room and at the same time prove convenient receptacles for everything from note paper to biscuits to serve with the afternoon cup of tea.

It is a pretty fancy to place in a chintz furnished room a small white enameled basket with a trimming of little flowers in relief, of plaster or wood, colored in shades matching the cretonne. These baskets can be used for knitting, needlework, fruit or flowers.

Birdcages, too, are made in the same manner, and these lend another touch of daintiness and charm to the room they grace.

FOR THE BOUDOIR.

A new trinket to add to milady's boudoir is what might be called a telephone closet. It may be a most elaborate creation of brocade and gilt lace, or it may take on the more modest garb of dull flowered cretonne. It is usually made up, however, in the material of the rest of the boudoir or bedroom "fixings." This little telephone cover is made on a frame or cardboard, like the half of a cylinder about sixteen inches high, with a diameter of fourteen inches. A straight piece of cardboard sixteen inches high and about eighteen inches long is covered with the material to be used. If the outside is cretonne it may be lined with a plain color. A piece of wire is sewed into the bottom of this piece and bent so that it holds the covered cardboard into a half cylinder. Two doors are covered in the same way and connected to the cylinder by means of a cotton or gilt braid. A straight piece of the material is shirred into the top for a "roof" and caught in the middle under a covered button or cabochon of braid. At the back and bottom of the case is cut a small hole to allow for the telephone wire to pass through. The whole closet is simply placed over the phone, and when the warning bell rings milady opens the little doors, takes her message and replies and replaces the phone in the cage, tucking away what is often a most jarring note in an otherwise quaint, old fashioned boudoir.

SEALING WAX KNICKKNACKS.

Beautify Yourself and Your House by Mastering New Art of Decoration.

Do you know how to use sealing wax to beautify yourself and your house? No? Well, it is a new art, but it is one worth mastering.

With sealing wax of various colors, some shoe buttons, a little lamp and a small metal dish or ladle you can make very attractive "enameled" buttons for your new chiffon blouse. Melt some pink and blue and green and gray wax in the ladle, without mixing them very thoroughly, and dip the buttons in. Then let them dry, and you will see that you have some lovely round buttons with almost opalescent coloring.

Or suppose you want a pair of pins for baby's frock and do not feel inclined to pay $1.50 for the blue enameled sort you desire. Buy a stick of the lovely pale blue sealing wax and a ten cent pair of pins at the notion counter, melt the wax carefully so that it does not scorch to a darker shade and dip in the pins. Dry, and, presto, you have the enameled baby's gift you desired.

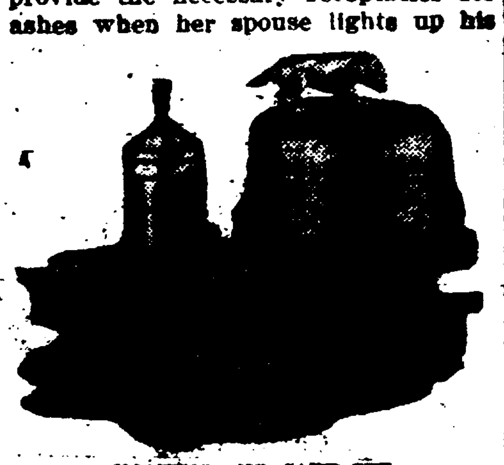
Perhaps you want a string of beads. You can make them, too, of sealing wax. You can dip wooden beads—the kind that come for children to string on stout thread—in gold sealing wax, and when they have dried you can dip half of each bead in again and let that dry and then put just a little of the bead's surface in again and so work up a bead of irregular shape, like the lovely Venetian beads of glass and gold. You can use other colors, too, with the gold.

Then you can make beads entirely out of the wax if you learn to work skillfully, and so have a chain of beads with a foundation of nothing but wax.

BRASS FITTINGS.

Convenient and Handsome Articles For the Library Table or Man's Den.

Though milady doubtless does not smoke, it falls upon her shoulders to provide the necessary receptacles for ashes when her spouse lights up his



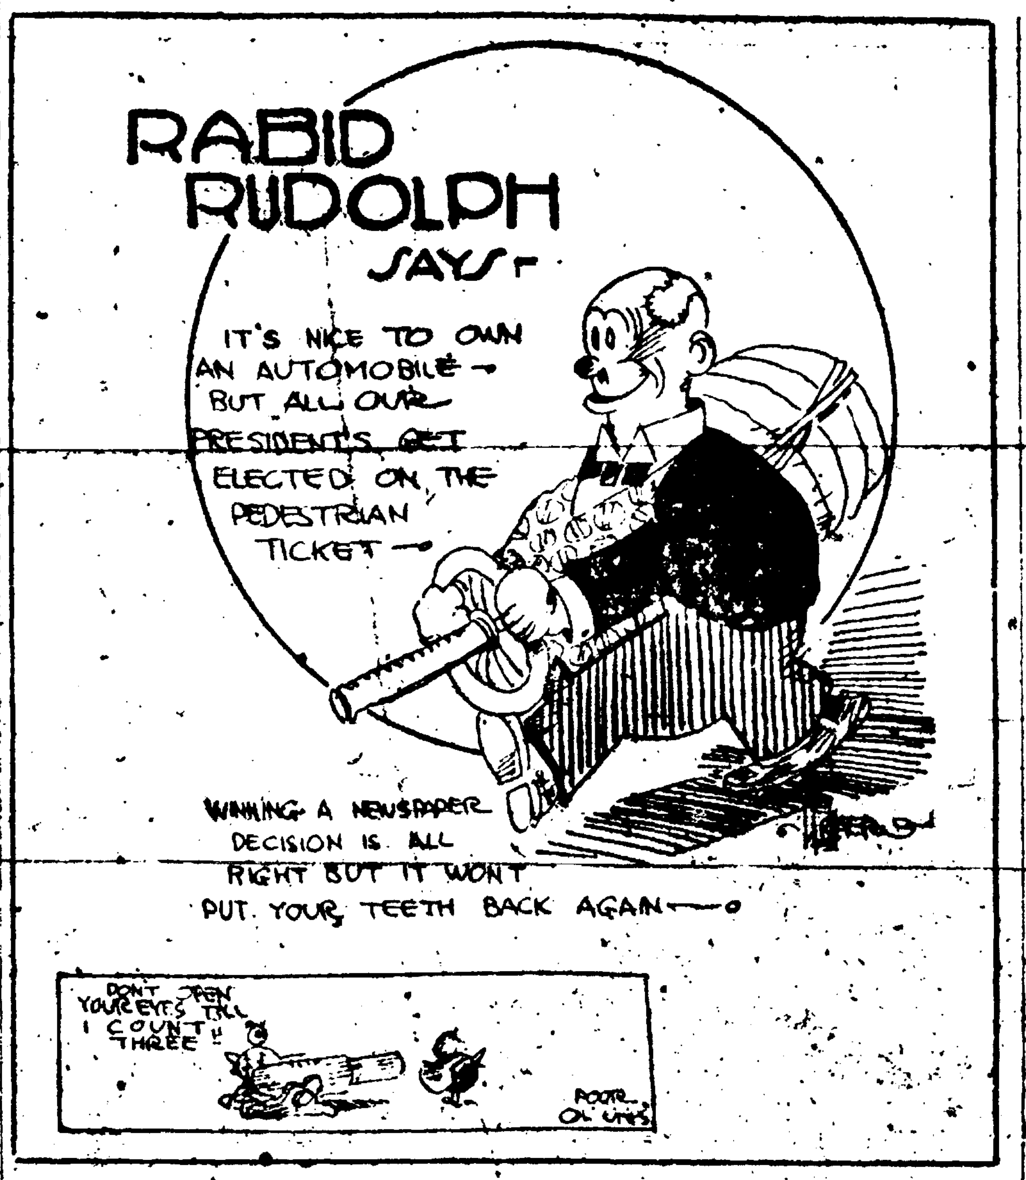
SMOKING AND CARD SET.

evening cigar. Shown in the illustration is a combination smoking and card set of brass, also a humidor for tobacco. The ash tray separates into four sections for individual use. In the center is a patent lighter, and beneath is provided space for the cards.

HINTS FOR EMBROIDERERS.

Very frequently embroiderers have their nerves frazzled when the silk frays while they work with it. Not every person knows that this condition is due to the fact that the eye of the needle is too small for the number of silk that is being used. It is just as big a mistake, however, to select a needle having too large an eye. In such a case the work takes on the appearance of having too few stitches and holes mark the edges of every stitch.

When embroidering a piece of work which requires shading the sewer will find it very convenient to have a needle for each color used and use them in succession as each color is required in her work. You will never find an experienced embroiderer confining herself to one needle where a number of colors have to be used alternately.



LOS ANGELES AND NEW YORK TALK

Voices Remarkably Distinct When Officials Converse Over 3875 Miles of Wire.

New York, Friday.—New York and Los Angeles had their first talk over the transcontinental telephone yesterday afternoon and heard distinctly what one said to the other over 3875 miles of wire.

Francis L. Hine, president of the First National Bank of this city, spoke the first message, and his listener was J. M. Elliott, of the First National National Bank of Los Angeles. Mr. Hine was in the directors' room of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, at No. 15 Dey st., this city, and Mr. Elliott in the building of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. in the coast city. The time in New York was one o'clock in the afternoon; in Los Angeles ten in the morning. The time of transmission was approximately one-fifteenth of a second.

George McAneny, President of the Board of Aldermen, acting for the Mayor, greeted Mayor Rose, of Los Angeles, and Frank K. Sturgis, as Vice President, transmitted a message of greeting and congratulation from the New York Chamber of Commerce to Robert M. Bullis, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Major Charles McK. Saltzman, of the Signal Corps, U. S. A., sent greetings in behalf of General Leonard Wood to Major General Kobbe, of Los Angeles. Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, talked with E. T. Earle, publisher of the Los Angeles Tribune, and Thomas Shallcross, of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges, with W. W. Mines, president of the Los Angeles Realty Board.

By an arrangement of ear pieces all present were able to hear the conversations. The voices were remarkably distinct.

SYRACUSE MEN WANT LARGE OSWEGO HARBOR

The Syracuse delegation which will co-operate with the Oswego Chamber of Commerce in urging a larger harbor at that port, were met at The Pontiac by officers of the local Chamber and members of the Transportation Committee yesterday. After a brief get-acquainted session the entire part yent aboard the tug Lafayette, of H. S. Kergaubh, Inc., which had been placed at their disposal by Superintendent H. M. Stephens, and were taken for a trip abou the harbor. The lay-out for the new terminal was explained to them in detail and tentative plans for the proposed enlargement of the harbor were discussed.

All the visitors are enthusiastic for the enlargement.

Speaker T. C. Sweet was picked up in Phoenix by the Syracuse delegation, which includes Robert Day, Thomas W. Meacham, Robert Flagg, Walter Magee, W. B. Smith, W. B. Baker, M. W. Henley, Dr. S. F. Snow, A. L. Brockway, H. C. Allen, L. A. Eddy, Lachlan Macleay, W. F. Rafferty, Judge Cady, Ralph Record, W. K. Squier and Mr. Redman.

Not the Whole State

Strange how certain New York newspapers insist upon dictating to the Legislature and Governor, and when they fail, are so peeved that they shrink to mere atoms in the universe of self-conceited "Useful" public utilities. It's a mighty good thing to have a governor and legislature for the whole state. Let Tammany's bailiwick be the tail for awhile and pay for its own fleas.—Oneida Dispatch.

If, as Secretary Redfield declares, business is better, may we not count as one factor in the improvement that a Democratic congress is no longer in session?

A Seamstress: By I. E. Hyde

B—r—r—r—r—r—r—r—
1—3—7—82.
Please come to the phone, Miss Brownson;
Someone is calling for you.

"Hello! Yes, I'm a seamstress.
I'll sew for you next week.
(I wonder who Miss Hardcurst is,
And, if she's stern, or meek?

I'll put my scissors in my bag,
My thimble, pins and tape;
I should be thankful I can sew,
A few odd pence to scrape.

"Oh, yes, Miss Hardcrust, you can find
A most becoming style.
I cannot say how long 'twill last;
They're changing all the while,

I don't advise, but you insist
A ruffle at the throat?
(I'm sorry; but she's going to look
Just like a German goat.)

And of this silk, your sleeves should be
Quite long, down o'er your wrist.
I'm sure they won't look neat so short
And caught with this red twist.

And too, Miss Hardcrust, you should wear
Your waist like very plain.
Oh, no, you really are not stout.
(I find she's fat and vain.)

A panel, or a fold lengthwise,
I'll model in your skirt.
'Twill make you look so tall and slim.
(I must now be alert.)

And you will have a neat wide hem?
Ah, you prefer a tuck.
Of course, I'll make it as you wish—
All puckered in the back.

When I get home I'll go to bed,
This sewing makes me sick.
I'm all unstrung, my nerve is gone;
I'll have to stop it, quick.

One woman wants her dresses short,
Another wants hers long;
And when I try to reason,
Well—that's another song.

I'm going to try to earn my bread,
I guess——at hoeing corn.
At that I know I would not have
A headache the next morn.

Gasoline, Oils and Greases. Van-Wagenen, Inc. adv122

CASTORIA

For Infants and Children

In Use For Over 30 Years

Always bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

THE DIMITY COUNTERPANE.

When to Use These Quaint and Pretty Bed Adjuncts.

Of course you use them in summer, the delightfully crinkled, comfortably light, quaint and pretty dimity counterpanes. Besides, dimity is reminiscent of grandmothers and four posted beds, and we are all hunting up all the old family furniture we possibly can.

Then, too, to consider the practical as well as the artistic points of a dimity counterpane—it is so easily laundered that it can be washed at home as readily as a sheet.

All this you know and acknowledge—yes, indeed. The dimity spread is the best all round spread for summer. But do you know its uses in winter—in fact, in all the four seasons—or do you store your dimity "spreads" in a neat pile in the linen closet each fall to await the call of spring?

The very best use of all to which you can put this little housekeeper's friend is to use it next the blankets, and the very best time to use it is all the time.

It protects them from soiling; it is light in weight; it saves laundering and mussing of the handsome, heavy Marseilles spreads that we all like to use in winter, and it gives that necessary "white" finish to a bed that so many fastidious folk require.

A Marseilles counterpane is not only too weighty to be comfortable, but lacks the warmth of the lighter quilts and blankets. It should be folded back half its length and then thrown carefully over the footboard, leaving the dimity counterpane for use.

Whether the quilt goes under or over the dimity spread is a matter of taste. As many so called "full sized" quilts are often rather scanty for two people, placing the quilt under the counterpane holds it from slipping and really seems to increase its size. Besides, it keeps it clean and leaves the outer bed covering the white one, so restful to most eyes.

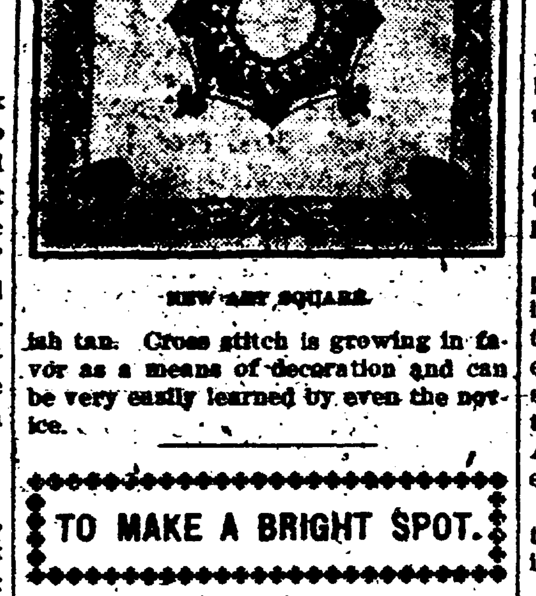
Some people turn back a heavy spread and on nights too warm for a comforter leave the blankets uppermost. This soils them, does not look inviting and often brings their woolly surface next the face, an unpleasant experience.

Try the all year round dimity spread. The price is small and will soon be saved in laundry bills and in the length of wear of the heavier sort.

PILLOW SQUARE.

The Art of Cross Stitch Is Being Revived In Many Handsome Designs.

The art square shown in this illustration was done in cross stitch in beautiful dull browns and greens and crimsons upon a background of yellow-



NEW ART SQUARE.

ish tan. Cross stitch is growing in favor as a means of decoration and can be very easily learned by even the novice.

TO MAKE A BRIGHT SPOT.

If your living room or your bedroom is in need of a bright spot get to work and make a cushion of bright colored material. It is surprising how one solitary cushion will change the whole atmosphere of a room. A cushion made of old rose poplin, denim or silk would just sing with joy and happiness if you would place it amid your surroundings. Through the center of the cushion sew a strip of white poplin on which large old rose flowers are printed. Around the edge of the cushion sew a strip of narrow old rose silk fringe. Should you find that old rose will not harmonize with your wallpaper or your hangings, select a color that will blend with them—bright green, blue or yellow will have the same cheerful effect as the old rose.

SERVING TEA.

An easy way of serving a cup of tea is to place the cup on a matching plate and to put a folded tea napkin, a spoon and a fork on the plate. Then pass whatever sandwiches or cakes you may desire to serve with the tea. They can be accommodated on the plate and daintily and easily eaten.

If elaborate cakes or sandwiches are served with tea and no plate is provided it is difficult to manage them balanced on the saucer of the cup. If a separate plate is held under the cup and saucer it is practically useless, for the saucer so nearly fills it that the margin at the edge is not wide enough to accommodate the cakes.

Of course when a simple wafer easily eaten sandwich is to be passed with the tea the saucer of the teacup is sufficiently commodious to accommodate it.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Story of a Little Girl Who Is a Successful Farmer.

MYRTLE MANN PRIZE WINNER.

She Won the State Championship of the Nebraska Boys and Girls' Gardening Club—Puzzle and Games For Small People—Interesting Information.

When boys and girls make up their minds to do something worth while they usually can win success if they stick to their tasks. Last summer in the state of Nebraska there was conducted under the joint auspices of the United States department of agriculture and the agricultural extension service of the Nebraska university farm a contest among boys and girls. The object was to teach the children farming in a practical way. There were a large number of contestants, and many fine crops were raised. Miss Myrtle Mann of Chadron, however, proved to be the best farmer of the lot. On a plot of ground about half the size of a city lot Myrtle raised over a ton and a quarter of vegetables and made a net profit after all expenses were paid of $71.40. Pretty good for a girl of twelve years of age. When it is considered that a city lot is but 25 by 100 feet in area, Myrtle's farming seems all the more wonderful. She was awarded the state championship, having beaten all competitors.

MYRTLE MANN, CHADRON, NEB.

Rapid Count.

For this game the hostess should write on morsels of paper all the numbers from one to twenty, writing each several times.

Jumble the numbers several times in a basket and place the basket on a table or stand around which the company sit.

Each person in turn takes one of the papers and, upon seeing what number it contains, must name some celebrated thing connected with this number. For example, a person drawing the number seven could name the seven sleepers, the seven wonders of the world, "We Are Seven" and seventh son of a seventh son.

The papers are retained to count to their credit by all those who succeed in answering.

Those who fail must pass their papers to those seated next to them, who in turn try to name something appropriate.

Any one failing must give a forfeit to be redeemed later on.

Facts About Bells.

We do not know in what country bells were first used, but their origin dates way back in the past. In the writings of Moses we are told that "bells of gold" were suspended from the robe of the high priest when he officiated in the service of the sanctuary.

History tells us that bells were appendages to the royal costumes of the ancient Persians, and Aeschylus and Euripides say, "They were concealed within the hollows of the shields of Grecian heroes and commanders."

Buddy's Wish.

There is a long fence in our yard
And one day I peeped over
And saw upon the other side
A daisy field of clover.

It made me wish and wish so hard
That I was big like Rover,
For when he's tired of our yard
He runs and jumps right over.

Right into that big clover field
He jumps and rolls all over.
I wish I were a doggie, too,
To play in that nice clover.
—Philadelphia Record.

Riddle.

I live in wealth from week to week,
In poverty I live and meek.
You always see me in a pet
And always I am found in debt.
Alas, you find me in your fears!
'Tis I that help you make your tears;
But yet in happiness I dwell.
What is my nature—can you tell?
Answer.—The letter E.

Dropped Letter Puzzle.

Whole I am a Roman governor; extract a letter and I am very useful at dinner; extract another letter and I am a part of the body; curtail and I am a gentle blow.

Answer.—Pilate, plate, pate, pat.

The Boston Candy Kitchen

Fresh Fruit Specials for Saturday

Bananas at ....15c and 20c a dozen

Oranges at ....20c, 25c, 40c, 50c and 60c dozen

Fresh Pineapples ....2 for 25c

CANDY SPECIALS

Delicious Home-made Fudge and Nougatine at 20c pound

A fresh consignment of Welch's Grape Juice in pints, 25c; quarts, 50c; and half gals. $1.00

Pure, Wholesome Ice Cream — Fine Candies

ANDRIANOS BROS.

25 First Street — FULTON, N. Y.

FULTON WON AT SYRACUSE

High School Lads Show Big Improvement and Trim North High

The Fulton High school ball-tossers journeyed to Syracuse yesterday and walloped the North High school team of that city in very proper style, the final score totalling 6-3. In spite of the fact that the Burns stadium track was heavy, the Fulton colts showed speed in the mud, and easily bested the home team from both an aquatic and baseball standpoint. The game was featured by very little hitting but fine work in the field, especially on the part of the Fultonians who seemed to show a great improvement on the defense, as well as at the bat. Every man in the line-up with the exception "Specs" Caffrey, Clarence Bray and "Damon Runyon" Thompson, managed to get one bingle at least. Bray got on twice, but "Specs" was weak with the willow, fanning three times, while Thompson whiffed once out of one time at bat, for an average of .000. Pullen led the Fulton heavy artillery with two hits and the fast left-fielder also showed a clean pair of heels on the paths.

Barnes went in to pitch for Fulton and held the Syracuse batters safe at all stages of the game. He was relieved in the seventh by O'Brien. Crowley, the Syracuse box-artist, was touched up for eight safe hits, but his support in the field was lurid. He struck out ten men.

Fulton put one over in the first frame. Martin, who has been switched to the lead-off position in the batting order, singled and stole second and third. He scored when Crowley threw wild to the plate. Syracuse netted two runs in the sixth and one in the eighth. Fulton garnered two in the fourth, one in the sixth and two in the seventh.

Coach Stauring accompanied the team and his shake-up in the batting order proved a wise plan. Martin, who was placed at lead-off, got one three times out of five turns at bat.

The score:

Fulton

	R.	H.	E.
Martin, ss.	2	1	0
Wilcox, 3b.	1	1	2
Bray, c.	0	0	0
D. O'Brien, cf.	1	1	0
Reynolds, rf.	1	1	0
Barnes, p. 2b.	1	1	0
H. O'Brien, 2b. p.	0	1	0
Caffrey, 1b.	0	0	1
Pullen, lf.	0	2	0
Thompson, 2b.	0	0	0
	6	8	3

Syracuse

	R.	H.	E.
Zimmerman, 1b	0	1	1
John, 3d.	0	0	0
Rainbow, rf.	0	0	0
Galvin, ss.	0	0	0
G. Heitpman, 2b.	2	2	1
Clark, lf.	0	0	3
R. Heitzman, c.	1	1	0
Fitzpatrick, cf.	0	0	0
Crowley, p.	0	1	0
	3	5	5

Score by innings:

Fulton ....1 0 0 2 0 1 2 0 0—6

Syracuse ......0 0 0 0 0 2 0 1 0—3

Umpire, Savidge.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

New York at Boston.
Philadelphia at Brooklyn.
St. Louis at Pittsburgh.
Cincinnati at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Philadelphia, 3; Brooklyn, 1.
Pittsburgh, 6; St. Louis, 4.
Cincinnati, 9; Chicago, 2.
Boston, 11; New York, 7.
Brooklyn-Phila., wet grounds.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	13	5	.722
Chicago	12	7	.632
Boston	10	8	.556
Cincinnati	10	9	.526
Pittsburgh	9	11	.450
St. Louis	9	13	.409
Brooklyn	7	12	.368
New York	6	11	.353

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

At Indianapolis—	R.	H.	E.
Louisville	7	11	2
Indianapolis	8	9	1
At Milwaukee—	R.	H.	E.
Kansas City	1	4	3
Milwaukee	6	8	1

At Columbus—Cleveland-Columbus wet grounds.

MONROE SKEEL DIED YESTERDAY

Will Be Buried Monday by Comrades of Schenck Post Post in Mt. Adnah

Munroe Skeel, one of the oldest residents of the city, died at his home in South 4th st. last evening after an illness of several months. Mr. Skeel was a veteran of the Civil War and was a familiar figure in the city until four years ago wheen he retired because of ill health from the florist business which he had conducted for many years. He was born at Seneca Hill in the year 1848 and moved to this city shortly after the Civil war. He was a member of Schenck Post, G. A. R., and was a commander of the post when he died. His death comes as a great shock to his comrades of the Post, who had conferred with him recently in regard to the plans of the Memorial Day celebration. Mr. Skeel had hoped that he would be able to be present at the veterans' ceremonies.

Mr. Skeel was also a member of the First Methodist church and a member of the official board.

He is survived by his widow; two sisters, Mrs. Hiram Horton of Binghamton and Mrs. A. B. Rowlee of Mount Pleasant; two daughters, Mrs. Fred Howell of Fulton and Mrs. Carl R. Townsend of Rochester, and five brothers, Adelbert, John and Frank Skeel of Cleveland, O.; Prentice, of Denver, Colo., and Bruce of Auburn.

The funeral will be held Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the First M. E. church and Rev. Charles R. Townsend of Mexico will officiate, assisted by Rev. J. W. Barrett. The members of Schenck Post will also hold services at the church and at the grave. The burial will be in Mt. Adnah cemetery.

MRS. BURR ROWLEE

Mrs. Burr Rowlee died at her home in Emory st. last night after a month's illness. Mrs. Rowlee was attacked with typhoid pneumonia a month ago, and was taken to the Lee Memorial hospital. After spending two weeks at the institution, she was considered sufficiently improved to be able to return to her home. Her heart was weakened by the long siege of illness, however, and she died suddenly last night.

Mrs. Rowlee was Miss Stella Taylor before her marriage to Mr. Rowlee. She lived in this city all her life and is survived by her husband, one sister, Mrs. Carrie Sanford of this city, and a son, Asa Rowlee of Battle Creek, Mich. The arrangements for the funeral have not been made, pending the arrival of Asa Rowlee.

MRS. FRED J. EMERY

Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Emery are in receipt of a telegram from their son, Fred Jr., who lives in Salem, Ohio, that his wife, Mrs. Fred J. Emery, died in a Cleveland, Ohio, hospital on Thursday. The funeral was held this afternoon in Salem.

COLLEGE BASEBALL

At Brunswick, Me.—Tufts, 7; Bowdoin, 3.

At Exeter, N.H.—Exeter, 12; Princeton Freshmen, 4.

At Providence—Brown, 7; Dartmouth, 3.

At Middletown—Wesleyan, 8; Williams, 4.

THOMAS H. MARVIN

HEADQUARTERS FOR

BUILDERS' SUPPLIES

Some of our specialties are:

Lehigh Portland Cement.
Peerless Wall plaster
Robinson Sewer Pipe
Onondaga Vitrified Brick
Fire Brick, Fire Clay, etc.
Land Plaster Hydrated Lime

Yard:
Corner First and Broadway

The Longer You Wait

in saving money and starting a bank account, the longer it will take you to accomplish something worth while.

Why not begin today?

Start an account with us with the amount you can spare.

4% Paid in Our Interest Department

THE QUIRK

Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
Sundays—5c, 10c.

CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TO-DAY
"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"
with Claire Whitney and Stuart Holmes
By Request
CHARLES CHAPLIN
in
"HIS NEW JOB"

SUNDAY
Charles Chaplin
in Keystone Comedy
"BETWEEN SHOWERS"
"DROPINGTON'S FAMILY TREE"
2-reel Keystone Comedy
"FRAUD"
Essanay 3-reel
4—Others—4

MONDAY
Zangwell's Masterpiece "CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO"
Starring Wilton Lackaye Star in the Original Production

MOTHER'S DAY

Tomorrow Will be Observed All Over This Broad Land in Church and Home.

If you wear tomorrow a red carnation the dainty flower will indicate that "mother" lives; on the other hand, if you wear a white blossom the inference will be that "mother" is not living.

The day will be observed by the congregations and pastors of all city churches and special sermons and services will mark the one day in the whole year when "mother's" name and memory will be especially revered.

Pulpit and Pew

Zion Episcopal Church

Rev. Minor J. Peters, Rector

Sunday, May 9th, 5th Sunday after Easter. Services as follows:

Holy Communion........ 7:30 a.m.
Sunday school .... 9:30 a.m.
Matins and sermon.......10:45 a.m.
Evensong and sermon..... 5:00 p.m.

The Free Methodist Church

C. C. Watson, Pastor

Sunday services as follows: Preaching by the pastor at 10:30, morning subject, "An Undefeated Ruler." Sunday school at 11:45. Young People's Meeting at 6:30. Preaching in the evening, 7:30, subject, "The rich poor man and the poor rich man."

Class meeting Tuesday evening.

Prayer meeting Thursday evening.

State St. M. E. Church

Rev. H. D. Holmes, Pastor

Mothers Day will receive the attention of the pastor at the morning service and his talk will be of an extemporary nature.

At 3 p.m. there will be special exercises for ladies and their mothers, including the cradle roll.

The evening services at 7.30 will be of an evangelistic nature, and the orchestra will be the usual special feature of the hour.

First M. E. Church

Rev. J. W. Barrett, Pastor

Tomorrow morning the services will be appropriate to the observance of Mother's Day, with communion at 10.30. At noon the pastor will address the Brotherhood upon "The Friend of David and Jonathan." Sunday school at noon; Junior Epworth League at 3.30 p.m.

At 7.30 there will be held evangelistic services, subject, "A Sick Man Discouraged With His Medicine."

Christian Science

55 S. 1st St.

Christian Science services are held Sundays, 10:45 a.m., on Wednesdays at 8 p.m. Reading room open daily 3 to 5 p.m., except Sunday. Mrs. Harry Allen, first reader; Mrs. Noah Merriam, second reader. You will be welcome. Subject for Sunday, Adam and Fallen Man. Golden Txet; P and Follen Man.

Golden Text: Psalms, 32:10.

Responsive Reading—Pslams, 10:4-7, 11, 12, 17, 18; 15:1-5.

Presbyterian Church

Charles S. Robertson, Pastor

The services Sunday will be in observance of Mother's day. In the morning at 10:30 Dr. Robertson will preach an especially appropriate sermon. At the 5 o'clock vesper service, the theme will be "The Virgin Mary," also in recognition of the day. You are cordially invited to hear this rather unusual sermon for a Protestant pulpit.

Bible school at noon.

Morning prayer at 10 o'clock led by H. H. Stout.

Christian Endeavor at 6.

First Baptist Church

Milton George Buck, Minister

The regular monthly children's church will be held tomorrow at 10:30; the pastor will speak on "Lessons from a Railroad Lamp." The junior choir will render an anthem accompanied by one of their number.

The Bible school will be held as usual at 12 m. All are invited to this part of the service—classes for old and young; each class meeting in its own separate room where it may be free from the confusion or noise of the other classes. You are invited to attend.

The subject for the evening service will be "What the Lord can do for Humanity," followed by a short after meeting in the chapel.

Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p.m., subject, "Why I love my denomination." All young people invited.

The Ladies' Aid is making preparation to entertains the Central New York Baptist Preachers' Association on June 4th. One of the speakers engaged for the occasion is Mrs. J. M. Baker, of India, who spoke in the church recently.

The pastor is to address the Boys' Conference on Friday evening next at Oswego, held in the Y.M.C.A.

Congregational Church

Charles Olmstead, Pastor

The Delta Alpha class were entertained at their monthly meeting last evening at the home of Mrs. F. E. Chubb.

The theme for the sermon Sunday morning by the pastor, will be "Some things for which life is too short." The evening topic will be "The last picture of Christ." There will recognition of the day as Mothers Day.

The Sunday school library has been recently put in order for circulation.

The monthly Woman's Union will meet Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Frank Atwood. The subject will be "Kindergartens in Foreign Lands"; leader, Mrs. Lester Q. Todd.

62 years of successful paint making is the history of Wadsworth Paint Works of Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE WADSWORTH IDEA

A gallon of Wadsworth Double Thick Paint, a gallon of Pure Linseed Oil; stir the two together and what is the result?

Two gallons of liquid Paint ready for the brush at a saving of at least—

50c per gallon

We want you to try Wadsworth Double-Thick Paint on at least one of your buildings, and compare the difference in cost between Wadsworth and the paint you used before, therefore, we will send you a trial order at a special price.

PEOPLE'S HARDWARE CO., Inc.

The Big Paint Distributors of Fulton

Want to buy a home? A farm? A business? We have all these and some more.

208 Hannibal St. Location, arrangement, equipment all the best. Good barn. Lot 64x165.

A Farm you would be proud to own. 68 acres. Fine buildings. Note the fruit. Large apple and pear orchard, quinces, plums, cherries, prunes, black and red raspberries and within a mile of Hannibal N. Y., for $70 an acre.

Grocery doing a business of more than $250 a week. Good location. Cheap rent living room attached.

WHITAKER & BOGARDUS, Inc.
FULTON, N. Y.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at New York.
Washington at Philadelphia.
Chicago at Cleveland.
Detroit at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

Boston, 5; New York, 3.
Philadelphia, 4; Washington, 1.
Detroit, 8; St. Louis, 2.
Chicago-Cleveland (wet grounds).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Detroit	16	6	.727
New York	11	6	.647
Chicago	12	9	.577
Boston	8	7	.533
Washington	9	9	.500
Cleveland	9	11	.450
Philadelphia	6	12	.333
St. Louis	5	16	.238

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Buffalo
Chicago at Newark.
Kansas City at Broklyn.
Pittsburgh at Baltimore.

Results Yesterday

Brooklyn, 4; Kansas City, 1.
Newark, 5; Chicago, 4.
Pittsburgh, 10; Baltimore, 9.
Buffalo-St. Louis, (wet grounds).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	13	8	.619
Chicago	12	9	.571
Newark	12	9	.571
Brooklyn	12	9	.571
Kansas City	10	11	.476
Baltimore	10	13	.435
St. Louis	8	11	.421
Buffalo	7	14	.333

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Toronto at Providence.
Montreal at Jersey City.
Rochester at Newark.
Buffalo at Richmond.

Results Yesterday

Providence, 4; Toronto, 2.
Montreal, 10; Jersey City, 5.
Buffalo, 8; Richmond, 8.

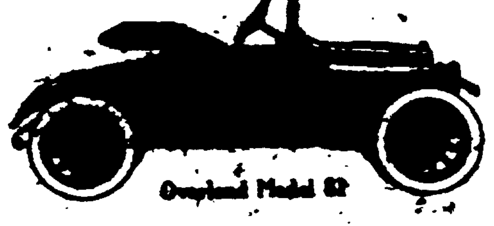
Chairs re-seated—cane, splint or leather; upholstering at reasonable prices. Wm. Lytte, 304 Pine St., Fulton. adv6t

We are Agents for

CHASE & SANBORN'S
Fine Teas and Coffees
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

REFRIGERATORS
PERFECTION OIL STOVES
Screen Doors and Windows
FISHING TACKLE

A. M. DRUSE & CO.
7 South First Street



Overland Model 82

$795 f.o.b. Factory

VANWAGENEN, Inc. Agents

Here the SONORA!

In addition to playing the wonderful new PATHE RECORDS, the SONORA will play Edison, Victor Columbia—in fact any disc record made—with a clear and mellow tone.

Hear this new machine at C. A. Beckwith's Shoe Store or at 310 Third Street.

Unusually Easy Terms

C. R. RUDD, Agent

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Clark Irish Harp—Will sell cheap; brand new. Just the thing for a home. Address Z., Evening Times office. tf.

To Rent—Furnished apartment; 3 rooms; bath and all conveniences; desirable locations. Inquire S, Times office. 122

For Sale—Sewing machine; range; Perfection oil stove and other household articles. 410 Worth st., second door east side. 122

Desirable Offices to Rent—Inquire of Glenn A. Ryther, 59 S. 1st st., Fulton, N.Y 120

For Sale—High-class collapsible Go-cart, in good condition; cheap. 208 Highland st. 120

Marine Engine—For sale; 2 h. p.; boiler; oil burning; complete from stacy to propeller. 307 Cayuga st. 121

To Let—6 rooms and bath, 3d and Seneca st. Apply 121 South 1st st., or phone 3288. 122

Lost—White English bull dog, with collar. Phone 3291. 120c

House to Rent—210 S. 3d st. Inquire D. C. Draper, 416 Rochester. 121

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCully, 202 S. 3d st. tf

To Rent—2 apartments. Phone 3288. 120

Community Notes

Rev. and Mrs. Buck are entertaining Mrs. Buck's brother and wife, J. J. Perduyn, of Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Perduyn is secretary of the American Beet Sugar Company, one of the largest sugar companies in the world.

* * *

Miss Alice Hall is the guest of Fulton friends.

* * *

Donald Williams of Syracuse has been in the city, called here by the death of his father, Eugene Williams, of West 3d st.

* * *

S. D. Gardner of South 3d st., has been in Baldwinsville, guest of his daughter, Mrs. John Snell.

* * *

Dr. and Mrs. I. C. Curtiss arrived home from the South Thursday evening.

* * *

Mrs. Fred Chubb of West 1st st. entertained the Delta Alpha Class of the Congregational church, Friday evening.

* * *

Hilton Wallace of Worth st. was in Syracuse Friday.

* * *

Mrs. George Maxon has been the guest of out-of-town friends.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Beadle have returned after spending a delightful week in New York.

* * *

Rev. and Mrs. Charles Olmstead entertained Mrs. J. H. Olmstead of Homer recently.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Summerville of West 1st st., entertained over Sunday George Blakeman of Little Utica.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Hart of Oneida st. have been entertaining Mr. Charles Hart of Belleville, Ontario.

* * *

The Victoria Paper Mill is receiving a coat of fresh paint.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

BUELL BROS.
PLUMBING and HEATING
Phone 188
27 N. Second Street

Only 500 Lusitania Survivors Accounted For, Latest Report

London, Saturday.—Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, asked for an expression of opinion regarding the sinking of the Lusitania, said he thought it was due to a shortage of cruisers to protect the trade routes. This had been his opinion, he added, for years.

From the fact that latest advices say the giantess of the seas sank within twenty minutes or twenty-one minutes some idea can be gained of the size of the great holes opened in her hull.

The Titanic, of the White Star line, remained afloat four hours after the hull had been pierced by an iceberg, and as the Lusitania went to the bottom so quickly it is believed her hull was damaged much more extensively than was that of the Titanic.

Not a wordhas come from Ireland concerning the submarine that wrought the awful havoc. Apparently the death dealing craft concealed herself beneath the surface of the water and escaped unseen.

The first information that the Lusitania had been torpedoed came from the wireless station at Old Head, Kinsale, on the Irish coast. The marine observer there had seen the steamship stop and list badly. The wireless operator then picked up this message from the Lusitania:

"Send help quickly. Am listing badly."

Half a dozen vessels were hurried out from Kinsale to where the Lusitania was lying helpless. She was then eight miles south by west from Kinsale. The first message was received about twelve minutes after two o'clock in the afternoon. All reports agree that the Lusitania suddenly plunged to the bottom at thirty-three minutes atfer two o'clock. Therefore she was auoat only twenty or twenty-one minutes after she had been torpedoed. In that brief time the lifeboats on board had to be launched, and, it is reported from Kinsale, that they were put into the sea crowded with passengers.

The Cunard line officials explained tonight that from the time the Lusitania passed out of the three mile limit off New York last Saturday she was under the orders of the British Admiralty. She was still under the orders of the Admiralty when she was torpedoed, and here it is assumed that she must have been picked up by torpedo boats off the south coast of Ireland and probably was being convoyed into the Irish Sea when the submarine eluded the convoy and sent a torpedo into her.

At the same time it was explained that when the Mauretania, sister ship of the Lusitania, left New York recently for Liverpool she was intercepted outside the three mile limit and directed to proceed to Halifax.

A dispatch from Dublin, dated at thirty-five minutes past twelve oclock this morning, gave much hope to those who had friends on board the Lusitania. This said a private telegram had been received from Clonakilty that several hundred passenyers had been landed there. A previous message to the Admiralty stated that rescue vessels had started for Queenstown, Clonagilty and Kinsale with survivors, but there was no information concerning the number sent to Clonakilty and Kinsale. This private message also stated that three steam vessels had gone to Queenstown with survivors.' Those are believed to have been the Storm Cock, the Dock and the Indian Empire, previously reported with the Flying Fish.

CHINA ACCEPTS DEMANDS; WITHOUT QUALIFICATIONS

Peking, Saturday.—The attaches of the Foreign Office were at work all night translating Japan's ultimatum and drafting the terms of Cina's compliance with the demands, which will be submitted to Yuan Shih-Kai and the State Council this morning at ten o'clock.

The reply will be delivered to Mr. Hioki, the Japanese Minister, this evening or on Sunday morning.

The Chinese note will review China case, answer the charges contained in the ultimatum, and accept the demands without qualification.

The government expects no serious revolutionary outbreak from the people. The military leaders have assured Yuan Shih-Kai that their support will continue.

MUST PROVE PRINTING WASTE

Roosevelt Lawyers Declare $37,000 Was Paid by J. B. Lyon Co. to Journal Co.

Justice William Andrews has ruled that in the trial of William Barnes against Theodore Roosevelt for libel, unless it be shown that Mr. Barnes actually knew of and profited by alleged extravagance and waste in the execution in Albany of orders for public printing, evidence upon that subject was incompetent. The proof, according to the ruling of the court, must be either circumstantial or direct, and it must be shown that the waste and extravagance was brought about through his political influence. The question of printing in general would, it was said tonight, come up again on Monday.

What counsel for Colonel Roosevelt represented to be a list of the commissions paid by the J. B. Lyon Company to the Journal Company durin gthe nine years from 1903 to 1912, was read to the jury late today. The total of the sums read from the list was slightly in excess of $37,000.

The morning session of court was taken up solely by testimony and matters relating to what was claimed to be the printing situation in Albany. The greater part of the afternoon session was given over to arguments regarding the admissibility of the testimony on printing. During the arguments Justice Andrews remarked that if Mr. Barnes held stock in the Lyon Company, that did not justify the inference that he knew whether "dishonest bills" were rendered or "dishonest contracts" were being made. John M. Bowers, chief counsel for Colonel Roosevelt argued at some length upon the question of printing. He touched upon the defendant's testimony and upon the correspondence that has entered into the case.

The Court ruled that if the Roosevelt counsel intended to prove that the plaintiff corruptly induced the printing board to pay the bills the evidence was competent . Mr. Bowers offered to make a statement as to just what he integded to prove. He was informed he might do so after a recess which was then taken.

The greater part of the afternoon session was taken up by arguments regarding the admissability of evidence, public printing and public money. Justice Andrews said that the evdence was competent in justification only if it could be shown that there was extravagance and waste; that the plantiff knew of it and shared in it and that it was brought by his political influence.

STATE LEAGUE

Games Today

Syracuse at Troy.
Utica at Albany.
Scranton at Binghamton.
Wilkesbarre at Elmira.

Results Yesterday

Wilkesbarre, 4; Elmira, 1.
Syracuse-Troy (wet rounds).
Scranton-Binghamton (rain).
Utica-Albany (wet grounds).

Teams Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Utica	1	0	1.000
Troy	1	0	1.000
Binghamton	1	0	1.000
Elmira	1	1	.500
Wilkesbarre	1	1	.500
Syracuse	0	1	.000
Albany	0	1	.000
Scranton	0	1	.000

Get cash for second-hand bicycles At Bogue's, 61 First st. adv

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 8.—While as yet no particular attention has been paid by Chairman Root of the Constitutional Convention to the question of whether there is a quorum present each day, it is certain that when the session has progressed to the roll call period that the delegates will all be required to be present.

Senator Root has taken the position that at the present time it is not essential that all of the delegates be present at the daily meetings of the Convention. The roll is never called and no official record is made of the number of delegates in attendance. The business at hand consists of the introduction of proposed amendments to the Constitution and as these amendments are immediately referred to the respective committees, the work of the members of the committees is of moment, while the duties of the delegates as a whole are of minor importance.

Delegates to the convention are governed by practically the same rules as are members of the legislature. When it appars to th chairman that thar thair are not enough mempers of the Convention to do business, he makes that fact known and there are two courses open; an adjournment may be taken, or a call of the house is ordered and the doors are closed to prevent any member from leaving the Asssembly Chamber without the consent of the presiding officer.

Within a week or two, the several committees will have gone over the proposed ameqdments which have been submitted to them and the public hearings will be announced. These hearings will be full of interest inasmuch as men of prominence are likely to argue on either side of the propositions being heard.

Not until the committees begin to report proposed amendments to the Convention as a whole, will be vital work of the delegates begin. From the moment that there is something to finally discusa, the delegates will settle down to debate. Long and able arguments will then be the order each day.

Like the early weeks of a legislative session have been the opening days of the Constitutional Convention. Although Friday is a regular day for business, there has been but a scant representation thus far. A great many of the delegates leave for their homes on Thursday night, knowing that on the morrow their presence will not be required.

For the first time in the histories of their organizations, the American Institute of Consulting Engineers, The American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the American Society of Mechanical Engineers are seeking to have the State Constitution amended so that the system of supervision over State public works may not be changed during different administrations. These societies will recommend to the delegates that a department of public utilities be created and a department of Engineering and Public Works with three commissioners to hold office for twelve years. Such department would be given jurisdiction over highways, canals, buildings and the conservation and development of the resources of the State.

Such a department or departments would take the building of highways and canals out of politics the advocates of the proposed plan believe.

MAKING READY FOR MEMORIAL DAY

Fulton's Camp, Sons of Veterans of the Civil War anticipates a large crowd of people tonight at the benefit performance to be held at the Hippodrome theatre, Oneida st.

The Camp is preparing for a proper observance of Memorial Day, and to attain its object funds are needed for the particular purpose of buying uniforms and other incidentals. While the ticket sale has been so far large, it is advisable that everybody shall be at the theatre at an early hour—to "avoid the rush."

Wilson says the country is "vocal only in spots" and that business is "better in spots." We would add that Wilson, too, is spotted—for defeat next year.

Secretary McAdoo is out of the hospital, but the Democratic party's case has been diagnosed as incurable.

Baled Hay, Straw and Shavings. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Only One More Day
Of the Big Cut Price Appliance Sale

A Chafing Dish worth 12.50 for $7.40
Saute Pan worth 10.00 for $6.00
Bell Ringing Transformers now with Coupon $1.75
Good Toaster for $1.65

A great variety to choose from. Sale closes Saturday p. m. Buy your hot weather helps now and save money.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY
ONEIDA STREET Phone 144

W. C. T. U.

Edited by Women of Fulton Union

I know there is danger in confronting this great and powerful enemy, but in time of war the good soldier does not stop because of danger. It may be I am politically dead, my political life destroyed by the liquor interests, out I would rather hold my head up and fight like a man, though I had to die a hundred political deaths. I would rather today do a man's part in the struggle to cut the millstone of degeneracy from the neck of humanity, I would rather do that than to be United States Senator from Alabama, and if I know my own mind, I would rather do that than be President of the United States. I call on you, my colleagues, to hold your heads up in the face of this enemy and be men. In the name of your manhood, in the name of your patriotism, in the name of all that is held dear by good men, in the name of your fireside, in the name of our institutions, in the name of our country, and in the name of humanity and humanity's God, I call on you to join hands with me and each one to do his full duty.—Congressman Richmond P. Hobson.

What must we do to be saved? Alcohol must cease to be used as a beverage. Its sale and distribution to humanity must be prohibited. Feed beer to your dog and see what it will do. This is not a temperance lecture—it is science! It is truth!

In these early years of the twentieth century, science has emphatically and irrevocably given its verdict against the use of alcohol as a beverage.

Former Lieut-Governor John Strange of Wisconsin is reported to have offered to bear the expense of erecting a new $10,000 concrete bridge to span the Cook canal at Menasha provided the city at the next election votes dry.

President Poincare of France in declining to drink a glass of champagne with King George of England at their recent meeting, said he had made it a rule to drink no wine as long as the war lasts.

Lawn Mower Hospital at Roy's Quick Shoe Repair, 110 Cayuga st. ad

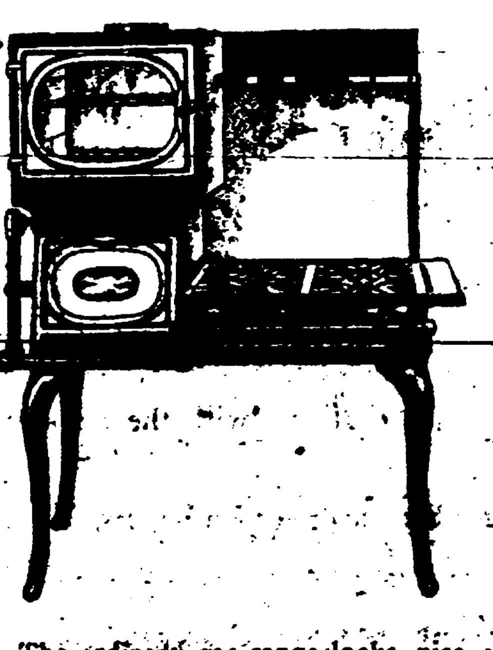
Another Carload
BICYLES
TIRES
SUPPLIES
We Buy, Sell and Exchange Bicyles
BOGUE'S
61 First Street

"LIFE'S SHOP WINDOW"

"Life's Shop Window" is the spectacular title of a new book by that brilliant writer, Victoria Cross. It is a vivid and subtle presentation of a woman's life, displaying all that keen understanding of the emotions and acute analysis of motive and character, together with that joy in life and vigorous vitality, which are all so apart of all Victoria Cross' work. The scene is laid chiefly in England and the wild regions of America, the latter giving wild scope for that author's magnificent gift of description. The love element is handled with the delicacy and intensity of an artist, and altogether this is a book of a thrilling quality.—Buffalo Courier.

"Life's Shop Window is today's attraction at The Quirk.

Evening Times Subscribers are requested to advise this office if the carrier boy fails to deliver paper properly and with regularity.



The Most Special A-B. Gas Range

Never Needs "Blacking".

The ordinary gas range looks nice while new, then the temporary finish wears off and it means a lot of hard, nasty work to black and polish the range. The A-B Gas Range has a rust-proof, permanent enamel finish that does not wear off, it looks like "new" all the time. If the stove becomes dirty simply wash it off like you would a china dish. The nickel is made with the special A-B "Always Bright" finish. This is just another of the many excellent points that make the A-B the favorite gas range. Come and inspect the entire line.

THE ONE ILLUSTRATED COSTS $33.00

THE GAS COMPANY
PHONE 198

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

Why does the Evening Times get results? Because so very many subscribers say—"I hate to miss a single copy of your paper; I'd rather miss a copy of my 'Syracuse ———' than the Evening Times."

THE LATEST

REPORT OF ADVERTISING

Week of April 26 to 30—five days only—Total number of inches Display Advertising 1001

DAILY AVERAGE 200.2

Total number of inches advertising carried by the Evening Times during week of April 19 to 24—six days only—was 919 inches.

DAILY AVERAGE 153

INCREASE

Daily Average—47.2 Inches

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

SNAPSHOTS AT NOTABLE PERSONS

Prince Joachim, Youngest Son of Kaiser Wilhelm.

The return of Prince Joachim, Emperor William's youngest son, to active duty on the fighting line, is one of the interesting incidents of the present European war. The prince is one of the most popular officers of the German army and is beloved of the soldiers in the ranks. Last September Prince Joachim was severely wounded in the fighting in Alsace, having received a piece of shrapnel in his thigh while on the firing line.

On his recovery he was sent to the eastern battle front, serving under General von Hindenburg with the rank of lieutenant. Illustrative of the prince's democracy, the following story is told: One night while serving as officer of the day of the outpost a captain with dispatches motored into the lines. Being stopped by the sentry, he explained his mission and stated that it was not necessary to call the officer of the guard. The sentry said his orders were imperative; that the officer be called. Soon the prince appeared and welcomed the dispatch bearer. Then he insisted that the captain share his quarters. So contracted were his apartments that a couch prepared for the captain nearly filled the little outer room and five times that night the prince had to jump across the sleeping captain's body to respond to calls for the officer of the day. Recently Prince Joachim has been promoted to the rank of colonel and has been decorated with the iron cross. He is now in his twenty-fifth year and is a bachelor. In character and in feature of face Prince Joachim bears a strong resemblance to his oldest brother, the crown prince.

Expert In Gun Making.

Rear Admiral Frank E. Beatty, commandant of the Norfolk navy yard, who took charge of the internment proceedings of the German commerce destroyer Prinz Eitel Friedrich, will be responsible for the safe keeping of the ship.

It is not probable that any dismantling of the ship will be regarded as necessary beyond the removal of the breech blocks of her guns and the unshipping of the connecting rods of her main engines.

REAR ADMIRAL FRANK E. BEATTY.

Admiral Beatty was graduated from Annapolis in 1871. When Admiral Dewey smashed the Spanish fleet in Manila bay he asked for re-enforcements to take the city. Beatty was given command of the monitor Monterey, then at San Francisco. It is considered a miracle that he ever got across the Pacific. Several times the waves put out the fires under her boilers. When the Monterey arrived Manila surrendered. Admiral Beatty is an expert on ordnance and has done much to improve the guns used in the navy.

NEW RAPID FIRE GUN.

Water Cooled Weapon That Has Been Adopted by Uncle Sam.

After a series of tests the United States army has adopted a water cooled rapid fire gun of the type now in use on the European battlefields. The barrel of the gun is incased in a water jacket to prevent its becoming overheated. This is refilled during heavy firing, but when water is not easily available an apparatus is employed which condenses the steam generated in the jacket and allows the water to be used over and over again.

The gun, which is operated by recoil, has a maximum firing speed of about 500 shots a minute, a somewhat slower speed than the air cooled guns in ordinary use, but the water cooled guns are expected to fire a greater number of shots in a long period because of the saving of the time consumed by the air cooled gun in inserting the short feed strips.

The regulation 30 caliber cartridge is employed, and the range is 1,500 to 1,900 yards. Ammunition is fed into it by a belt which holds 250 rounds, the shells being automatically inserted and ejected as long as pressure is exerted on the trigger.

The gun, which weighs ninety-six pounds, is set on a tripod so constructed as to make the weapon available for use against air craft.—Indianapolis News.

Oldest Chess Problem.

The oldest chess problem on record is thought to be that contained in an ancient Persian manuscript attributed to Caliph Kalifen Mutasin Billah, who reigned in Bagdad A. D. 833 to 842. But the reader would have to learn the old rules before it was intelligible. For example, the queen could make a move of only one square at a time and that on a diagonal, but a queen promoted from a pawn was allowed to make a move of two squares diagonally. The bishop had no power over any square except the third from which it stood on its own diagonal line, but it was allowed to vault over any piece that happened to be between. In short, it was a totally different game. Chess in the precise form in which we know it and play it today is a comparatively modern game.—London Strand Magazine.

Misnomers of Chemistry.

One of the strangest features of chemistry is the fact that many of the chemical names are misleading and do not describe the articles. Here are a few examples: Oil of vitriol is no oil, neither are oils of turpentine and kerosene. Copperas is an iron compound and contains no copper.

Salts of lemon is the exceedingly poisonous oxalic acid. Carbolic acid is not an acid, but an alcohol. Cobalt contains none of that metal, but arsenic. Soda water has no trace of soda, nor has sulphuric acid of sulphur. Sugar of lead has no sugar, cream of tartar has nothing of cream, nor milk of lime any milk. German silver has no silver and black lead no lead. Mosaic gold is only a sulphide of tin.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Stopping the Idle Talk.

"Pardon my interrupting you, old chap, but really you're wasting your time."

"What's the matter? Aren't you interested in what I'm saying?"

"Not particularly. Besides, it won't accomplish anything."

"I don't understand you."

"It's no use telling me how your boss ought to run his business. Tell it to him or keep still about it."—Detroit Free Press.

What He Wished to Know.

"Here's an article in this magazine entitled 'How to Meet Trouble,'" said Mrs. Wedderly. "Shall I read it to you?"

"No, thank you," replied his wife's husband. "How to dodge trouble is the brand of information I'm looking for."—Chicago News.

Going Down.

Redd—He started out with a $6,000 automobile.

Greene—And what car is he using now?

"A street car."—Yonkers Statesman.

A Definition.

Banquet—A social function at which one endures a poor meal for the sake of the speaking which is to follow and then endures poor speaking for the sake of politeness.—Life.

Dragon Flies.

Dragon flies can catch insects when flying at the rate of forty or fifty miles an hour.

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Acute Indigestion.

The quickest remedy for the trouble is water. Drink one tumblerful of water after another as rapidly as possible until six or eight have been taken. This method dislodges the irritating substances in the stomach and causes vomiting and instant relief from the pain and intense nausea. After all the undigested foods have been removed lie down and rest and suck pieces of ice until the stomach is comfortable. A little brandy in ice water, a teaspoonful poured over a few pieces of ice, may be sipped every few minutes to relieve the weakness and while waiting for the doctor to arrive.

LIQUEFIED GAS IS NEW WAR WEAPON

Germans Begin Great Drive by Aid of Deadly Fumes.

NOT BOMBS BUT BOTTLES.

Correspondent With French Army, Describing Novel Arm Which Depends Upon Utilizing the Wind, Says Men Killed Turned Black at Once and Others Were Incapable of Defense.

A correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle with the French army describes the new weapon by means of which the Germans won the first step in their great fresh drive for the coast of the English channel. He declares that liquefied chlorine gas was liberated from steel bottles.

On the evening of April 22, he says, the French soldiers who manned the first line trenches saw rising from the German trenches, a short distance away, a number of white fuses, evidently intended as signals. Almost at once all along the German trenches a thick curtain of yellow smoke arose and was blown gently toward the French trenches by a northeast wind.

This curtain, which advanced like the "yellow wind" of northern China, offered this peculiarity—that it spread thickly on the ground, rising to a height of sixteen feet only.

The French soldiers were naturally taken by surprise. Some got away in time, but many, alas, not understanding the new danger, were not so fortunate and were overcome by the fumes and died poisoned. Among those who escaped nearly all cough and spit blood, the chlorine attacking the mucous membrane. The dead were turned black at once.

Rush Followed Fumes.

The effect of this poisonous gas was felt over about six kilometers of ground in length by two kilometers deep. Farther than that the gas was too much diluted with air to kill, but suffocated many.

About fifteen minutes after letting the gas escape the Germans got out of their trenches. Some of them were sent on in advance with masks over their heads to ascertain if the air had become breathable.

Having discovered that they could advance, they arrived in large numbers on the area on which the gas had spread itself some minutes before and took possession of the arms of the dead men. They made no prisoners. Whenever they saw a soldier whom the fumes had not quite killed they snatched away his rifle and threw it in the Yser and advised him ironically to lie down "to die better."

These were not asphyxiating bombs that the Germans used. They were big, re-enforced steel bottles of gas, compressed at high pressure, which the Germans placed on top of their trenches, and of which they opened the taps when it seemed to them that the wind coming from behind them would carry on the poison to the enemy's trenches.

May Kill Own Men.

It is possible that the use of their own chlorine gas may one day turn against the Germans themselves. Should the wind veer suddenly they would be the first victims of their attempt, he concludes.

In a special article on the German successes near Ypres, the Frankfurter Zeitung says:

"It is indeed possible that our bombs and shells rendered it impossible for the enemy's troops to remain in their trenches or artillery positions.

"It is even probable that, in point of fact, projectiles emitting poisonous gases were employed by us, for the German army command has permitted no doubt to exist that, as a reply to the treacherous projectiles of the English and French, which have been constantly observed for many weeks, we on our side also would employ gas bombs or whatever one may call them.

"The German army command, moreover, referred to the fact that from German chemistry considerably more effective substances might be expected, and our army command was right."

A Dutch correspondent telegraphs that certain Germans have confided to him that the Germans intend to continue the use of asphyxiating gas and expect that it will prove their final means of victory.

Calls It Last Crime.

The Paris Temps in commenting on this latest innovation calls the use of asphyxiating gas the last crime left for the Germans to perpetrate and says they will stand dishonored in history because of it.

The German official explanation is that The Hague convention ruled against the use of asphyxiating projectiles and that therefore the convention was not abused. They say that the German troops did not fire such bombs.

In this explanation the Temps finds hypocrisy and duplicity, because, it says, The Hague interdiction was not aimed at any special engine for spreading asphyxiating gas, but against the use of asphyxiants in general.

If half of what has been said of the efficacy of the Turpin asphyxiating shells is true, says the Journal des Debats, there is no doubt that France will be able to make war with these latest methods on a certain equality with her enemies.

Old Grayson's Housekeeper

She Was a Paragon, but He Discharged Her

By JOTHAM KINGSLEY

"So you lost your job at Peterby's?" remarked Mrs. Sharp when Ruth Lowell paid her week's board.

"Yes—the manager told me that I was not aggressive—that I would never make a good saleswoman," smiled Ruth wearily.

"If that means that you haven't got any nerve—he's right," said the landlady emphatically. "There's some wimmen just naturally cut out for clerking in stores, and some for dressmaking, and others for housekeeping seems to me you'd shine best in getting married and keeping house for a good husband."

"In the meantime I must have something to do," laughed Ruth, "so I'll just go out and buy a morning paper."

When she returned to the red plush sofa in Mrs. Sharp's parlor, Ruth tossed aside coat and furs and scanned the want columns.

She copied a list of addresses—shops where they needed experienced sales ladies, and then she clipped an advertisement different from the others and put it in her pocketbook.

"All the others failing—I'll try this one," she said firmly and set out to find employment.

That night she sat on the edge of her narrow bed in the third floor back hall room and studied the little clipping, for all of her applications for work had been in vain.

If Peterby's did not want her no one else did.

She reread the advertisement through a blur of tears:

WANTED.—A housekeeper; one who can cook properly and keep a house clean and neat, and mind her own business; good wages to right party; call afternoons all week. THEO. GRAYSON, Roselawn.

"I can keep house," decided Ruth. "I am glad that mother made a housewife of me—I am clean and neat and I can attend to my own affairs. I'll go tomorrow."

Roselawn was a small village twenty miles from New York and when Ruth left the train she discovered that there was no conveyance to take her down the long hill.

She sat down on a bench for a few moments and took occasion to view the surrounding country and at the same time to compose herself for the coming ordeal. She had never worked in the capacity of a housekeeper, although, being a country girl, she felt equal to the task. She felt a great relief to be away from the turmoil of the city and contrasted the quiet village with the hot and dusty scenes she had left behind. What if she be not accepted as a housekeeper by Mr. Grayson? Perhaps the place had already been filled. She winced at the thought and fervently hoped that her

"YOU WISHED TO SEE ME?" HE RUMBLED IN A DEEP VOICE.

quest would not be in vain. While thus musing she heard a step and turned in the direction of the sound.

The station master came out of his little building.

"The stage doesn't meet this train, miss. It's only half a mile to the village and it's a nice day for a walk. Grayson? Oh! The Grayson place is the first one you come to on the right hand side of the road—a big place with a stone wall around it."

"Thank you," said Ruth and went her way.

The Grayson place looked large to Ruth's eyes: it was a comfortable red brick house set in an ample lawn and surrounded by beautiful elms now drooping bare branches toward the snow covered ground.

Smoke was pouring from one of the chimneys.

As Ruth hesitated in the gateway a man passed along looking curiously at her.

"Does Mr. Grayson live here?" she asked.

"Yes? Maybe you're one of the housekeepers he's advertising for? Yes? Lord love you. You won't stay a day if he'll take you! He's the worst old crank in the county! Ask any one about old Grayson, and they'll tell you the same thing!"

"Thank you," said Ruth, and with a sinking heart she hurried up the path to the front door and rang the bell.

A heavy tread sounded in the hall and the door opened, disclosing a very giant of a man, who looked down at Ruth from sharp gray eyes. His thick gray hair and bushy gray beard gave him an appearance of advanced middle age, but his eyes were clear and his skin was fresh and unlined. His clothes were baggy and unbrushed.

"You wished to see me?" he rumbled in a deep voice.

"Are you Mr. Grayson?" timidly asked Ruth.

"Yes—you're not another—you didn't come in answer to my advertisement for a housekeeper?" he asked incredulously.

"But I did!" protested Ruth.

"Please come in," he said gruffly, and Ruth felt very much as if she was walking into a lion's den. He led the way into a cosy sitting room and drew a chair close to the glowing stove. "Sit down," he ordered, and Ruth obeyed.

"What a horrid old ogre," she thought.

Mr. Grayson ranged himself opposite and folded his arms.

"Can you keep house?" he asked sharply.

"Yes."

"Cook?"

"Yes," decidedly.

"How well can you cook?" with a sarcastic inflection.

"As well as my mother could, and she was a farmer's daughter and a farmer's wife," retorted Ruth.

"Any objection to my eating rolls and coffee for breakfast instead of sausages and pancakes?" he demanded.

"None."

"Do you mind serving dinner at night?"

"Of course not."

"Would you want to marry me?"

"Heavens—no!" Ruth crimsoned and started for the door, but Grayson reached it first.

"Please don't go. You must forgive my rudeness. But I've been pestered to death by housekeepers. Have had seven in as many months. Those who could cook wanted to suit their own appetites concerning the food that was served. The rest couldn't cook and were only looking for a home and a husband."

"I am looking for work," said Ruth indignantly. "I am sorry I came"—Her voice trembled.

"Give me another chance, please. Sit down and tell me where you came from and what you can do." He led her to the chair, and she resumed her seat.

In fifteen minutes he was possessed of Ruth's simple history, and Ruth Lowell learned that for seven months past Grayson's widowed cousin, who had kept house for him many years, had been confined to her chair with rheumatism. She was waited on by a small colored maiden, and Grayson had been obliged to hire a housekeeper to attend to domestic affairs.

"So there you are," he ended. "Cousin Ida helpless in the south room, with Judy to wait upon her. I'm busy most of the time over my work—I'm an architect, you know—and you'd have free swing here. Judy's mother comes and does the washing and ironing, so the work isn't heavy. What do you say, Miss Lowell?"

"You think that I will do?" asked Ruth.

"You can try. When will you come? Twenty-five a month and your board. We're all at sevens and nines here."

Ruth laughed. "I'll stay and get dinner for you," she volunteered.

"Done! There's a steak in the pantry and—er—all the other things. I'll send Judy in to show you around."

Ruth did not remain to eat the toothsome dinner she had prepared for Theodore Grayson and his family. She had made the acquaintance of Cousin Ida, a gentle, frail little woman, who tapped her round cheek and told her she was too young and pretty to stew over a cook stove.

"And don't mind Theo," she advised. "His bark's worse than his bite. Folks call him 'Old Grayson,' but he's only thirty-five."

So Ruth Lowell came to Roselawn and found a home in a charming old fashioned room that opened into Cousin Ida's apartment.

She remembered what Mr. Grayson had said about the former housekeepers, and she recollected with a smile the wording of his advertisement. She must "mind her own business."

She did to a degree that worried her employer.

Breakfast found a daintily set table, well rubbed silver and a well cooked meal—fruit, delicious coffee, bacon and rolls. Cousin Ida had her favorite cereal and tea and toast in her own room, and by some marvel the new housekeeper disdained sausages and pancakes and enjoyed the same sort of breakfast as her employer.

Beside his plate there would be the morning newspaper, and Ruth discouraged talking at meals. Luncheon was a solitary meal for Grayson, but he looked forward to dinner.

Ruth sat opposite him and poured the coffee. She was such a contrast to the snuffy, old women who had filled that chair in the past that Theodore Grayson excused himself for admiring her demure gowns and her frilly white aprons and her curling waves of brown hair.

The night Grayson appeared in a new and well fitting suit of clothes, with his hair trimmed and his face smoothly shaven, was a never to be forgotten occasion for Ruth.

"Why, he is young!" she repeated to herself over and over again. "He is young, and he is handsome!"

Theodore Grayson was handsome, and as the days and weeks passed he was conscious that he was falling in love with his new housekeeper. "She wouldn't look at me," he groaned, "not after what I said during that first interview! Theodore Grayson, you're a fool!"

And that night at table he was so gloomy that Ruth was sure that something had gone wrong with her housekeeping. She and Cousin Ida had grown to be close friends, and even Judy adored the sweet faced young woman who was at the head of Theodore Grayson's house.

And that very evening while Judy rattled the dishes in the kitchen Theodore Grayson knocked on the sitting room door and asked Ruth to come into his study.

Ruth's limbs trembled as she followed him. Surely he had discovered that

"MISS LOWELL," HE BEGAN ABRUPTLY, "I AM GOING TO DISCHARGE YOU."

she had lost her heart to him, and now he was going to send her away. This was the only home she knew, and she loved it.

"Sit down, Miss Lowell," said Theo gravely as he pulled out a chair for her and sat down on the other side of the table.

Ruth looked at his strong white hands, equally skillful at the drawing board or handling a gun or administering Cousin Ida's medicine. They were kindly hands, and his was a kindly face in spite of what people said concerning him.

"Miss Lowell," he began abruptly, "I am going to discharge you."

"Discharge me? I have not pleased you, then?" faltered Ruth.

"You have pleased me too well," he went on. "I want to marry you, and I've sworn I'd never marry my housekeeper. So I shall discharge you first, and then—after that I can ask you to marry me."

Ruth's face went white and then pink.

"Then I am discharged now?" she asked.

"Yes." He shoved an envelope across the table. "There, that settles your account with me. Now, Ruth, I love you. Will you marry me?"

Cousin Ida declared that Theodore was only quibbling with his outraged conscience and that, no matter how you looked at it, he actually did marry his housekeeper.

"How did I know that a housekeeper could be so perfectly dear?" demanded Theodore as, quite regardless of Cousin Ida and the wondering Judy, he hugged Ruth to his breast.

And no one looking at him then could have called Theodore "old Grayson."

Love and undying youth shone in his eyes.

No Chance In History.

Mazzini said that he did not believe that chance existed in history. "A cause must necessarily underlie every event, although for the moment it may appear as the result of apparently accidental circumstances. An Alexander, a Caesar, a Napoleon are not the results of accident, but the inevitable product of the time and nation from which they spring. It was not Caesar who destroyed the Roman republic. The republic was dead before Caesar came. Sulla, Marius, Catiline preceded and foreshadowed Caesar, but he, gifted with keener insight and greater genius, snatched the power from them and concentrated it in his own hands. For there was no doubt that he was fitter to rule than all the others put together. At the same time, supposing he had appeared 150 years earlier, he would not have succeeded in destroying the republic. When he came the life had already gone out of it, and even Caesar's death could not restore that."

Sew It Seems.

"When does a man become a seamstress?"

"When he hems and haws."

"No."

"When he threads his way?"

"No."

"When he rips and tears?"

"No."

"Give it up."

"Never, if he can help it."—Christian Register.

Out to Repel a Night Attack

By OSCAR COX

In the early part of the German invasion of Belgium, when the French were gathering near the border, there was one fortification on the line of French defenses somewhat separated from the rest. The colonel commanding, expecting an attack at any moment, arranged for the discharge of every gun on the outer parapet at once by means of electricity. The electric key was set up in the quarters of Major Molynoux, who was intrusted with its guardianship, that the guns might be fired at the approach of the enemy and might not be fired prematurely.

The commandant, Colonel Du Pierris, was a nervous little man whose principal military maxim was getting ahead of the enemy. He was sufficiently educated as a soldier to know that a favorite hour for surprise in war is 2 o'clock in the morning, when the party to be attacked is wrapped in slumber. Anticipating that the works intrusted to his care might be stormed at that hour, he had arranged a method by which such a terrific onslaught of shot and shell should be poured upon an attacking force as to cause it to recoil, thereby giving time for the gathering of its defenders, who would be roused by the simultaneous firing of so many guns.

Liege had been captured by the Germans and they were sweeping through Belgium. Colonel Du Pierris was very nervous. He had his pickets out some distance from the fort, but an enemy stealthily advancing may seize a picket before he can give an alarm, and the colonel was relying principally on his firing device.

One night the colonel turned in so apprehensive of attack that he did not get to sleep till after midnight. Just before dawn he was awakened by a din that could have been caused only by the firing of many cannon. Starting up he hurried on his outer clothing, and buckling on his sword ran out on to the open space behind the guns, ready to command in the defense. He was met by hundreds of his men, some of whom were taking position at the pieces, some were hurrying for ammunition, while others were forming in line behind the works.

The breeches of the outer tier of guns that had been fired were opened and shells put in some, solid shot in others. As to the inner guns, they were already loaded. In a few minutes the activity ceased, and all stood ready for the coming fray. The colonel, surrounded by his staff, stood on one of the parapets, peering down into the darkness, endeavoring to catch sight of the enemy.

The strain on the men waiting for an attack is hard to bear. Once in the fray action takes the place of suspense, and the latent bulldog in a man's nature enables him not only to bear up, but often perform deeds that are accounted heroism by others. In the present case this strain was prolonged. Ample time elapsed for the garrison to take position, reload the empty pieces and collect ammunition where it was needed. And yet no enemy appeared.

"Captain Le Fevre," said the colonel, "go down there and see what trickery the enemy are up to or whether they have been so discouraged at the reception they have received that they have withdrawn."

The captain saluted, jumped down from the parapet and disappeared in the darkness. The minutes, which seemed hours to the colonel, ticked slowly by, yet there was no sound from beyond the works. Too impatient to stand still, he walked back and forth within a dozen paces, stopping often to listen and expecting every minute to be greeted by a shower of missiles. "Lieutenant Morant," he said presently, "go after Captain Le Fevre and see what has become of him. He may have been taken in by a lurking enemy."

Down dropped Lieutenant Morant, and he, too, disappeared in the darkness.

He had scarcely gone when Captain Le Fevre returned out of breath and reported that he had sent a skirmish line out some distance and had not heard a shot. It was not possible that an enemy could be near the fort.

A suspicion that there had been some mistake about the firing of the guns entered the colonel's brain.

"How far has the skirmish line advanced?" he asked.

"Quite far enough to demonstrate that no enemy could have been seen from our works," was the response.

"Where is Major Molynoux?" asked the colonel. Then, without waiting for a reply, he turned and stalked off toward the major's quarters.

He found that officer engaged in a work that, considering the occasion, was trying to the colonel's temper. The keeper of the firing key was engaged in chasing a rat around the apartment, striking at him with his sword.

"Major!" thundered the colonel.

"Colonel," responded the major, pausing from the chase.

"Who fired the guns?"

"That rat. He jumped on the electric key."

The men were returned to their slumbers, and in another ten minutes the fort was again silent.

What passed further between the colonel and the major is not known. But certain it is that Major Molynoux was relieved from the charge of the firing room, and a rat trap was placed there near the key.

PLEADS FOR DRUG FIEND.

Mother Asks Dispensation In Case of Sixty-year-old Victim.

Washington.—Pleading for her sixty-year-old "boy," who, she says, will die if he is not permitted to obtain the drugs denied him by the Harrison anti-drug bill, an eighty-one-year-old Colorado woman has written a pitiful letter to Dr. B. R. Reese of the internal revenue division of the treasury department. She addressed her letter to President Wilson, but Secretary Tumulty sent it to Dr. Reese, whose office is the clearing house of such correspondence.

Much as the appeal of the old Colorado woman moved the officials, no exception will be made in that case. There is no intention on the part of the internal revenue division to issue blanket permits to obtain drugs for individual cases.

PAYS AN OLD DEBT.

Tennessee Farmer Sends Check For $3.50 Plow Bought In 1896.

Little Rock, Ark.—In 1896 J. Milton Williams, a Tennessee farmer, bought a plow from H. S. Speck, a hardware dealer at Morristown, Tenn., on credit. Recently Mr. Speck, who long ago left Tennessee and is now a resident of Little Rock, received a check for $3.50, the price of the plow. The letter accompanying the check read as follows:

"Dear Sir—You remember some years ago I bought of you a turning plow. I have always intended to pay the debt, but it seemed that I had so many things on me that I had to put what little money I could get into other places. I hope you will pardon me for keeping you out of your money for so long. I trust you are well and prosperous."

527 DAYS FOR BOOZING.

The Court Also Rubs In a Fine of $200. Must "Stay Sober."

Sandusky, O.—James Smith, thirty-five, was brought to the county jail here from Castalia to serve 527 days for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Justice Charles Canfield, before whom he entered a plea of guilty, gave him six months after assessing a fine of $200 and costs.

Canfield in passing sentence told Smith he was determined to have him stay sober for awhile.

Breaks the Silo Record.

So far as is known, the silo which John Edwards, who lives near Englewood, Kan., is building will be the largest in the world. It will be fifty feet high, fifty feet across and fifteen feet in the ground. When completed it will hold 2,500 tons of ensilage. Mr. Edwards owns 10,000 head of cattle.—Kansas City Journal.

New Territory North of Siberia.

Valuable discoveries of new land north of Siberia, says Reuter, have been announced as the result of the hydrographical work in those seas of the Russian ice breakers Taimyr and Vaigatz. The new territory stretches for some 200 miles.—London Chronicle.

Size of Zeppelins.

Zeppelins vary in diameter and length, but most of them are of large size, being almost as big as battleships. The Deutschland, for example, is 485 feet long and 46 feet in diameter, with a capacity of 25,000 cubic yards and a lifting power of 44,000 pounds.

Best makes of Carriages. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

BRAVE FRENCH AIR MAN CAN FIGHT NO MORE

Capture of Roland Garros Big Loss to Allies' Aerial Fleet.

Paris.—When Roland G. Garros, the daring French aviator, was captured by the Germans one of the most picturesque careers of the war came to a halt. The lieutenant had proved himself to be the most brilliant and daring air man in any army.

Lieutenant Garros is well known in the United States, having flown in many competitions in that country. One of his latest exploits was at Dunkirk, when he shot dead in the air the aviator and the observer of a German aeroplane. He went out against this machine alone, and as his machine was the faster he was able to gain an advantageous position, from which he fired with fatal precision.

Photo by American Press Association.

ROLAND GARROS.

Garros was born of French parents at Cape Town, South Africa, in 1888. He is a graduate of the University of Paris and of its law school and for a time practiced his profession in the French capital.

The exploits of Garros have made him a prominent figure in aviation circles throughout the world. He has appeared in meets in Richmond, Chattanooga, Memphis, New Orleans, Dallas, Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, Waco, Houston, San Antonio, El Paso, Mexico City, Vera Cruz, Havana and New York and holds a number of speed prizes won at tournaments held in many European cities.

On Dec. 11, 1912, Garros ascended to a height of 19,032 feet and established a world's altitude mark. On his flight from Tunis to Sicily in December, 1912, he traveled for a distance of 160 miles entirely over water. When he flew across the Mediterranean from St. Raphael to Biserta he traveled 558 miles in 7 hours and 53 minutes.

Wind and Storms.

The wind always blows from a region of fair weather toward a region where a storm is forming.

New carload of Bowker's Fertilizers. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Children Cry for Fletcher's

CASTORIA

The Kind You Have Always Bought, and which has been in use for over 30 years, has borne the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher and has been made under his personal supervision since its infancy. Allow no one to deceive you in this. All Counterfeits, Imitations and "Just-as-good" are but Experiments that trifle with and endanger the health of Infants and Children—Experience against Experiment.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. It destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic, all Teething Troubles and Diarrhoea. It regulates the Stomach and Bowels, assimilates the Food, giving healthy and natural sleep. The Children's Panacea—The Mother's Friend.

GENUINE CASTORIA ALWAYS

Bears the Signature of

Chas. H. Fletcher

In Use For Over 30 Years

The Kind You Have Always Bought

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

SOIL SURVEY OF ONEIDA CO.

U. S. Bureau Co-operates With State College of Agriculture to Determine Facts.

Washington, D. C. May 7.—The results of a soil survey of Oneida county, New York, made by the United States Bureau of Soils in co-operation with the New York State College of Agriculture, will shortly be issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. The report, which consists of 59 printed pages and a large colored map, contains a detailed description of the nature, agricultural value, and methods of treatment of 58 soil types found in the county. The area mapped embraces 1,226 square miles, or 784,640 acres. The map in addition to showing the actual location of the different important soils, gives also the location of schools, churches, public roads, railroads and watercourses. Of the soils mapped, Mohawk loam leads in area with 115,840 acres. The 2 phases of Ontario loam come second with 84,736 acres, the Worth stony loam is third in area with 57,856 acres.

The report, after discussing the general topography of the county deals briefly with the agricultural history of the county from the first permanent white settlement made at Whitestown in 1784. It also gives details as to climate, stating that the mean annual temperature is reported as 46 degrees F. The highest temperature recorded at Rome is 97 degrees F. and the lowest is 22 degrees F. The temperature for the summer months average 68 degrees F. The mean annual precipitation is report?ed as about 48 inches. The average date of the last killing frost in the spring is May 10, and the first in the fall, September 30. Killing frosts, however, have been reported as late as June 7 and as early as September 1.

Of the agriculture in the county the report says in part:

In Oneida county agriculture was first practiced by the aborigines, who cultivated small patches which were devoted mainly to corn and apples. The early settlers cleared more extensive areas, and grew corn, wheat, and a few vegetables. Corn and wheat were the staple crops, and grist mills were established along the streams. Subsequently oats became an important crop. Large quantities of potash salts were obtained in asheries from the ashes of the timber which was cut and burned as the land was cleared. Distilleries, sawmills, woolen mills, and tanneries were also important factors in the early development of the county. Hops were first grown about 1820. This crop steadily increased in importance, and at present the vicinity of Waterville is recognized as one of the leading hop-growing districts of the United States.

Direct Shipments

The report then briefly summarized from the census, the rapid growth in the production of various crops. Continhing the report says:

In general, the agriculture of Oneida County consists of dairying, the prodyrtion of hay, grain, some fruit, and hops.

The dairy industry has been important in Oneida County since its early settlement. Before transportation facilities ere highly developed dairying was practiced to supply home needs and a small local demand. With the opening of the railroads the industry developed rapidly, and large quantities of cheese and butter were manufactured. About 1890 the practice of increased. The stock was carefully City became popular. At first the shipments were small, but today the production and handling of milk for market receives special attention. The great bulk of all the milk produced mainly during the summer season, but under present conditions it is necessary that theh milk be produced during every month in the year. This change affected the feeding system. Silos were constructed to store ensilage for winter use, while more attention was paid to the production of hay and fodder, and the grain ration was increased. The stock wasc arefully housed. The strict regulations of the boards of health with respect to the sanitation of the barns have done much to improve the quality as well as the quantity of the milk shipped to the largem arkets. The Holstein is the predominating breed in the dairy herds, some of which include registered stock.

The value of leguminous crops for feed has beeh moreg enerally recognized within recent years. Since 1900 the acreage of clover has increased about 200 per cent. and of alfalfa about 850 per cent. The extension of the ocreage has made possible the keeping of a larger number of cows and thee production of an increased quantity of stable manure to return to the soil.

It is said that nearly one-third of the total area of the county consists of land which can never have a permanent value until it is covered with a properly regulated forest. Such forestation would not only give these lands a permanent value, but would afford protection to the water sheds and help to improve conditions in other parts of the State.

Crop adaptation has been recognized only in a broad way by the farmers of this county. Celery and onions are grown on a small scale on Muck, the only local type of soil well suited to their production. The hill lands are largely devoted to dairying and general farming. Thes crops for the canning factories are largely grown on the gravelly loams and lighter textured soils, the best soils for that purpose. Hops and alfalfa are confined largely to the calcareous Ontario loam, from which good yields are obtained. Potatoes and buckwheat are grown to some extent on soils of the Volusia and Mohawk series. Theh restriction of crops to the soils best adapted to their production has never received careful attention, and nearly all the soils are used to some extent for all the crops commonly grown in the region.

Rotation is Profitable

Crop rotation is practiced more because of convenience in farm management than because of its beneficial effects upon the soils and the increase in crop yields. A common rotation is corn one year, oats one or two years, followed by meadow for several years until the sod runs out. The length of time a field is used for hay production depends upon the soil. On the poorer lands the fields are often left in grass for more than 10 years.

These conditions, especially in the northern part of the county, can be improvedm aterially and even permanently by the gradual substitution of a ne type of farming to consist mainly of the raisig of live stock. At present the production of hay is profitable in only a fe cases, because of the high cost of labor and of the fertilizers hich are required to maintain the productivepess of the farms. Some wood ashes are used, but the use of lime is not common, while the turning under of green-manuring crops is seldom practiced, and only a small quantity of manure or commercial fertilizer is used. The farms produce fair yields of potatoes and buckwheat.

Honeoye Series: The Honeoye series one of them ost important of the glacial group. It is represented by two types. The moneoye loam, containing limestone fragments, is the best upland soil in the county. It is used for general farming and dairying. The yields of all crops grown are good. The stony loam is a productive soil; but is too stony for cultivation. It makes good pasture land.

Ontario Series: The Ontario series is extensively developed, but includes only one type, the loam. This type does not contain limestone fragments, and is less highly developed than the Honeoye loam. It requires careful crop rotation and thorough cultivation.

Mohawk Series: The Mohawk series comprises two types, which are devoted manly to dairying. The loam is them ost extensive of this upland series, and as a whole is in a fair state of productiveness. With good tillage the yields on this type are easily increased. The silt loam is composed of a shallow till and is less extensive than the loam. In many cases the fields are allowed to remain in sod until they become unproductive before they are plowed and planted to cultivated crops, and even these are poorly cared for. Potatoes constitute the best money crop. This series is capable of a higher development.

Low Land Values

Volusia Loam: The Volusia loam and silt loam have an extensive development in the county, and are used for dairying and general farming. The silt loam occupies higher elevations in association with the loam. This is recognized as one of the poor soils of the county. Poor management is in part responsible for its present condition.

On the better farms of this type the mest profitable crops grown are Irish potatoes, buckwheat, hay and oats. Potatoes yield 100 to 225 bushels per acre, buckwheat 25 to 30 bushels per acre, oats about 25 bushels per acre and hay about 1 ton per acre. Owing to the distance from shipping points this type is best adapted to stock raising.

Volusia Silt Loam: The poor condition of the Volusia silt loam is largely due to the common practice of renting to tenants who sell off all the hay they can cut. The land is left in sod until the yields are not worth harvesting, when it is poorly cultivated for a year or two, before being returned to meadow. Stable manures are not generally used, and but little commercial fertilizer is applied. Stock raising would build up this type. Buckwheat and potatoes are the principal crops grown. The clay loam and stony loam are used for general farming, dairying, and the production of hay and pasturage.

Worth Series: The Worth series, developed through glacial action over sandstone, includes extensive upland soils in the northwestern part of the county. It is represented by four types. These soils have a high stone content and are largely waste land. Some dairying and general farming are carried on. They are well suited to sheep and cattle raising. A part of this series is best devoted to forestry. The land values are usually low.

The Worth fine sandy loam is probably best kept forested with phite pine and spruce. Worth loam is best suited to the raising of stock, either sheep or cattle, with Irish potatoes as a cash crop. The more careful saving and use of stabel manure, together with application of lime, and more thorough cultivation are needed.

Dover Soils: The Dover soils consist of glacial till overlying limestone formations. Three types are recognized in this county. The series is devoted mainly to dairying. Where the glacial bolwders are not too thickly strewn over the surface these soils are fairly productive. Too little attention is paid to crop rotation and crop adaptation.

Where dairying is practiced an excellent method is to use the best-drained fields of Dover loam for alfalfa, which furnishes excellent forage. For the successful production of alfalfa and the improvement of the clover crops, the use of lime is generally necessary. While there is some lime in the subsoil, it is often lacking in the surface soil.

Gloucester Series: The Gloucester series, including two types, occurs only in the extreme northeastern part of the county. These soils are best devoted to forestry. All of the first-growth timber has been removed.

Farmington Loam: The Farmington loam is a gently rolling type, mainly of residual origin, resting upon limestone. It is a good grass soil, and is best used for dairying.

Lockport and Allis Series: The Lockport and Allis series, the former comprising one type and the latter two types, are of relatively small extent in this county. They are usually held in connection with dairy farms and are mainly used for pasturage, although some of the general farm crops do well upon them.

The Allis clay loam where cultivated in a wet condition, the soil breaks into large clods. Proper moisture conditions must be observed in order to secure the best results in tillage.

Chenango Series: The Chenango series is represented by seven types, some of which were not very important. These soils were laid down as terraces, outwash plains, lake beaches and deltas. The fine sand is not developed agriculturally, but comprises large areas which are in either waste land, or timber lots. It is adapted to early truck crops.

The texture and structure of the Chenango fine sand are such as to make this soil a good type for the production of early truck crops, such as early cabbage, radishes, cucumbers, strawberries, etc. The type is in need of organic matter. Special crops require heavy fertilization.

The stony gravelly loam and gravelly loam are quite variable in texture. These soils are highly developed throughout the county. They are well suited to special crops and to general farming, and the farms are in a prosperous condition. The other types are used mainly for general farming, to which they seem well adapted. More thorough cultivation and more regular crop rotations are needed for this series as a whole.

Chenango Gravelly Loam: Chenango gravelly loam is recognized as one of the best corn soils in the county. It is also an excellent soil for oats, grasses, potatoes, beans and cabbage. The yields are good. The growing of alfalfa is being gradually introduced, and where the soil is limed fair returns are obtained.

Chenango Sandy Loam: Chenango sandy loam is an especially desirable soil for potatoes and a wide variety of vegetables, but is rather too light for general farming, not giving as satisfactory yields as the Chenango gravelly loam. Land values range from $25 to $50 an acre.

Chenango Fine Sandy Loam: The Chenango fine sandy loam is low in organic matter and the crop yields are relatively low. The best use of this soil is for dairying, together with the growing of potatoes and beans.

Chenango Loam: Chenango loam is a good general farming soil, although it occurs only in small bodies. It seems to be well suited to small fruits, and to corn, potatoes and oats. Good yields of the staple crops are obtained.

Good Corn Soil

Dunkirk Series: The Dunkirk series comprises seven types. These are old lake bottom soils which are imperfectly derived and not very well developed.

Dunkirk Fine Sand: It seems that the Dunkirk fine sand could be used to good advantage in growing a variety of early truck crops, including vegetables, potatoes, raspberries, blackberries and strawberries.

Root crops and garden and truck crops do well on Dunkirk sandy loam. The addition of organic matter and better tillage methods, together with the application of lime, are needed to restore this land to its natural state of productiveness.

In handling Dunkirk fine sandy loam in the more progressive communities the stable manure is returned to the land and crops of legumes are grown annually.

Dunkirk clay loam needs tile underdrainage, together with deeper plowing. Some alfalfa is grown. The type is best suited to the production of grass and to dairying.

Merrimac Series: The Merrimac series, encountered in the northeastern part of the county, includes four types, representing a large part of the lighter textured soils of the county. Agricultural conditions are only fair, and much of this land supports a poor forest growth or is waste land. A large part of these soils is suitable only for forestry.

Merrimac Fine Sand: Merrimac fine sand is adapted to the growing of early truck crops. The incorporation of stable manure and the use of cover crops, together with the liberal application of commercial fertilizers are highly beneficial.

Merrimac Coarse Sandy Loam: Merrimac course sandy loam is easily built up by careful management. The application of stable manures, the use of cover crops, and a uniform depth of plowing are needed in its improvement.

The type is held in large tracts by nonresidents, who acquired the land before the timber was removed. Probably the best use of this is for forestry. Several small patches of white pine have been set out and are in a thrifty condition.

Re-Foresting Needed

A very small part of the Merrimac fine sandy loam is under cultivation. Corn yields 4 to 8 tons of ensilage per acre, oats 20 to 25 bushels, buckwheat 20 bushels, hay about 1 ton, and potatoes an average of 100 bushels. The methods of farming are generally poor. Little organic matter is returned to the land and only a few cattle are kept. Conditions in the vicinity of Prospect, in Trenton Town are somewhat better than the average. The soil is underlain by limestone, and the farmers use good cultural methods and secure correspondingly good yields. In general, this type is in need of organic matter, the addition of which renders it more resistant to drought.

The greater part of this type is better suited to the growing of timber than to the production of cultivated crops. Much of it is forested with poplar and a poorquality of hardwood. Some large areas have but little growth of any kind, and these could profitably be reforested.

Clyde Soils: The Clyde soils are of dark color and usually poorly drained. They are not extensively developed and are used main ly for meadows and pasturage. The Clyde series and pasturage. The Clyde series includes two types in this county, the fine sand and clay loam. Very little of the Clyde fine sand is under cultivation. With proper drainage it is capable of producing fair yields of truck crops, particularly celery, lettuce and onions.

Fox Gravelly Loam: The Fox Gravelly loam is a calcareous soil, laid down as terrace material along old glacial streams in the southern part of the county.

The Fox gravelly loam is recognized as one of the best farming soils of the county. It is particularly well adapted to corn. It is also well suited to potatoes, oats, alfalfa, clover and timothy.

Genesee Series: The Genesee series is represented in Oneida county by four types. These soils are of recent origin. They are composed of material laid down by stream action. The silt loam is the most extensive type of this series. It is well adapted to the production of grass. Drainage is the greatest problem in the handling of this type, and of the entire series. The other three types of the Genesee series are not highly developed, being used mainly for pasturage and for meadows.

Muck, although not developed agriculturally within this county, is a valuable soil for heavy truck, celery, cabbage, etc., where properly drained.

A part of the area of steep broken land, rough stony land, and meadow is used for pasturage, while some areas are best utilized for forestry.

CLAIRE WHITNEY, in "Life's Shop Window" at The Quirk Today.

Have The Evening Times to Read Before Eating Your Supper

With all the news about people you know and affairs in which you are interested.

¶ THE EVENING TIMES is regular in its delivery, and is on sale at the newstands of V. C. Lewis, Conley Bros., Wm. Murphy and Charles Brooks, East Broadway; J. W. Gillard, West First Street.

¶ Ask for and insist upon getting, taking no other, newspaper than your home newspaper,

The Fulton Evening Times

SICK OF ALDERMEN

J. B. Taylor Comes Out for Commission Form of Government

Watertown, May 7.—J. B. Taylor, who owns a majority of the stock of the Northern New York Utilities, Inc., which is seeking a renewal of its contract to light the city, expressed a hope before Alderman G. H. Cole's special lighting committee recently, to see the commission form of government established in Watertown as soon as it is possible.

"Then we will get some action. I am getting sick and tired of aldermen," said Mr. Taylor. This remark followed the refusal of the committee to recommend to the council the making of a long term lighting contract until the matter of municipal lighting had been thoroughly investigated and it was known how long it would be before the city could do its own lighting and what the income would be on the investment.

"Some of the aldermen are getting sick and tired of having someone tell them what they should do," retorted Alderman Franklin.

HAPPY HOUR THEATRE

SUNDAY

BIG CIVIL WAR DRAMA AND THEY CALLED HIM HERO

in two parts, with Francis Ford in the leading role.

Four others, including a Two Reel Keystone Comedy

Admission 5c

FULTON'S BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL DIRECTORY

SIGNS, BULLETINS, CARDS — any kind, anywhere. DECORATION, PAINTING. A. E. WORDEN, Academy and 6th sts. Phone 3432.

DENTISTS

FRED L. CARY, D. D. S. 122 West Broadway. Office hours, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.

DR. H. S. ORCHARD Dental Parlors
Phone 444 112 Oneida St.

BARBER SHOPS

CAMPBELL'S BARBER SHOP has removed to 21 South First Street. Ready to meet all customers.

BARBER SHOP AND BATH ROOM — Opposite Lower Depot, Second St. Three Barbers: Martin, Donovan, Carroll. Baths ready at all times. J. Fred Carroll, Prop.

UNDERTAKERS

YOUNG & HILL. Open day and night at 117 Oneida. Phone 2172.

DELIVERY SERVICES.

FRANK DE LARM, Successor to GARRETT'S LIVERY, at 120 Cayuga Street. Solicits the livery business of all old customers.
Phone 235 Cayuga St.

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND

The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"

"CITY OF ERIE" — 3 Magnificent Steamers — "CITY OF BUFFALO"

BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND

THE CLEVELAND & BUFFALO TRANSIT CO., Cleveland, Ohio

NINETEEN HUNDRED COPIES OF THE EVENING TIMES GO INTO FULTON'S HOMES DAILY. WATCH US GROW!

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 121 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | MONDAY, MAY 10, 1915 | Price One Cent

LUSITANIA'S SURVIVORS NUMBER 764, SAYS CUNARD COMPANY

REV. BARRETT ROUSED HEARERS

Last Night's Sermon Was Upon a Subject Near to All Hearts

"A Sick Man Quarreling With His Medicine," was the topic used by the Rev. J. W. Barrett to interest a large audeince at last night's services in the First Methodist Episcopal church.

In part Mr. Barrett said:

The greatest men of intellectual genius have no quarrel with religion. They recognize that culture is not antagonistic to religion. One needs but to mention the name of Henry Drummond, the scholar and evangelist; the man who could speak with authority to the learned men of Europe and America, and speak in a mission room and tell the poorest and the most ignorant the glad news of the Saviour for our wayward race. We remember, when he was near the end, a friend called to see him and Drummond seemed as if he had no interest in anything that day, so the friend went to the piano and began to play, "Art Thou Weary, Art Thou Languid." But Drummond showed no interest, so the friend tried the old Conenaters hymn, and before he had finished Drummond was fully awake and asking, "Why don't you sing the hymn?:

"I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
Or to defend His cause,
Maintain the honor of His word,
The glory of His Cross."

Think of that! A great scholar, a choice writer passing within the veil to see the King in His beauty, "not ashamed."

Why should we be ashamed or quarrel with the Gospel—the panacea for the wants, woes and wretchedness of the race?

"Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the rivers of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean?" II Kings 5:12.

The coming of Naaman the Syrian leper to Elisha, suggested by the little captive Jewish maid is full of suggestion and interest. Assuming we are all familiar with the incident we note first the angry outburst at the message to Naaman by the prophet; in which he was mad at the kind of medicine prescribed for his leprosy.

If washing were all that were necessary, then he had made his trip for nothing, for Abana and Pharpar had turned Damascus into a garden, indeed they were better than all the rivers of Israel.

Doubtless, his dignity was injured, for he had his own ideas as to what the man of God should do to cure him of his leprosy; for mind you he was a man accustomed to attention being paid him, and thus curt off hand treatment was too much for his vanity and wounded pride.

But my beloved friends, I want you to see there is more in the words than the passionate and petulent outburst of an offended man, vexed because no fuss had been made over him; for I really believe that he honestly believed that if washing could do the business in hand then Abana and Pharpar were better than Jordan.

And why should he not think so? For Abana and Pharpar were really wonderful rivers; Damascus owed everything to them, and judging by appearances there were far superior to the muddy, turbulent Jordan, so that if it were a mere matter of washing there were better rivers at him in Damascus. So he exclaimed, "May I not wash in them and clean?"

I find multitudes saying the same thing today—they are praising the rivers of Damascus at the expense of the rivers of God. They are loud and emphatic in their assertions that the secular rivers are better than all the rivers of God.

Let me make my meaning clear: everybody is agreed that there is something radically wrong with the world—and the Bible and the church frankly recognize the tragic evil of the world and ther is not to be found in the Bible the fainest trace of that ... mushy silly optimism so fashionable in some quarters that claims ... everything is just as it should be. ... [illegible] ... fatally wrong and Infinite sacrifice must be made to set it right."

We are facing this poignant and tragic fact of sin and shame-blighted and ruined life all around us, and the Church and the Bible bear testimony that there is but one hope of cleansing—the fountain that is open in the House of David for sin and uncleanness, in which men may wash away their vileness and disease of sin and find health, life and peace.

The voice of the Church and the Bible is one, "Go and Wash." Human means can never achieve that. Redeeming passion of Divine love alone can accomplish it, and why do men everywhere ignore this fact and sustain an attitude of contemptuous indifference and make up their minds there is no help from the Church or the Bible?

Because their confidence is in the rivers of Damascus and not in the rivers of Israel.

I think of education and the people who are enamoured of it; of the people who think it supreme and think it to be the panacea for every ill. Nobody doubts that culture will do a great deal; we all believe that a better understanding of the relation of education to the changing problems of life today, but education cannot change the leprosy of the human heart.

I have friends whose supreme confidence is social betterment—to them this is the river to wash away heart filth of humanity.

There is no doubt thatm uch of the wretchedness and sin and woe of the world is due to conditions under which the people live—the unkindly and unhospitable conditions which produce a vast amount of human misery—the poverty created by the slum and tenement with all their deadly results on chastity and purity.

Pitiful wages are a fruitful cause of immorality and vice; certain kinds of work coarses and brutalize the nature of human beings, and thus it is that people are thinking that the salvation of the world is to be brought about through social betterment and thus turn their backs on the gospel of the Son of God and embrace the gospel of social comfort.

Better housing, better food, better clothing are all desirable, but they are not the rivers to wash away the sin of the human heart.

Stand the Wear

Some fears ago a minister asked Jane Addams of Hull House upon whom did she rely for volunteer workers in her social work—creedless altruists or members of the Church of Jesus Christ? Although the settlement is run under social auspices she frankly replied, "they are all Christians from the Evangelical churches; I have had many altruists try, but I never knew any slum worker stand the wear and tear of our work for three weeks unless inspired by Christlike love found in the churches."

We ought all to stand for improving the conditions of social life; for every child born into this world an unfettered chance to grow up clean and honorable and pure; we should all rejoice in the cultivation of philanthrophy and oing good—they have made the world tolerable for many thousands; we don't deny the richness and beauty of these rivers, but are they sufficient for the world's need?

Can a man wishing them and be clean? Do they cope successfully with the pain and misery of the world? Can we dispense with the rivers of Israel? Is it necessary any longer to wash in them and be clean? How may weary and sinning souls are there that can hang their hearts on the promises of cleansing in rivers of Abana and Pharpar?

These rivers never cleansed or saved any man. Trust in a personal Christ alone can save; "Other refuge have I none."

If it were matter of a man's circumstances, then never mind Jordan; our secular rivers might banish his ignorance and the squalor and wrong of the world, but that is not alone the mischief: sin is the matter we have to deal with.

Naaman might wash in Abana and Pharpar and be clean from his dirt, but he could not wash in them and be clean from his leprosy; the leper must go to Jordan and wash for Jordan can do what Abana and Pharpar can never do. eW may for a time ignore this solemn truth and try to forget it, but there comes a day when it is no use to talk to a man about the rivers of Damascus ...

(Continued on Page Five)

Queenstown in Sorrow, Prepares to Bury the Unidentified Dead

Queenstown, Monday.—Most of the survivors of the Lusitania left yesterday for their homes. No names were added to the meagre list, and the only figures augmented were those of the identified dead. No addtional deaths were reported at the hospitals.

While the soldiers toiled in the warm spring sun in the graveyard of a church on the hill digging graves for the unknown dead, who will be buried there today, groups of relatives and friends of the passengers went from morgue to morgue—some finding what they sought, others turning away to continue their search with ebbing hope.

The public funeral today, which a representative of the Viceroy of Ireland will attend, will be too large for the ordinary facilities of Queenstown and Cork, and trucks will be pressed into service to carry the coffins. The funeral, which will be in charge of the general commanding the district, will be marked by military pomp, such as is accorded to those who die in the armed service of their country.

Though too late to be of material assistance to their stranded countrymen, Captain William A. Castle and Alexander Miller, the American Military Attaches, arrived durin gthe day to confer with the American Consul, Wesley Frost. They left in au automobile for Kinsale Head to continue their investigation in behalf of the government.

The survivors are beginning to recover from their shock, and yesterday told more coherent stories of their experiences. Unlike those who were aboard the Titanic when she was sunk, they had little time for observation. None of them can relate more than what happened very near to them, with the result that little light has been shed on the last moments of Mr. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and other prominent passengers who are missing.

The reports of lifeboat inadequacy grow as the passengers are able to take a cooler view of te disaster. Many of the survivors maintain that only five out of the thirty-four lifeboats which were swung out were successfully launched. Others assert a general order for lowering the boats was not given until the second torpedo struck home. Yet all admit that as many passengers as possible obtained seats in such boats as were launched.

Fifty-two persons were picked up by one boat alone and thirty-four were found packed in another. The collapsible boats proved surprisingly efficient as unexpected havens for many struggling in the water, probably saving more lives than the regular lifeboats.

The American survivors, it is remarkable to note, have taken no action and have made no protest in any form embodying their experiences. These survivors are divided, roughly, into two classes—the first, those who never believed in the possibility of a tragedy and who are almost inarticulate with bitter hatred for Germany; the second, who took the risk with their eyes open and therefore do not expect their country to take drastic action on their account. Perhaps the most prominent of the latter class is Dr. Howard L. Fisher, of Washington, D. C., who, although condemning the handling of the lifeboats as grossly inefficient, sai dhe knew that he was risking his life in the war zone, and accepted what had happened to him as a matter of course.

"We were warned by the German government," said he, "and I, for one, do not want any official action by my country."

All express resentful anger that the British Admirality did not see fit to send a convoy for the ship.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt Last Seen Alive Aiding Woman Passenger

The Cunard Steamship Company last night announced the receipt of the following cable message from Liverpool:

"Up to midnight, Queenstown advises total number of survivors 764, including 462 passengers and 302 crew.

"One hundred and forty-four bodies recovered, of which eighty-seven identified and fifty-seven unidentified. Identified bodies comprise sixty five passengers, twenty-two crew.

"Number of persons injured: Thirty passengers and seventeen crew."

London, Monday.—Mr. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt offered up his life to save a woman passenger from death when the Lusitania took her final plunge off the Irish coast.

Standing on an upper deck, a life belt strapped about him, Mr. Vanderbilt was preparing to leap into the sea when he saw a young woman, alone and searching wildly for a boat or a life preserver. Stepping up to her, Mr. Vanderbilt removed his life belt and strapped it about the woman's body. Being unable to swim, he then turned away to seek another for himself. Less than a minute later the vessel's stern arose high above the water and she disappeared bow down.

This report of Mr. Vanderbilt's last minutes was brought to London yesterday by Mr. Thomas Slidell, of New York, who saw the incident.

It is officially announced that the British Board of Trade, with the concurrence of the Admiralty, has ordered an inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of the Lusitania. Lord Mersey has consented to conduct the inquiry.

Lord Mersey conducted the investigations into the sinking of the steamships Titanic and the Empress of Ireland.

A dispatch this morning from Liverpool says the official list of the survivors includes the names of 467 passengers and 274 crew.

The question asked in almost every English newspaper editorially is, "What will America do?" and while the newspapers are almost unanimous in deprecating any idea of attempting to predict the American attitude, there is ample evidence of the greatest anxiety to learn what action the United States will take.

DARDANELLES' STORMING CONTINUES; ARMY MOVING

London, Monday.—The Weekly Dispatch correspondent at Athens telegraphs:

"All day Friday there was a heavy bombardment by the allied fleets of the forts inside the Dardanelles, which was continued on Saturday.

"Telegrams from Tenedos announce that all the attention of the Allies is now devoted to Nagara, theo ther forts in the narrows being silenced and apparently completely destroyed, leaving only Nagara capable of defence.

"Simultaneously with the bombardment by the fleets the land expedition of the Allies, after fierce struggle, suceeded in capturing som important heights commanding Kilid Bahr. The battle is continuing furiously and the capture of the remaining heights probably will entail the surrender of the Turkish forces in that neighborhood.

"Twelve war ships are bombarding the forts at various points between Vouria and Smyrna to clear away the Turkish intrenchments."

CHINA GIVES VALUABLE RIGHTS TO JAPANESE

Peking, Monday 1:30 a.m.—Having reached an agreement with respect to Japan's demands on China the Plenipotentiaries of the two countries will now proceed to draft a treaty. The following are the important points in the terms of agreement.

Group 1, relating to Shantung Province.

Articles 1 and 2 stand as in the original demands. These provide that China will give her ful assent to the transfer to the Japanese by the German government of all rights and privileges heretofore enjoyed by German in Shantung, and that within the Province of Shantung, or along its sea border no territory or island shall be ceded or leased to a third Power.

Article 3 provides that China shall construct a railway from Chefoo or Lung-kow to join the Kiao-Chau-Chinan-Fu Railway with Japanese capital.

Relating to South Manchuria.

Article 2 provides that the Japanese shall be permitted to lease land in South Manchuria, temporarily or perpetually, for trading, industrial and agricultural purposes.

Article 3. The first clause provides that the Japanese shall be permitted freely to reside, travel, tarde and engage in industrial pursuits in Manchuria. The second clause provides that the Japanese will submit only to police and taxation regulations approved by Japan. Civil and criminal cases shall be tried by the authorities representing the same nationality as the defendant, land disputes between Japanese and Chinese shall be tried by the joint Chinese and Japanese authorities, according to the Chinese law and custom.

ENDEAVORERS HIKING TO THE CONVENTION

Many young people of this city will be interested in the trip which two boys, Lloyd Erwin and Lee Smith, are making from Waxahachie, Texas, to Chicago. They plan to leave today from their home and walk the 1250 miles to Chicago in order to attend the World's Convention of Christian Endeavor, which convenes in that city July 7.

The young men will carry a message of greeting from Governor Ferguson of Texas to President Wilson, who is expected to deliver the opening address of the convention if affairs of state permit. It is expected that rallies will be held in each town where the boys stop over night. The young people of this vciinity, who belong to the Christian Endeavor society, expect to travel by quicker routes. It is anticipated that there will be 20,000 young people at the convention, which will be addressed by Billy Sunday, William Jennings Bryan, and other leading speakers.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 64 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 46

C. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
[illegible], Secretary and Associate Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3, 1879.

May 10, 1915

1900 COPIES OF THE EVENING TIMES ENTER FULTON HOMES EACH DAY

THE NATION'S CAPITOL.

Main Dimensions of Our Beautiful Building in Washington.

Our national capitol at Washington is a beautiful and impressive building. It fronts east and stands on a plateau eighty-eight feet above the level of the Potomac. The entire length of the building from north to south is 751 feet 4 inches, and its greatest dimension from east to west is 350 feet. The area covered by the building is 153,112 square feet.

The dome of the original central building was constructed of wood, covered with copper. This was replaced in 1856 by the present structure of cast iron. It was completed in 1865. The entire weight of iron used is 8,909,200 pounds. The dome is crowned by a bronze statue of Freedom, which is 19 feet 6 inches high and weighs 14,985 pounds.

The height of the dome above the base line of the east front is 287 feet 5 inches. The height from the top of the balustrade of the building is 217 feet 11 inches. The greatest diameter at the base is 135 feet 5 inches. The rotunda is 97 feet 6 inches in diameter and its height from the floor to the top of the canopy is 180 feet 3 inches.

The senate chamber is 113 feet 3 inches in length by 83 feet 3 inches in width and 36 feet in height. The galleries will accommodate 1,000 persons. The representatives' hall is 139 feet in length by 93 feet in width and 36 feet in height.—Philadelphia Press.

PLANETS AND OUR WEATHER.

Despite Popular Belief There Is No Connection Between Them.

That the planets and the moon have an effect upon the weather on the earth is a common belief. This belief is baseless, for all changes of weather depend upon differences in temperature.

Rainfall is due to the accumulation of water in the atmosphere. This water can accumulate only by being evaporated from the surface of the earth. And evaporation requires heat. Winds also are due to heat—greater warmth in one place than in another causing the air to rush toward where the warm air is rising.

If the moon and the planets could furnish heat they might affect the weather. But the heat they furnish is so infinitesimally small that it is not enough to change the temperature an appreciable fraction of a degree. The amount of heat they send us has actually been measured, but it needed the most delicately sensitive of instruments to perceive it.

Another proof that neither the planets nor the moon have any effect upon our weather is that careful comparisons of the weather with the positions of the planets and the moon show that there is no relation between them. If there were we should have the same weather when the planets were in the same position, which is not the case.—New York World.

Japan's Good Roads.

Japan is peculiarly well off in respect of good highways. The Tokaido, which runs from Kioto to Tokyo, is over 300 miles in length and, as the writer can testify, is admirably constructed. There is also the Nakasendo, which is even longer and passes through some of the finest scenery in the world. The reason of Japan's excellence in the matter of roads is that in the old days, not so very long ago, the daimios, or territorial nobles, had to journey to Tokyo once a year in order to pay their respects to the sovereign. They traveled by road, with great retinues, and if the highways were not in perfect condition, feudal justice was meted out to the delinquents.—London Spectator.

Good Company.

As friends and companions, as teachers and consolers, as recreators and amusers, books are always with us and always ready to respond to our wants. We can take them with us in our wanderings or gather them around us at our firesides. In the lonely wilderness or the crowded city their spirit will be with us, giving a meaning to the seemingly confused movements of humanity, and peopling the desert with their own bright creations.—John Alfred Langford.

[illegible] millions of people have [illegible] that the Democratic party [illegible] the standard of living [illegible] reduces the cost or not.

THE HUMAN SIDE

Now that the public hearing has been given the Brown bill and the matter is sealed and closed, except for the signature of Governor Whitman to the article, the question arises, who will get the most out of it—the bill—the taxpayers, who are as well the renters, the manufacturers, the merchants or the men who are to hold office in Fulton under its provisions.

To those who opposed the measure was given a chance to learn how really powerless they become when tilted against a force of men entrenched as were those instrumental in having the bill presented in Albany. To the citizens, business men and bankers who spoke Friday night against the bill, it must have been evident that a hostile press, with other features yet to come to light, the people have little in common with the powers that be when it comes to riding roughshod over protests. To the men who stood pat for the passage of the Brown bill it must be apparent that their part was well-played, and too, in spite of the fact that those who favored the bill and those who opposed it, are of precisely the same texture as the rest of us.

To the good citizen of Fulton it must be apparent that The Evening Times had a motive in its opposition to the passage of the Brown bill, which was and is, this newspaper's duty to uphold the cause of good government, so that we may all live our lives to work for the physical improvement of the town.

After all, it was good to have the contention over the Brown bill, because it brought to light the fact that a number of women and men have their eyes upon affairs in this city, and are determined to place the local gvvernment upon a plane higher than has heretofore existed. As well is one reminded of the fact that all men, being 90 per cent. water, are much alike, and that we are all acting from the same motives—to build for Fulton, the city that has wonderful possibilities of becoming the cleanest and most beautiful spot in the Empire State.

Political Views of State Editors

The question of State finances is such a complicated one that many voters are likely to be bewildered by the contradictory claims made by politicians. There is one fact, however, which anybody can comprehend. The State is now borrowing money to pay its expenses to October 1, when the next fiscal year begins. Of course, this would be unnecessary if the Glynn administration had appropriated enough money instead of trying to make a record for economy—Kingston Freeman.

* * *

The Republicans determined that the State should clear up its obligations and pay hereafter as it went along. This is the way good business men do and it is the way in which the State of New York should manage its finances.—Amsterdam Recorder.

* * *

The present legislature has not been endeavoring to create new offices and more of them with higher salaries for the sake of taking care of faithful henchmen. It has, however, enacted legislation that would be in harmony with the pledges made to the people that would reduce the expenses of government and will give to the people a better service.—Oneida Post.

* * *

The leader of the majority was quite within his rights when he charged the conditions a Republican administration was forced to monfront squarely up to financial manipulations of the last Democratic administration, and the fact that the Republicans are now in position to show results far more favorable than might have been expected must be attributed to the careful regard for economy that has been consistently manifest from the starting of the year 1915.—Gloversville Leader.

* * *

All the cries of ripper legislation and steam roller action are being raised by the Democratic office holders, because they are losing positions as a result of the resentment of the people at the conducting of state government by the Democratic leaders and officials—Yonkers News.

* * *

The financial problem, how to correct the deficiences of four years of disastrous Tammany administration, and put the State finances on a sound basis, has engaged nearly all the attention of this legislature. It could not correct all the evils at once and set the state free from debt in a day, but it has done what could be done now and laid the foundations for a sound system of state finance in the future, which will demonstrate itself if the Republican party is kept in power and its program is not upset by a new Tammany raid.—Watertown Times.

* * *

The Whitman idea is that the state should pay what it owes, that it should do business in a business-like way, and so he will approve of appropriations which, as the head of the state government, he believes are necessary. The state is at last back to a sane basis of conducting its affairs and everybody should be thankful for it.—Plattsburgh Press.

* * *

Democratic politicians who find in improved business encouragement for 1916, overlook the point that it is confidence in the return of the Republican party to power which is in the main responsible for the improved conditions. The results of the elections of 1914 and 1915 have been the biggest factor in creating business confidence. War orders have helped a great deal, but we had enormous war orders before confidence returned. The full crew referendum vote in Missouri and the Chicago elections have encouraged business. The restoration of New York to the Republican column played an important part. Unless the federal administration shall again run amuck with business times should steadily improve.—Watertown Standard.

* * *

The direct tax levied represents not only the requirements of the year to come but also what was needed last year when the levy was vetoed on the even of the State election in order to make an appearance of Democratic economy. This fact is well understood, but it required not a little courage for the Republicans to meet the crisis and put the State on its financial feet.—Olean Times.

Opinions

Their Flags

The Vice-president of the United States now has a special flag, consisting of the coat of arms of the United States on a white field.—Washington Dispatch.

Why stop there? Some further suggestions:

Secretary of State: Bunch of grapes in Chautauqua circles, surrounded by megaphone on a purple field.

Secretary of the Navy: Sunday-school banner, with sarsaparilla bottles rampant.

Other suggestions will be welcome.—Life.

Tip for Pullman Stockholders

Our country entertains a high regard for Robert T. Lincoln for reasons unnecessary to mention. For many years he was president of the Pullman Car Company, and he is now the chairman of its board of directors. Testifying on the subject of tips collected by Pullman car porters, Mr. Lincoln said: "I do not think the arrangement is nice at all." He admitted that if the porters were not allowed to accept tips the company would immediately be obliged to increase their wages, which are now only $27.50 a month. The practical effect of the tip to a porter is that it saves the company wages. Therefore, the passenger's tip really goes to the Pullman Company stockholder, a fact which Mr. Lincoln readily admitted. How fortunate the Pullman shareholders are compared with those who own the railroads which haul the Pullman cars! There is quite as much reason for tipping the brakeman in an ordinary car as for giving a fee to the Pullman porter. Hence if the Pullman rule of having the passengers tip the Pullman stockholder is valid, the plan might be extended to employes of all railroads and public service companies.

By paying its porters a ridiculously low wage and forcing them to live upon the passengers who have already paid the company a big price for their accommodation, the Pullman concern has been able to pile up immense profits. It is one of the meanest practices known in America. It ought to be made a legal offense to tip a car porter, as it is a legal offense to offer any other bribe for service.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Moving Pictures and Temperance

Magistrate Leach of the Second District, which includes Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island, finds the moving picture show a great force against intemperance. In 1907, he says, with a total population of 1,775,000 in the district, there were 16,000 persons arraigned for drunkenness. Last year, with a population of 2,267,625, there were only 8,382 arraignments. For this the magistrates hold the moving pictures primarily responsible, and so, declares Magistrate Leach, do the saloonkeepers.

Judges, police officials, social workers seem agreed that the saloon is gradually ceasing to be the "poor man's club"—to the extent, at least, that numbers of working men do not spend their evenings in saloons, as they used to do. They may drop in for a drink or two on the way home from work, but after the evening meal they are much more likely to take the wife and children around the corner to the moving picture theatre than to wander off to drink with other men and settle the world'sp roblems across the bar.

This is a tendency altogether wholesome, which should show its beneficial results in crime statistics and savings bank deposits, for the "movie" are notl ikely to cost as much, week in and week out, as the saloon would, and they certainly do not impair working capacity as hard liquor does. There has been debate, at times, whether flamboyant films have not excited some of the youth of the land to crime. If they have, the account should be more than settled by their acceleration of the temperance movement.—New York Tribune.

Best makes of Carriages. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Life's Happy Way

True worth is in being, not seeming,
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good, not in dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.
For whatever men say in blindness,
Or in spite of their fancies of youth,
There is nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure;
We cannot do wrong and feel right,
Nor can we give pain and feel pleasure
For justice avenges each slight.
The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow and straight
For the children of men.
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

PRETTY STATIONS ON RAILROADS

Importance of Attractive Appearance From Car Window.

DEPOTS ARE INDICATORS.

First Impressions Are the Most Powerful and Lasting, Therefore the Get Up of a Suburban Station Has Its Influence Upon the Passerby.

When it is remembered that first impressions are the most powerful and the most lasting it will be easy to realize how highly important to a suburb is the appearance of the railroad station, which is generally the entrance to the village, writes Robert H. Van Comb in Art and Progress. With a majority of the people the opinion which is formed of a place is based very largely upon its appearance as seen from the vantage point of a car window. The village may possess attractions which do not appear to the casual passerby, but the station and its surroundings are generally considered representative of the place, and upon their appearance a judgment—either favorable or unfavorable—is very apt to be formed.

AN ATTRACTIVE SUBURBAN STATION.

The problem is complicated by the fact that in the vast majority of instances the business quarter of a village is situated immediately about the station, and such quarters, which are apt to be more or less unattractive, have a great effect upon the appearance of what is the very heart of the community life. There are countless instances, particularly in the newer suburbs of large cities, where the entire development has been controlled and directed by a firm of real estate operators, where the problem has been very skilfully and successfully managed and the station and its surroundings are both beautiful and picturesque. In most suburbs, however, the ownership of such property is in the hands of many different individuals, and it is difficult to awaken the public spirit or to obtain the co-operation necessary for any plan of really successful betterment.

Many years ago the officials of one railroad so fully realized the opportunities which were theirs that the care of its stations—the rearrangement of such as already existed and the planning of those yet to be established—was given into the charge of an official assisted by a corps of draftsmen, designers and landscape gardeners and aided by the resources of a nursery for the growing of shrubbery and other plants. The dignity and beauty of many of the suburban railroad stations about an eastern city prove the wisdom of the plan.

The forlorn and unattractive station was taken in hand—its architectural shortcomings were quickly remedied by a clever architect who supervised the alterations made by the company's construction department. An equally clever landscape gardener would decide upon the treatment necessary to secure the most attractive use of any natural advantages which the surroundings might possess and the best means of concealing what could not be remedied. The newer stations presented opportunities for working out really beautiful results both in the planning of the stations and in the arrangement of their grounds. The late H. H. Richardson, one of the greatest of American architects, designed several of the station buildings, which even today are models of all that a suburban railroad station should be.

Where the initiative is not taken by the railroad authorities it must logically come from residents of the village itself, and there are countless instances of the improvement of entire communities and the awakening of local civic pride by village improvement leagues.

A Live Municipality.

The celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of Wilmerding, Pa., will be held some time early in September next. The tentative plans which will be worked out by the general committee and many subcommittees of the Wilmerding board of trade will include several big historical pageants which will detail the history of Wilmerding from the time it was a hamlet of [illegible] in North Versailles township until the present time.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Acute Indigestion.

The quickest remedy for the trouble is water. Drink one tumblerful of water after another as rapidly as possible until six or eight have been taken. This method dislodges the irritating substances in the stomach and causes vomiting and instant relief from the pain and intense nausea. After all the undigested foods have been removed lie down and rest and suck pieces of ice until the stomach is comfortable. A little brandy in ice water, a teaspoonful poured over a few pieces of ice, may be sipped every few minutes to relieve the weakness and while waiting for the doctor to arrive.

NEW RAPID FIRE GUN.

Water Cooled Weapon That Has Been Adopted by Uncle Sam.

After a series of tests the United States army has adopted a water cooled rapid fire gun of the type now in use on the European battlefields. The barrel of the gun is incased in a water jacket to prevent its becoming overheated. This is refilled during heavy firing, but when water is not easily available an apparatus is employed which condenses the steam generated in the jacket and allows the water to be used over and over again.

The gun, which is operated by recoil, has a maximum firing speed of about 500 shots a minute, a somewhat slower speed than the air cooled guns in ordinary use, but the water cooled guns are expected to fire a greater number of shots in a long period because of the saving of the time consumed by the air cooled gun in inserting the short feed strips.

The regulation 30 caliber cartridge is employed, and the range is 1,500 to 1,800 yards. Ammunition is fed into it by a belt which holds 250 rounds, the shells being automatically inserted and ejected as long as pressure is exerted on the trigger.

The gun, which weighs ninety-six pounds, is set on a tripod so constructed as to make the weapon available for use against air craft.—Indianapolis News.

COAL AT PANAMA.

Mammoth Storage Plants Planned For the Canal Route.

Coal storing plants of mammoth magnitude are being planned on the Panama canal route. One of the storage plants is to be situated at Cristobal and another at Balboa.

It is planned to have a coal storage basin at Cristobal with a capacity of 290,000 tons and one at Balboa with a capacity of 160,000 tons. In each place the storage will be within a large basin made of re-enforced concrete, in which approximately half of the coal will be stored under water for use in time of war and the other half above water to be added to and taken from continually for the ordinary uses of commercial and government vessels.

It also is planned if the policy should be approved to be able to lease parts of the storage basin to such private coaling companies as may wish to maintain their own coal stores on the isthmus, but in such cases all of the handling will be done by the government plant, a suitable charge being made for the service.—New York Press.

Calling on Wilson.

The average person who calls on the president is in no hurry to leave, and the less important his errand the longer he takes to explain it. President Wilson listens patiently, although perhaps with little enjoyment; then he gets up and moves toward the door, and it must be a very obtuse person who cannot take the hint, and if something more than a hint is needed then the president shakes hands with him, but it is done graciously and in a way that is flattering to the person who without knowing it is being dismissed.—New York Telegram.

Our Cotton.

The United States department of agriculture reports that both long and short staple cotton in California yields 500 pounds to the acre, while in the next best record—that of Missouri—the yield runs 329 pounds of long staple and 295 pounds of short. The price of short staple in California is about the same as elsewhere, but that of long staple is higher than in any state except Florida.

Breaks the Silo Record.

So far as is known the silo which John Edwards, who lives near Englewood, Kan., is building will be the largest in the world. It will be fifty feet high, fifty feet across and fifteen feet in the ground. When completed it will hold 2,500 tons of ensilage. Mr. Edwards owns 10,000 head of cattle.—Kansas City Journal.

New Territory North of Siberia.

Valuable discoveries of new land north of Siberia, says Reuter, have been announced as the result of the hydrographical work in those seas of the Russian ice breakers Taimyr and Vaigats. The new territory stretches for some 200 miles.—London Chronicle.

Size of Zeppelins.

Zeppelins vary in diameter and length, but most of them are of large size, being almost as big as battleships. [illegible] lifting power of 44,000 pounds.

The Little Stranger

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Singular it is, but nevertheless true, that there are a great many desertions on one side or the other in couples that have been married a year, and I believe that if statistics on the subject could be obtained it would be found that the nearer the wedding the greater the number of desertions. There is a reason for this. Up to the time of marriage the parties are independent of each other. After marriage there are two wills, between which there must necessarily be a certain amount of clashing.

Jim and Lizzie Burden were one of those couples that met, but did not mingle. Jim found his wife so he considered her—so unreasonable that he hadn't been married a week before the sweetness had turned to gall. Lizzie considered herself so badly treated that she could not possibly endure to live with such a man. So one day when he came home from work he found his wife gone.

Mrs. Jim didn't regret what she had done till she fell in with a motherly old lady, to whom she told her story, and the lady informed her of the cause of their disagreement, as it has been stated at the beginning of this story. Lizzie wondered if that was so. Then she began to think that she had acted unwisely. The next thing to do was to go back to her home and make up with Jim. She did not find him. The house was shut up, and Jim had gone, no one knew where.

When a baby was born to Lizzie she regretted more than ever her action in leaving her husband. The first baby is the first chain bound around a married couple—the first departure from a romance that may have waned and entry upon real married life. But now that the baby had come and Jim was not there to rejoice with her Lizzie wept bitter tears.

Meanwhile Jim, after waiting a week for his wife's return, got angry with her and, declaring that he had had enough of married life, walked off without leaving any address. Jim was a carpenter and had finished a job the day of the separation. It was easy for him to lose himself, and he took no pains to leave any clew by which he could be found by his wife in case she repented of leaving him and wished to return. He knew nothing about the baby or perhaps that might have changed it all.

Jim concluded to make another change in his life. He was a born trader and always came out ahead in any deal he made. He determined to leave off carpentering and turn trader. He had left the little money he possessed with his wife and hadn't a cent to his name. But to the real business man money is not always essential. It is often supplied by credit. Jim made up for its absence in [illegible]. He bought a lot of damaged coffee on credit for a long [illegible] fancy name and sold it for about [illegible] the usual price. This succeeded so well that within a few months he had turned over several job lots of coffee that he had bought cheap and not only made some money, but established a trade for his especial brand of coffee.

It occurred to Jim one day that his quarrels with his wife had nearly all been from the cause of want of sufficient funds. Now that he was making money possibly the troubles might not arise; at any rate, they were far less likely to arise. He began to recall the hours he and Lizzie had spent together when they were courting. He wondered if she had tried to find him. Then he thought what a brute he had been to leave her without giving her any opportunity to find him in case she wished to do so. Then he wondered if after all he hadn't a good deal of selfish brutality in him to have tried to impose his will on a woman and because she wouldn't brook it and had left him he had made the break between them permanent by taking his departure from their home without giving her an opportunity to find him and make it up.

The ladder of repentance usually has a number of rounds, and Jim's had its full share. When he had reached the top round he felt like plunging down headforemost on the other side and breaking his neck. But instead of that he set about finding Lizzie.

That was no easy job. She had no relatives to whom he could go for information, and she was so distressed, so poor, so broken in spirit, that she shrank from every one who had known her. When the baby came she secured admission to a maternity hospital, and when the time approached for her to get about again, realizing that she must work for her living and could not work encumbered with a baby, she determined to leave it at a foundlings' home.

She was planning for this one day when she saw the door of the room she occupied at the hospital slowly open. Then a face appeared, looking cautiously in, as if fearing to disturb her.

Great heavens! It was Jim's!

The sight of his pale wife lying there with a little sleeper nestled up against her was too much for Jim's equanimity. With tears coursing down his cheeks, he stalked to the bed and took his wife and child together in his arms.

Neither Jim nor Lizzie had any fear of further disagreements. They would [illegible]

BRYANT'S POETIC CAREER.

Two Facts About His Greatest Work, "Thanatopsis."

Bryant was nearly twenty-three years old when "Thanatopsis" was first printed in the North American Review. So much has been said about the astounding precocity of this poet and so many errors have accumulated around the publication of his masterpiece that it may be well to state the facts.

We know just two facts about this work. First, it was published when Bryant was almost twenty-three—not young for a poetic genius; second, that in its original published form in the North American Review it is not a remarkable poem.

It was in the 1821 edition of Bryant's poems, when the author was twenty-six or twenty-seven, that the work first appeared in its universally known form. Only a few minor changes were made after that date. This disposes of the generally accepted statement that "Thanatopsis" is a juvenile masterpiece.

Bryant was, however, a precocious poet, although his precocity is not displayed in his greatest work. One of the most extraordinary facts about his poetical career is that he actually published verse during the administration of Thomas Jefferson and during the administration of Rutherford B. Hayes. So long a period and so slender an output speak well for his fastidious taste. —North American Review.

ARMS OF ANTWERP.

They Recall the Queer Custom That Gave the City Its Name.

Historians relate that Antwerp takes its name from a castle which in Frankish times marked the site of the city. This castle was built to protect the entrance to the Scheldt and to prevent foreign traders introducing goods into the country without paying toll to the sovereign lord.

The penalty for theft and smuggling was in those days the cutting off of a hand, and, as in this case the severed members were thrown into the Scheldt, the castle came to be known as Andhunerbo—or, in Flemish, Antwerpen—"the place of hand throwing." The castle and two severed hands appear on the city arms to this day.

Antwerp cathedral's tapering spire was once compared by Charles V. to mechlin lace. The towers of the old Steen castle, the fortress palace of the former counts of Antwerp, break the center of the line of docks and look as stolid and formidable as in the days when the castle was necessary to guard the shipping. Here were held those great fairs which during the middle ages served to attract merchants from all parts of the civilized world.—London Standard.

Trial by Jury.

The New York Law Journal says on the subject of trial by jury:

"While we do not think that trial by jury ought to be abolished or that there is any increasing sentiment in that direction, we do believe that the system should be modified by dispensing with the requirement for unanimous verdicts. This would obviate the element of individual eccentricity as an impediment to the administration of justice. Mental idiosyncrasy on the part of judges is constantly exhibited and scarcely excites comment. An eminent and very able judge will dissent from the ruling of his associates when it is extremely difficult to understand how so gifted a mind could have gone off on that particular tangent. By permitting affirmances or reversals, notwithstanding dissent, the personal equation is eliminated."

Modeled After an Ancient Tomb.

The temple of the Scottish rite in Washington is a handsome white marble structure about 150 feet square and rises to a height of 150 feet above the street level. At either side of the main entrance is an immense marble sphinx. A row of tall Ionic columns surrounds the second story. The architects followed closely the design of the ancient tomb of King Mausolus, which stood in Halicarnassus and was one of the seven wonders of the world. It was built by the wife of the king and was decorated with hundreds of wonderful statues. This old tomb became so famous that many buildings were modeled after it, but this is the only structure in America in which the design has been used.

In Biology.

Teacher—John, how can you tell the dogwood tree?

John—By its bark.

And his answer was correct, even if it did cause a laugh.

Another bright answer captured in biology:

Teacher—What animal supplies us with ham?

John—The butcher.—Chicago Herald.

Two Models.

Mrs. Toggerblossom—Vain man! Did you never observe that designers take a woman's head to adorn many of your coins? Mr. Toggerblossom—No, but I have observed that designers take many of my coins to adorn a woman's head.—National Monthly.

Easy Money.

"I give my wife half my salary every week to spend on the housekeeping and herself."

"And what do you do with the other half of your salary?"

"Oh, my wife borrows that."—Houston Post.

A man must be excessively stupid as [illegible] is no virtue but on his own side.—Addison.

CHIC PARISIAN FROCK.

Elaborate Afternoon Gown From Across the Waters.

BEAUTIFUL IMPORTED GARMENT.

In spite of the war Paris finds time to make wonderful frocks for the American importers, though Dame Rumor says her women are not wearing many gorgeous frocks during this terrible war. However, here is a sample of the handiwork of one great Parisian couturier who designs frocks even in the trenches.

Wavy goldenrod satin is draped in this instance with silk net which has an elaborate braiding of tan soutache. A girdle of the satin shows beneath the bolero bodice, which is also made of net and braided. Smart boots of two shades of tan leather are worn with this dress, and a parasol in blue and tan is carried. A hat of blue is trimmed with daisies, completing this interesting costume.

DOMESTIC KINKS.

New Methods Used In the Household Learned From Professionals.

Window washing is one of the tasks dreaded by many women, especially the outside of the windows, which are hard to reach. Notice the men who make a profession of window washing, who wash the windows of large stores, and see that they have developed several excellent washers, chief of them being the type which utilizes the so called rubber "squeegee" for drying the panes of glass.

This consists of a galvanized container of triangular box shape which will hold over a quart of water. At one edge of this box is fitted a pad of absorbent felt. At another edge is a rubber squeegee. The whole is equipped with a short metal handle, into which a long wooden handle is to be fitted. When in use the container is filled with water, to which are added a few drops of ammonia or alcohol. The pad is then allowed to soak and the whole device moved vertically up and down the window. When the window has been so washed the other edge of the device is turned toward the glass and the rubber squeegee used, which practically dries the panes of glass. This is the first device of the kind which adapts the commercial washer to the home.

Another kind of washer with points of advantage is a tonglike device fitted with bunches of chamois at each end. These are dampened and the tong fitted over the window casing so that one chamois operates on the outside, the other on the inside pane. This is particularly good in the upper stories, where it is dangerous to sit outside or impossible to reach the windows by any handled device. In cold weather either alcohol or kerosene will prevent water freezing as it is used on the windows.

GUEST ROOM FANCY.

While the careful hostess will not overload her guest room with a horde of useless trifles that will not fit any other place in the house, she will appreciate this latest novelty in a dainty guest room accessory and may hang it with a free conscience on the dressing table for her next feminine visitor. It is a light tinted chiffon bag, a shapeless affair gathered on to a ribbon covered embroidery hoop. In it are piled perhaps a dozen individual powder puffs of softest cotton. Each bit of fluffiness is tied with a piece of narrow ribbon of the color chosen for the bag, and a jaunty bow offers a comfortable way of holding the diminutive puff when in operation. The real practical value of such a dainty bag lies, of course, in the fact that a guest returning from various pleasure jaunts more or less soiled as to face and fatigued [illegible] cotton for applying the refreshing bit of alcohol, powder or rouge.

LABOR AND ART CLASHED.

The Battle Was Rather One Sided and Labor Won the Night.

Among the experiences which Sir Frederick Cowen, the eminent composer, relates in his book "My Art and My Friends" is the following: Once while conducting in Melbourne a terrible noise of hammering started overhead as soon as the concert began.

"I put down my baton and stopped," writes Sir Frederick; "so did the noise. Thinking it was over, I began again; so did the noise. I then sent a messenger with a polite request that the noise should cease. After about ten minutes, during which the hammering grew more and more persistent, the messenger returned, and I said to him:

"'Did you give them my message?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'And what was their answer?'

"'They said, "Tell Mr. Cowen we've got our contract to finish by a certain time and we ain't going to stop for no concert or nobody."'

"Upon this I turned to the audience and said:

"'Ladies and gentlemen, as you have possibly noticed, there has been a fight between labor and art. Labor has won. I am very sorry, and I wish you all good night.'

"Then I dismissed the orchestra, and there was no concert that evening."

FIRE RISKS ON FARMS.

Safety First Should Be as Much the Rule There as Elsewhere.

A contributor to Farm and Fireside shows how appalling fire risks are on farms. He tells how to reduce some of these fire risks and writes in part as follows:

"The inveterate smoker is about as dangerous as a walking stick of dynamite. It makes me shudder to see a man smoking around the farm buildings. One man I know never will forget the way he was run off the farm when I caught him smoking a cigarette while stacking hay.

"Another dangerous practice of which the average man is guilty is that of carrying ordinary matches loose in his pockets. He should carry either safety matches or keep the ordinary kind in a metal box.

"On most farms the lantern is still the usual light for working about the buildings after dark. A good way to keep it clean and safe is, first, to take out the burners and clean them by boiling in strong soapsuds. This will keep the ventilating passages of the burner working properly. Then wipe all leaking or spilled oil off the base.

"Never set a lantern down. Either hold it or hang it up. Then when it is accidentally struck it will swing instead of upsetting."

A Gladstone Anecdote.

Lord Alverstone tells this anecdote of Gladstone in his "Recollections:"

"Mr. Gladstone was very much interested in the Caucasus. I had a friend, Captain X., who had recently come home from that district, and I gave him a letter of introduction to Mr. Gladstone. A few days later I met Mr. Gladstone in Parliament street. He stopped me and said, 'Your friend, Captain X., knows more about the Caucasus than any man I ever met.' A few minutes afterward I met Captain X. in Pall Mall. I said to him, 'Well, you have made a great impression, Mr. Gladstone.' 'Have I?' he said. 'Yes,' I replied. 'He says you know more about the Caucasus than any man he ever met.' 'Well,' said Captain X., 'that is very strange, for, though I was with him for three-quarters of an hour, I made only three observations.'"

Leather Medals.

Leather medals were originally conferred as a genuine mark of honor. When King John of France, captured at Agincourt, was forced to pay to Edward III. of England a ransom of 3,000,000 gold crowns to effect his release he was left without precious metal for coins or decorations. So he found it necessary to pay the palace expenses with leather money. He also used leather medals when he wished to confer honor on some nobleman. The custom quickly arose of presenting leather medals as a burlesque distinction.—American Boy.

Discretion.

"Mother"—Elsie's eyes were round with horror—"that little boy next door just said the awfulest thing."

"Come tell mother, dear."

"Oh, I couldn't possibly tell you; it was too awful."

"Elsie, tell me instantly."

Elsie backed toward the door. "I think I'd better run out in the garden and play. I feel it coming on that I'm going to tell."—New York Post.

Sound Advice.

"I wish Ingomar to think only of me."

"I would not distract his thoughts too much from business, my dear," counseled her mother. "Remember you will need a great many expensive things."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Why He Failed.

"I understand his marriage was a failure."

"Yes; he tried to run it the way he ran his business."

"How do you mean?"

"He was never in the office."—Detroit Free Press.

Gentle Gertrude.

Penelope—Gertrude is a gentle creature, isn't she? Percival—Yes; instead of whipping the cream she just scolds it.—Youngstown Telegram.

It belongs to great men to have great defects.—French Proverb.

For the Children

Miss Alice Tainter and Her Dog of High Degree.

Photo by American Press Association.

Every year at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, in New York city, there is held a show of dogs, usually of the pet class. This year the show was held as usual, and it happened that a girl won one of the most coveted prizes with her pet animal. The girl, whose picture is shown above with her pet, is Miss Alice Beatrice Tainter. Her dog, a toy bull, was first in his class. The interesting thing about this event is that Alice did not dream that her dog would win a blue ribbon (which means first prize), when she entered him for the contest. She of course believed that her pet was about the cutest and best that ever was seen, but she was also aware that amongst so many there might possibly be a dog which the judges would prefer over her pet. However, her hopes were realized, as it turned out, for to her dog was awarded the blue ribbon as the best of its breed. She was so overcome at the judges' decision that she was in a solemn mood when the photograph man took a snapshot.

Portrait In Words.

One of the company having gone out of the room, the rest agree upon a person (man or woman) whose identity the absentee is to guess from the answers to questions which he puts to the company one by one. The only answers allowed being either "yes" or "no," the task of recognizing the chosen person is not always easy.

The "portrait" may be that of a private person or a public character. In the former case he or she must be generally known and, of course, to the guesser.

At a signal the questioner enters the room and at once proceeds to business by general questions to settle sex ("Am I a man?") and distinction ("Does everybody know me?"), and then step by step, by a process of elimination, narrows the range of choice to such an extent that he may be enabled to "spot" the subject.

Sometimes the guesser himself is the chosen person, and it is a long time, as a rule, before this likelihood dawns upon him—if, indeed, it ever does. It simplifies answers and makes for clearness for the guesser to identify himself with the person selected. "Is it a woman?" is less pleasing and less businesslike than "Am I a woman?"—even if the questioner should be a man.

A Cat In a Trunk.

A Missouri housewife was cleaning up her garret when by some means the family cat got into an old trunk filled with clothing and was shut in. Just ten days later some one in the garret heard pussy's feeble cry, and when the lid was lifted it had barely strength enough to crawl out.

It had torn the clothing in the trunk all to pieces in its clawings and had gnawed the sides nearly through in several places. But perhaps the most singular circumstance was found in the manner in which the cat took care of itself after securing liberty.

Milk and meat and water were set before it in liberal quantities, but the cat would not touch the meat and lapped the water and milk only a little, with frequent rests, and this proceeding it continued through the whole afternoon. If that cat had been a human being it would have swallowed all that was placed before it at one gulp and then died.

A Hint For Boy Scouts.

Practically everywhere in the United States can be found scenes and landmarks of interest and importance in the Indian lore of the region. This opens to every boy scout troop a wide field of valuable study and experience.

With a little effort it should be possible for a group of scouts to gather the whole Indian history of its territory. There are numerous sources. Maybe the public or some private library contains a county history or a history of the state which gives the more important general facts. Then from old inhabitants the local story can be pieced together.

A scout troop will find a lot of fun and excitement on hiking or camping expeditions by re-enacting the Indian stories of the country.—Chicago Tribune.

Enigma.

My first is a dog with a very bad [illegible]
My last is a girl and a very good [illegible]
My whole made a call at [illegible] hall.
Answer.—[illegible]

Counter Confessions

By SARAH BAXTER

James and Lucy Anderson were cousins. Their uncle, Peter Anderson, was very rich, and when he died a will was produced leaving all his property to James and Lucy jointly. This was no surprise, for it was well known that the testator, who had no children, had approved a plan of union between his favorite nephew and niece and that they should inherit his property. They were lovers, were engaged and soon to be married.

There was great surprise, therefore, when a half brother of the deceased named Torrance pronounced the will a forgery. This would give the property to the heirs at law, and Torrance would receive a third, or about $200,000. But a still greater surprise was sprung when Torrance accused James Anderson of the forgery. Unfortunately, both witnesses to this will were dead.

Torrance had divorced his wife, who had married another man named Baker. Baker had trouble with the woman and to get rid of her had gone to parts unknown. It was supposed that the origin of the accusation was in Mrs. Torrance-Baker, who had known Mr. Anderson, the testator, and swore that the signature to the will was not his.

When James Anderson received a visit from her attorney, Edward Markham, James asked whether, should an accused person confess the crime of which he was accused, his counsel would still be bound to defend him. The lawyer replied that a defense under the circumstances would be perfectly legitimate. Thus informed, James confessed that he had forged his uncle's will. Markham was greatly surprised, for young Anderson had a singularly honest countenance. Indeed, notwithstanding the confession, Markham did not believe that his client was guilty.

Markham took great interest in the case, for not only a fortune for a pair of young lovers, but young Anderson's acquittal of a heinous crime, were at stake. There was the usual examination of experts in chirography and the usual differences of opinion on the part of these gentlemen. Half of them pronounced the signature to the will to be genuine, while the other half declared that it was a palpable forgery. Most of the latter on comparing the signature with specimens of James Anderson's writing bore witness that he had written it. One expert declared that no man could have written it, for it bore many characteristics of a feminine hand.

Lucy Anderson attended the court regularly and was naturally under a terrible strain. When this testimony was adduced several persons among the spectators looked at her as much as to say, "Perhaps, after all, she is the criminal." This was too much for her. She fainted and was carried out of the courtroom.

The next development in the case was that Lucy sent for her lover's counsel and confessed to him that it was she and not James who had forged the will. This set a new complexion on the case for the attorney. He had two confessions, one from James, the other from Lucy Anderson. The former he had never believed, and as the case had proceeded he had conceived a suspicion that James was shielding some one. When Lucy had fainted on hearing that the forger must have been a woman the lawyer made up his mind that he had reached a solution of the problem.

He consulted with his client, informing him of Lucy's confession. James did not seem to be surprised on hearing of it, but stolidly adhered to what he had said, declaring that Lucy had confessed to save him from disgrace and imprisonment. He begged her counsel to conceal the latest confession and, if he could not save him on a technicality, to let the case go against him.

The prisoner was convicted, largely on the evidence of Mrs. Torrance-Baker, who at the time the will was made or supposed to have been made was on very friendly terms with the testator. James received his conviction stoically, as though conscious of doing a noble action instead of having committed a crime. Lucy was again carried out of the courtroom in a swoon. Shortly after the finding of the verdict James was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary.

Just before he was to be taken to prison who should turn up but Francis Baker, the second husband of Mrs. Torrance-Baker, who had been active in securing young Anderson's conviction. He had been in the interior of South America.

Baker's return produced a great bouleversement in the situation. He had witnessed a subsequent will to the one mentioned, leaving all his estate to his nephew with a provision that he should marry his cousin Lucy. A new hunt was instituted and this will found. Torrance also testified that the signature to the will James Anderson had been convicted of forging was genuine.

James Anderson's counsel applied for a new trial. The application was granted, and at the second trial, which was a mere form, the accused was acquitted. He had been shielding Lucy under the belief that she had forged the will, and she later had attempted to shield him, thinking to save him by her own sacrifice.

They were finally enough to comply with the provisions of the second will and were married accordingly.

CENSUS TAKERS GETTING READY

Inquiry This Year Will be Complete—Things of Personal Nature to be Told

Prepare yourself so that you will be able to give at almost a minute's notice a clear account of yourself, all the others of the family residing with you and of every person who boards or rooms with you or of members of the family temporarily absent, but claiming residence in your abode. All this in preparation for the visit of the state enumerator who is strictly charged with the duty of asking a long list of exceedingly personal questions.

All persons questioned must answer fully and truthfully. The census man has the power to call on the police or sheriff to aid him in securing the information he is charged with collecting.

Doing the actual work of enumeration will be one enumerator in each election district, who draws $2 per day and one cent per name for each person enumerated. These are the ones who will want information as to the name, residence, relationship to the head of the family, race, color, sex, nativity, citizenship or non-citizenship and occupation.

Work of taking the enumeration probably will not be started until early in June, and it is expected that two weeks will be consumed in covering the entire State.

All the information thus collected is to be transmitted to Albany, where a staff of clerks will sift it out and compile it in handy, tabulated form. Part of the data collected will be sent to the department of education to aid in the study of school problems.

The main object of the enumeration, however, is to ascertain the number of citizens in the state, exclusive of aliens, for the purpose of making a new apportionment of senate and assembly districts, either by the constitutional convention now in progress or the 1916 legislature, as may be determined by the convention.

The State of New York still recognizes the man as the head of the household. This is officially promulgated by Secretary Hugo in his instructions to the 5,651 election district enumerators.

"Enumerators will consider the men the head of the family in all cases except those of Indians on reservations," reads the instructions book. Among the Indians the woman, by ancient tribal custom, is the head of the family, the one through whom the name is transmitted. According to the official records only one reservation Indian in the state votes, but all must be counted.

Where the head of the family or the entire family is away from home at the time the enumerator calls it is the duty of the enumerator to ascertain where they are and communicate with them by mail, forwarding the blanks on which the information must be returned within a reasonable time.

The coming enumeration will be the most complete and thorough ever taken in this state. Under the present law they are taken every ten years. The first one was taken in 1785 when the sheriff in each county had charge of the job and used his constables to gather the desired information. The present enumeration is expected to cost $465,000.

TRANSMISSION CO.'S EQUIPMENT IS SOLD

May 17 is the date set for a hearing in Oswego by Referee in bankruptcy A. S. Wright on the application of L. W. Emerick as trustee for the Parker Transmission Co., whose plant was formerly in the Hunter Arms building.

Quite recently the Manhattan Machinery Co. of New York, dealers in second-hand machinery, bought practically the entire equipment of the Parker Co. for $10,600.

In Fulton on May 17th there will also be offered for sale the American, Canadian, French, Italian, Belgian English, German and Austrian patents owned by the Parker Transmission Company. It is reported that Boston bankers, creditors of the concern, may bid them in and form a new company to manufacture the gears.

REV. AND MRS. BARRETT WILL RECEIVE TOMORROW

A reception will be given Tuesday evening, May 11th, at 8 o'clock in the parlors of the First M. E. church, for the Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Barrett, to which all members of the church and congregation are cordially invited.

OSWEGO'S CHARITY BALL

Proceeds Go Toward Relief Work by K. of C. During Winter.

The St. Vincent de Paul Society, comprising the fourth degree members of the Knights of Columbus, will hold in Oswego a charity ball next Monday night, May 17. The object is to raise funds to provide for debts incurred by the society in its relief work during the winter. The society is devoted to the relief of distress among the poor, irregardless of religion or race.

The committees have been named as follows:

Reception Committee—Hon and Mrs. T. F. Hennessey, Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Gleason, Mr and Mrs Frank P. Kamill, Mr and Mrs F. D. Culkin, Mr and Mrs David Fitzgibbons, Mr and Mrs Thomas Burden, Mr and Mrs J. H. Hourigan, Mr and Mrs W. H. Quigley, Mr and Mrs W. H. Wallace, Mr and Mrs T. M. Hennessey, Mr and Mrs Joseph E. Danio, Mr and Mrs D. P. Hennessey, Mr and Mrs. T. J. Flaherty, Mr and Mrs William Donovan, Mr and Mrs John McDonald.

Floor Committee—John McDonald, Dr. J. T. Dwyer, W. F. Taylor, John Griffin, John J. Doughtery, George H. Campbell, John Donovan, Frank Gallagher, James H. Chrystal, Charles M. Clancy, Hon. James E. Mansfield, Thomas McGough, M. F. Casey, F. M. Riley, F. C. Reed, John O'Toole.

General Committee—John F. Otis, T. T. Stone, Joseph Griffin, George Daley, Daniel Griffin, Peter Sheridan, Samuel Harper, C. J. Reilly, Edward S. Farrell.

Ticket—P. J. Clancy, John F. Murphy, Fred Price.

Decoration—Martin O'Meilia, Joseph E. Cauley, Charles Daly, Martin Joyce, John J. Donohue.

HUNTER ASSETS SOLD AT VERY LOW PRICES

At Saturday's public auction of the assets of John and Thomas Hunter, held by L. W. Emerick, trustee, the sums realized were quite small in proportion to the value placed upon them by their former owners.

The sale was held in the morning and in the afternoon Referee in Bankruptcy A. S. Wright confirmed it.

Securities held by John Hunter brought $1,919.90 and those of Thomas Hunter, $1,819.75.

This practically completes the sale of the assets with the exception of life insurance policies, which the court has been asked to rule upon, also an automobile which is claimed by Mrs. Hunter as her personal property.

In the Thomas Hunter Sale, 10 shares of stock of the First National Bank, Fulton, par value $100, sold to F. A. Gage for $1,300; 2,000 shares of the porcupine Mining Company, par value $10,000, brought for the entire lot, $1.00. They were purchased by A. T. Jennings. 166 2-3 shares of the Johnny Sleeper ranch, par value $100, were sold for a very small figure.

In the John Hunter sale, three shares of the Kitts Manufacturing Co. of Oswego, par value $100, were cyfy Oswego, par value $100, were sold to Marvin C. King for $5.00. Ten shares of the City National Bank of Fulton brought $1,700 from G. S. Piper. One hundred shares of the second preferred stock of the Battle Island Paper Company brought twenty cents. A claim of $30,000 against the Interstate Company brought thirty cents and 100 shares of the common stock of the Battle Island Company brought ten cents. One five per cent. bond of the Oswego County Independent Telephone Company, par $100, sold for $90.00 to G. S. Piper.

MISS VAN BUREN BECOMES MRS. LOTT

Miss Lois Van Buren, daughter of Mrs. Anna Van Buren of Rochester st. and Charles Lott of the West Side were married last Saturday night at the parsonage of the Zion Episcopal church at 8 o'clock. Rev. M. J. Peters pastor of the church, officiated.

The bride was attended by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Harvey C. Van Buren, of South 1st st., and Harvey Van Buren acted as best man. Only intimate friends and members of the family were present at the ceremony. The bride wore a traveling suit of dark blue and carried a spray of lilies-of-the-valley. Mrs. Harvey Van Burden also wore blue and carried lilies.

A wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's mother after the ceremony, after which the couple left on a brief wedding trip through Central New York. On their return they will make their home with Mr. and Harvey Van Buren.

The bride is a very talented pianist and is well known in Fulton musical circles. Mr. Lott holds a responsible position with the American Woolen Company.

MAN'S IDEALS; PRACTICAL ONES

Things That Are Antagonistic to Private Monopoly in America

By George Otis Smith, Director United States Geological Survey.

"Practical ideals" is more than an apparent contradiction of terms—it is the real thing that the world demands. The practical ideal is the ideal in its everyday form that has the power to uplift because it is firmly braced on theg round.

Altruistic democracy is not a meaningless phrase. The Declaration of Independence begins with altruism in the appeal it makes for the pursuit of happiness. Democracy in its essence means equality of opportunity, its function is to build up to the higher plane, not to cut down to a dead level. And in our Constitution, the declared purpose to "promote the general welfare" is a guarantee that this nation takes no narrow view of business questions such as those now before the American people. It is in human welfare that ethics and economics find common ground.

Too much stress can not be placed upon the human factor in these problems. The student of politics does well to think less of artificial measures of value, to talk less of monometallic or bimetallic standards and to realize that the human standard is the real measure. Reduced to lowest terms, property, whether real or personal, gold or silver, prairie land or skyscraper, derives its value from what man's labor has put into it or can take out of it.

A working minority of American citizens have come to realize that unregulated private monopoly and good citizenship are antagonistic terms. And, now that popular clamor is giving place to sober second thought the other side of the monopoly question is receiving the consideration it deserves, there is a widespread recognition of the common interdependence of big business and the general public. On the one side, the people are realizing that they are and have been in reality silent partners in big business, and now that there has come the promise of some regulation that will in large part prevent monopolistic centralization, the people are interested in getting their share of the returns which can come only with operation at a profit. On the other hand, the manager of the large corporations, who are really the trustees of the investing public, are beginning to see that a certain financial security goes with public confidence. The public cannot be left out of the reckoning, and that well-remembered attitude toward the public so tersely expressed 60 years ago by a pioneer in railroad affairs does not pay dividends today.

Partners in Business

To whom, then, belongs the reward of efficiency? I find a simple answer to that question in the opinions of the higher courts, in the decisions of public utility commissions, and in recent or pending legislation. Industrial enterprises as conducted by corporations are inherently co-operative. Owner, workman, and consumer are in reality partners, and as such deserve to share in the profits. The public can demand low prices only after adequate profit has been provided to capital and fair wages for labor. This basal principle of profit-sharing among all three partners seems to me the cornerstone among the practical ideals of the present day.

The trouble with too many of the business men of the day, and especially with those who come to Washington to oppose new legislation, is their nearsightedness. They can not see country-wide public opinion and do not appreciate the obvious fact that the financial centers are not also the centers of national thought. The result of this as I expressed it in conversation last winter with a New York gentleman who was largely interested in water-power development, is that the business interests oppose something at one congress which two years later they would accept; but the next Congress is already considering a more advanced legislative proposition. We are all more or less progressive. I told him, but the opposition has been just one lap behind.

Corporations Have Rights

The bright light of publicity is coming to shine more and more upon the inner workings of all private business which has anything of the public-service character. Only about 3 years ago, at a conference on water-power policy, I heard the representative of the banking houses interested in the hydroelectric business tell the Secretary of the Interior with considerable warmth of spirit that one thing the men who make possible the development of our country by their contribution of capital would not stand for was any legal requirement of inspection of their accounts by the government. A corporation has its rights, they continued, just the same as a private man in business. Last year in the same room, when the utilization of a large power site owned by the government was being discussed, I heard those asking for the permit dismiss the question of Federal inspection of their books with the remark, "That need not be discussed, our books will of course be always open to any authorized representative of the Government." The ultimatums pronounced by the ambassadors from Wall street, State street, and West Adams street, are shortlived in the present atmosphere of popular interest in these business questions.

We need to see ourselves and our day in the right perspective. Men of vision are what the world needs, but vision alone will not suffice. It was not a Darius Green, but Professor Langley and the Wright Brothers who taught men to fly.

It is simply axiomatic that the world has reached the stage where science has entered everyday life to a degree that even our fathers never dreamed. Physical forces and natural resources are harnessed to the use of man, and the miracle-workers who can control these Titans are essential members of the body politic.

The compelling argument for engineers to step forward as citizens is the evident fact that politics has not kept pace with science. Take the political conditions of this or any other country, of this or any other day. They are characterized by uncertainty, confusion, and hazards that the business man would at once cut out of his own business, and should eliminate from the nation's business. On the king's highway of ancient times slaves worked without respite to make smooth the path for royal use, and today the American railroad invests millions to straighten curves or reduce grades, but on our political right-of-way obstruction and obstacles which make all progress expensive, if not uncertain, are allowed to remain simply because these socalled institutions are our heritage from our fathers and our fathers' fathers.

Where Man Loses

The scientist who simply seeks truth for truth's sake will surely lose the larger part of life, for truth that serves man, science that benefits humanity, is the only kind whose quest is worth making a life-work for a man with red blood.

The most philosophic of American geologists, Professor Chamberlain, after studying exhaustively climatic conditions in the long geologic past and after weighing carefully the possibilities of disaster to our earth from collision with some star, has shown that we have good reason to measure the future habitability of the earth in millions or tens of millions, if not, indeed, hundreds of millions of years. Ssharing Professor Chamberlain's inspiring belief in the probability of racial longevity, do we not gain a real incentive to scientific research into the great utilization of the forces of nature, an added argument for the application of the truths of science to civic progress, and a larger faith that the Golden Age is in the future—that the highest development of our country and of the world is to be witnessed by those who are to follow us? Are not our ideals practical and is not such a vision a call to larger service?

"THE HAM TREE"

McIntyre and Heath, who have for forty years been highly successful stage partners in the delineation of quaint negro characters, will be the attraction at the Richardson Theatre, Oswego, Tuesday, May 14th, in Geo. V. Hobart and Jean Schwartz' especially humorous musical comedy, "The Ham Tree," which has been fully revised and brought up-to-date by the authors and elaborately staged under the direction of Ned Wayburn. Of the many stage productions in which McIntyre and Heath have appeared during their long career on the stage "The Ham Tree" has afforded the most suitable opportunity for the display of their unique impersonations and in its present form much will be found that is new in both book and music. John Cort has selected competent players for the support of his stars, while Mr. Wayburn has chosen his chorus from over one thousand of the best dancing girls in the country. Reserved seats for Fulton on sale at the Quirk Theatre box office Wednesday 9 a.m.

Special sale of Farm Wagons during month of May. VanWagenen, Inc. advl23

ALL SOCIETIES UNDER ONE HEAD

Named the National Historical Society; Election Held in Washington

Washington, D.C., May 8.—The directors of the National Historical society this afternoon elected 150 founders of the Society and chose officers as follows: President, Frank Allaben, New York, Editor-in-Chief The Journal of American History; Vice-Presidents, Henry S. Hawley, Chicago, President Railway Supply Co.; William H. Way, Meriden, Ct., President Cuttiss-Way Co., John Fowler Mitchell, Greenfield, Ind., President William Mitchell Printing Co., Cherman I. Pool, Waverly, Ia., S. A. R., Mrs. Benjamin S. Church, New York, Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, New York, President George Washington Memorial Association, Eleanor Haines, M. D., Newark, N. J., Rev. George Clark Houghton, D.D., rector Church of the Transfiguration, New York; Secretary, M. T. R. Washburn, New York, An Executive Committee was appointed consisting of the president, secretary and treasurer.

The society incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia on April 26, electing as directors L. H. Fisher, attorney, Washington, chairman; Dudley Butler, New York, treasurer, John Balsam, Washington.

The society plans to unite in common membership and co-ordination all existing patriotic and historical hodies and the vice-presidents wil form a grand council, each state and foreign country being eventually represented by five or more. Provision is made for 250 original life-member founders, donating $100 to a founders' fund and from whom the vice-presidents are chosen and 5,000 original founders giving $5 each. The founders elected today are:

The articles of incorporation outline the purposes of the society; to discover, procure, preserve and perpetuate whatever relates to history, particularly of the United States and the western hemisphere; inculate patriotism; promote the peace of righteousness among nations; provide a national and international patriotic clearing house and historical exchange, promoting by suitable means helpful forms of communication and co-operation between all historical organizations and patriotic orders; promote the work of preserving historic landmarks and marking historic sites; encourages the use of historical themes and the expression of patriotism in the arts, and publish The Journal of American History as the official organ. Branch societies or local chapters will be organized as in the patriotic orders.

The work of enrolling founders will continue, directed from the Society's New York offices, Rooms 516-518, 30 East 42d street, by the president, Secretary and Treasurer.

CLOTHING THIEVES EACH HELD UNDER $500 BAIL

Two young men, both of good families, were arrested yesterday by Chief Dyer, charged with entering and robbing the Amdursky store Friday night. The arrest came as a great surprise and shock to the relatives of the young men who have always borne excellent reputations in the past.

After a careful cross-questioning both culprits admitted their guilt and they were locked up. This morning they were arraigned before Judge Wilson in City Court and waived examination. The Judge held them in $500 bail for the Grand Jury. It is expected that bail will be furnished before night by friends. The men were represented in court by Attorney George H. Fanning.

When Mr. Amdursky opened his store a Sturday morning he noticed that two suitcases, several suits of clothes, hats, neckties and other wearing apparel was missing. He reported his loss to the police and Detective Branningan and Chief Dyer started work on the case. The raiders left no tangible clue, but the police discovered that one of the men, who was afterwards arrested, was seen Saturday night in an entire new outfit which answered the description of the goods stolen. A close watch was kept on the pair and the hiding place of the rest of the loot was discovered yesterday and the men were arrested.

All Kinds of GARDEN SEEDS by the ounce or pound at LaPorte's Grocery Oneida St. Hello 75

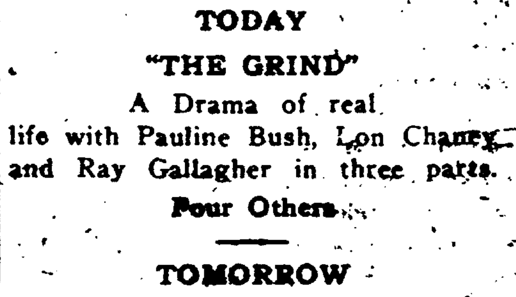
SALE OF Children's High Grade Coats
For ages 8 to 14 years
Values up to $7.50
Your choice for
$3.95
On Sale Tomorrow (Tuesday) Morning at 9 o'clock
J. C. O'BRIEN

Cream Separators at cost. VanWagenen, Inc. advl22

New carload of Bowker's Fertilizers. VanWagenen, Inc. advl22

We are Agents for CHASE & SANBORN'S Fine Teas and Coffees
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

REFRIGERATORS
PERFECTION OIL STOVES
Screen Doors and Windows
FISHING TACKLE
A. M. DRUSE & CO.
7 South First Street



Overland Model 81
$795 f.o.b. Factory
VANWAGENEN, Inc. Agents

HAPPY HOUR THEATRE
TODAY
"THE GRIND"
A Drama of real life with Pauline Bush, Lon Chaney, and Ray Gallagher in three parts.
Four Others.
TOMORROW
"SAVED BY A DREAM"
Big Society Feature, with Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby and Brinsley Shaw in two parts and Four Others.
Admission 5c.

Evening Times Subscribers are requested to advise this office if the carrier boy fails to deliver paper properly and with regularity.

THE QUIRK
Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
Sundays—5c, 10c.
CONTINUOUS—2 to 10:30 P. M.
TODAY
Israel Zangwill's Masterpiece
CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO
TUESDAY
"From the Valley of the Missing" by the author of "Tess of the Storm Country."
1000 People—500 Scenes
Paramount Travel Pictures.
Every Tuesday for 20 weeks.

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Wanted—By a family of four; no children; a middle aged woman to do general housework; permanent situation; good wages. Address "Enquirer, this office before June 1st. 123c

For Sale Cheap—House and barn on large lot 50x150; finely located at 310 Highland st. Inquire R. E. Harrison, at Spencer's office; 28½ East First st. 125c

Clark Irish Harp—Will sell cheap; brand new. Just the thing for a home. Address Z, Evening Times office. tf.

To Rent—Furnished apartment; 3 rooms; bath and all conveniences; desirable locations. Inquire S, Times office. 122

For Sale—Sewing machine; range; Perfection oil stove and other household articles. 410 Worth st., second door east side. 122

Marine Engine—For sale; 2 h. p.; boiler; oil burning; complete from stacy to propeller. 307 Cayuga st. 121

Young Girl wants position at housework in family without children. Phone 1573. 123

For Sale—Mahogany table and bookcase and secretary; must sell before June 1. 310 S. 3d st.

To Let—6 rooms and bath, 3d and Seneca st. Apply 121 South 1st st., or phone 3288. 122

Lost—White English bull dog, with collar. Phone 3291. 120c

House to Rent—210 S. 3d st. Inquire D. G. Draper, 416 Rochester st. tf

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCully, 202 S. 3d st. tf

REV. BARRETT ROUSED HEARERS

(Continued from Page One)

short time ago, on his dying bed, "I want my sins forgiven," and where could he get that? He must go and wash in Jordan for that is the only cure for the leper heart.

Perhaps I speak to someone who has a longing in their heart to be clean but you feel that all the good has died out of your heart—that your sins are like mountains and have hardened you into carelessness; twenty years ago you were better than you are today, you are more indifferent and cold, but let me say that there is welcome for you.

Perhaps you are a respectable man or woman and folks look up to you as such, but you have a secret sin in your soul; you hide it from your friends but you cannot hide it from God, and if He should open the door to the chamber of that sin your nearest and dearest friends would despise and abhor your name.

Oh! these secret sins hidden from the eyes of the physician and surgeon, which no eye but God can see, no medicine cure, no knife in human hands probe, these are the things that are as fire in the bones and drag the soul to the pit—yea, the hell already in the soul.

Christ comes to the willing heart and the willing heart moves toward Him.

DEEDS FILED SATURDAY

Seymour Palmer to George B. Pelmer, property in Granby; $2500.

George B. Palmer to Charles E. Palmer, property in Granby; $4000.

Andrew Beach to Salmon River Power Company, property in Orwell, indicated price $1000.

William G. Miller to Michael Wocokanise, property in Eighth ward, $1300.

Ernest W. Arnold to The Beardsley, [illegible]

LAST WEEK IN BUSINESS LIFE

Money Continues Easy and Collections Maintain Recent Improvement

Dun's Review for May 8, says:

Business conditions show comparatively little change, and through the recent cheerful outlook is maintained, conservatism goes hand in hand with increased confidence. The growing intensity of the war operations, including the sinking of an American ship, has caused considerable uneasiness and resulted in rather sharp irregularities in the stock market. The cost of the war, which in one country alone amounts in the first year to more than double the total Government debt created in this country durin gthe Civil war, naturally causes concern. This, however, has little or no effect on the immediate volume of trade, which continues to expand slowly. The heavy export demand, particularly of foodstuffs and war materials, is still the most striking feature; but it is noticeable also that domestic consumption is on a rising scale, although this is much more apparent in some directions than in others. Bank clearings are now for the first time revealing a gain over last year, not only at New York, where speculative activities contribute to swell the total, but in many other parts of the country. The iron and steel industry is now operating on about a 75 per cent. basis, with increasing pig iron output, and prospects for this month appear excellent. The dry goods markets are generally steady, cotton goods being in liberal request and firm. Woolens and worsteds are quiet, but carpets are more active and higher. Shoes are moving slowly, but the outlook is more cheerful. Building operations are larger in the eastern cities and building materials are in good demand, with considerable export sales. Winter wheat conditions are excellent. The heavy export demand for wheat keeps up. Ship building is prosperous, the automobile industry is generally active, there is rather more railroad buying of supplies and the volume of unemployment is diminishing. Money continues easy and collections maintain their recent improvement. In the latest week exports from New York were $24,763,189, a gain of $8,000,000 over last year, and the excess over imports was $2,106,154.

The betterment in the steel trade is reflected in the increased mill operations and the steady expansion in pig iron production, the total in April being the largest in fully a year. According to The Iron Age, the output last month reached 2,116,494 tons, or 70,550 tons a day, against 2,063,834 tons, or 66,575 tons a day, in March, while there were four more furnaces in blast on May 1 than on April 1.

Recent large contract sales and a steady demand for immediate delivery have placed staple cotton goods in a strong position. The mills are better situated than is usual at this period of the year and there is more activity in fine and fancy cottons, both for prompt and forward shipment. Print cloths, however, have been very quiet. The dyestuffs scarcity continues to grow more serious and the leading line of colored flannelettes have been advanced ½c. a yard. A disappointing volume of duplicate orders for men's wear for fall has been received, business from the clothing trade on staples being much below normal. Notwithstanding this, values rule very firm, with advances of from 5c. to 7½c. a yard noted in some directions. The dmand for staple serges has been lighter than for some years, and an early opening of the new [illegible] season, with close prices, is predicted. Shepherd checks and poplins are selling steadily in many dress goods, while some of the coverts are also moving well.

VOWINKLE REMEDIES

Oswego's Coroner Ready to Organize Stock Company.

C. J. Vowinkle is about to incorporate a company for the manufacture of patent medicines of which he controls the formulas. He has been for several years compounding the remedies and selling them, and now the demand has become so great for them that he says he cannot keep up with it.

Among the remedies are Dr. Mease's Nervine, Austen's Prescription, Hart's Aniseseed Balm, Vowinkel's Liniment, Vowinkel's Little Liver Pills, Mease's Pile Ointment, Vowinkel's Headache Wafters, Vowinkel's White Pine Cough Syrup.

[illegible] Van Wagenen, Inc. adv122

WEATHER FORECAST

Gentle to moderate and variable winds; fair tonight, and Tuesday fair and warmer.

FULTON'S CHAUFFEURS

Half Dozen Young Men Went Thru Paces Saturday.

At Saturday's examination of chauffeurs by John A. Hamlin, examiner of the Automobile Bureau of the Secretary of State, six of Fulton's young men were included among the candidates for license to operate cars as their vocation. It was the first examination in this county since the automobile law went into effect five years ago, and in it the candidates were put through their sprouts—turning corners, starting, stopping and working the several levers of their cars under the personal supervision of the Examiner.

The examination lasted from 8:30 until noon, when the following men received their try-out:

Oswego city—Edward Gange, Robert Snody, William Hough, Harold Donahue, Clarence Aiken, James La fave, Howard Elithorpe, George Otis, Harold Brown, Charles Clancey, Charles Parkinton, Herbert Hammond, Owen Smith, Gerald E. King.

Fulton—Frank King, Alfred Huggins, Ray Fitch, Enos G. Lamb, George G. Post, Grove White.

Pulaski—Albert Reynolds, Herman Willam, Hugh Killam, Frank Prouty, Francis Snyder, Harold White.

New Haven—Fred A. Whitney, Clarence Bracy.

Mexico—Amby Tubbs, Fred Cole.

Fair Haven—Harry Smith.

Altmar—Orvis G. Fradenburgh.

Wolcott—Nelson J. Field.

Community Notes

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pullen and daughter Bonita, of Oswego, were guests of Mrs. Frank Parsons Sunday.

Mrs. William Briggs of Syracuse spent Friday in town.

Edward Guile of New Haven was in the city througt the week-end.

Fred Wadsworth is spending several days with relatives at Wolcott.

Mrs. Samuel Levi is seriously ill at her home in North 4th st.

Mr. and Mrs. William White have been the guests of Hannibal friends.

Mr. and Mrs. John Criger and Mrs. Pearl Merriam of this city were recent visitors at Ira.

The members of the First M. E. church and congregation will hold a reception for Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Barrett, Tuesday evening, May 11th, in the parlors of the church.

Mrs. Edna Moore of Utica st., is spending a short vacation with Mrs. Victor Loomis of Oneida.

Mrs. J. L. Jones has been the guest of Syracuse friends.

Earl Whitaker of Chicago has been in the city the past week, called here by the death of his father.

Mrs. Elizabeth Durfey is entertaining Miss A. Smith.

Mrs. Emerson Flack of Central Square has been the guest of Fulton friends.

Mrs. M. Barker of Rochester st. has been entertaining her daughter, Mrs. Louis Windholz of Baltimore.

Mrs. James Boland has been the guests of relatives in Oneonta.

Miss Agnes Moore of Newark, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Moore of Academy st.

Mr. and Mrs. Alde Dickens and son Bruce of Syracuse were Sunday guests of Mrs. S. B. Ball and Mrs. E. L. Locker.

Dr. H. J. Terpenning was called upon this morning by a Polish citizen, who sustained a severe cut upon one hand while at work in the finishing department of the woolen mill.

Chairs re-seated—cane, splint or leather; upholstering at reasonable prices. Wm. Lytte, 304 Pine st., Fulton. advt

[illegible] Hay, Straw and Shavings. Van Wagenen, Inc. adv122

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 10.—Just what Governor Whitman will dow ith the bill by Assemblyman John Malone of Albany which aims to create a State Boxing Commission, is a matter for speculation since Lemuel E. Quigg, delegate to the Constitutional Convention from Columbia county has present his proposed amendment to the Constitution which if adopted, will mean that prize fights in New York State will be prohibited.

Because it was believed in many quarters that legalized boxing exhibitions in the State were being conducted to the detriment of the sport, Assemblyman Malone introduced a bill during the recent session of the legislature which provided for a paid commission of three to take the place of the present commission which is serving without pay. The measure passed both the senate and assembly without material debate, nor were any hearings given upon it.

The Malone bill is a thirty day bill and Governor Whitman was expected to act upon it1 ast week. When Delegate Quigg presented his proposed amendment to the Constitution it at once became apparent that were he to approved the Malone bill and were the delegates to the Constitutional Convention to approve of the Quigg resolution, the State boxing commission, created under the Malone bill, would naturally go out of existence, since the amended Constitution would have precedence over any legislative act.

Mike Donovan, thep rofessional boxing instructor and who in his earlier days taught Theodore Roosevelt the "manly art", is an ardent candidate for one of the commissionerships. The "professor" as he is called has spent considerable time at Albany, recently urging his selection by his declarations that the boxing game was always clean when he had anything to do with it. Besides "Professor" Donovan there are numerous other candidates.

Governor Whitman is believed by many to be in favor of the Maine bill and it appears that his only concern with relation to it has been that he might be unable to pursuade the men he has had in mind to accept commissionerships. It was rumored that a member of the New York Athletic Club would be one of the three commissioners.

If the talk among the delegates can be relied upon, the Quigg resolution is not likely to be adopted. It is pointed out that if it should be adopted no boxing exhibitions or fights for profit or prizes would be legally permitted in New York State.

James R. Price of New York city; Frank S. O'Neil of Binghamton and Major J. J. Dixon of Brooklyn are the present boxing commissioners; they would be legislated out of office if the Malone bill passes the desk of Governor Whitman where it at present reposes.

Many of the Constitutional Convention delegates feel that the work of regulating sport, gambling and other matters, should not be subjects for them to deliberate over. The legislature they say, has this authority and the power should be left with that body.

The last act of the legislature of this State dealing with boxing exhibitions, was the passage of the Frawley law, which established the State Athletic Commission, which body regulated and supervises the sport. The Frawley law became effective July 25, 1911.

FRANK T. ENGLISH

Frank Theodore, ten-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dae English, died at the parents' home in Detroit, Mich., on Friday, May 7.

The body was brought to Fulton and placed in the Fairdale cemetery beside another child, Guy William, who was brought here for burial September 15, 1914.

Mrs. Dae English was formerly Miss Bessie Clark of this city.

MRS. LOUISA LA BOUNTY

The Evening Times is in receipt of news from Cleveland, Ohio, of the death of Mrs. Louisa La Bounty, on May 5. Mrs. La Bounty had not enjoyed good health for a period of four years. She was well known in this city where she lived before going to Cleveland, and many friends are left to mourn her loss.

For Tuesday, at 9 A. M.

WE PLACE ON SALE

20 Doz. Kimonos and Dressing Sacques at 29c

This lot comprises all our manufacturers have left from their season's output, hence we saved 50c on the dollar and give to you the same chance.

A Regular 50c and 75c Sale. Can be seen in our window,

29c

FOR BARGAINS VISIT OUR BASEMENT

M. Katz & Co.'s

DEPARTMENT STORE 63-65 FIRST ST.

OLD LANDMARK A TOTAL LOSS

Shortage of Water Made the Steamer's Presence Necessary; Pumped River Water

The Van Buren homestead on the East River road occupied jointly by Mrs. Hattie Van Buren Ward and John Sayer and family was destroyed by fire shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Two pieces of apparatus answered the first alarm which was turned in from Box 34, but after a long run to the scene of the blaze which was almost out of the city limits, the department discovered that the hose was not long enough to reach the nearest hydrant. Before the alarm was sounded the fire had gutted the upper story of the building and the lack of water permitted little activity on the part of the department. A wagon was sent back to the city for more hose and the steamer was called out by another alrm. When the steamer arrived on the scene water was pumped from the river only a few feet away, but by that time then ouse was almost a total ruin.

Some of the lighter pieces of furniture were carried out by the neighbors before the firemen arrived, and the department managed to save most of the house hold goods on the lower floor.

The blaze could be seen from the Oneida st. bridge and more than 200 people walked down the river to get a close view of it.

The house was a very old structure and the dry timbers burned fiercely aided b ythe high wind which was prevalent yesterday. Sparks flew upon adjoining buildings but the firemen managed to keep the blaze confined to the Van Buren home.

The cause of the fire is not known, but Chief Waugh was inclined to think that it was a defective chimney. The house was partly covered by insurance. Mrs. Van Buren Ward, the owner was in the Lee Memorial hospital for treatment at the time of the fire.

WILLIAM BARRY

The announcement of the death of William Barry of Oswego, last Friday, was received in this city with sorrow.

Mr. Barry was educated in Montreal, arriving in Oswego twenty years ago. He was a brother of the late Dean Barry, and was an inventor of ability.

Many of his inventions have been successes, the most notable being a cancelling machine. His other inventions were: A device for the facilitating of the handling of the mail. He was the pioneer in this line; automatic mailing machine; stamp cancelling machine; machine for soldering cans; willow stripper; harness stitching machine; patents on door hangers, roller skates, chain hoist, hydraulic weighing machine, and many others.

The funeral will be held tomorrow from the Barry residence, 136 E. 6th st., Oswego.

MONROE SKEEL'S FUNERAL

The funeral of Monroe Skeel, commander of Schenck Post, G.A.R., who died on Saturday, was held from the First M. E. church at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The Rev. Barrett officiated.

A large body of friends gathered at the services to pay tribute to the memory of Commander Skeel, who for his kindly nature was esteemed by all who knew him.

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Rogue's, 61 First st. adv

FULTON'S BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONIAL DIRECTORY

SIGNS, BULLETINS, CARDS — any kind, anywhere. DECORATION, PAINTING. A. E. WORDEN, Academy and 6th sts. Phone 3432.

DENTISTS

FRED L. CARY, D. D. S. 122 West Broadway. Office hours, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.

DR. H. S. ORCHARD
Dental Parlors
Phone 444 112 Oneida St.

BARBER SHOPS

CAMPBELL'S BARBER SHOP has removed to 21 South First Street. Ready to meet all customers.

BARBER SHOP AND BATH ROOM — Opposite Lower Depot, Second St. Three Barbers; Martin, Donovan, Carroll. Baths ready at all times. J. Fred Carroll, Prop.

UNDERTAKERS

YOUNG & HILL. Open day and night at 117 Oneida. Phone 2172.

DELIVERY SERVICES.

FRANK DE LARM, Successor to GARRETT'S LIVERY, at 126 Cayuga Street. Solicits the livery business of all old customers. Phone 235 Cayuga St.

YES

We have received a number of inquiries as to whether or not we would continue our appliance sale, and so we have decided to maintain the same cut prices on appliances until Wednesday. No Later.

Come in and look them over. Every purchase a real bargain and a wonderful home help.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY
103 Oneida St. Phone 144

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

If Results count for anything, The Evening Times has almost reached the much-discussed

"Pschycological Moment"

WHY?

Because of the leaps and bounds made by the circulation department within a fortnight

Circulation Growing Every Minute! Watch It Grow More!

After several months of painful illnesss and a couple bad sinking spells, The Evening Times believes

MR. BUSINESS

of Fulton, N. Y., is back on the job. From the very first The Evening Times knew he would recover.

He has recovered always.

And now is the time to advertise in YOUR PAPER—the local home paper, because YOUR PAPER—the the Peoples's Paper is a home institution. The Evening Times leaves the People's money in YOUR TOWN; Does not take it away never to return.

Make Yours the Livest Ads in the Evening Times

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

Thoughts That Help

Be not swift to be afraid;
Many a ghostly thing is laid
In the light from out the shade,
Wait and see.

Do not live your sorrows twice;
Fear is like a touch of ice;
Faith can kill it in a trice.
Wait and see.

Why expect the worst to come?
Burdened minds are troublesome;
Joy makes up a goodly sum.
Wait and see.

Better than your wildest dreams
Is God's light that for you gleams,
When the morning dimly seems.
Wait and see.

—Marianne Farningham.

VINCENT ASTOR'S AIRSHIP SAID TO BE "FOOL PROOF."

Hydroaeroplane Has Luxurious Cabin in Which Bride Will Fly.

The $14,000 hydroaeroplane which Vincent Astor is learning to fly at Marblehead, Mass., is said to be "fool proof." It was specially constructed for him and has a comfortable cabin in which he will take his bride on flights, it is said.

By various devices the craft is believed to have been given the highest degree of safety and inherent stability obtainable in air navigation. In addition to this, personal comfort and attractive appearance have been provided for in the construction of the machine.

The main floating section is comprised in the boat hull, which will house not only the pilot and passengers, but fuel and oil supplies. For the first named there are two compartments, one at the bow for the operator and one amidships. The latter is furnished with two seats, the rear of which contains a duplicate set of controls.

The rear compartment is located directly between the two sections of the lower wing surface. The occupants of this compartment will be thoroughly sheltered from wind and spray.

The method of access to the forward part of the machine is a novel feature of it. Two doors at the bow give entrance to this compartment, and thence to the stern. When the doors are closed the occupants are afforded perfect shelter. Both sections have deep upholstered seats and spring cushions.

The motor will develop from 100 to 110 horsepower, and will furnish power to drive the craft at a speed of between sixty-five and seventy miles an hour.

The machine is supplemented with a specially built floating hangar, which can be piloted to any location to please Mr. Astor's fancy and convenience.

GIRLS BAR BOYS WHO SMOKE.

"Fingers That Hold Cigarettes Shan't Hold Ours" is Pledge.

"Fingers that hold cigarettes shall never hold ours" is the first rule of the Girls' Anti-cigarette club of Leoti, Kan.

The girls take a solemn pledge. It runs:

"We hereby solemnly pledge that we will not associate with any young man addicted to the cigarette habit. We will not walk on the street with him nor recognize him in public."

At first the boys regarded the club as a joke. But it wasn't so funny when after church Sunday nights every blessed girl cut the escorts lined up at the doors and struck out for home alone.

AERO AIDS DOCTOR'S HASTE.

Takes Him to Accident Call at Speed of 110 Miles an Hour.

When he received an emergency call to an accident eleven miles out of Grinnell, Ia., Dr. Pearl E. Somers pressed into service W. C. Robinson, an aviator, who drove him through the air at a speed of 110 miles an hour and landed him at his patient's side in six minutes.

This is the first time a physician has used an aeroplane to answer a call in Iowa.

WAR PROVES WAGE RAISER IN BRITAIN.

War has unexpectedly raised the wages of workers in Britain.

Food prices in England are up about 10 per cent. Wages have gone up more than 5 per cent. Beside that there is much overtime.

According to the returns of the British board of trade the following wage increases have been made:

Railway men, 75 cents a week.

Longshoremen, from 25 cents to $3 a week.

Policemen, 75 cents a week.

Carpenters, $1 to $1.50 a week.

General laborers, 75 cents to $1.50 a week.

Gas workers, $1 a week.

Bakers, increase of $1.25 a week asked, but employers' offer of 75 cents accepted pending negotiations.

Textile workers, bonus for overtime work in factories doing work on army clothing.

Miners, employers generally offer 10 per cent advance in pay; miners demand 20 per cent.

Postal employees, including telephone and telegraph workers, increase of $1 a week has been demanded.

Boot and shoe workers, 5 to 10 per cent.

Coppersmiths, average wage before war $9, now $12.50.

Clerks, some increase; 100,000 grocers' assistants have asked a readjustment of wages; similar movements pending in other branches.

Engineering and building trade workers, some sections have secured substantial increases.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Our Big Heart.

"The Almighty heart is still stronger than the almighty dollar." No spellbinder made the statement. No politician made it as an appeal for votes. A foreigner said it the other day in a foreign country, in praising the stand this country has taken on the European war. Here and there across the water we still have a friend.—Detroit News.

Knows All About It.

A woman writer, unmarried, tells in a Chicago paper that she will "lay bare relentlessly the weaknesses which make for unhappiness in married life." Yep, it takes an unmarried person to "lay bare relentlessly the weakness that make for unhappiness in married life."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Dope Fiends.

Those early impressions that the drug users had quit appear to have been too early. It is now feared that the worst is not yet known. Many cities report an astounding increase in the number of cases found by the police and hospitals. The evil was attacked none too soon.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

The Unpopular Weather Man.

The government weather bureau, which has trouble enough making correct forecasts for one day, is taking a fearful risk when it issues weekly predictions for the benefit of farmers and shippers. But it might as well be hanged for a sheep as a lamb.—New York Sun.

The Bystander's Lot.

So long as Uncle Sam must be an innocent bystander he should felicitate himself that he can do his bystanding 3,600 miles away from the scene of trouble instead of next door to it. The neighbors to a first class row may be hit by flying brickbats.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Poetic License.

One interesting instance of poetic license is the way William Watson speaks of a man going out to meet the enemy with a whetted glaive, whereas really he lies on his stomach in one of the trenches and shivers in his wet khaki pants.—Ohio State Journal.

Different Seats.

The difference between stock exchanges and traction lines is striking. In the one you have to have a seat before you can hand over your cash. In the other—well, it's on the contrary quite the reverse.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Laconic.

Kitchener of Khartum knew just what to do when he heard that a distinguished and recently married officer was being visited by his wife at his headquarters in the field. "One of you must come home," he wired.—Boston Globe.

A Long Felt Want.

Edison is said to have perfected an invention for keeping the air in submarines pure. We wish he would do as much for offices, hotels, city halls, prisons and other airtight compartments above water level.—New York Sun.

Toys and Titles.

The recent meeting of the American toy manufacturers in Chicago calls attention to the fact that we can manufacture every sort of toy in America that is made in Europe—except titles of nobility.—Chicago Herald.

Swat the Flies.

Swat the flies before they are born. You can do that by swatting the filthy places where the flies are hatched and brought into existence by the hundred thousand to torment humanity.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Passing of the Crown.

The emperor of Japan is to be crowned next November. The ceremony ought to be interesting, as the signs of the times are that it is going to become rarer and rarer.—Baltimore American.

Never Pays to Argue With 'Em.

If a woman wants to paint her face it's none of the state's business, declares a Cincinnati woman. And the state will probably drop the subject right there.—Knoxville Sentinel.

Dense.

Baskin—It takes a long time to get anything through Beanbrough's skull, doesn't it? Phyle—I should say it does. That man will be dead and buried before he ever finds out he is sick.—Youngstown Telegram.

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Potato Cake.

Cream one cupful butter and two cupfuls sugar, add three or four eggs, one cupful mashed potatoes, one-half cupful milk, one-half cupful grated chocolate (or less), two and one-quarter cupfuls flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one teaspoonful cinnamon and one-half teaspoonful each of cloves and nutmeg. Lastly add one cupful chopped walnuts or any other nut meats.

Refurbishing the Kitchen.

The kitchen should have a fresh coat of paint each season and should be kept light in color. A half worn linoleum can be freshened by giving it a coat of paint or varnish, and it will also last much longer if a layer of soft padding of some kind is put under it before it is tacked down. This is especially necessary if the kitchen floor is rough or uneven.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Horsepower of a Rainfall.

Few people realize the energy in a fall of rain. On the evening of Oct. 9, 1914, there fell at Kansas City, Mo., in two hours 1.79 inches of rain. Assuming that this rain covered an area four miles square, or sixteen square miles, and that it fell from an altitude of 3,000 feet, the energy represented was about 6,300,000 horsepower hours. Were this converted into electrical energy without the usual losses it would amount to nearly 4,700,000 kilowatt hours. At 10 cents per kilowatt hour this energy would cost $470,000.—Scientific American.

To Test Pocket Watches.

We now have in this country an opportunity to secure an official standard of that commodity sometimes compared to money in the often repeated "time is money," says the Scientific American. The bureau of standards, official measurer of the United States, undertakes for a fixed fee ranging from 50 cents to $5 to report on and certify as to pocket watches. The most elaborate test, known as Class A, involves the running of the watch for fifty-four days in a series of periods in various positions and at different temperatures.

Deflecting Auto Headlights.

The only light that is useful in automobile driving at night is that which is thrown on the roadway. This effect may be obtained by painting the lower segment of the conical reflector and letting the rays that strike the upper part and are directed downward do all the lighting, says Automobile Dealer. A simple method of avoiding the objectionable glare is to direct the light downward by bending the lamp supports so that the principal rays will strike the roadway about fifty feet ahead of the car.

Testing the Compression.

When a cylinder fails to hold compression it is not always easy to tell whether leakage is taking place past the valves or past the piston rings, says the Automobile Dealer. If the breather, or crank case compression release pipe, is examined when the engine is pulled over compression when hot it will be found that at each compression stroke oily gas will be blown out of the breather pipe if the leak is past the piston. It is obviously of no use making this test when the engine is cold.

Measuring Wire Wound on a Spool.

When winding magnet spools on a lathe the exact amount of wire used can be easily determined by means of the device shown in the illustration, says Popular Mechanics.

The large reel from which the wire is obtained is conveniently placed on a [illegible] and in line with the spool which is to be wound. A grooved idler wheel, the exact diameter of which is known, is supported between the spool and wire reel so it may freely revolve. The number of its revolutions should be obtained automatically by a revolution counter.

DEVICE FOR MEASURING WIRE.

When using the device the wire from the reel is placed once around the idler to insure the necessary grip to prevent it from sliding; then it is led to the spool. The exact diameter of the idler being known and the number of revolutions indicated, the true length of the wire wound on the spools can be easily determined by the following formula: Length of wire on spool in feet equals circumference of idler in feet times number of revolutions of idler.

Lubricating Spring Leaves.

A new device for the lubrication of the leaves of automobile springs has been brought out, says the Scientific American. The device is essentially nothing but a pair of plates bolted one on each side of the spring. Each plate incloses a small oil reservoir and a felt wick, the latter pressed against the edges of the spring leaves and feeding the oil between.

An Aid to Starting.

Take a small bottle or tin with a little gasoline in it and place it for a few minutes in hot water, until the gasoline is hot, then place a few drops of the hot gasoline in the compression tap and inject into the cylinder. This method has been a help to starting. It may be useful to know this, as there is no possible danger with it.

Care of the Magneto.

Too much poor mineral lubricating oil will interfere with current delivery to the battery. A generator should not be tested with a six volt battery current. It may burn out. The ordinary "monkey wrench" mechanic should not attempt to repair a magneto or generator.—Automobile Dealer.

Removing Pencil Marks.

Breadcrumbs thoroughly rubbed over a pencil drawing will remove most of the dirt still without disturbing the pencil lines.

STRICKEN FIELDS IN EUROPE SEE MANY STRANGE WAR CONTRASTS

Soldiers Play Games and Follow Their Trades With Joy and Profit In Trenches In Lull of Battle.

Beg Friends to Send Them Flowers to Plant on Comrades' Graves and Decorate Their Camps.

NOW that the gentle touch of spring is in the air the buds are bursting on the shrubs and trees of the battlefields, crops are sprouting and the wild flowers are beginning to bloom amid the graves of the fallen warriors. Nature's seasons pay no heed to war.

Contrasts such as these are one of the most striking features today on the stricken fields of Europe. Yet contrasts in the war, strange as they seem, are perhaps the most natural outcome of the strained conditions under which the vast hordes of men are living.

German soldiers, for instance, are begging friends to send them flower seeds to plant on the graves of comrades and to decorate the trenches and camps.

Held in the trenches—frightfully bored. Between times they are drenched and stabbed by rheumatism and sometimes starved and often shot at. But mostly they are bored. They have nothing to do—nothing at all. They just sit and talk. By and by the man in the middle has heard all the man on the left and the man on the right can tell him. Then they just sit.

Enjoy Mouth Organs.

A thoughtful German woman sent a present which probably saved many a mind. Her gift was 800 mouth organs.

The new German bath train has also received a warm welcome from the men in the trenches. It consists of three water cars with a capacity of

Photo by American Press Association.

BRITISH KAMERADEN HUTS AFTER GREAT [illegible]

25,000 gallons, two bath cars with thirty shower baths, two dressing cars, four storage cars for clean uniforms and underwear, and one storage car for discarded clothing that is to be disinfected. It can provide shower baths and clean outfits of underwear for 1,200 men in ten hours.

A soldier wrote from the front that Private A. C. White, with no friends, was "the loneliest man in the British army," and had been so upset he was in the hospital. "What he needs is not pills, but sympathy," the letter read. Since then Private White has received 600 letters, cards, papers and packages of delicacies.

Died as He Won Game.

Sergeant A. Vanoode of Brussels during a lull in the hostilities proposed a game of chess to a fellow enthusiast, a French comrade named Dussaixe. This was played upon a pocket chessboard and proceeded without incident to black's seventeenth move, when the sentinel sounded an alarm. Vanoode at once made his way to his post at the extremity of the trench. Dussaixe calling after him, "J'aurai vain—" ("I shall win"). But the sentence was never finished, for with a terrible crash a shell exploded in the trench, killing him instantly. The chessboard was kept by Vanoode, who was wounded. It shows that by his eighteenth move Dussaixe would have won.

"Come out, you Canadians: come out and fight!" was the challenge which the Germans issued the first night the Canadian division entered the trenches in Flanders. In his official record "Eyewitness" reports that the Canadians were annoyed at this, because they considered "the Germans were presuming upon a slight acquaintance." He adds, "Now, the trenches in normal times have their own code of manners and of amenity, and this challenge was and is regarded as impertinent."

A German soldier's letter, published in the Berliner Zeitung am Mittag, says:

"Inasmuch as there is nothing that can be bought in the villages just behind the German front, coin has lost all its value. On the other hand and in the same proportion, the value of the cigar has increased. It now forms the basis of the entire trade here, [illegible] no difference whether you have a fine cigar or one of the cheap [illegible] variety, such as those of which you can buy three for 5 pfennig at the village shop, their buying power and value are the same.

Use Cigars as Money.

"So there has developed on the basis of the 'single cigar standard,' as one might say, a very lively system of barter in commodities which for the most part come as loving gifts from home. A slice of salami sausage as big as your hand costs four cigars. A flask of cognac, irrespective of brand, costs thirty cigars.

"Whoever wants to have his boots shined and cleaned of the muddy real estate that cakes them can have them polished splendidly for two cigars. Thus we have reverted to that primitive medium of exchange that is found only among nature's people, where mussels and like articles take the place of money."

Photo by American Press Association.

FRENCHWOMAN PLANTING FLOWERS ON SOLDIERS' GRAVES.

Under the uniform of the soldier various trades and professions are hidden, all of which prove useful in one way or another in camp or trench. The woodcutter of last year still goes on with his woodcutting. Several infantrymen spend their nights fishing for eels. A fair night's catch is fifty, which sell for about 4 cents each.

Mechanics employ their spare time manufacturing tinder boxes and other articles out of old cartridge cases. One can obtain penknives, pencil cases, scissors, cigarette holders and a variety of similar articles.

Agricultural workers spend their spare time helping the farmers with whom they are billeted. Soldier barbers do a roaring trade and find customers among the civilians as well as the military. Tailors and bootmakers also find many occasions to use their skill.

Make War Souvenirs.

Leather workers gather up old pieces of leather from discarded harness or equipment and make it up into pocketbooks or cases for various articles. Soldiers with a fair education find plenty of work teaching French to the English soldiers or vice versa. Some of the English soldiers number among their pupils several civilians, all of whom are eager to master the intricacies of English, and a fair proportion of these civilian pupils are of the fair sex.

The military authorities thus far have had no occasion to notice these little side employments, which are not exactly allowed by military rules. They prefer to close their eyes, however, as long as the work helps to keep the soldier busy and happy.

In the German trenches grand opera is sung over a telephone, not only in the evenings but even in the midst of battle. "Die Walkure" and "Tristan und Isolde" are the most popular, together with old German folk songs.

But when the men sing they usually choose "Morgenrot," the song of the soldier who is to die at sunrise; "Es Geht bei Gedaempfter Trommel Klang," the song of the soldier condemned to be shot; "O Strassburg, O Strassburg!" the song of the relentless captain, who would not release the boy to his parents because "there must be soldiers at Strassburg." They also sing of home and parents, the parting for the war, the lads who will never return.

The Indian cavalry, back at the front with the warm weather, spend much of their spare time in feats of horsemanship. Hundreds of dusky horsemen sweep into lines of imaginary Germans, slashing right and left with their sabers. Their control of their horses is superb, and the spirit and agility they display astonish the French [illegible] In addition to [illegible] [illegible]

tions of fancy riding, the equal of which is seen only among the cowboys of the far west or the Cossacks of Russia.

A young Canadian who, with a Scotch friend, joined the French Foreign legion has written home, telling how he missed his first shot.

"We were not far from the German line when dawn began to break," he writes. "Presently at about seventy-five yards distance we saw a couple of German soldiers. They were absolutely unarmed, their tunics were open, and they were digging up some peasant's potatoes. I whispered to Mac to take the man on the left, and I drew a bead on the other. But when I'd got that far I couldn't finish the operation. I had never fired at a man before, and I simply couldn't shoot in cold blood an unarmed man digging potatoes.

"I lowered my rifle and turned to Mac to tell him how I felt and saw that he, too, had lowered his. He had felt the same as myself."

Pluck shows itself in all sorts of contrasts in the field.

A French patrol came upon five Germans. Two they shot, two got away, and the fifth they surrounded. When he had used all his cartridges he took his rifle by the muzzle and stood at bay. The Frenchmen got nearer and shouted to him to surrender. His only answer was that it was "a disgrace for a German soldier to be a prisoner."

Could Not Make Him Squeal.

The patrol then rushed in. The German lay about him lustily, and when he was down and could do nothing else he bit the French sergeant's hand to the bone. They took him back to their own lines, but no word of information could they get out of him.

One of the curious happenings of the war is the capture of seven Bavarian soldiers in the Argonne by a solitary French soldier. The Frenchman came suddenly on the Bavarians and called on them to surrender. They did not know French, but they threw up their hands all the same, and the Frenchman started to bring them to the French lines.

At intervals along the route he shouted out to men of his regiment, apparently concealed on each side of the road, and as these answered back the captured Bavarians followed their captor with the greatest docility.

When the Frenchman arrived in the French lines with his prisoners the

Photo by American Press Association.

SNIPER IN TREE WATCHING ENEMY'S TRENCHES.

captain of his regiment was astonished.

"You captured them all alone?" he asked incredulously.

"Yes, captain," the Frenchman replied, "but it was not so very difficult. I'm a ventriloquist."

But almost equally picturesque achievements are officially recorded. Corporal Fuller and Private Barber, both of the British Grenadier guards, who threw grenades with such effect at Neuve Chapelle that numbers of the enemy surrendered to them individually, have been awarded Victoria crosses for their feats of conspicuous bravery.

The official record says that when his comrades reached Barber they found him quite alone with the enemy surrendering all about him. Fuller also alone intercepted a party of the enemy which was trying to escape along a trench. He killed the leader with a bomb. The rest of the party, numbering nearly fifty, saw no way of evading Fuller's bombs and surrendered.

King Cuts His Menu.

Table expenses at Buckingham palace have been reduced from $3 to $1 a person each day since the war started and the dinner courses cut from twelve to five. The menu cards are written by hand to curtail expenses, and for three successive dinners cold roast beef was the only meat served.

"London not yet Germany," was the laconic correction of a French clerk's error by a British postal official. An envelope sent from Paris was addressed "Victoria street, London, Allemagne." The letter reached its destination uncorrected by the French postmen. The British simply marked it "Not yet."

A British sailor on duty in the North sea has written to his wife to say that if his new baby is a boy it is to be christened Thomas Torpedo.

A baby girl at Maesteg, Wales, has been christened Mary Allies.

A Swansea couple have decided to call their baby Dardan Ella.

The Society of Netherlands Bulb Growers, The Hague, Holland, has decided to send cut flowers as gifts to the hospitals for the wounded of the belligerent nations. The international women's congress will pay the carriage cost and purchase the boxes. The hyacinths, as their scent is too strong for the hospital wards. [illegible]

An Exploded Secret

By EMMA BLAKE

The French ship Arago sailed from New York for Cherbourg, France, in March, 1915, loaded with munitions of war for the allies. She had been out six days, and two of the voyage remained, when one of the passengers, a man, appeared at the door of the captain's cabin on the upper deck, slipped in hastily, put his finger to his lips to enjoin silence and stood for a moment waiting, evidently endeavoring to conquer some strong emotion. Then after turning the key in the door he said almost in a whisper to the astonished commander:

"Captain Le Moyne, this vessel is in imminent danger."

"How so?" asked the captain, starting.

"Write me out a promise of immunity, that I shall be treated in every respect as any other passenger aboard and that you will take no action except such as I approve and I will tell you."

The captain demurred for some time, cross questioning the man in an effort to get out of him something of what he had to say without making any promises. But the man shut up like a clam and would say nothing further except that there was a strong probability that the ship would be wrecked that night. Finally Captain Le Moyne gave in, wrote out a bond such as the man required, and he told his story.

He said that in the stateroom next to his he had heard two men talking. He could not hear all they said, but had heard enough to lead him to believe that they were emissaries of either the German or Austrian government, who had been sent to blow up the ship and send the cargo of arms and ammunition to the bottom. He had heard distinctly one of these men say to the other, "Very well, we'll do it tonight."

The captain started to leave his cabin when his visitor took the key from the lock and held it in a tight grip while he added:

"Remember your promise—if on examination you see anything that looks like an implement of destruction you will not throw it overboard, but place it where it can do no serious damage to the ship."

"Why do you stipulate for that?" asked the captain.

"Because I do not wish to be responsible for property destroyed by mistake. I should never forgive myself for doing so, and I would lay myself liable to damages that might take all I have."

This satisfied Le Moyne, who had no more relish for destroying harmless property than his informer.

The captain obtained a pass key and, accompanied only by the informer, went to the stateroom. There they found a box about the size of a suit case with a sliding cover, which was locked. Putting his ear down to the box, the captain fancied he heard a faint ticking, but was not sure. His informant also listened and declared that he could hear nothing. But he was a trifle deaf and could not hear a watch tick without putting it close to his ear.

The captain was for heaving the box overboard at once, but the other demurred, reminding him of his promise. Le Moyne averred that the lives of the crew and passengers were of more value than any promise, whereupon the other said:

"In the first place, captain, if you don't keep this matter a secret you'll have a panic aboard your ship; in the second place you can make all safe without the risk of laying you and me liable for damages in the destruction of what may be valuable property. All you have to do is to attach a line to the box, drop it overboard and let it float a couple of hundred yards astern."

The captain was so anxious to get rid of the article that he consented. Two strong iron handles were attached to it, one at either end. Producing a line, the captain secured it to one of these handles and ran it through the other for greater security. The informant suggested that it would be best to take it to his own stateroom, to be kept till after dark, that he might not attract attention, then drop it over the stern. To this he added a suggestion that it had better be put in place of the log for recording the ship's progress, which was hung out from the stern. The captain, not wishing it to be known that there were persons aboard intending to blow up the ship, assented to the delay, which was little more than an hour.

As soon as it was dark the informant carried the box to the stern, where he found the captain waiting for him, and, no one being near, it was lowered into the water, the line paid out and the near end attached to the reel. As soon as this was done Le Moyne breathed easier, though he was by no means sure that the persons who had intended to blow up the ship had not other contrivances for the purpose.

One morning when the Arago was sailing near the French coast Captain Le Moyne went aft to look for the floating box. He could not see it even with his binoculars. In fact, it had disappeared. He sent a steward for his informant, but the man could not be found.

Nor was he or the box ever heard of. When the Arago reached port detectives who had been cabled from New York came aboard to arrest [illegible] [illegible] on a hundred thousand dollars [illegible]

THE JITNEY BUS.

The New Factor In Cheap and Rapid Transit.

Six months ago the term jitney was unknown in the east. Derived as it is supposed to be from a combination of the words jot and tittle, with the "ney" suffix as a diminutive, the word has long been in use on the Pacific coast. Now, however, it will appear that jitney is quite a common word, and with such busses operating in Philadelphia and other cities it may be said that this peculiar type of conveyance has come to stay. Briefly, the jitney bus is an automobile charging 5 cents per passenger, jitney being the slang for a nickel.

With the cost of automobiles constantly going down, there is no reason why there should not be a five cent fare for reasonable distances. During the past few weeks the jitney bus has appeared in cities all over the west. It is supposed to have originated in Houston, Tex. During one past month 300 of them have appeared on the streets of San Francisco. Other figures as given in the news columns of the paper are 100 cars in Kansas City, Fort Worth 141 and Seattle 300. Associations to operate jitney busses are forming in Milwaukee, Denver, Ogden, Omaha, Vancouver, Portland, Oakland, Des Moines, St. Louis, Joplin and Baltimore. Feb. 1 ten routes were established in Omaha. Kansas City has twenty-seven. At the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco 2,000 jitneys are expected to operate along the road to the exposition.

Street car men are alive to the situation, and measures are being taken to meet the new competition. The strap hangers of America are in glee over the new situation, which will give them the choice of auto buses or street cars. The present indication points to adoption of the auto bus lines in nearly every large city of the United States where the operating taxes permit.

While motor buses for carrying passengers have been established in European cities for many years, London depending largely upon them, the use of autos at the nickel fare usually charged by street car lines had never been generally tried out.

In Washington several 5 cent buses are in operation, but they had never been considered a success or a serious competitor with the street cars. It was in Phoenix, Ariz., that the present sweep had its origin. During a strike there in 1913 the 5 cent buses were put to work, and so successful were they that the other western cities adopted the idea, private capital coming forward when it was found that the small buses could be made to pay a profit.—Town Development Magazine.

A Municipal Pier and Railway.

The municipal pier recently dedicated in Santa Cruz is the result of the work of a committee of private citizens who realized the need for water transportation facilities in addition to rail facilities at Santa Cruz in order to forward the city's industrial interests. Santa Cruz in former years depended entirely upon the Southern Pacific railroad. The fine harbor which Monterey bay provides made shipping by water easily possible, however. The citizens therefore voted almost unanimously in favor of issuing bonds in the sum of $165,000 for the building of a municipal pier. The pier was completed in December. It is a little over half a mile long and eighty feet wide at its outer end. A railway, also municipally owned and operated, runs its entire length, and this connects with the Southern Pacific railroad at its shore terminus, also with the Ocean Shore railroad. Two lines of steamers now touch at the port of Santa Cruz. It is said that a decided improvement has already been observed in the city as a result of the construction of the municipal pier.

City Bureau of Foreign Trade.

The Houston (Tex.) chamber of commerce has added to its various departments that of a bureau of foreign trade in view of the probabilities that the trade relations between Houston and the Latin-American countries will undergo important developments, that will open up vast new fields for the manufacturers and larger jobbing houses of Houston. The bureau is not restricted to Latin-American trade, however, but includes possibilities of trade with Japan and other countries. In addition to providing the bureau with a library, including commercial directories of the principal cities of those countries, arrangements have also been made under which the services of translators will be at the disposal of members of the chamber of commerce for writing letters in German and Spanish.

CHEERFUL SURROUNDINGS.

It is a prophetic fact that some of the biggest corporations in the country have come to believe that it pays to make the surroundings for their workmen pleasant and cheerful as well as sanitary. Flowers don't make plows, but they make more plows. In other words, the healthier and more contented a man is the more work—and better work—he can do and will do. No matter how good or how poor a workman a man may be, he is still human, and he cannot help but respond to his surroundings. If they are cleanly he will be cleanly; if they are cheerful he will be cheerful; if they are bright and energetic he will be that much more efficient.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Louis D. Brandeis, Special Treasury Counsel.

Photo by American Press Association.

In the trial of the suit instituted by the Riggs National bank of Washington against officials of the United States treasury department Louis D. Brandeis of Boston will act as special counsel for the accused officials. The bank has accused Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, Treasurer John Burke and Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams of conspiracy to wreck it.

For many years Mr. Brandeis has been a national figure in American public life. He is an advocate of social reforms, a publicist of renown, a lawyer of distinction, who has served as special counsel for the government in many celebrated cases. Mr. Brandeis is regarded as an expert in legislation and administration efficiency.

While Mr. Brandeis is largely a product of New England, he is not a Yankee. He was born of German-Jewish parents in Kentucky in 1858. After a preliminary education in Germany he went to Harvard Law school, was a professor there for awhile and then began practice in Boston. Soon he was recognized as one of the most successful lawyers and acquired one of the biggest practices in the city. Although a man in public life, Mr. Brandeis is not in politics. His use of politics has been merely as a means to the end of pushing social and economic movements. Several years ago his admirers tried to get him to run for mayor of Boston on a nonpartisan ticket, but failed to get him interested.

Nephew of the Czar.

Recent dispatches from the scene of war operations in Poland have made mention of Grand Duke Dimitri of Russia, who was attached to the army which invested Przemysl and compelled the capitulation of that fortified city. Grand Duke Dimitri is a cousin of the czar, being a son of Grand Duke Paul, brother of the late Czar Alexander III. He was born near Moscow on Sept. 6, 1891, his mother dying six days later.

Photo by American Press Association.

GRAND DUKE DIMITRI.

Like all of the Muscovite grand dukes, he was educated for a military career, and after graduating from the war college he entered the cavalry. After serving as a subordinate for a time he was appointed aid-de-camp to the adjutant of the Eleventh regiment of Grenadier guards and later was made captain in the Second regiment of the fusileers of the imperial guard. Since hostilities began he has been on the fighting line and recently was decorated as knight of the order of Seraphim in recognition of meritorious services in the field.

INCOME TAX LAW CONTRADICTORY

[illegible] Continue to Reach Washington of Unjustness of Interpretations

Washington, May 8.—Because of [illegible] in the income tax law, [illegible] amendments will be recommended to the next Congress by the [illegible] Department.

[illegible] experts are quietly at work on [illegible] statute, preparing a report on the [illegible] it contains and outlining proper legislative action to correct [illegible]. The law is honeycombed with errors.

A striking illustration of this thread of weakness that runs through the [illegible] gamut of Democratic legislation occurs in one of the most vital provisions of the income tax law. It [illegible] to deductions that shall be allowed in computing gross income—a [illegible] element in this system of taxation.

Paragraph B of the law states that "in computing income for the purpose of the normal tax there shall be allowed as deductions" among other things "losses actually sustained during the year incurred in trade," etc. What is the meaning of the words "in trade?" The [illegible] must decide.

The [illegible] is capable of an infinite variety of interpretations. As construed by the Treasury Department, deductions from gross income for losses "in trade" can be made only in connection with "that which occupies and engages the time, attention, and labor of anyone for the purpose of livelihood, profit or improvement; that which is his personal concern or interest, employment, occupation, but it is not necessary that it should be his sole occupation or employment."

For instance, it is said that if a grocer has invested in real estate, in making his income tax return any real estate profit must be added to gross income, but losses from real estate investment must not be deducted from gross income.

From every part of the country bitter complaints have been made against this ruling, and the question is to be taken to the courts for final adjudication. Whether the ruling is right or wrong, it is the [illegible] of the statute that reflects upon the intelligence of the political party responsible for it.

Nothing but heedlessness could have permitted it. The taxpayer bears the burden of the blunder, for it is a maxim in governmental affairs that every doubt in a law is resolved in favor of the government by the administrative officers.

Errors in the income tax law are too numerous to mention in detail. Witness the fact that in the first few weeks of its operation thousands of applications for refund were made. One of theseh as just been allowed, and is a fine example of the law's uncertaintiy.

The Department refunded to one man who had paid $500 as income tax all but $12 of that amount. He had had the help of a revenue officer in making his return, yet so indefinite was the law that for fear of violation he paid the government $500 instead of $12.

Examination of the Department decisions on the income tax law shows a mass of contradictory ruflings. Over and over again opinions were reversed and re-reversed, because the terms of the law did not admit of clear interpretation.

Every day additional evidence is found that adds to the long list of legislative blunders committed by the Democratic administration. Future congresses and the court must correct the mistakes, and meanwhile the people must pay for them.

WATER GLASS
EGG PRESERVER
[illegible] Gal. Sizes at La[illegible]'s Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

RICHARDSON THEATRE
—OSWEGO—
Friday, May 14, 1915
The Biggest and Most Important Musical Comedy of the year
McINTYRE and HEATH
in the Big Joyous Musical [illegible]
"THE HAM TREE"
Company of 80 Artists
The World's Best Dancing Chorus
PRICES—50c to $2.00
SEATS NOW ON SALE AT
Quirk Theatre Box Office

STATE LEAGUE

Games Today

Syracuse at Albany.
Utica at Troy.
Wilkesbarre at Binghamton.
Scranton at Elmira.

Results Yesterday

Albany, 2; Syracuse, 1.
Elmira, 14; Scranton, 3.
Wilkesbarre, 5; Binghamton, 0.
Troy, 7; Utica, 6.

Results Saturday

Troy, 4; Syracuse, 2.
Elmira, 4; Wilkesbarre, 2.
Binghamton, 6; Scranton, 2.
Albany, 4; Utica, 2.

Teams Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Troy	3	0	1.000
Elmira	3	1	.750
Binghamton	2	1	.667
Albany	2	1	.667
Wilkesbarre	2	2	.500
Utica	1	2	.333
Syracuse	0	3	.000
Scranton	0	3	.000

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

FULTON'S BOOTS WERE COSTLY

Local High School Lads Have Game On Ice But Finally Lose Out

Holding a lead of four runs to nothing in the seventh inning, the Fulton Hhigh school team blew up very ostentatiously Saturday and virtually presented the Oswego High school team with the game, the final score reading 6-4. All O'Brien's good work in the box, where he held the visitors hitless for six long frames, was wasted and after the Oswegonians had found the lanky lad for two safeties and two runs Barnes came on the mound and was treated shamefully in the final chapters.

As usual most of the blame can be laid at the door of the Fulton infield, although poor base running was accountable for the lack of many runs. The game was fast and interesting until the seventh when a fist fight marred the contest for a moment and then the hopes of the Fulton rooters were shattered when O'Brien was driven to cover.

The locals started off like worldbeaters and soon found Gokey for some well bunched hits. In the fourth the Fultonians crossed the rubber twice and again in the sixth the locals scored a brace of tallies. O'Brien was working all the time and only two men had reached third base until the seventh. In this inning Knight landed safely on O'Brien's error; Jacks beaned and both of these men stole second. Poucher lined a long uy to Reynolds who misjudged the ball and two men scored. O'Brien started the eighth inning but after walking Gokey, he grooved one for Walker who lined out a pretty single. Barnes then came into the box and Grigley hit him for a single. Honus managed to settle down a little after the first attack, however, and retired the side. In the ninth the visitors tallied again on a hit by O'Connor and a sacrifice by Knight.

Rev. M. B. Buck umpired the contest and in addition to his duties with the indicator he was forced to act as referee in a one-round tilt at third base when Pullen collided with Wiggins while running in from second. Pullen claimed that the Oswego man tripped him and promptly pasted the vistor without any words. Wiggins retaliated with a few swings and the fans were getting their money's worth when other players interfered. No was injured.

The score:

Fulton

	AB.	R.	H.	PO.	A.	E.
Keeler 3b	4	0	0	4	3	1
Bray c.	4	0	0	2	2	0
Barnes 2b1p.	3	1	1	2	1	0
D. O'Brien cf.	3	2	1	2	0	0
Pullen lf	3	0	3	0	0	0
Reynolds rf.	3	0	0	1	0	2
H. O'Brien p.	3	0	0	1	2	1
Barker*	1	0	0	0	0	0
	32	4	6	p7	16	6

Oswego

	AB.	R.	H.	PO.	A.	E.
Walker cf.	3	1	1	2	0	0
Grigley 1b	5	2	2	12	7	2
O'Connor ss.	4	0	0	2	3	0
Knight rf.	5	1	1	3	0	0
Jacks lf.	4	1	0	3	0	0
Linderman 2b.	4	0	0	2	0	0
Wiggins 3b	2	0	0	0	2	2
Poucher c.	3	0	0	3	1	1
Gokey p.	2	1	0	0	1	0
	32	6	4	27	13	5

Struck out, by O'Brien, 9; by Barnes, 1; by Gokey 2.

Bases on ball off O'Brien, 1; off Barnes, 1; off Gokey, 2. Umpire Buck.

Neutrals.

It is generally acknowledged that neutrals have rights. After the war is over these will be respected.—Indianapolis Journal.

Baffles Burbank.

Even Luther Burbank seems unable to invent a seed that your neighbor's chickens can't scratch up.—Washington Times.

A Future Terror.

Even after peace is declared the reading public will have a long course of war fiction to go through.—Washington Star.

Room For All.

Any one can get a seat on the water wagon. It is one place where there is always plenty of room.—Philadelphia Press.

Oysters on Toast.

Broil or fry oysters and lay them on buttered toast. Salt and pepper. Pour over them a cupful of hot, rich cream. Keep hot until eaten.

SATURDAY'S RESULTS STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

New York at Boston.
Philadelphia at Brooklyn.
Chicago at Pittsburgh.

Results Yesterday

Pittsburgh, 8; Cincinnati, 3.
Chicago, 2; St. Louis, 1.

Results Yesterday

Boston, 4; New York, 3.
Brooklyn, 3; Philadelphia, 2.
Pittsburgh, 3; St. Louis, 2.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	13	6	.684
Chicago	13	7	.650
Boston	11	8	.579
Cincinnati	10	10	.500
Pittsburgh	10	12	.455
St. Louis	10	14	.417
Brooklyn	8	12	.400
New York	6	12	.333

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at New York.

Results Yesterday

Detroit, 1; Washington, 0.
Cleveland, 3; Philadelphia, 0.
Chicago, 6; St. Louis, 1.

Results Saturday

New York, 10; Boston, 3.
Philadelphia, 5; Washington, 3.
St. Louis, 6; Detroit, 4.
Chicago, 10; Cleveland, 5.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Detroit	17	7	.708
New York	12	6	.667
Chicago	14	9	.609
Boston	8	8	.500
Cleveland	10	12	.455
Washington	9	11	.450
Philadelphia	7	13	.350
St. Louis	6	17	.261

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Pittsburgh at Baltimore.
Chicago at Newark.
Kansas City at Brooklyn.
St. Louis at Buffalo

Results Yesterday

Newark, 4; Chicago, 3.

Results Saturday

Kansas City, 8; Brooklyn, 5.
Neark, 2; Chicago, 0.
Pittsburgh, 4; Baltimore, 2.
St. Louis, 6; Buffalo, 5 (1st game).
Buffalo, 4; St. Louis, 2 (2d game).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	14	8	[illegible]
Newark	14	9	[illegible]
Brooklyn	12	10	[illegible]
Chicago	12	11	[illegible]
Kansas City	11	11	[illegible]
St. Louis	9	12	[illegible]
Baltimore	10	14	[illegible]
Buffalo	8	15	[illegible]

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Toronto at Providence.
Montreal at Jersey City.
Rochester at Newark.
Buffalo at Richmond.

Results Yesterday

Rochester, 6; Newark, 4 (1st game)
Newark, 6; Rochester, 4 (2d game)
Montreal, 17; Jersey City, 10.
Toronto, 12; Providence, 6.

Results Saturday

Montreal, 5; Jersey City, 1.
Rochester, 6; Newark, 4.
Buffalo, 6; Richmond, 6 (called).
Providence, 1; Toronto, 0.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	7	3	.700
Montreal	7	4	.600
Jersey City	5	4	.600
Buffalo	5	4	.600
Richmond	4	5	.444
Rochester	4	5	.444
Newark	3	5	.375
Toronto	3	7	.300

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

	R.	H.	E.
At St. Paul	R.	H.	E.
Minneapolis	7	10	5
St. Paul	5	10	3
At Columbus—	R.	H.	E.
Cleveland	9	14	3
Columbus	10	10	5
At Indianapolis—	R.	H.	E.
Louisville	7	5	2
Indianapolis	3	11	3
At Milwaukee—	R.	H.	E.
Kansas City	5	7	5
Milwaukee	4	7	6

Woodcraft.

You can make fire by rubbing two pieces of dry wood together, but it is not believed this method will ever supersede the plan of rubbing a match against a piece of sandpaper.—Kansas City Journal.

Have The Evening Times to Read Before Eating Your Supper

With all the news about people you know and affairs in which you are interested.

THE EVENING TIMES is regular in its delivery, and is on sale at the [illegible] of V. C. Lewis, Conley Bros., Wm. Murphy and Charles Brooks, East Broadway; J. W. Gillard, West First Street.

Ask for and insist upon getting, taking no other, newspaper than your home newspaper,

The Fulton Evening Times

JUDGE OUTLINES DUTY OF PARENTS

Decides Questions Asked In Thousands of Novels.

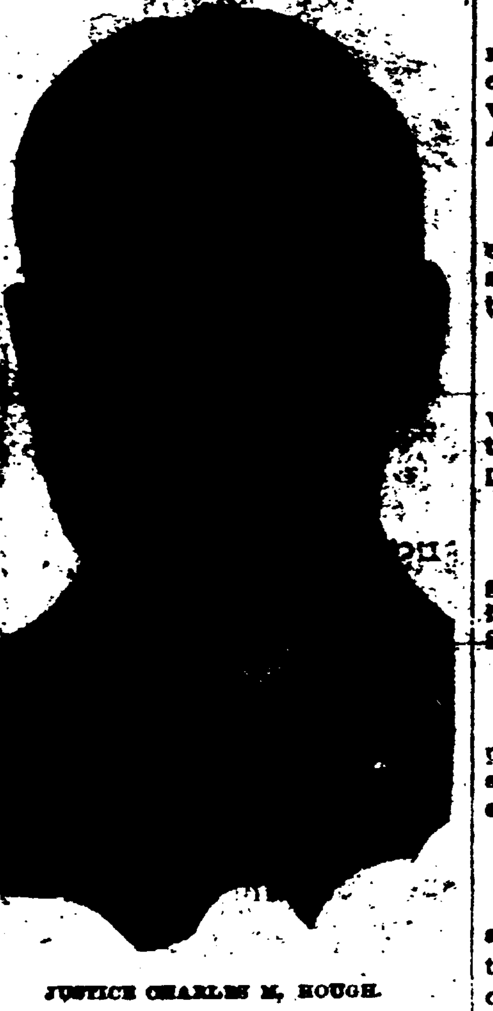
A NEW LAW IS LAID DOWN.

In Alienation Suit, Brought by Coachman Who Married Daughter of a Millionaire, Justice Hough of New York Says Love and Mammon Are Not In Any Way Associated—His Decision.

New York.—The action of Judge Charles M. Hough in the federal district court in refusing to allow the jury to consider the suit brought by Max Frederick Kleist against Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] for $250,000, [illegible] affections, is not [illegible], but in an[illegible] Justice Hough [illegible] that have [illegible] of thousands of [illegible] he has stated [illegible] to children [illegible] without parental [illegible].

[illegible], was once [illegible] Juliet, eighteen, [illegible] Brettungs. Mr. Bre[illegible] millionaire [illegible] and shipowner [illegible] for a family in Mich[illegible] adjoined the Brettungs' [illegible] place. Juliet became [illegible] good looking coachman, [illegible] an introduction, married [illegible] the knowledge of her parents, [illegible] endearing love notes, [illegible] and returned to [illegible] parents.

After Kleist [illegible] to one of Mr. Brettung's [illegible] his way in the w[illegible] of the place. Returning to New York, he attempted to regain his wife. His offers were spurned. Then followed his $250,000 suit charging alienation of affections.



JUSTICE CHARLES M. HOUGH.

After hearing the evidence Justice Hough dismissed the suit and propounded what he said was a theory of law designed to cover such cases and to minimize the scandal and discourage the institution of "such sordid demands as have been here exhibited." He held that while [illegible] authority may [illegible] with marriage, the parental relation continues and that no parent is bound at the peril of a successful suit for damages to approve of his child's marriage.

"There is a duty to pursue this course because litigations like this have been happily almost unknown in the national courts, and no decisions of binding authority at present control the action of this tribunal. A plaintiff who in plain language sought pecuniary consolation from a wealthy father-in-law who refused to show by payments of money or the furnishing of business opportunity his appreciation of that plaintiff as a son-in-law would be out of court upon his own statement.

"All suits such as this, whether promoted by or against the rich or the poor, rest on the same legal basis—namely, the alleged wrong of the defendants in depriving the plaintiff of the society, affection and services of a wife or the protection, support and affection of a husband, as the case may be.

"But when the defendants are not strangers, but parents, the family relation, which antedated matrimony, greatly modifies the law, [illegible] a [illegible] opinions in all parts of the English speaking world not [illegible] and [illegible] help to [illegible] contention related to what are commonly called 'alienation suits.'

"The doctrines preferred by me and so far as I am concerned to be enforced are these: The parental authority may be admitted to terminate with the celebration of a lawful marriage by the child, and even parental power and influence (as distinguished from authority) must thereafter recognize the creation by marriage of a status protected and favored by laws quite as ancient as those enforcing the duties and responsibilities of children, fathers and mothers."

Going to Extremes.

A New York woman used an ax, an icepick and a butcher knife on her husband. Some women go to extremes when they set out to make an impression.—Detroit Free Press.

The Point of View.

The progress of the respective warring nations still depends on the point of view of the special correspondent or war office in the case.—Baltimore American.

Two Great Joys.

With strawberries and baseball both on the market, it must be a melancholy soul indeed that does not rejoice in the seasonal blessings.—Chicago News.

They Do Indeed.

Perhaps it would have been just as well if Senor Huerta hadn't admitted that he knew who killed Madero. People do gossip so!—Indianapolis News.

Mexican Strategy.

The most strategic thing a Mexican general can do is to capture a telegraph line that has an end in the United States.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Spots in the Sun.

With nine brand new sun spots reported, Old Sol seems to have arranged a place for each of the aspiring belligerents.—Washington Post.

One Thing He Couldn't Do.

Milking a cow is not an easy task for an unpracticed hand. Leslie Stephen, the famous English literary light, was once on a long tramp in Switzerland, accompanied by his friend, Dr. Morgan. They missed their way and found themselves, parched and hungry, far from any dwelling place. At length they came across a cow, from whom they determined to extract some nourishment, but after trying their best for an hour, each holding on to her horns in turn, they had to abandon all hopes of milk. This, remarks Dr. Morgan, is "one of the very [illegible] [illegible]

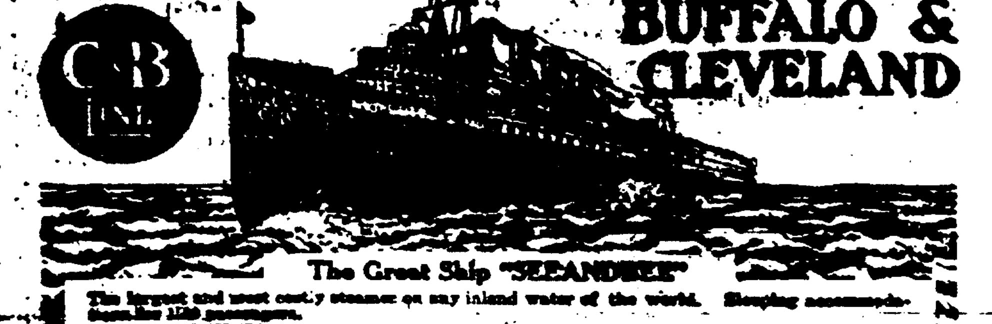
FOR PROTECTION FROM FIRE AND BURGLARS

rent a Safe Deposit Box in our Fire and Burglar Proof Vault for your valuables.

The cost is small—only

$3.00 AND UP PER YEAR

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND



The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"
[illegible]
"CITY OF ERIE" — 3 Magnificent Steamers — "CITY OF BUFFALO"
BETWEEN
BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND
[illegible]
THE CLEVELAND & BUFFALO TRANSIT CO., Cleveland, Ohio

NINETEEN HUNDRED COPIES OF THE EVENING TIMES GO INTO FULTON'S HOMES DAILY. WATCH US GROW!

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 122 Established, Dec. 17, 1914. TUESDAY, MAY 11, 1915 Price One Cent

KAISER'S ENVOYS HAVE NEW REASON TO SMILE, SAYS SIR JAMES M. BARRIE

Emperor Accused of Ordering the Sinking of Lusitania, Offering Reward to Successful Submarine Crew.

London, Tuesday.—It is now certain that the unparalleled deed of savagery committed by the German pirates by sinking the Lusitania, which, according to the Copenhagen correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, was ordered by the Kaiser, who promised the greatest reward to the submarine succeeding in the effort, resulted in the loss of two out of every three persons of the two thousand aboard.

Thus the earnest conviction that the death roll would be appalling has been only too well confirmed. This will be seen from the following figures, which may be taken as approximately correct:

Total aboard, 2,160; missing, 1,457; rescued, 703; died since rescued, 45; total number of survivors, 658.

Why more were not saved was explained yesterday by a Cunard official at Queenstown. The explosion of the first torpedo of the two that were fired broke the main steamship, he said, and the consequence was it became impossible to reverse the engines. The ship, which had been traveling about seventeen knots, continued to make headway for ten minutes, and as a result the boats could not be launched, as they would have capsized. Thirty boats had been slung out in readiness for an emergency the moment the ship entered the war zone.

The survivors arriving yesterday give more terrible accounts of what happened after the ship was torpedoed. Many agree the huge vessel sank twenty-five minutes after being struck by the first torpedo, which Captain Turner [illegible] coming [illegible] every possible effort to dodge. All those rescued tell stirring narratives of their escape, and the last scene, as the leviathan went down, will never be banished from their memories.

It is officially announced by the Admiralty that the Board of Trade, with the Admiralty's concurrence, has ordered an inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of the Lusitania. Lord Mersey, who conducted the Titanic inquiry, has consented to preside.

Ministers of all denominations on Sunday denounced in the strongest terms the sinking of the Lusitania. The Bishop of London, at St. Paul's Cathedral, declared it was a "colossal crime which stains forever the reputation of those who perpetrated it."

The Rev. R. J. Campbell, at the City Temple, said:

"The Germans are pleading military necessity for their career of scoundrelism and utter deviltry unsurpassed in the blackest ages of human history. No words of scorn or bitterness are strong enough wherewith to characterize this damnable plea, and as sure as there is a God in heaven the perpetrators of these deeds will be brought to judgment."

The Rev. F. B. Meyer, at Christ Church, Westminster, said:

"The Germans out-Herod Herod. The joy in Germany and in the German Embassy in Washington shows the German people endorse the act and therefore are acessories."

VICTIMS BORNE TO GRAVES WITH HONORS

Queenstown, Tuesday.—Ninety-two passengers of the Lusitania who formed part of that pitiful handful of maimed, dead and dying brought ashore with the survivors of the disaster that followed the attack on the vessel by a German submarine last Friday, were buried yesterday afternoon with services that have no parallel in history.

Under a sky in which not a single cloud floated and to the strains of hymns played by British soldiers, they were laid to rest two miles behind Queenstown in a cemetery bursting with spring greenery and tucked between hills flaming with gorse. The services at the graves began at four o'clock, and at half-past four the sod of Ireland was being shovelled upon the coffins.

Queenstown never sensed the full horror of the Lusitania disaster until today. Up to the time that the long stream of coffins began to disappear over the hill behind the town there was about the affair, what with the continued searches for survivors and the bustle about the morgue, something of the unusual and theatric. But when the funeral started the realization came that each of these cheap coffins held a body and that in the Atlantic, less than twenty miles away, there were more than a thousand more, all victims of a German submarine.

The townsfolk stood hatless nearly all forenoon as the coffins were conveyed to the cemetery on carts. This process required hours, and it was not until three o'clock in the afternoon that the funeral procession [illegible] the [illegible] to the waterfront.

PRIZE SPEAKING FRIDAY NIGHT

Initial Night of Events in Connection With Annual Commencement

Arrangements have been fully completed for the first of the annual high school Commencement events, the prize speaking contest, which will be held in The Quirk on Friday evening of this week.

Theh contestants are receiving the finishhing touches at the hands of Mrs. Kesler, the teacher of elocution. The high school orchestra, under the training and direction of Mrs. Owens, has reached a higher standard than ever before. The graduation class, thirty-four in number, the largest class that has ever graduated from the high school, will occupy the south boxes. Dr. Wickes, professor of oratory in thhe Syracuse Central High school, will again bepresent and act as chairman for theh judges of the contest.

Lester Gillespie, class of 1916, the grand marshal for the class, has chosen students from the junior class to act as ushers and those who come will be given their seats with neatness and despatch. It is earnestly urged that all be present and seated by 8 o'clock as it is the intention to begin promptly at that time and no one can be seated while the first contestant is speaking.

The advance sale indicates that there will, as usual at the prize speaking contest, be a packed house.

Everything points to a close contest and a most satisfactory evening.

Tickets are onw on sale at the box office at The Quirk.

It is advised that tickets for the three events: Prize Speaking, May 14 at The Quirk, Class Night, June 22, at The Quirk, and Commencement, June 23, at the Baptist church; be purchased as the set is sold for 50 cents. The price for single tickets to prize speaking is 25 cents; to Class Night, when the play "The Fortune Hunter" will be given, 35 cents; to Commencement Exercises, 25 cents.

The following is the personnel of the high school orchestra:

First violin........Mrs. L. R. Owens
First violin........Harold Gillespie
Second violin........Evadne Austin
Second Violin........Joseph Keenan
Coronet......Prof. Jesse A. Lawton
Flute ....Earl Lawton
Flute ....Albert Sanford
Clarinet ....Ralph Ferguson
'Cello ....Phillips Calkins
Drums ....Richard Murphy
Piano ......Miss Katherine Sullivan

The complete program follows:

March .... Orchestra
Selection—"A Day at West Point"..Theo. Bendix
Orchestra
The National Flag (adapted)..Beecher
Ramon F. Lewis
The Night of Mystery..........Corelli
Leland T. Carner
Selection—"Swedish Fest March"..A. Perfect
Orchestra
Dolliver the Patriot..............Anon
Harold F. Caffrey
The Empty Niche..............Anon
Howard Shaff
Selection—"Lilac Domino"..Ch. Cuvillier
Orchestra
The Country Post Office.......Fisk
Jessie B. Wilcox
Maysie's Measles..............Burgess
Florence L. Moody
Selection—"Dolores".....Neil Moret
Orchestra
Coals of Fire..............Andrews
Lillian P. Simons
Mandy's Organ .... Higginson
Eryma E. Paige
Selection—"Spring, Beautiful Spring"..Paul Lincke
Orchestra
Report of Judges
Exit—"The Debutante One-Step"..Victor Herbert
Orchestra

FESTIVAL DREW FULTON CROWD

Three Cars Needed to Bring Back Persons Who Heard Entire Program

The first concert of the music festival of the Central New York Festival Association which was given last night at theS yracuse Arena was a tremendous success from every standpoint. The great theatre was well filled when the concert began, only a single block of seats in the balcony being vacant. The lower floor did not show an empty seat and the remainder of the balcony was also filled with music lovers from all sections of the state.

Almost two hundred Fultonians attended the concert, the appearance of the Oswego Festival chorus, of which many Fulton young people are members affording the principal attraction for the Fultonians. The Oswego chorus sang in conjunction with the Central New York Festival chorus under the direction of Professor Tom Ward who will conduct all the chorus numbers. The Chicago Symphony orchestra, directed by Frederic Stock, occupied the principal place on the stage and directly, in back of the orchestra the choruses were seated.

The work of the orchestra was admirable as usual. Pasquale Amata, Metropolitan Opera baritone and Frances Alda, soprano, were the soloists. Those in the audience who have heard Amata before noticed that he was not in his usual good voice, but his work was very well received. The audience recalled him twice after his first number and in the second half of the program he received an ovation. He sang the Prologue to "Pagliacci" for his first encore and for his final number he electrified the audience with the "Toreador" song from "Carmen."

Mme. Alda was more liberal with her encores and was in perfect voice. Her contributions to the second half of the program was in the nature of six selections, two in German, two in French and two in English. Her English numbers were compositions of Frank LaForge, who accompanied her. She responded to hearty and prolonged applause with two encores.

The combined choruses sang the Hymn to the Sun, from the opera "Iris" in the first part, and in the second half of the program rendered the Kirmess scene from "Faust" and final to Act 1 from "Lohengrin." In the last number a quintette comprising Florence Girton Hartman, Mae Hall Sweet, William A. Snyder, Richard G. Calthrop and John G. Ray assisted the chorus. The work of the choruses was very good and the Oswego chorus, which has been directed by D. Byron McCloskey, showed the result of careful training.

Miss Margaret Wilson, who will sing at the festival Wednesday evening was an interested spectator last evening, and Colonel Theodore Roosevelt was also present. The Colonel was immediately recognized when he entered and was vigorously applauded.

FIVE BURNED TO DEATH

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Five persons were burned to death, two were seriously injured and a number were saved by jumping from third story windows into a life net when fire early today destroyed an Italian tenament house.

UNDER MARTIAL LAW

Victoria, B. C.—Victoria is under martial law today as a result of renewed attacks on German [illegible] by [illegible] the sinking of the Lusitania.

Austrians Believed to Have Broken Through Russian Lines in Galicia, Sweep the Enemy From All Positions

Press Headquarters of the Austrian Army, Western Galacia, via London.—The first stage of the battle of West Galicia has been virtually concluded. The troops under the lead of the German General August von Mackensen, after successfully breaking through all three fortified lines of the Russian front, are assembling and reforming for a new offensive.

They are bringing forward supplies left behind in their rapid advance and also are using the interval to gather the captured Russians behind their present front and seek for abandoned guns and other spoils of war in the mountain forests.

Seventy thousand prisoners already have been brought in. The number of prisoners in this part of the battle in Galicia will be increased, it is estimated here, by 30,000. Between sixty and seventy guns have been captured, but as was the case in the battle of the Mazurian Lakes in February, it is believed it is only a small part of the guns left behind in concealed places.

The second stage of the operations is beginning further to the east, the Second Austro-Hungary Army having stormed the crest of the Carpathians and the northern slopes between Lupkow and Uzsok Passes, and driven before it with the bayonet the English Russian Army, under General Brussiloff.

Every advance of the Austro-German forces shortens the battle front, thus liberating troops for use elsewhere, and at the same time increasing the confusion along the Russian lines of retreat.

OSWEGO RIVER CLAIMS VICTIM

William H. Fralick of Syracuse Drowned While Fishing at Phoenix

The Oswego river at Phoenix claimed another victim yesterday, when William H. Fralick, 35, was drowned while engaged in fishing.

Fralick and a companion, Charles Williams, a shoemaker, both of Syracuse, engaged a rowboat and soon became intent on fishing. Unconsciously the occupants let the boat drift too near the dam, and suddenly it filled and captized.

Fralick and Williams struggled fiercely to hold to the sides of the boat but the current being swift at that point which was near the dam the men were tossed about like straws. Their cries were plainly heard by persons on both sides of the river.

Roy Waldron of Phoenix who was fishing near hastened to the spot and, after a hard struggle, succeeded in lifting the unconscious form of Williams into the boat. When he turned to give aid to Fralick he had disappeared. Williams was taken ashore and revived. Later he stated that when he found himself in the water it was almost impossibel to breathe, and he was fast becoming unconscious when he was seized b ythe hair and drawn to the surface.

Grappling for the body of Fralick began at once and up to a late hour this morning it had not been recovered. The spot where the drowning took place was in twenty feet of water; and the strong current caused by the overflow at the dam makes the work especially difficult.

Waldron, who has rescued several persons from drowning in the Oswego river, made light of his rescue work but received high commendations for his capable services which was witnessed by many people.

Fralick lived on the North Side for many years. He was a member of Syracuse [illegible], [illegible] of America, and local No. [illegible], Stationary Firemen. He attended the Church of the Assumption. He is survived by his father, Charles Fralick, a brother, Charles, and a married sister, Mrs. Hatter.

STEAMER TO RUN TO SYRACUSE

Captain Burleigh First Skipper to Avail Himself of Barge Canal Facilities

The "City of Fulton," a snug little steamer, under the command of Captain C. S. Burleigh of this city, will on May 17, begin to make regular trips between the foot of Rochester st., this city and Syracuse.

The steamer will leave Rochester st. at 5:15 a. m., arriving in Syracuse at 11 a. m. The return trip will be made at 2:50 p. m.

Captain Burleigh proposes to make the steamer service a success. That he deserves success no one can gainsay.

There are several points in his favor, one of which, and perhaps the most important of all, is the saving he will effect shippers at both ends of the line, as it is a rule in the case of all freight transportation that water freighht rates are far below those charged by rail transportation companies. A frieght house at the foot of Rochester st. will be open from 7 a. m. until 6 p. m., under the direction of a caretaker who will see that goods left in storage are safeguarded.

Captain Burleigh's boat is the first real indication of the benefits that will come to Fulton merchants by the opening of the Barge Canal. The steamer will carry passengers as well as freight and will connect with the Rochester-Syracuse boats, thhus making virtually a through line between this city and the 'Flower City."

WEATHER FORECAST

Fair tonight and Wednesday [illegible]

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
-Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 64 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 65

C. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

"Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 11, 1915

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

Scientific Housekeeping.

"Don't you have trouble getting a sufficient variety of food?" she asked.

"No," said the woman who runs a boarding house; "that's the easiest part of it. You see, I make up a series of menus for breakfast, dinner, etc., at the beginning of the season and then they go on steadily till the end of it. The cook knows just what to prepare each day, and I am not at all bothered."

"But don't your boarders get tired of having the same thing each week on the same day?"

"Ah," said the landlady, "that's where I fool 'em! They don't have the same thing on the same day of the week. There are ten separate menus. If we begin, say, with hash on Monday, the next time they have hash is a week from Thursday and the next time a week from the following Sunday. Nobody can tell what he's going to have on any given day without working it out with a pencil and paper, and as nobody is likely to go to that trouble just for the sake of finding his meals monotonous, the result is, in fact, as pleasantly varied as if the menu for the day was composed every morning."—New York Post.

Prismatic Lake.

Prismatic lake, in Yellowstone park, is the most perfect spring of its kind in the world. It rests on the summit of a self built mound, sloping gently in all directions. Down this slope the overflow from the spring descends in tiny rivulets, everywhere interlaced with one another. A map of the mound resembles a spider web with the spider (the spring) in the center. The pool is 250 by 300 feet in size. Over the lake hangs an ever present cloud of steam, which itself often bears a crimson tinge, reflected from the waters below. The steam unfortunately obscures the surface of the lake, and one involuntarily wishes for a rowboat in which to explore its unseen portions. Whenever visible there is a varied and wonderful play of colors, which fully justifies the name. — "The Yellowstone National Park," by Hiram Martin Chittenden, Brigadier General, U. S. A., Retired.

Making Tin.

The tin of trade is not pure, but has in it a little iron, lead or arsenic. Tin is a metal of chemistry. Its principal ore is called tin stone or tin oxide and is made up of tin and oxygen. To obtain the tin the ore is heated in furnaces with charcoal. The carbon of the charcoal unites with the oxygen of the ore, forming carbonic acid gas, which passes off into the air, leaving the tin, which melts and is drawn off and cooled in iron molds. This is called block tin. Tin ore is chiefly found in Cornwall, England; Banca, in Dutch East Indies; Malacca and Queensland and New South Wales, in Australia. Tin was used by the ancients. The Phoenicians obtained most of their tin from the British isles. When the Romans conquered Britain they worked the tin mines in Cornwall by means of slaves.

What After Safety?

Everybody from Dan to Beersheba is now thoroughly convinced that "safety first" is the proper thing. It may not always be possible to agree upon whose safety it shall be, but considered wholly in the abstract anybody caught putting anything ahead of safety in these enlightened days of peace and good will would have to dodge shafts until the rest of his life.

Indeed, so amicably and universally settled is this problem of "safety first" that many are wondering if we shouldn't now stop talking about it and commence to consider what shall come after safety. Safety, although the first thing, is not the only thing. What shall we have for second? Any suggestion, however fooolish, will be welcome.—Life.

Inner Life In Constantinople.

Constantinople has a deleterious effect upon Europeans. So at least declared a "great and highly gifted lady," mentioned by Grant Duff. She had the honor of being received by the sultan. "I hope you like Constantinople?" inquired the monarch. "Yes," said she, "but I find great difficulty in leading my inner life here." The sultan started, but, recovering himself, said suavely, "Ah, no one should drink water here without having it previously boiled."—London Chronicle.

Best makes of Carriages. VanWagenen's. adv122

OFFICIALS SHOULD TRY A CAMPAIGN OF EDUCATION

When an idea is advanced of raising by twenty-five per cent the assessed valuation on property, terror fills the average taxpayer's heart, and immediately there ensues an acute attack of "cold feet," which persistently refuse to turn into the prescribed path. If officials were at all times wise they would before springing upon an unsuspecting public a campaign of price-raising conduct a class through the mazes of tangle-foot financiering, so that all who desired might learn to see, to feel, and take the medicine handed to them.

It is always unwise to increase prices unless there has been a campaign of education gone through with prior to the announcement of the raise in prices. By way of suggestion The Evening Times recommends for the preliminary educational campaign that a set of officials shall before increasing the valuation of property cause to be published in authorized newspapers a series of clipped articles bearing on the subject. Anything that any one says favorable to the plan of raising the price of taxes should be published, with no comment. After a few short jabs of this sort have been delivered to the unsuspecting victims, there should be published a series of arguments why valuations are too low. These arguments ought to be numerous and convincing.

Within a reasonable length of time more of the concise sort of statements should appear in print. They should reiterate the arguments and the reasons for being compelled to raise the price of taxes. If this plan is followed by a majority of the cities and towns in the country, there should not ensue a single instance of taxpayers asking for a reason why a proposed increase entered the mind of an official. In fact, it is safe to assume that no one would even raise an objection to an increase, because it is a rule of bussiness that before we want a man to do a thing we must first make him want to do it. Were such a course to be pursued in cities, whose officials desire to raise valuations, in comparatively rare instances would the inhabitants thereof remove themselves and their effects away to places not yet having learned the lessons here offered—free, and even where persons were to remove themselves from a city for the reason of increased valuations, the increase in revenue from those whho might consent to remain would, perhaps, more than offset the loss in population.

A determination to get whatever is coming in the way of increased assessments, a stiff upper lip, and no official should be troubled with "cold feet" when he comes to raising the price of the expense account to the rate that will bring receipts up to and beyond the level of wasteful expenditures.

ENCOURAGEMENT

Fulton presented his plan to Napoleon for steamships across the English Channel, but Napoleon ridiculed the idea, and relied on the wind. His doubts cost him success.

One of the Vanderbilts laughed at the idea of an elevated railroad. The old Commodore said the public are fools, but they won't ride on stilts. The Gould family looked seriously into the question, and made a hundred millions that might have been branded by the Vanderbilt banks. They called Bessemer a crazy crank, but one man listened and made millions. Palissy burned up every stick of firewood, and finally his furniture, in order to bake his porcelain. His poverty, his persistency, paved the way for one of the greatest industries of the world.

It has been under the pressure of poverty that most men have won in a big way.

If Napoleon, if Caesar, if Alexander were alive today, we would pronounce them epileptics, but you know whaht they did with all their physical handicaps. Carlyle never knew a year of good health. Dante was an exile, a wanderer, homeless, and sick. Before he finished his "Divine Comedy" he was a wreck. "Milton's blindness did not prevent him from winning the world. Fawcett, Prescott, Parkman, Gore, are lessons in blindness.

It was Edgar Allen Poe who in his wonderful philosophy explained that man only dies by the sanction of his will.

It is doubtful if a man ever showed more courage under the most disheartening conditions than did Robert Louis Stevenson, who wrote: "For fourteen years I have not had a day of real health. I have written in hemorrhages, written in sickness, written torn by coughing, written when my head swam for weakness."

We are all expecting happiness some day. This is the object of life. Some are willing to struggle and slave, and do the drudgery of the world, just for this hope of happiness.

Then there are those whob eome intensely interested in their work, and find it a pleasure, a source of satisfaction. And these men reach happiness first. Happiness is a condition of the mind. It is not a matter of distance, length of time, or geographical location. If you are not happy now, you probably never will be. People who are forever finding fault with their present surroundings are naggers, whiners, complainers. Folks who can see nothing worth while in the present are sour on the world.

Why expect everything in the future? Why not enjoy a part of the present.

Insanity and idleness are twins. Work and happiness are in harmony. The man who works, plays, laughs and loves is living a full life.

Without work, man loses health, happiness and honest success.

When you consider work as a slave's task you are on your way back to the cave-home where your wife will expect you to bring from the chase a human shin bone for a beef stew; you are slipping into the ooze of ages.

You may be just a carpenter, but you know the best book ever written is the story of a carpenter. Artistotle was a guide in the mountains; Socrates a stone mason; Angelo a stone cutter. Burns was a chore boy. Shakespeare was a son of a butcher. Lamb was a bookkeeper. Sir Isaac Newton was a common clerk.

The pages of progress are written with raised letters that a blind man could read. Train boys have become railway presidents; news butchers have been transformed into wizards of lights, heat and power. Pages have developed into senators; foundlings have grown to be governors. The whole scroll of science, statesmanship, finance, business, is made up, with very few exceptions, of men who began with nothing but the capital of courage on hand.

The man who faces these truths and expects to win, without work, is at best a boob.—The Silent Partner.

Opinions

Sinking of the Lusitania

A week ago, on the day the Cunard liner Lusitania sailed from New York for Liverpool, the German Embassy at Washington published in American newspaper an advertisement warhing passengers against traveling on belligerent ships whose routes were through the war zone Germany had established in waters around the British Isles. Furthermore, anonymous warning were sent to individuals who proposed sailing on the Lusitania, and letters had been received by private persons in Washington from officials in Germany stating that the vessel surely would be destroyed.

Despite all these warnings, 1,251 passengers sailed on the Lusitania last Saturday. The tragic fate she met yesterday was therefore not unpected, although the destruction of this great vessel comes ar a terrible shock. While the liner was steaming along about 10 miles off Kinsale, Ireland, yesterday afternoon, a submarine suddenly appeared and fired two torpedoes at her. One struck her near her bow, and the other in the engine room. They tore great holes in her side. Through them a great volume of water poured, and the vessel sank in 15 minutes, giving little time for launching of lifeboats. A report at this writing states that of the 2,000 persons aboard fully three-fourths perished, and that of the 188 American passengers 144 lost their lives.

The Lusitania's cargo contained a large quantity of war supplies, including brass and copper wire, military goods and ammunition—all of it contraband of war. On board there were also British reservists on their way to the seat of war. The vessel was therefore a fair prize for German warships. They were entitled to capture her if they could, or to sink her if necessity compelled, but not until every non-combatant had been taken from her decks and thes afety of every life had been assured.

Even though there has been loss of life, the attack on the Lusitania preno international question additional to those already raised under our notice to Germany that the imperial Government will be held to a strict accountability for any naval act on the high seas in violation of our neutral rights and resulting in the destruction of an American vessel or the lives of American citizens. The incident is in the class with the Falaba, and technically possesses neither more or less significance than that affair. It is likewise well to remember that technically and logically the concern of our Government with this sensational event is almost incomparably less than in the case of the Gulflight, now a matter of protest and diplomatic adjustment. The Gulflight was an American vessel, flying the American flag and pursuing its rightful course as a neutral in neutral waters. Yet when all this has been said, the fact remains that no episode of the war has startled and aroused public opinion in this country in greater degree. The moral and intellectual effect is bound to be tremendous beyond measurement.

Outside of the destruction of war supplies, it is difficult to see how the sinking of the Lusitania will contribuote to the endng of the war. In fact, t is to be expected that the effect in England will be to strenghten the national purpose. Still, it shows in greater degree than ever the efficiency of the German attack and indicates the possibility of the destruction of the British marine to an extent that the British Government has not considered. Moreover, it again calls attention to the fact that the Brifish navey seems to be powerless to protect British commerce against the attacks of hostile submarines.—Utica Dispatch.

Being Jurors

The argument that women ought not to vote unless they do jury service is often urged by some man who is exempt from jury service himself. This threadbare objection was lately put forward again by the editor of the New York Times. Mr. Robert Lynn Cox, President of the "Life Insurance Presidents," thereupon wrote to the Times:

"If equal franchise rights means equal duties, why do you suppose thaht exemption from jury duty has been granted to you, the writer of the editorial in question, and to other newspaper men? Why should we be led to assume that women will be dragged into court to do jury duty at the expense of ohem and family, while male physicians are freed from jury duty in order to meet the demands of society for medical attendance? If the right to vote necessarily means, or should mean, the performance of jury duty, who do we now exempt clergymen, druggists, attorneys, teachers, engineers, firemen and persons employed by glass, cotton, linen, woolen and iron manufacturing companies, and many other classes besides?"

In some of the suffrage States women perform jury duty. In others they are exempt. In Washington they are eligible, but any woman must be excused on request. A. S. B.

H. PUTNAM ALLEN & SON
Established in 1893 by Horatio A. Allen
Dealer in FINE GROCERIES 53 South First Street
EVERYTHING IN SEEDS
Farm, Field and Garden
CENTRAL PARK LAWN GRASS
ALL FLOWER SEEDS
CALL US ON PHONE 32

SNAKE CAUSES AUTO WRECK.

Runaway Follows Owner's Effort to Kill Copperhead on Seat.

East Orange, N. J.—James Morrison of Orange went automobiling with his family the other afternoon and when over the Second mountain drove into a dirt road so that his wife and two children could pick wild flowers. They left the car under a large oak tree and sauntered off.

Half an hour later Mrs. Morrison and her two children returned to the car for the return trip. Coiled up on the front seat was a large copperhead snake. The mother and children, dropping the flowers, ran away screaming.

Mr. Morrison returned to the car and, as the branches hung low over it, pushed it back to the macadam road of Eagle Rock avenue. Getting a stout club from the woods, he swung at the snake, missed it and accidentally gave the car a push, and down the hill it went.

The grade was very steep, and the automobile ran through a wooden fence into the farm of Jacob Miller, striking a calf, killing a couple of chickens and finally halting after it had torn away part of Miller's back porch. By this time there was not much left of the car, and Mr. Morrison, with his wife and two children, walked four miles home. The snake escaped.

USE FOUND FOR BEAR GRASS.

Fiber Obtained From It Converted Into Cordage, Matting, Etc.

Tucumcari, N. M.—Gathering the spear-like leaves of the wild bear grass that grows profusely over a large area of western Texas and baling the fiber that is obtained therefrom is a new industry for this part of the country. A large plant for preparing the fiber for market has been established here.

The product is shipped to Chicago, where it is manufactured into rope, cordage, matting and other products. The available supply of the raw material is said to be practically inexhaustible.

Up to the time it was discovered that the leaves contain a valuable fiber bear-grass was considered worthless by the ranchmen. It is now proving a source of considerable revenue for the land owners and the men who are employed in marketing it.

Gentlemen Didn't Answer.

"Will the gentlemen please move up forward a little?" called out the polite conductor of the trolley car.

"I won't," growled Mr. Grouch, who hung to a strap near the door.

"Oh, I didn't ask you," said the conductor.—Buffalo News.

Talking.

Talking is like playing on the harp. There is as much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibrations as in twanging them to bring out their music.—Holmes.

As the Twig Is Bent.

Knicker—What became of the boy who was kept in at school? Bocker—Grew up to be the man who was detained at the office.—New York Sun.

Man is only miserable so far as he thinks himself so.—Sannazaro.

FLOOD OF IMMIGRANTS COMING AFTER THE WAR

Uncle Sam Must Be Careful to Bar the Unfit.

Washington. — Eternal vigilance is needed on the part of the immigration department in restricting the number of unfit immigrants trying to enter this country. Although immigration has had a tremendous drop, paupers, insane, epileptic and feeble minded persons, professional beggars, those likely to become a public charge, contract laborers, assisted aliens, those living on immorality and others debarred from entering this country still seem to be emigrating, though probably in smaller numbers.

Last year 33,041 individuals were refused entrance to this country, a proportion to the total number of aliens (immigrant and nonimmigrant) landing of 2.3 per cent, while for the half year ending January, 1915, 15,208 were debarred, being 5.1 per cent of the total immigration during that time.

Of those trying to enter during the last six months 249 were idiots, imbeciles or feeble minded, 67 were insane or epileptic, 1,144 were suffering from loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases, 9,800 were likely to become a public charge, 1,746 were contract laborers, 344 were assisted aliens and 171 were coming for immoral purposes. Many people see in the fact that there is little reduction in the numbers of the mentally, physically and morally unfit who are attempting to enter this country an indication of what may be expected in the near future. At the end of the war Europe will try to keep its strong, its ablebodied and its healthy individuals, while enormous financial burdens will probably induce a marked tendency toward emigration, actively encouraged perhaps, of those who are apt to become a burden on the state. Such problems as far as possible will be shifted to other shoulders through a process of emigration. Only stringent regulations on the part of the American government and extraordinary efficiency in its immigration service will prevent such an unloading of the unfit upon the shoulders of Uncle Sam!

NEW ORLEANS IS RAT PROOF.

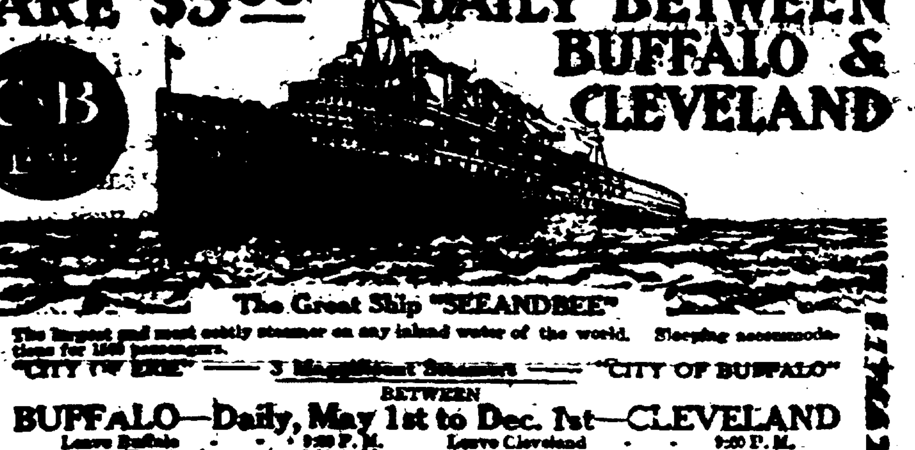
Not a Case of Plague in City Since Oct. 4—Work Continues.

Washington.—"More than half of the approximately 70,000 buildings in New Orleans have been made rat proof; there has not been a case of plague there since Oct. 4 last, and it will not be long before New Orleans will be one of the most rat proof cities in the world," announced Dr. W. C. Rucker, assistant surgeon general of the public health service. Dr. Rucker has charge of the eradication of the plague.

Reports show that 318,000 rats have been caught by the health authorities in New Orleans since the anti-plague campaign began last autumn, and all of them have been subjected to bacteriological examination. "All the rats caught have been identified as to species and sex," said Dr. Rucker. "The species plays an important part."

Won All Contests.

The New York Nationals' basketball team, which made a tour from New York to San Francisco recently, returned home with a good record. The team is composed of the following players: Schmeelk and Smyth, forwards; Beckert, center and captain; Ripley and Brunner, guards, and Bryan, utility. They played forty-four games and won all of the contests.



Good Form

Etiquette of Games.

The subject of games—that is, games that are played for the purpose of entertaining invited guests or even as a means of relaxation in the home—is one that may readily come under the control of those "laws of social usage" defined in the one word, "etiquette."

One of the most important rules to be followed in any game is really one of the first rules in etiquette, that courtesy to partners as well as opponents is called for under any and all circumstances. Whether a player loses or wins, the same graciousness of demeanor that distinguishes the well bred person is maintained; to have the temper under such perfect control that no wordy arguments are likely to take place is to show that politeness is ingrained, that both birth and breeding have combined to teach the value of self restraint.

In the heat of a game, unless this habit is really part of the personality of the players, argument is very likely to assume a decided turn toward abuse. Right there is where the really courteous man or woman shows the value of good breeding. Even if the fault is glaring in his partner's play the man who is a gentleman in every sense of the word will pass it over with a pleasant manner, whether it is felt within him or not. To show violent temper at a failure of one's own or of one's partner is to appear excessively disagreeable, and perhaps it is still worse to show great triumph over a victory over an opponent.

The latter is in the worst possible taste; it evinces a mean disposition outright and therefore outrages all the tenets of etiquette. Because, no matter how pleased such a happening makes a player, it is always better to put the face on it of having had to do a little more than the possible to overcome such an opponent. In any game, no matter what, it is poor policy to claim an easy victory; better far, if a player wishes to enhance his own success and also claim the praise, even unwillingly given, perhaps of those opposing, is to declare that only by strenuous and the very best work could the victory be won.

Like everything that is called "proper" this has its deeper meaning; no one is humiliated in the least and to that end etiquette teaches the advantages of true politeness and considera tion.

What Would You Do?

What will you do when an obliging but awkward young man drops a glass of sorbet on the front panel of your best frock, or a misguided acquaintance comes to an afternoon function in evening dress, or when one of your guests makes scathing remarks about a certain religion of which you know another one of your guests is a strict adherent, or when a friend breaks a highly priced vase or topples over the lighted dinner candles on your most expensive damask?

To be sure, every woman who makes a pretense at good manners knows in theory what to do on these and similarly trying occasions, but if you want to be sure to be able to meet the emergency when it comes sit down right now and make up your mind what you would do to lessen the embarrassment of the offender and to minimize the general disquieting results.

There is a rule of hospitality that demands loyalty on the part of the hostess to any guest. She may regret having extended hospitality to this guest, but so long as the relation of guest and hostess exists the greatest loyalty and courtesy must be preserved. So when one of your guests makes a great blunder swallow your amazement and your pride and make the best of it.

We have heard the story of the tactful Washington hostess whose guest broke a priceless wineglass at dinner. The guest was uncomfortable until a few seconds later the hostess, as if by accident, pushed another one of the set from the table, with merely a [illegible] exclamation of surprise, although her heart must have been playing a tattoo, for each one cost a small fortune.

The Fine Art of Hospitality.

No hostess should invite friends to stay at her home unless she thoroughly understands how to make them comfortable. The art of hospitality may be acquired, however, even when the natural aptitude is wanting.

The perfect hostess does not overentertain her guests. She makes it her duty to study the preferences of those whom she has invited. She does not ask them to drive, walk or play tennis when they prefer, perhaps, to read, write or do other things. Nor does she ask them to arise at unusual hours.

At English country homes the custom of visiting is systematic. Guests are asked for a certain number of days, and they are expected to leave on the last morning. A guest arriving after the luncheon hour seldom sees the hostess until the dinner assemblage. A well trained maid conducts the guest to a well arranged room, serves tea or some simple refreshment and informs the newcomer of the dinner hour. The American hostess manages her establishment in a less ceremonious manner. She frequently drives to meet the guest and, though she may have [illegible]

CHIC NEW COLLAR.

Milady Exhausts Her Ingenuity In New and Chic Neckwear.

SMART ACCESSORY.

There has never been a season when the shops have been so deluged with pretty neck "fixings." There are collars and jabots and kerchiefs, things smart, things quaint and things just handsome. There is another lot which would be classified as chic, and such a one is pictured in the illustration. It is a high standing collar of black satin, with pointed tabs, faced with white pique. A flat bow of black satin adorns the front.

CONCERNING GRAY.

Well Liked but Trying Color, Which Should Be Cautiously Chosen.

There is always a revival of gray when spring comes. It has been a feature of new spring frocks since the days of the last century novelists, who raved over heroines garbed in "sober gray" and "dove gray" and "silver gray."

Beyond a doubt all shades of gray are lovely in the piece, and it is almost impossible to keep from buying them unless you have wit enough to lay the material against your shoulder and look in the glass before purchasing.

As a matter of fact, gray is a very difficult color to wear unless you have a very pink and white skin. If you are a wee bit colorless or sallow avoid dove gray as you would putty. Sometimes a sallow complexion will stand a steel gray, or, better yet, a taupe, but the colorless woman will do better to avoid gray if she must go into neutral tints at all.

A soft pink gray is the most generally becoming, but the lavender grays must be carefully tried, lovely as they are. "Battleship gray" is, of course, the popular color this spring, and this and taupe are being much sought after, both in cloths and in the corded silks, such as faille or silk poplin.

The woman who cannot wear true gray must also be careful how she selects blue, as a blue of the color that turns slate under artificial light is apt to be unbecoming to her. It is a strange thing, but the colorless woman with hair of no decided hue usually looks well in rather intense shades of blue, such as peacock or even the new Joffre blue, whereas she will look faded in the pale true blues. In other words, she needs something to add tone to her rather colorless personality and she can often strike a becoming color that would be trying on anybody else.

It should be remembered, however, that a vivid color should always be chosen cautiously if one cannot afford many clothes. A vivid hue in silk or a summer fabric is always a wiser purchase than in an expensive cloth, which must be worn more than one season.

Leghorns For Summer.

Leghorn straw hats are a pleasant revival. Nothing could be lovelier for the warm weather hat with thin frocks than a leghorn at its best. And this summer's hats in leghorn are at their best. They are soft, with undulating crowns, and they are trimmed with velvet, flowers and chiffon in a charming way. One milliner manipulates flat leghorns plaques into smart little tricorns that sit with especial jauntiness above some of the new frocks.

FADS AND FANCIES.

In line with the craze for things black and white are the new hand bags of silk, which have striped linings to match, or in direct contrast are gayly lined with flowered satins or silks. The handles are of the black and white silk or of black moire, as when the bag is all black, ornamented with gilt clasps.

The newest clasp has a knob of cut glass, ivory, jet, enamel, pearl, jade, amber, moonstones or other imitation stones. Some are set alone to reflect their own glory, while others have gold or silver filigree or cloisonne decorations. Vachette is the stylish name for what we have known as patent leather and is much fancied just at the minute for practical use.

Dull bags of pin seal are ever modish, enlivened with gold or silver clasps and fancy knobs and filled up with the inevitable coin purse and vanity accessories. Square or melon shapes are in [illegible] One's monogram in gold, [illegible] bag is another idea favored.

AVOID CONTAGION.

Get the Health History of a House Before You Move Into It.

To those intending to buy or move into a house that has been occupied the following advice is offered by the Woman's Home Companion:

"Guard your family from contagious disease germs in the new house. It has been proved that thousands of tuberculosis and scarlet fever cases annually are the result of moving into houses which have not been disinfected.

"Secure the 'health history' of the house you expect to buy or rent. It will be supplied by your board of health, your health officer or any physician who practices in your town. If it has housed a tuberculosis patient don't take that house; find another.

"No matter what the 'health history' of the house, have the plumbing examined, the drains flushed and the entire house disinfected.

"If the walls are to be repapered have the old paper removed.

"Do not move into any house where the cellar has been flooded and is moldy.

"In towns where there is neither city water nor sewerage system make sure that the well and the cesspool are widely separated."

REPORTING FROM MEMORY.

When Note Taking Was Forbidden In the House of Commons.

Holcroft's feat in memorizing the whole play of "Figaro" after hearing it ten times could probably have been easily outdone by "Memory" Woodfall, who in the days when note taking was forbidden in the house of commons acquired fame by the extraordinary power of reporting from memory the speeches he heard in that august assembly.

His usual attitude during a debate, says the London Chronicle, was to close his eyes and lean forward with both hands upon his stick, being so well acquainted with the tone and manner of the several speakers that he seldom changed his attitude save to catch the name of a new member.

The speeches thus memorized he printed in his journal, and so wonderful was his memory that he could retain full recollection of a debate a fortnight after, though having listened to many long nights of speaking in the interval. He used to say he could put any speech away on a corner shelf of his mind for future reference.

The Fastest Colors.

It is said that the fastest colors on the market are what are known among dyers as hydrosulphite—colors that are dyed with hydrosulphite in a caustic bath. These colors are as nearly fast as any can be made and have been adopted by our government to be used in army uniforms.

The dyeing of these colors on cotton yarn is simple, especially when the Scotch tub system is employed. The proper way to dye these colors is to use the vacuum type of dye machine, as the dyestuff experts hold that all air should be eliminated from the cotton before the dyestuff is applied, and this type of machine is best suited for that purpose, because in this system the cotton is stationary and the dye liquor is forced through the cotton by means of pumps.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Traditions of Sandwich.

Sandwich is the hub of the universe —of golf. In times medieval it was one of England's five gates, through which passed heroes and saints, priests and kings. Here it was that King Arthur set out to play the emperor of Rome with Excalibur, and here on his return Guinevere welcomed him. St. Paul, says tradition, landed at Sandwich, but it is history that marks it as the landing place of St. Augustine. Picts and Scots were here beaten back by the army of the eastern Julian, and Theodosius landed to repel the Saxons. Becket escaped from England via Sandwich to France. Here Richard I. landed after his Austrian imprisonment and John, king of France, came as a prisoner of the black prince.—London Chronicle.

Tart Retort.

Of Lord Jeffreys, noted for his heartless cruelty, it is recorded when he was chief justice he had a witness before him whose evasive answers aroused the judge's ire. The witness wore an exceedingly long and bushy beard. Said Jeffreys, "If your conscience is as large as your beard you'll swear anything." Unabashed, the witness retorted, "If your lordship measures consciences by beards your lordship has none at all."

Your Chances.

The little chances linger and return, but the great chances come and go and never come again. If we could look back over the lives of the people by whom we are surrounded how many great and rich opportunities would we see that they have permitted to drift by them unimproved!

Food and Fresh Air.

You can live forty days without food, but you cannot live four minutes without air. These things being true, is it wise to stuff ourselves with food and starve ourselves for want of air?

No Difference.

Jinks—Which women have the worst tempers, blonds or brunettes? Binks—My wife has been both, and I could not see any difference.—New York Times.

Bind together your [illegible] by the cords of some [illegible] purpose.—William M. Taylor.

FOR OUTING WEAR.

Chic Chapeau of Flexible Straw For the Little Man.

WHITE STRAW HAT.

Smart in the extreme are the outing hats shown this year for the smaller fry. Take the one in the illustration, for example. This hat is of white flexible straw, built with a hexagonal crown and a flexible brim, which may be worn turned either up or down. A band of white grosgrain ribbon ends in a jaunty bow at the side.

HOW TO DRESS.

The Advice of a Famous Actress Not to Be Followed Too Closely.

"Dress your character, not your figure," is the advice of a famous actress —and rather surprising this advice seems at first hearing. But think it over well and the excellence of the idea will appeal to you. Every woman has a certain individuality of her own —a temperament, if you will—that makes her a little, or perhaps a good deal, different from all other women. It is this individuality—this temperament—that woman should dress up to, according to the actress, in order to make the personality more marked and convincing.

But an instinctive carrying out of this advice with no heed to the promptings of reason may result in disaster. For example, there is always the woman who weighs 200 pounds or thereabouts, but whose personality is distinctly kittenish. Is she to dress her character—or her figure? There is also the little woman who ought to belong to the cuddly, appealing class, who yearns to be impressive and stately. If she insists upon wearing the garments of the grenadier woman she may spoil her chances of being fascinatingly charming.

The actress in her part always is dressed in conformity with the character she is portraying, but her costumes—and here is an important point —are made to suit her figure lines while expressing a special sort of personality. Therefore if the delightful flounces of the 1830 period suit your type exactly, but are a bit trying to your too solid figure, adopt the flounces, but see to it that they are so cut and so arranged that the lines of the silhouette are right. This is true also of pert millinery styles, of classic draperies or oriental modes. They all may be worn, when they suit the personality, if their lines are cleverly adapted to the figure that is to sustain them.

LOOK UPON THE BRIGHT SIDE.

Pollyanna is the girl in a story who helped others to look on the bright side of things, however dark they seemed to be, and when she discovered how well her plans had worked realized that she had taught others to play her own game better than she could play it herself. How easy that is for most persons, even those who have not the spiritual insight of such a girl as Pollyanna! A mother teaches her child to be brave and to strive for high ideals. All the time she may be sure that she is herself a moral and physical coward and that she often falls below the average in her acceptance of ideals.

"I am not fit to do this work," a man or woman may say on whom devolves something that presupposes not only intelligence, but high moral purpose. The very fact that he questions himself indicates that he is fit in a way and that understanding what is required of him he may at least approximate it.

Those who have not the ability to persuade themselves to look for the bright things of life may at least help others to do it and in the doing may profit by the experience.

Very reverently a mother looks upon the task of leading her children in the right way. "What am I," she asks herself, "vain and frivolous as I am, to be intrusted with the upbringing of a child?" But no doubt the very fact that she does not preach, but leads her children in a sweet, human way, makes better children of them.

Life to be perfect must be well balanced, and the grave must not be allowed to outweigh the gay. A child playing marbles or spinning a top can be taught to be careful and considerate, to play fair and respect the rights of others and many other things, just as well as in his Sunday school class. Moral education is not a matter of a few hours one day in the week, but every day, from morning until night, a mother must lead her child by threads of precept and example, so strong that [illegible] they are not irksome.

Cookery Points

Twenty New Vegetables.

There are more than twenty new vegetables that show a likelihood of coming into general use on the American dinner table within the next ten years. The choice of the housewife is going to be considerably more than doubled. She will have forty different vegetables from which to plan her meals instead of twenty. There is nothing of the "fad" proposition about any of these new vegetables. All have been and are being grown and already have some market.

All have been popular wherever they have been tried, and all can now be grown at a profit. In addition, over and above the forty, there are five or six other vegetables not so new, but still uncommon as foods because they have never been put widely upon the market. These latter have passed the public verdict of approval, but in most cities and towns it is difficult to obtain them. But all the new vegetables, the experts say, are going to be possible for the slimmest pocketbook.

The aquatic potato, which jokers, when they get wind of it, are going to designate as a "submarine" because it really grows, so to speak, under water, is one of the most spectacular of the new vegetables. The scientists and the progressive farmers who have looked into it say that the aquatic potato has a very fair chance of becoming one of the great American food products all by itself. It is good to the taste, and it grows where no potato worthy of the name could ever be induced to grow before—in very moist and marshy ground.

Along with the aquatic potato is the roselle. The roselle is almost the star among the new vegetables, for even now it has a brilliant record and has become a distinct commercial success. It is a substitute for cranberry, or really not a substitute at all, but something new and capable of making a jelly that can meet cranberry on its own ground and—some day—of surpassing that delicacy.

It will grow in southern climates impossible for cranberries and, best of all, a market for it is now established; Texas, California, Florida and South Carolina have all become roselle states. One advantage it has over the cranberry is that it is very easy of culture and can be grown in any garden.—Harper's Weekly.

About Spinach.

In the early spring days, when the weather turns suddenly very mild or warm, the appetite craves something cold, crisp and green. This is perfectly natural, for in the first green vegetables, although the nutritive value is small, there is a tonic quality that is invigorating and healthful.

Of all the greens, spinach is the most wholesome. A famous physician has declared that "it is the broom of the stomach." Spinach should be eaten at least twice a week during the spring season. Its value, however, can only be obtained by proper cooking. Use a very small quantity of water, just enough to keep it from burning, and cook in an uncovered kettle for fifteen or twenty minutes. Be sure that the water is actually boiling before placing the greens in it, as that is most important not only with spinach, but with all other spring greens, such as dandelions, mustard, etc.

French Dressing.

When you make French dressing how do you do it? Do you pour first the oil and then the vinegar over the salad and then sprinkle on the seasonings?

Or do you pour a little oil in a big spoon and then pour in enough vinegar to overflow it and repeat this process, beating the oil and vinegar with a fork until the salad is dressed?

You do neither of these things if you are really up to date in your salad making. Instead you use one of the little French dressing sets. It consists of a tray containing a cut glass jug for vinegar and one for oil and three shakers—one for salt, one for pepper and one for cayenne pepper or paprika. Then there is a little silver dish about five inches in diameter, in which the dressing is thoroughly and conveniently mixed before it is poured on the salad.

Small Green Onions.

When the tiny green onions appear try cooking and serving them as you would asparagus. Wash them well, tie in bunches, drop in boiling salted water and cook for ten minutes. This time allowance is for very young vegetables, about the size of lead pencils. Drain, place on toast and pour over them a hot cream sauce flavored with chopped parsley. These will be found delicious, as they do not retain the onion flavor to which so many persons object. Young onions are excellent in almost all spring salads and are especially good with fresh tomatoes, cucumbers and green peppers.

Baked Salmon.

One-half cupful salmon (fresh or canned), one-half cupful stale breadcrumbs, one beaten egg, one-half cupful milk, one-half teaspoonful lemon juice, one-half teaspoonful onion juice. Salt and pepper to taste. Mix all the above together, put in a buttered baking dish or any buttered tins or [illegible] cups [illegible] bake in a moderate oven for about twenty minutes.

PLEADS FOR DRUG FIEND.

Mother Asks Dispensation In Case of Sixty-year-old Victim.

Washington.—Pleading for her sixty-year-old "boy," who, she says, will die if he is not permitted to obtain the drugs denied him by the Harrison anti-drug bill, an eighty-one-year-old Colorado woman has written a pitiful letter to Dr. B. R. Reese of the internal revenue division of the treasury department. She addressed her letter to President Wilson, but Secretary Tumulty sent it to Dr. Reese, whose office is the clearing house of such correspondence.

Much as the appeal of the old Colorado woman moved the officials, no exception will be made in that case. There is no intention on the part of the internal revenue division to issue blanket permits to obtain drugs for individual cases.

PAYS AN OLD DEBT.

Tennessee Farmer Sends Check For $3.50 Plow Bought In 1896.

Little Rock, Ark.—In 1896 J. Milton Williams, a Tennessee farmer, bought a plow from H. S. Speck, a hardware dealer at Morristown, Tenn., on credit. Recently Mr. Speck, who long ago left Tennessee and is now a resident of Little Rock, received a check for $3.50, the price of the plow. The letter accompanying the check read as follows:

"Dear Sir—You remember some years ago I bought of you a turning plow. I have always intended to pay the debt, but it seemed that I had so many things on me that I had to put what little money I could get into other places. I hope you will pardon me for keeping you out of your money for so long. I trust you are well and prosperous."

Special sale of Farm Wagons during month of May. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

LEGAL NOTICES

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS— STATE OF NEW YORK, Office of the State Commission of Highways, Albany, N. Y.—Pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 30, Laws of 1909, as amended by Chapter 646, Laws of 1911, and Chapter 80, Laws of 1913, sealed proposals will be received by the undersigned at their office No. 55 Lancaster Street, Albany, N. Y., at 1 o'clock P. M., on Tuesday the 18th day of May, 1915, for the repair of the following highways:

Oswego County Rep. Cont., No. 751; Class of Work, C. O. Appl.; Rd. No. 772; Name, Fulton-Hannibal, Pt. 1; Town, Granby; No. 825; Name, Fulton-Oswego; Town, Granby; Rep. Cont. 747; Class of Work C. O. Appl.; Rd. No. 654; Name, Oswego-Mexico, Pt. 2; Town, New Haven; Rd. No. 5044; Name, Mexico-Union Square, Pt. 1; Town, Mexico; Rd. No. 5221; Name, Union Square, Pulaski, Pt. 2; Town, Richland.

Maps, plans, specifications and estimates may be seen and proposal forms obtained at the office of the Commission in Albany, N. Y., and also at the office of Division Engineer Chas. J. McDonough, 433 S. Salina St., Syracuse, N. Y.

The especial attention of bidders is called to "Information for Bidders" in the itemized proposal, specifications and contract agreement.

Proposals for each road or contract must be presented in a separate sealed envelope endorsed on the outside with the name and number of the road or contract for which the proposal is made. Each proposal must be accompanied by a New York draft or certified check payable to the order of the State Commission of Highways for an amount equal to at least five per cent of the amount of the proposal which such draft or check accompanies.

This draft or check will be held by the Commission until the contract and bond are duly executed.

The successful bidder will be required to give a bond for fifty per cent of the amount of the contract; such bond to be executed by a surety company to be approved by the Commission, or a bond secured by the deposit of collateral securities to be approved by the Commission.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids.

EDWIN DUFFEY,
Commissioner.

T. J. MORRIS,
Secretary.

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS

Notice is hereby given that an annual meeting of the stockholders of the Foster Brothers and Chatillon Company will be held on the 19th day of May, 1915, at two o'clock P.M., at the office of the Company in the City of Fulton (formerly Oswego Falls), New York, for the election of Trustees or Directors, and the transaction of such other business as may lawfully come before such meeting. That at such meeting a proposition will be submitted to amend the By-Laws of said Company generally.

C. E. FOSTER,
Secretary and a member of said Corporation.
Dated, Fulton, N. Y., May 3, 1915.

Our New Spring Blue Serges at $15.00 Are Becoming to Most Youths and Young Men

Possibly because navy blue is a manly color, but most likely because these suits have "LIFE" the snap of youth is in every line. There's a molded curve about the waist, a snugness in the shoulders that, with the slim cut trousers, makes a young lad proud of his appearance.

And don't you think that appearance is all we are selling. These special $15 Blue Serges are finely tailored throughout—the collars hand felled—the button holes hand sewn—but come in and let us slip one on you and explain its worth.

The New Straw Hats Are Ready For You

S. LIPSKY & SON

"The Store That Makes Good."

27 FIRST STREET FULTON, N. Y.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, May 11.—Whether Mark Eisner, former member of Assembly and member of the Constitutional Convention from the eighteenth district, takes a particularly active part in the deliberations of that distinguished body, depends largely upon Secretary McAdoo of the United States treasury department.

It is an interesting fact that in order to be temporarily released from his duties, he must raise his hand like the proverbial schoolboy and ask to please be execused. The schoolmaster in this instance is Secretary McAdoo and the pupil a collector of internal revenue.

Several times during the session of the Constitutional Convention, Delegate Eisner has asked to be excused so that he might come to Albany and sit with his fellow delegates. Each time he has been given prompt consent.

Although Mr. Eisner has no fear that Secretary McAdoo will at any time refuse to permit him to come to Albany, he realizes that it is necessary for him to ask permission to temporarily relinquish his federal duties in order to devote a portion of his time to State affairs. As a matter of fact he is serving two masters, yet is faithful to both.

Even though they need not ask permission to sit as delegates, there are several members of the Constitutional Convention who are in a position similar to that of Mr. Esner. Hon. Adolph J. Rodenbeck, a delegate, is the presiding Judge of the State Court of Claims. The fact that there is a wealth of business which that court must transact renders it at times difficult for him to be in Albany. Being the head jurist of that tribunal, however, he is spared the necessity of making the timid gesture of the class room; all he need do is to announce to his associate judges that he feels that he should be at the Capitol and take a train to the Capitol city.

Hon. Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell university and Hon. Rush Rhees, president of Rochester university, were the table to be turned, would be required to be excused by the small army of students at their respective institutions of learning. Hon. Eugene Lamb Richards, State superintendent of banks and a delegate to the Constitutional Convention from the twenty-third district, excuses himself whehn he sits as a delegate and gives himself a leave of absence, when he devotes himself to his great State office exclusively. Hon. Lesse Phillips does not have to offer any excuse to himself as yet, though he has recently been created State superintendent of insurance. Hon. Joseph E. Eggleston, representing the fortieth district in the convention, is surrogate and county judge of Cortland county. If there is a long disagreement on the part of a jury when his presence is desired at Albany to affect a quorum, he too, will have to excuse himself from his judicial duties.

Owing to the fact that the business of the Constitutional Convention has not yet developed to suchh an extent hat it has been necessary for all of the delegates to be present each day it is in session, the dual tasks which some of the delegates are performing has not been arduous. Later on it may be.

HANNIBAL MAN HAD NARROW ESCAPE

Bert Stevens of Hannibal had a narrow escape yesterday in Oswego ot the Kingsford crossing. He was driving across the tracks when the 9.11 train was due. The train struck the wagon, demolishing it and the harness, but Mr. Stevens jumped from the wagon seat saving himself from injury. The horse was also not injured. Mr. Stvens did not hear a sound of warning from the train or its crew.

CAUGHT 42 BEAUTIES

William Farrell, James Keeler, Glenn A. Ryther and Leonard Bradford were the guests of H. Putnam Allen at the Mad River Club in Lewis County last week. As usual Mr. Farrell distinguished himself by landing a fine string of forty-two brook trout.

Cream Separators at cost. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

BARNES' FORCES DISLIKE RULING

Rule of Decision Had Effect of Heartening the Roosevelt Side

The Barnes forces yesterday were plainly chagrined when Justice Andrews, who is hearing the Barnes-Roosevelt libel action, ruled yesterday in effect that proof of pecuniary corruption is not necessary to establish Colonel Roosevelt's charge of a corrupt alliance between party bosses in the Senatorial fight of 1911.

The justice denied a motion by Henry A. Wolff, for Barnes, to strike out the evidence of Franklin Roosevelt, on the ground that the younger Roosevelt i ntelling of this combination, has said nothin gto show corruption on the part of Barnes. The Court said: "This combination while not corrupt was, perhaps improper. The testimony that there was an agreement between the heads of the parties that the Republicans were not to interfere with the Democrats in the Senatorial election many have explanations. But on its face it shows such a combination was improper, and it may go to the jury."

hTe effect of this decision which followed the admission of all but one of the groups of Roosevelt testimony was vastly to hearten the Roosevelt side. The Colonel smiled in delight.

Mr. Ivins, Barnes' chief counsel, fought hard to modify the ruling. Failing in this, he sought to induce the court to define "corrupt" and "improper." This Justice Andrews declined to do until he delivers his charge to the jury.

As a result of the Court's view of the case, all the testimony concerning Barnes's alleged promise to Murphy to keep his hands off in the Senatorial fight will go to the jury. Upon the Barnes's lawyers will devolve the task of disproving it, lest it stand in justification of one of the most important counts in the Colonel's attack on their client.

Today's court asked evidence ruling on the important printing evidence introduced to prove the Colonel's charge of an alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics.

While the friends of Barnes were staggered by today's decision they are hoping for a ruling tomorrow that will even things up.

Passing on Mr. Wolff's motions to strike out, Justice Andrews this afternoon admitted the following testimony:

1—That of Franklin D. Roosevelt, that Senate leader Grady, of Tammany Hall, had told him of a bargain between Barnes and Murphy for Barnes to keep his hands off in the Senatorial fight, thus tending to show the combination that Colonel referred to in his attack.

2—That of Senator Agnew, concerning Barnes' influence over Senator rGatton in the ract track fight. The justice held that while this was no reflection on Barnes' attitude toward the bills, it did tend to show his domination of the party.

3—That of J. J. Dickinson that Barnes had told him rGattan did the right thing in voting for the race track bills.

4—That of Senator Harvey Hinman concerning the part Barnes took in the primary fight.

The justice ruled out Agnew's testimony concerning the bi-partisan fight to save Senator Allds when he was on trial for corruption.

He reserved decision on a motion to strike out the testimony of Senators Davenport and Newcomb and reporters McMillan and Arndt about Barnes's share in the fight against the Hughes direct nomination bills.

Our third Birthday Party, Saturday, May 15th. Roberts & Wood. adv126

When Poland Drank Hard.

Poland was a great country for hard drinking in the old days. Its last king, Stanislaus II., was solemnly warned by the grand hetman, Branicki, that he must never expect to become popular unless he got drunk at least twice a week. Pan Kemarezewski, who could empty a bucketful of champagne at a draft without noticeable consequences, once in company with Pan Sosiejkowski, high chamberlain of Volhynia, disposed of a whole butt of old Hungarian wine at a single sitting. One held his beaker under the bunghole until it was full and then drank while the other filled his beaker, and so, turn and turn about, they achieved the feat.—London Chronicle.

HOUSEHOLD NEEDS

Housecleaning brings many needs to light. You will find in our Spring Clearance Sale the following bargains:

$15 Vacuum Cleaner	$3.95
$1.25 Curtain Stretchers at	.89
10c Foster Paring Knives at	.05
69c Linoleum at	.45
35c Brooms at	.19
50 Clothes Pins at	.05

S. WALDHORN

THE FAIR STORE 18 S. FIRST STREET

HOSPITAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Fruit and Groceries Always Welcome Contributions at the Hospital

The Hospital gratefully acknowledges the following list of donations for April, 1915.

Mrs. Schlappi, 4 cans fruit; Mr. Ward Southard, 1 bushel apples, 1 bu. onions, 2 bu. potatoes; Mrs. H. H. Merriam, 2 cans fruit; Women's Auxiliary, 6 plants; Dr. Fox, 2 bu. apples; Mrs. W. D. Edgarton, 2 quarts canned fruit; Mrs. L. O. Todd, 2 qts. canned fruit; Mrs. D. C. Case, 1 qt. canned ned fruit; Mrs. Frank Atwood, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. O. C. Taft, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. M. M. Baldwin, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. J. W. Rigley, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. F. Chubb, 2 qts. canned fruit; Mrs. Lyman Sherman, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. G. B. Fairman, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. A. N. Hudson, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. G. W. Mason, 1 qt. canned fruit; Mrs. Chas. Olmstead, 2 qts. canned fruit; Mrs. S. D. Keller, magagines; Mr. E. Quirk, 4 bushel potatoes; Mr. John Graff, 1 bushel apples; Mr. Laporte, Mr. Carhart, Mr. H. Putnam Allen, garden seeds; A friend, flowers; Miss Helen Miller, magazines; Mrs. Adelbert Luckes; Mrs. J. C. O'Brien, Mrs. C. M. Sabin, Mrs. M. H. Brando, Mrs. G. B. Farley, Mrs. F. Goodion, basket of groceries.

Fulton Keynotes

John Snell of Baldwinsville was a recent visitor among Fulton friends.

* * *

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ottman, of Worth st. yesterday.

* * *

Nicholas Wallace and Joseph Managot were guests of Sryacuse friends Monday.

* * *

Carl Townsend of Rochester was in the city Monday to attend the funeral of Munroe Sheel.

* * *

Mrs. Greenwood of West 3d st. entertained the What-so-ever society of the First M. E. church.

* * *

Mrs. George Simons of Oswego was the guest of Fulton friends Monday.

Baled Hay, Straw and Shavings. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

BOAT SERVICE

FREIGHT and PASSENGER

Fulton to Syracuse daily except Sunday

Steamer "CITY OF FULTON" Leaves foot of Rochester St. 5:15 a. m. Arrives Syracuse 11 a. m. Return trip leaves Syracuse 2:50 p. m.

FIRST TRIP MAY 17

Freight House on Rochester St. Dock, open from 7 a. m. until 6 p. m.

Freight rates cheaper than by rail.

C. S. BURLEIGH, Captain

This Player "Quick Study."

For remarkable memory it would be hard to outdo a strolling player of the eighteenth century, of whom Sir William Robertson Nicoll has written. For a wager he once undertook to memorise the whole of the next day's Daily Advertiser and accomplished his task by repeating every line in the journal, news, leadings, advertisements and all in perfect order and without a slip.—London Tatler.

Happy Hour Theatre

TO-MORROW

Then Best Picture of the Year "The Cowboy and The Lady"

A Thrilling Romance of the Plains by Clyde Fitch

Five Reels Five Reels

With S. Miller Kent in the leading role

Added Attraction "WILD IRISH ROSE" in two reels with Cleo Madison and Joe King

and Four Others

Admission 10c

RICHARDSON THEATRE

OSWEGO

Friday, May 14, 1915

The Biggest and Most Important Musical Comedy of the year

McINTYRE and HEATH in the Big Joyous Musical Furore

"THE HAM TREE"

Company of 65 Artists

The World's Best Dancing Chorus

PRICES—50c to $2.00

SEATS NOW ON SALE AT Quirk Theatre Box Office

INDICTED MEN HELD IN BAIL

Men Arraigned as Result of Indictments Returned by Jury

Pulaski, May 11.—Frederick T. Cahill, who was indicted last week by the Grand Jury sitting in connection with the trial term of Supreme Court here, was not arraigned with others yesterday. Assistant District-Attorney Don A. Colony of Lacona said the arraignment would take place this afternoon. The indictment under which the Oswego attorney is held charges robbery, first degree.

A number indicted last week were arraigned, each pleading not guilty, and bail was fixed at $1,000 in each of the cases, which include James Signorelli of Oswego and James Trowbridge of Fulton for violation of the liquor tax law; Fred Rosa of Oswego, attempt to commit burglery; William Lewis of Oswego and Merritt Miller of Fulton, burglary in the third degree and grand larceny, second degree; Albert Blonde of Oswego, violation of the penal code.

The negligence action of Vandalia Stoke of Oswego against Thomas J. Loughlin of Newark, N. J., a contractor, was started today. The plaintiff while riding her pony along the highway a few miles from Oswego last year was thrown from her mount when the animal's feet sunk about sixteen inches into a trench that had been improperly filled, causing the horse to fall and injuring the driver, who sues for $5,000. The case will be continued tomorrow.

A jury had been empaneled in the case of Julia Dworniak against the Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Company of Hamburg, Germany, this morning and the taking of testimony started. The proof did not conform to the pleadings and at the suggestion of the court the case was put over the term. It was an action on a fire insurance policy.

AGED JAIL USED IN SETTING OF PHOTOPLAY

The veneralble Richmond County Jail at Augusta, Ga., was turned over, prisoners, cells and "good-will" to the company making the William Fox Production, for the Fox Film Corporation of "From the Valley of the Missing," the stirring photo-drama adapted from Grace Miller White's moldering with time, and the associations that have clustered thick about it since 1815, when it was built. During the civil war it was used as a military prison and the execution of suspected spies frequently took place in the courtyard where a grim gallows tree now rears itself.

It was on this scaffold, on which 150 criminals have gone to their deaths, that the camera man of the Fox Company set up his instruments when Director Frank Powell wanted to get a picture of Lon Cronk, the villain of "From the Valley of the Missing" peering out of his cell. Walter S. Radford, assistant warden of the prison, took a deep interest in seeing that Mr. Powell, and his associate Mr. Sam Kingston, got every aid thatc ould possibly be extended in making the 200 scenes that take place in and about the "calaboose." Pictures were made of the chain-gangs, and of the prisoners sleeping in blankets on the bare floors. Among other odd customs which exist in this old prison is the fact that all the prisoners sleep on the hard stone floors wrapped in their blankets. Only the condemned men are allowed the privilege of cots. Yet they all appear as happy as is consistent with the lot of imprisoned men. There is usually only one jailer on duty and the rest of the work of guarding the prisoners is assigned to trustees. Several remarkable scenes were also filmed for this great Fox production in a part of the prison which has not been used for almost ninety years. Chains and shackles, fixed to the walls of the long vacant cells in this part of the prison, bear mute testimony of the days of slavery when "bad niggers" were confined there.

H. Putnam Allen has leased the second floor of the Rosenbloom block and will use the same in connection with the firm of H. Putnam Allen & Son, dealers in fine groveries. Adv.

Our third Birthday Party, Saturday, May 15th. Roberts & Wood. adv126

Two-seated and Delivery Wagons. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Close your window and door openings with our PERFECT SCREENS

L. P. SMITH CO.

Your Hardware Dealer

We are Agents for CHASE & SANBORN'S Fine Teas and Coffees

LA PORTE'S GROCERY

Oneida St. Bell 75

A MUSIC FESTIVAL

is an event to most people. With an EDISON DIAMOND DISC PHONOGRAPH (no needles to change) you can enjoy the works of the great composers, and the melodies of all the famous singers, in your own home, today, tomorrow and every day.

Wm. C. Morgan

Jeweler & Optometrist

Fulton, N. Y.

New Wall Paper

Thousands of rolls of New Wall Paper in "The Store Downstairs"

Pretty patterns for every room in the house; prices from 5c to 50c per roll.

MacNamara's

30 FIRST STREET

THE QUIRK

Matinees, 5c. Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c. Sundays—5c, 10c.

CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TODAY	WEDNESDAY
"From the Valley of the Missing" by the author of "Tess of the Storm Country." 1000 People—500 Scenes. Paramount Travel Pictures. Every Tuesday for 20 weeks	Betty Nansen. The Royal Actress in "The Celebrated Scandal"

"CHARLES CHAPLIN" in a Screaming Comedy.

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Wanted—By a family of four; no children; a middle aged woman to do general housework; permanent situation; good wages. Address "Enquirer, this office before June 1st. 123c

Clark Irish Harp—Will sell cheap; brand new. Just the thing for a home. Address Z., Evening Times office. tf.

To Rent—Furnished apartment; 3 rooms; bath and all conveniences; desirable location. Inquire S, Times office. 122

For Sale—Sewing machine; range; Perfection oil stove and other household articles. 410 Worth st., second door east side. 122

Wanted—By young man; board and room with private Catholic family. Refined surroundings. Address C, Times office. 124c

Man Wanted—To work on farm by the month. Inquire 612 Fay st., or phone 2206. 124

Young Girl wants position at housework in family without children. Phone 3453. 123

For Sale—Mahogany table and bookcase and secretary; must sell before June 1. 310 S. 3d st.

To Let—6 rooms and bath, 3d and Seneca st. Apply 121 South 1st st., or phone 3288. 122

To Rent—5 rooms, upper flat. 412 Erie st. 126c

Lost—White English bull dog, with collar. Phone 3291. 120c

Wanted—A girl for housework. R. L. McCully, 202 S. 3d st. tf

COAL AT PANAMA.

Mammoth Storage Plants Planned For the Canal Route.

Coal storing plants of mammoth magnitude are being planned on the Panama canal route. One of the storage plants is to be situated at Cristobal and another at Balboa.

It is planned to have a coal storage basin at Cristobal with a capacity of 200,000 tons and one at Balboa with a capacity of 160,000 tons. In each place the storage will be within a large basin made of re-enforced concrete, in which approximately half of the coal will be stored under water for use in time of war and the other half above water to be added to and taken from continually for the ordinary uses of commercial and government vessels.

It also is planned if the policy should be approved to be able to lease parts of the storage basin to such private coaling companies as may wish to maintain their own coal stores on the isthmus, but in such cases all of the handling will be done by the government plant, a suitable charge being made for the service.—New York Press.

Calling on Wilson.

The average person who calls on the president is in no hurry to leave, and the less important his errand the longer he takes to explain it. President Wilson listens patiently, although perhaps with little enjoyment; then he gets up and moves toward the door, and it must be a very obtuse person who cannot take the hint, and if something more than a hint is needed then the president shakes hands with him, but it is done graciously and in a way that is flattering to the person who without knowing it is being dismissed.—New York Telegram.

Our Cotton.

The United States department of agriculture reports that both long and short staple cotton in California yields 500 pounds to the acre, while in the next best record—that of Missouri—the yield runs 225 pounds of long staple and 295 pounds of short. The price of short staple in California is about the same as elsewhere, but that of long staple is higher than in any state except Florida.

Woodcraft.

You can make fire by rubbing two pieces of dry wood together, but it is not believed this method will ever supersede the plan of rubbing a match against a piece of sandpaper.—Kansas City Journal.

WOMEN LEADERS DECRY REVENGE

Suffrage Advocates Say Victims Courted Fate

"I'm scared of what's coming."

That was the way Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, veteran suffragist, felt after reading the news of the loss of the Lusitania. Deep down in their hearts many women felt the same way. But whatever the individual voices of a non-voting sex can do to support President Wilson in his efforts to find a peaceful way out of the crisis will be done. Not one of the representative New York women to whom The Tribune put the question yesterday believes the United States should endanger the peace of this country by asking reprisal from Germany.

On one point the women were unanimous, that the government should place an embargo on all shipments to the nations at war, whether shipments of armaments, money or food. But even Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, who declared most strongly that by this policy the United States could force Europe to law down arms, did not anticipate any attempt on the part of the women's peace party, which she helped to found, to impress this view on Washington.

In fact, she seemed to feel that as an organization the Women's Peace party was going to smash.

Wants No Peace March

"It has been suggested to me," she said, "that a great body of women marching to the national capital to urge measures of international peace could accomplish something. I don't expect anything of that sort, though I feel as strongly for peace as ever. I feel as George Ade did after the Progressive party was defeated and he was asked if he wasn't ashamed of having worked with it.

"'I'd join it again this minute if I could find it,' said Mr. Ade."

But Dr. Shaw puts her faith in the absent leader of the Women's Peace party.

"I do wish Jane Addams would come home" she exclaimed. "She could have done more good here than by going off to that peace conference at The Hague. This is the time for Americans to stay at home."

That the Americans who sailed on the Lusitania ought to have stayed at home, and that the risk, since they did take it, is their own and not this country's, is the general view of the women.

"Perhaps I sound coldhearted," said Miss Mary Garrett Hay, chairman of the Woman Suffrage party, "but you know the women of this state are going to vote very soon, and we are learning to weigh things by cold reason.

"The sinking of the Lusitania is terrible: it is terrible to think that scores of those who sailed from these shores last Saturday went down with that ship: but we must remember that they were fully warned of the dangers they would meet. They went at their own risk. Therefore, I do not think this country should seek retaliation. Had the Germans torpedoed an American ship it would be different. But it was an English ship and this government is in no way responsible."

Victims Courted Fate.

"It is horrible that the Lusitania is sunk," said Miss Mary Shaw. "It is horrible that our countrymen and countrywomen are lost. But war is horrible, and for that reason let us keep out of it. Should the sons and brothers of other women be shot down because they, for instance, have courted death and met it? I say no. The people who sailed on the Lusitania were like the man who rushes into a burning house. The man who does that knows that he may be burned. I am aware that this sounds hard, but better hardness than an emotionalism that may drag us into the abyss into which the rest of the world is falling."

"I hope to Heaven the United States will take no steps in regard to the sinking of the Lusitania," was the exclamation of Mrs. William Colt, of the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage. "The people of this country should stay at home while Europe is war ridden. I met, just before he sailed, one man who went on the Lusitania. He told me he knew the ship was likely to be struck, that his wife implored him not to go, but his business required it.' Must this country go to war because people are reckless like that?"

Mrs. Elmer Black, long connected with the movement for international peace, said the torpedoing of the Lusitania with so many Americans on board, showed Germany was determined to force the United States to stop the shipment of munitions of war to the Allies.

"This country has been supplying Germany's foes with the means to carry on the fight," she said. "I have wished from the first that America would shut down on all shipments. But our manufacturers want to make money, and the government supports them in that ambition. I was in Washington last winter, and I saw Secretary of State Bryan. As I went into his office, Mr. Schwab, the steel man, was leaving. He and Mr. Schwab seemed to be on very good terms. The inference was obvious to me. No, we can't blame Germany for the blockade and the people who go to Europe now go at their own peril."

Miss Katherine Dreier, of the German Committee of the Woman Suffrage party, said Friday's tragedy was a lesson to Americans to use their own shipping.

Died for Luxury.

"I asked a friend of mine who sailed on the Lusitania, and who was lost, why she didn't take an American boat," said Miss Dreier. "That was the day before the Lusitania left our shores. My friend said, 'Ah, think of the comfort of these big English boats!' You see. And shall this country be involved in war because people take dreadful risks for the sake of luxury?"

Here and there where women were gathered yesterday, some of them, sympathizers with one side or the other, confessed to burning rage at the thought of then Lusitania's fate. Mrs. Henry Butterworth, whose husband is an Englishman, declared that could "scarcely contain herself." Mrs. Frederick Nathan said her heart was filled with wrath. "But all the same," she added, "I hold that this nation should maintain peace at any price."

"The tragedy is one more reason why women should keep on striving for international peace," said Mrs. Nora Blatch De Forest, daughter of Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch. "Jane Addams and the other women who went to the peace conference in Holland were severely criticised, but the fate of the hundreds of non-combatants, women and children, on the Lusitania is one more proof of how war bears down on those who have nothing to do with waging it."

Mrs. Robert Adamson, wife of the Fire Commissioner, expressed the hope that the nation would not become embroiled in war.

"If retaliation is in order," she said, "no doubt this country could find plenty of incidents which might be considered reasons for fighting. But if you remember what war means, it seems to me that hardly any reason is big enough. Of course, if you are attacked you must defend yourself. But we haven't been attacked. We won't be if we stay at home."

Fears War Inevitable.

Mrs. Herbert Carpenter, even with the news of the loss of friends before her, agreed with those who held that the United States should take no measures of revenge. She knew Mrs. Paul Crompton, of Philadelphia, who, with her six children, went down with the Lusitania.

"We urged her not to go, or at least not to take her babies with her," Mrs. Carpenter said. "But she would go, and now—they are all lost. But I never felt more strongly for peace than I do today. Why should the United States consider this tragedy a casus belli? It seems to me the attack upon the American ship Gulflight was much more a cause."

Mrs. John Sherwin Crosby, head of the Women's Democratic Club, said she was pinning her faith upon President Wilson today. "He will keep us out of war if anybody can," she said, "But I don't believe anybody can."

PORTRAY NEGRO CHARACTER

"The Ham Tree," that very humorous and novel musical comedy which has proven such successful vehicle for the display of McIntyre and Heath's exceptional portrayal of negro character, will be the attraction at the Richardson theatre, Oswego, Friday, May 14th, with the celebrated comedians again starring in their familiar roles, Alexander Hambletonian, the doelful, and Henry Jones, the hopeful. The production is staged by Ned Wayburn, master-craftsman of novel groupings and effects and the wizard director of dancing choruses. John Cort, under whose management McIntyre and Heath are starring, has supplied a competent company of principals to support his stars.

Reserved seats for Fulton patrons on sale at the Quirk theatre box office Wednesday at 9 a.m.

SAYS DAUGHTER IS IMPROVIDENT

Commissioner of Charities Would Have Mother Care for Daughter

Commissioner of Charities W. Lawson Woodbury has instituted proceedings in the County Court asking that Judge Coville make an order requiring Ellen Gardner, wife of Sands D. Gardner of this city, to support her daughter, Loletia Whorl, wife of William Whorl.

It is stated that never before has such a proceeding been started in this county. Judge Coville will be in this city Saturday to gather all evidence in connection with the suit, which it instituted under a section of the code which provides that parents may be compelled to care for children who are unabel to take care of themselves.

In the moving papers it is alleged that Mrs. Gardner has property worth $6,000 and is amply able to care for her daughter. In opposition Mrs. Gardner contends that she is not worth more than $2,500 and that she has given her daughter more than $1,500 besides furnishing her with a house, but that the daughter has been improvident and has paid as high as $5 to have her fortune told. She says her husband, William Whorl, would be able to take care of her if he would work and that her previous husband, Fred Randall, of Syracuse, was willing to take a child by this union and provide for her.

George M. Fannings appeared for the city and Robert J. Pendergast for Mrs. Gardner.

Origin of the Lone Star.

If a place name is often crystallized history, how much more a nickname! Witness the flowery synonym for Texas, which orators mouth as the Lone Star State. To most minds this symbolizes concretely the fact that the state was first an independent nation. Behind the fact is this story, vouched for by tradition more or less authentic. At the outset, after achieving independence, Texas lacked pretty well everything but men. The leaders knew state papers required a great seal to validate them, and in default of anything better they improvised one from a coat button which happened to bear a single star. A document so sealed fell under the eye of an imaginative journalist. He straightway exploited "The Lone Star Republic" in print so fervid as to persuade Texas here was the device most apposite for her seal and her flag.—New York Press.

Mother Brook.

After nearly three centuries of usefulness Mother brook, the first canal dug in this country, still finds itself utilized to some extent, though the requirements which brought it about have long since passed. Its construction was undertaken and completed by the hardy citizens of Dedham, Mass., in 1639, to provide water for mill purposes. The artificial waterway was constructed to connect the Charles river with East brook, covering a distance of about a mile. It was a great undertaking for those days, when every foot had to be excavated laboriously by hand, but the work was carried out with the usual determination marking the settlers of the day. The canal winds round the highlands of the town, and on both sides, extending almost to its border, may be seen well kept gardens.—Exchange.

Poetry of Words.

When I feel inclined to read poetry I take down my dictionary. The poetry of words is quite as beautiful as that of sentences. The author may arrange the gems effectively, but their shape and luster have been given by the attrition of ages. Bring me the finest simile from the whole range of imaginative writing and I will show you a single work which conveys a more profound, a more accurate and a more eloquent analogy.—Holmes.

They Knew Castor Oil.

The oldest medical book in the world was found in a rock tomb by the Nile, dating from about 2000 B. C. It is a roll about sixty-six feet long and carries prescriptions for all sorts of ailments. Castor oil is one of the remedies prescribed. It has been used pretty steadily ever since.

Now They Don't Speak.

Belle—How silly men act when they propose! Why, my husband acted like a perfect fool. Nelle—That's what everybody thought when your engagement was announced.—Exchange.

A Hard World.

"Poor old Jiggs! He found this a hard world."

"Died in poverty?"

"No. He fell out of an airship."—Buffalo Express.

Something of One.

"Is your son anything of a sprinter since he went to college?"

"Well, he holds the family record for running up a bill."—Baltimore American.

Suits That Are Out of The Commonplace

That have the something that makes them look different—suits of that kind are hard to find; we have a few handsome models, only one of a kind, to be closed out at special prices.

Alterations without charge.

New Hats

The very newest and nobbiest styles in Black and White

MacNamara's

"Correct Clothes for Women"

BODY OF FORMER RESIDENT COMES HERE

The body of Jerome Miller, who died in Ithaca about six weeks ago, will arrive in this city tomorrow where it will be placed in the receiving vault at Mt. Adnah cemetery at 1 o'clock. Frends and acquaintances of the Miller family are invited to be at the cemetery.

Mr. Miller was born in this city leaving here about thirty years ago to live in Rochester. Later he removed to Ithaca where he engaged in building boats. He was a brother of the late Cornelius Miller, whose three children are: Miss Ida V. Miller and Fred Miller of the West River road, and Bernie Miller of Oswego. Fred Miller, master mechanic at the Nestle Food Co. plant is also a relative of Jerome Miller—a cousin. Mrs. Jerome Miller lives in Ithaca and one son survives who lives in Rochester.

Community Notes

The 1909 Shakespeare class will meet Thursday with Mrs Fred Chubb, West 1st st., South, at 4 p. m.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Frank DeForde of the West Side left the city this morning for Huntingdon, Mass., where the expect to remain until business conditions in Fulton improve.

* * *

Lieutenant and Mrs. A. Cooper of Oswego were in the city yesterday to attend the funeral of their nephew, Monroe Skeel.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Pratt of South 4th st., were guests out of town friends over Sunday.

* * *

Miss Julia Gilbert of South 3d st. has recovered from her recent illness.

* * *

Miss Edith Townsend of Mexico was the guest of Miss Ruth Rogers, Oneida st.

* * *

Mrs. Greta Lewis has taken a position in the telephone office.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Bache of Worth st. are entertaining Mrs. William Bates of Bermuda, the island of the lily and rose, and the sea of turquoise blue.

* * *

Mrs. Harriett Ward is seriously ill at the Lee hospital.

* * *

Mrs Elmer Goodjon has returned to her home in Syracuse after spending a week as the guest of Mrs. Edward Croak.

* * *

Gasoline, Oils and Greases. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

CONGRESSMAN WANTS NAMES AND ADDRESSES

Congressman Luther W. Mott, of Oswego, during the past two months has been sending thousands of Farmers' Bulletins throughout the district. He has however, received in many instances marked lists which have no names or address thereon and which offer no clue to the sender. If those who have not received bulletins on request, he advises, within two weeks after sending, or have not received a letter from the Congressman, they should write for another list as in all liklihood the original list has not been identified.

The Congressman also advises that he has two new bulletins, one No. 650 on the San Jose scale, and another No. 237 on the Strawberry which will be distributed at once. Application should be made at once as the supply is limited.

ADVERTISED LETTERS

The following letters remain uncalled for at the Post Office, May 12, 1915. Inquirers will please say advertised:

Men— Grosland, Paul; Herick, Charles; Jones, Rex; Steward, J. D.; Tuller, E. R.

Women—Creighton, Mrs. John; De Mont, Mrs. Cora; Dodge, Mrs. Mable. Secretary, Y.M.C.A.

Peter T. Conley, P. M.

HAPPY HOUR THEATRE

Charles Chaplin—the side-splitter, in a new riot in one reel

SAVED BY A DREAM

Big Two-Reel Feature and four others

Admission 5c

WATER GLASS

EGG PRESERVER

Qt. or Gal. Sizes at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

$795 f. o. b. Factory

VANWAGENEN, Inc. Agents

All Kinds of

GARDEN SEEDS

by the ounce or pound at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

YES

We have received a number of inquiries as to whether or not we would continue our appliance sale, and so we have decided to maintain the same cut prices on appliances until Wednesday. No Later.

Come in and look them over. Every purchase a real bargain and a wonderful home help.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

103 Oneida St. Phone 144

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

If Results count for anything, The Evening Times has almost reached the much-discussed

"Pschycological Moment"

WHY?

Because of the leaps and bounds made by the circulation department within a fortnight

Circulation Growing Every Minute! Watch It Grow More!

After several months of painful illnesss and a couple bad sinking spells, The Evening Times believes

MR. BUSINESS

of Fulton, N. Y., is back on the job. From the very first The Evening Times knew he would recover.

He has recovered always.

And now is the time to advertise in YOUR PAPER—the local home paper, because YOUR PAPER—the the Peoples's Paper is a home institution. The Evening Times leaves the People's money in YOUR TOWN; Does not take it away never to return.

Make Yours the Livest Ads in the Evening Times

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

POPULAR MECHANICS

Making an Oak Stain.

To make old oak of ash, elm, box alder, chestnut, maple, yew and sycamore wood use a solution of copper acetate or iron acetate. Either of these can be made by allowing a strong acid to come in contact with copper or iron. Acetic acid, or vinegar, will do for the acid. The chemical can be obtained from a local druggist if it is not desired to make the stain. By varying the strength of the solution several shades may be obtained. A weak solution of iron acetate gives various brown hues. As the strength of the salt increases by concentration the shades of brown darken.

How Blued Steel Is Produced.

Heat bluing, which is familiar to every one, is applied to watch and clock hands, buttons, buckles and a large variety of steel articles and gives a finish of a pleasing blue or black color, which is not, however, so very resistant to corrosion. It is produced in several ways, such as dipping the parts in a bath of molten saltpeter, heating them on an iron plate in the air or tumbling them in a sheet iron barrel heated by a gas flame. Revolvers and similar parts are very often given a fine blue finish by heating in charcoal.—Engineering Magazine.

Protecting the Bed Hammock.

Owing to the size and weight of a bed hammock it is generally left outside in all kinds of weather. A good plan is to fasten two awning pulleys to the ceiling of the porch over the hammock so that a rope may be run through them; then attach hooks to the ends of the rope for hooking into the lower part of the hammock. The hammock can then be pulled up close to the ceiling when not in use so that it will be out of the sun and rain.

Furnace For Soft Metals.

Experimenters desiring to make small castings of zinc, brass, copper and other metals of low fusion point will find the simple furnace illustrated suitable to their requirements, says Popular Mechanics. The body of the furnace was made of an old ten gallon milk can, which was lined on the inside with fire brick, whereupon a base about four inches high was built up with the brick in the bottom for the crucible. A crucible six inches in diameter and eight inches high was set on the built up base, then two walls of fire brick were built up on each side of the crucible to within four inches of the top of the shell. The cover for the top is lined with fire clay.

FURNACE MADE OF MILK CAN.

A hole three inches in diameter was cut in the shell on one side and a four inch hole on the other. These holes should be located so that the smaller one enters the side at the center of one compartment formed by the walls and crucible, and the other makes an outlet in the other division, both holes being near the bottom of the can. The flame from a Bunsen burner, A, is directed through the smaller hole against the crucible and by the walls deflected upward along the side of the crucible and over the top, thence down the opposite side and out.

Mixing Battery Solution.

To secure uniformity of solution the water and acid should be well mixed before pouring it into the battery cells. In mixing the water should be placed in a porcelain or enamel ware dish and the acid added slowly, stirring continuously with a clean wood paddle. Mixing causes the mixture to become quite warm, and the solution should not be placed in the cells until it has cooled down.—Automobile Dealer.

Winds Favorable to Forest Fires.

The weather bureau has recently made some study of the meteorological conditions favoring the occurrence of forest fires and has tentatively established a special service for issuing warnings of the hot, dry winds which seem to be a frequent antecedent and accompaniment of such fires in the valuable timbered regions of the west.

Bending Lead Tubes.

When small lead tubing is bent with sharp turns it will frequently crack or break unless special precautions are used to prevent it. One of the cheapest and simplest methods to overcome the difficulty is to wind the place with several layers of fine flexible wire before trying to make the bend.

When Cylinders Misfire.

As a rule, when missing occurs in one cylinder at slow speed and firing is right at fast speed the fault consists of too wide a spark gap in the plug in that cylinder.

MANY USES FOR GUNS.

They Have Even Been the Means at Times of Saving Lives.

Guns would not go even if warfare were abolished. For example, the signal gun of a ship is used to announce her arrival on a coast. It would be difficult to find an equally effective substitute. The 1 o'clock gun, too, which is fired by electricity from Greenwich observatory, is the most effective means possible of announcing the exact time to surrounding towns, while nothing more impressive could be found than the minute guns fired for public mourning and the salute given on occasions of public rejoicings.

Guns save lives as well as take them. In desert countries, where it is difficult to collect water out of a mere dampness of sand, gun barrels are often sunk into the ground. By this means moisture is collected in the bore and many lives have been preserved by a timely draw at the muzzle.

A slaver, captured with a crew of slaves in the tropics, was once put in charge of a prize crew. During the voyage water ran out and slaves, slavers and prize crew were all dying of thirst. Then a sergeant hit on a brilliant idea. Taking all the available gun barrels, he plugged up the breach ends of a few of them, filled their bores with sea water and set them end up among the coals of the galley fire. Then as the steam rose he ran it through the other gun barrels till it cooled. The cooling steam collected in the shape of excellent fresh water and by this means scores of lives were saved.—Pearson's Weekly.

SUBLIME SIMPLICITY.

The Epitaph Over Sir Henry Lawrence, the Lucknow Hero.

There is a simple tomb in Lucknow, in India, that cost no more than many a plain farmer's gravestone in our rural burying places, but Clarence Poe declares that it impressed him more than anything else he saw in India except the Himalayas, the Taj Mahal and the view of Benares from the river.

It is the tomb of the heroic Sir Henry Lawrence, who died so glorious a death in the great mutiny of 1857. No commander in all India had planned more wisely for the defense of the men and women under his care, but the siege had only begun when he was mortally wounded. He called his successor and his associates to him, and at last, having omitted no detail of counsel or information that might enable them to carry out his farseeing plans, he roused himself to dictate his own immortal epitaph:

Here Lies
Henry Lawrence,
Who Tried to Do His Duty.
May the Lord Have Mercy on His Soul.

And so today these lines, sublime in their simplicity, mark his last resting place, and you feel that not even the great Akbar in Secundra or Napoleon in Paris has a worthier monument.—Youth's Companion.

Bull Baiting.

Although bull baiting was a cruel pastime, it was also a fulfilling of the law, for formerly no butcher was allowed to offer for sale the flesh of any bull that had not been baited. The goading of the animal in a fury was supposed to have some influence on the flesh. In a similar belief the flesh of a hunted hare was thought to be superior in flavor to that of one that had been shot, and a present of "a hunted hare" was considered to be a special compliment. In the records of the corporation of Leicester, England, the following order appears: "At a common hall, held on Thursday before St. Simon and St. Jude, 1467, 'no butcher to kill a bull till baited'." At Winchester it was ordered (reign of Henry VIII.) "that from hensforth ther shal be no bulstake set before any mayor's dore to bayte any bull, but onlie at the bullringe within the saide cytie."

Her Only Course.

Lady Anne Lindsay, the author of the old poem "Auld Robin Gray," was not only a delightful conversationalist, but she was a great story teller.

This gift made her not only a welcome guest abroad, but a valuable member of the home circle, for it is related in "A Group of Scottish Women" that at a dinner party which she was giving to some friends an old manservant caused some amusement by saying in a perfectly audible undertone:

"My lady, you must tell another story. The second course won't be ready for five minutes."

What He Saved.

"Good!" shouted the friend of the bibliophile as the latter emerged from the burning house carrying a bundle of books. "Did you save your Shakespeares?"

"No," replied the bibliophile, combing a spark out of his whiskers; "I saved my Bacon."—Houston Post.

Same Old Stuff.

"Black specks dance before my eyes, doctor," complained the society patient.

"That is very annoying and monotonous."

"Yes. They never have any new dances."—Kansas City Journal.

As to Jarley.

"That man Jarley is without any exception the most inaccurate man I ever knew," said Dobson. "Tell me, Jones, does he ever get anything right?"

"Oh, yes," replied Jones. "Anything that is left Jarley will always get right."—Judge.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Who Wears the Ring?

The number of persons participating in the game should not exceed nine. Some one of the company is selected, unknown to you, to put a ring on one of his fingers. You now say you will tell—first, who wears the ring; second, the hand it is on; third, the finger of the hand, and, fourth, the joint of the finger. This is apparently presuming to do a great deal, and your hearers will look on at first rather dubiously.

The company being seated in regular order, the persons must be numbered 1, 2, 3, etc. The thumb must be termed the first finger, the forefinger being the second. The joint nearest the extremity must be called the first joint; the right hand is one and the left hand two.

These preliminaries arranged, leave the room in order that the ring may be placed unobserved by you. Suppose that the third person has the ring on the right hand, third finger and first joint. Your object is to discover the figures 3131. Returning to the room, ask one of the company to perform secretly the following arithmetical operations:

1.—Double the number of the person who has the ring. In the case supposed this will produce.......	6
2.—Add 5..........	11
3.—Multiply by 5..........	55
4.—Add 10..........	65
5.—Add the number denoting the hand	66
6.—Multiply by 10..........	660
7.—Add the number of the finger.....	663
8.—Multiply by 10..........	6630
9.—Add the number of the joint.......	6631
10.—Add 35..........	6666

He must apprise you of the figures produced, 6666. You will then, in all cases, subtract from it 3535. In the present instance there will remain 3131, denoting the person No. 3, the hand No. 1, the finger No. 3 and the joint No. 1.

Growth of Boy Scouts.

Notwithstanding the rapid development and great extent of scouting at the present time in this country, we are, after all, reaching but a small percentage of the boys whose interest might be had if adequate leadership were provided. Judging from the reports from all parts of the country, the present basis upon which we are now organized and going forward seems to assure a greatly increased development during the coming year. From Oct. 1, 1914, to Feb. 5, 1915, 45,330 boys were enrolled, as compared with 32,929 for the same period of 1913 and 1914; 839 new troops were organised, as compared with 533 for the same period of 1913-14. Commissions were granted to 4,113 men to serve as scout masters and assistants, as compared with 2,251 for the same period of 1913-14.—Report of Boy Scouts of America.

Scouts Off on Long Hike.

With flags flying from a two wheeled trek cart built especially to convey their camp equipment and food supplies across the continent, six boy scouts under the leadership of H. S. Sorrels, former scout executive at St. Paul, recently left St. Paul for a 2,800 mile hike to San Francisco.

They expect to reach the end of their journey about Sept. 1. Sorrels said that every foot of the distance will be walked. Attached to the cart are six ropes, which the boys will use to haul the vehicle.

The Commercial club equipped the boys with cots and ponchos and has provided two signs to be displayed on their cart reading, "Boy Scouts of America of St. Paul, Minnesota. Hiking From St. Paul to San Francisco; Distance 2,800 Miles."

A Fine St. Bernard Dog.

In Minneapolis there is a St. Bernard dog that deserves a gold medal. He has trained himself to stop runaway horses and has performed several feats in that line. Not long ago, while this dog was taking a walk with his master, a runaway horse came clattering along. Just ahead a party of ladies were crossing the street, and there seemed to be no escape from certain death, when the dog gave a leap and caught the lines of the runaway between his teeth. His great weight brought the frightened animal to his haunches just as he was within six feet of the terrified women.

Beheadings.

1. Behead to butcher and leave what follows a funny story.

2. Behead to recite or to argue in a wild manner and leave a small insect.

3. Behead not far away and leave a part of the head.

4. Behead something done to the floor and leave to cry.

5. Behead pleased and leave a small boy.

Answers: 1, s-laughter; 2, r-ant; 3, n-ear; 4, s-weep; 5, g-lad.

A Puzzle in Sheep.

Problem to be solved: A number of sheep were going into a field. There was a sheep before two sheep, a sheep behind two sheep and a sheep between two sheep. How many sheep were going into the field?

Answer.—Three sheep.

Charade.

In dewy fields, on summer morns,
The farmer's men go to and fro
About their work, and they my first
With steady motion, strong and slow.

Far off above the tossing waves
My second circles in the air;
Or, weary, sinks upon the sea
To float and rest in safety there.

My whole is but a happy memory now,
But in the days that are no more
His word was law, in India great,
From mount to sea, from shore to shore.

Answer.—Mow, gull—mogul.

TELLS OF RELIEF FOR BELGIANS AND FRIGHTFUL PLIGHT OF SERVIA

Rockefeller Foundation Reports on Aid by America to Refugees Who Fled Into Holland.

Also Shows Conditions In Balkans to Combat Which Plague Experts Have Been Sent Out.

FOLLOWING the occupation of Belgium by the German forces, probably 800,000 Belgians sought refuge in Holland. The majority saved nothing beyond the clothing they wore.

The queen of Holland issued a proclamation welcoming the refugees, and systematic efforts to feed and shelter those who could not be taken into private homes were promptly set on foot.

A national committee was organized, with headquarters in Amsterdam. But all these efforts soon fell far short of meeting the situation.

The Rockefeller foundation appointed Charles Jenkinson as its special representative in Holland. The following facts were brought out by his investigation:

First.—The Dutch government was prepared to provide shelter and food for the refugees, but did not feel that it could do more.

Second.—Refugees were suffering intensely for lack of warm clothing, a need which the local relief committees were trying vainly to meet.

Third.—Universal idleness was undermining the energy and character of the refugees.

Clothing Supplies Pour In.

Early in December large shipments of clothing intended for the Belgians began to arrive at Rotterdam. By agreement with Captain J. F. Lucey of the commission for relief in Belgium, Mr. Jenkinson was appointed to take charge of it.

The clothing had been sent from the United States, Canada and England.

Photo by American Press Association.

GROUP OF SICK SERVIANS WHO HAVE NO DOCTORS.

It was of very good quality and much of it absolutely new. Communities had worked together. Each family had given what it could afford. In some instances families had taken this opportunity to clear out their garrets. Others had persuaded clothing dealers to turn over to them stock which, although new, had become unsalable.

Some communities had packed vegetables, salt fish, fruits, canned goods, toys, dolls, silverware, tobacco, etc., with the clothing, and when these cases were opened the contents were found to be an indescribable mass of rotted matter only fit for the rubbish pile.

To classify and distribute this clothing the commission was given free use of a small warehouse. Some thirty women required for sorting were secured from among the refugees. Early in January another warehouse was obtained.

Up to Feb. 22 12,478 cases had been sorted and sent to various parts of Belgium and Holland. These cases contained 1,396,572 articles of clothing, of which 914,222 went to the destitute in Belgium and 482,350 to Belgian refugees in Holland.

Thousands of Articles.

Among them were 241,684 articles of clothing for men, including 16,749 overcoats, 34,912 coats and jackets and 18,350 trousers. For women there were 224,465 articles, including 66,823 cloaks, 42,110 jackets and coats and 13,977 shoes, and for children 280,775 articles, 250,263 of which were suits. Some 70,000 miscellaneous articles, clothing and household goods, were also sent to Belgium. The articles distributed in Holland included 133,628 articles for men, 143,449 articles for women and 182,541 articles for children.

Most conspicuous among the features of the Belgian exodus was the fact that the refugees had nothing to do. All the women in the concentration camp in the Uranium hotel, in Rotterdam, containing 750 refugees, were called together and asked whether they would help manufacture underwear. Their response was prompt and genuine.

A [illegible] from Brussels [illegible] a [illegible] was [illegible] of the first class, which was under the care of Mme. Reuchlin, Baroness van Eck and Baroness van Gips, Dutch women.

Light, airy rooms were set aside. Fifty women entered. Twelve sewing machines were installed, along with scissors, needles, thread, buttons, cloth, etc. A supply of woolen yarn was provided for women and girls who could not sew, but could knit stockings.

Sewing Classes Formed.

From the first the experiment was successful. A better spirit appeared among the women. Steadily, but with no great rapidity, new warm garments accumulated. The scraps from cutting were saved, and young girls and children pieced quilts from them. This class in one week produced 450 articles of clothing, two-thirds underdrawers and undershirts for men and one third assorted articles for women and children.

Photo by American Press Association.

SERVIAN SOLDIERS IN RAGS.

The war relief commission paid the rent of the machines, cost of materials and wages of the forewoman. Later, at the urgent request of the Dutch minister of the interior, a small bonus was given to each sewing woman who worked six hours per day for six days.

The work was rapidly extended to all the eleven provinces of Holland. Thirty-four sewing classes were established within a few months. By April 1 more than 5,000 Belgian women and girls, and some men, were producing clothing needed by themselves and their fellow refugees. Upward of 500 sewing machines were in use.

Lady Johnstone, wife of the British minister, personally visited many of the classes and placed a fund of $2,000 at the disposal of Baron van Tuyll for supplying any little needs of the classes. In addition she ordered 5,000 pairs of scissors from England. The class at The Hague was under the personal supervision of the Princess de Ligne, wife of the secretary of the Belgian legation in Holland.

Men Urged to Go Home.

Plans to develop work for the men in the camps were considered, but it was thought the men should return to their homes, where they could be employed cleaning up the ruins, repairing roads and dikes and cultivating their crops, and in other ways making a start toward rehabilitation. It was believed the harm done to the Belgians in Holland by reason of their idleness outweighed any danger or harm which might come should they return home.

Having got the relief of the Belgians under way, the Rockefeller foundation investigated the needs of noncombatants in Servia. In their report the commissioners say:

The peasants make their own clothes. The outer garments of most of the men consist of rough homespun, the wool of which is undyed. The national footwear is a sort of half sandal, half moccasin, which was generally made of rawhide until quite recently. It is not a manufactured shoe. Nine tenths of the undergarments for men and women are home woven.

One now sees plenty of people going about covered with nothing but the raggedest rags. The Servian reservists are without uniforms and can be distinguished from other peasants only by their weapons or sometimes by a military cap.

If a refugee or soldier who has had neither bed to sleep in nor change of clothes for weeks is brought into a Servian hospital there will probably be no clean clothes of any kind to put on him.

At present the country is mobilizing every one capable of military service except in Macedonia.

Since the second expulsion of the Austro-Hungarian forces many of the Servians have returned to their destroyed homes and are suffering from want of shelter, clothing and food.

Many Austrians of Servian blood are reported to have fled into Servia to escape enforced service in the Austrian army. They are distributed among the communities along its western frontier. The statement was made that 15,000 or 20,000 of these refugees are in destitution.

Much need exists among many thousand Servians, probably 300,000 or more. The plight of those wretched people is aggravated by the prevalence of epidemic disease, which they are helpless to control.

Nish, which has a normal population of about 25,000, now shelters a population estimated at about 80,000. It is difficult to describe the condition of the people. The ravages of starvation and disease were appalling.

There remains in our minds the picture of a baby in one group whose drawn face, the skin stretched sharply over the bones, gave an impression of toothless old age, clutching weakly at the breasts of a mother too weak to nourish or care for it. Other children were whimpering pitifully, too feeble to crawl about. Here a dying woman moaned faintly, and there beside a vacant space a candle burned, indicating that on that spot some one had died a few hours before.

Cholera Now Feared.

Typhus, typhoid and recurrent fever are epidemic in Servia. Smallpox and scarlet fever are also present in some communities. Cholera is expected with the warm weather.

The Servian authorities say that the Austrian army brought these diseases. Many of its soldiers died of typhus while with the army of occupation. The Servians captured about 60,000 Austrian prisoners. Detachments of prisoners were sent to all the important cities. In this way, it is said, the seeds of typhus were widely scattered.

Photo by American Press Association.

HOW SERVIANS SLEEP IN FIELDS.

Soldiers are constantly being transported by rail. When civilians occupy the same cars later they carry away some of the vermin which disseminate typhus.

Death from the epidemic because of its frequency already has become a commonplace.

Estimates place the total number of typhus cases in Servia at 25,000 to 30,000.

Normally Servia has not more than 400 physicians, a very small number for a population of 4,500,000. In the two months of January and February sixty of these physicians died of typhus, and during our stay in Servia we were told daily of the striking down of others. Medical missions from foreign countries have suffered severely. At the American Red Cross one doctor was dead from the disease when we were in Servia and several nurses were very low. Two American doctors from Paris contracted typhus and one died.

Trained nurses, as we know them in the United States, are unknown.

Recognizing the menace not only to the Servian people, but the whole world, the Rockefeller foundation took the matter up with the American Red Cross. Inquiry brought a cable from the Servian government inviting an American sanitary commission.

Dr. Strong Heads Experts.

The American sanitary commission was accordingly constituted and sent out under the leadership of Dr. Richard P. Strong, professor of tropical diseases in Harvard Medical school, and probably the foremost plague expert in the United States.

The chief sanitary inspector is Dr. Thomas W. Jackson of Philadelphia; bacteriologist, Dr. Hans Zinsser, professor of bacteriology, Columbia university; clinical laboratory assistant, Dr. Andrew W. Sellards of Harvard Medical school; clinical assistant, Dr. George C. Shattuck of Harvard Medical school; assistant sanitary inspector, Dr. Francis B. Grinnell of Harvard Medical school. Dr. Nicolle, the French expert on typhus, has been invited to co-operate with the commission.

Charles S. Eby of Washington, lately connected with the United States [illegible] service, is [illegible] for the commission.

LIQUEFIED GAS IS NEW WAR WEAPON

Germans Begin Great Drive by Aid of Deadly Fumes.

NOT BOMBS BUT BOTTLES.

Correspondent With French Army, Describing Novel Arm Which Depends Upon Utilizing the Wind, Says Men Killed Turned Black at Once and Others Were Incapable of Defense.

A correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle with the French army describes the new weapon by means of which the Germans won the first step in their great fresh drive for the coast of the English channel. He declares that liquefied chlorine gas was liberated from steel bottles.

On the evening of April 22, he says, the French soldiers who manned the first line trenches saw rising from the German trenches, a short distance away, a number of white fuses, evidently intended as signals. Almost at once all along the German trenches a thick curtain of yellow smoke arose and was blown gently toward the French trenches by a northeast wind.

This curtain, which advanced like the "yellow wind" of northern China, offered this peculiarity—that it spread thickly on the ground, rising to a height of sixteen feet only.

The French soldiers were naturally taken by surprise. Some got away in time, but many, alas, not understanding the new danger, were not so fortunate and were overcome by the fumes and died poisoned. Among those who escaped nearly all cough and spit blood, the chlorine attacking the mucous membrane. The dead were turned black at once.

Rush Followed Fumes.

The effect of this poisonous gas was felt over about six kilometers of ground in length by two kilometers deep. Farther than that the gas was too much diluted with air to kill, but suffocated many.

About fifteen minutes after letting the gas escape the Germans got out of their trenches. Some of them were sent on in advance with masks over their heads to ascertain if the air had become breathable.

Having discovered that they could advance, they arrived in large numbers on the area on which the gas had spread itself some minutes before and took possession of the arms of the dead men. They made no prisoners. Whenever they saw a soldier whom the fumes had not quite killed they snatched away his rifle and threw it in the Yser and advised him ironically to lie down "to die better."

These were not asphyxiating bombs that the Germans used. They were big, re-enforced steel bottles of gas, compressed at high pressure, which the Germans placed on top of their trenches, and of which they opened the taps when it seemed to them that the wind coming from behind them would carry on the poison to the enemy's trenches.

May Kill Own Men.

It is possible that the use of their own chlorine gas may one day turn against the Germans themselves. Should the wind veer suddenly they would be the first victims of their attempt, he concludes.

In a special article on the German successes near Ypres, the Frankfurter Zeitung says:

"It is indeed possible that our bombs and shells rendered it impossible for the enemy's troops to remain in their trenches or artillery positions.

"It is even probable that, in point of fact, projectiles emitting poisonous gases were employed by us, for the German army command has permitted no doubt to exist that, as a reply to the treacherous projectiles of the English and French, which have been constantly observed for many weeks, we on our side also would employ gas bombs or whatever one may call them.

"The German army command, moreover, referred to the fact that from German chemistry considerably more effective substances might be expected, and our army command was right."

A Dutch correspondent telegraphs that certain Germans have confided to him that the Germans intend to continue the use of asphyxiating gas and expect that it will prove their final means of victory.

Calls It Last Crime.

The Paris Temps in commenting on this latest innovation calls the use of asphyxiating gas the last crime left for the Germans to perpetrate and says they will stand dishonored in history because of it.

The German official explanation is that The Hague convention ruled against the use of asphyxiating projectiles and that therefore the convention was not abused. They say that the German troops did not fire such bombs.

In this explanation the Temps finds hypocrisy and duplicity, because, it says, The Hague interdiction was not aimed at any special engine for spreading asphyxiating gas, but against the use of asphyxiants in general.

If half of what has been said of the efficacy of the Turpin asphyxiating shells is true, says the Journal des Debats, there is no doubt that France will [illegible] with these latest methods on a certain equality with her enemies.

BATTLE LINE IN EUROPE 1,668¾ MILES LONG.

Careful calculation shows that at the moment the great German drive began the battle lines in Europe covered the enormous stretch of 1,668¾ miles.

Among the allies the line of death was divided as follows:

French	544	miles
British	31½	miles
Belgians	17¼	miles
Russians	857	miles
Germans	219	miles

In cost, loss of life, destruction of property and loss of production and trade the war is eating up more than $124,000,000 a day, experts say.

Belgium's losses are now estimated at $2,600,000,000.

"WE'RE TIRED, AREN'T YOU?" ASK GERMANS.

Letters Tied to Stones Flung at Night Into British Trenches.

Two letters tied around stones were thrown into the trenches of the Second British corps the night of April 12 and 13. One letter read:

Dear Honored Comrades—As this war has now been going on for about nine months and whole villages with their inhabitants have been devastated, it is now high time to put a stop to it.

We are all tired of this savage life, and you must be too. Our dear wives and children await and long for our return and yours must do the same.

Hoping that we may do some good by this, we remain with friendly greetings,

THE GERMAN SAPPING PARTY.

The other letter ran:

Dear French and English Comrades—It is just about time you stopped all this, for we think you will soon have had enough of your war. Our losses are great, and yours must be three times as big.

Every day it gets finer, and it would be better if we could be at home with our wives and children, who are waiting every day for us, as yours are waiting for you.

Let us have peace on earth before the cherry blossoms come out, but the sooner the better, or do you want to go on sitting forever in these damned trenches? With friendly greetings,

THE GERMANS.

DANCED WITH LAFAYETTE.

Centenarian Says People Aren't as Good Now as Years Ago.

Hale and hearty, her bright eyes sparkling happily, Mrs. Missouri A. Hawkins of 20 West One Hundred and Fortieth street, New York city, celebrated her one hundredth birthday by saying:

"People's morals aren't as good as they were years ago. We are living in a 'flyaway' age, with an astonishing lot of deviltry and slyness upsetting all the good in the world."

She recalled as her most pleasant experience her meeting with General Lafayette.

"I put on my best dress," she said, "and went to the hotel, where I shook hands with the great man. And what do you think?" she added. "I danced a minuet with him."

CAPTIVES START UNIVERSITY.

Germans Help Belgian Prisoners to Continue Their Studies.

A regular university is in operation in the prison camp at Soltau, Prussia, which contains several thousand captives. Lectures are being given in departments of arts, law and theology, and in a commercial school. There also is a preparatory department.

The university owes its origin to the fact that the Belgian prisoners include many professors and students of four Belgian universities. The students desired an opportunity to continue their studies. The classes were opened also to other prisoners.

The attendance in the preparatory department is particularly large.

FRENCH GET THEIR WINE.

First Gift Made to Men in Trenches Is 14,000,000 Liters.

French soldiers in the field are not to lack wine. Agricultural organisations, syndicates of buyers and others have united in an organization known as the association "Vin Aux Soldats" (Wine For Soldiers). The first gift was 1 per cent of the entire village of L'Hérault. Inasmuch as the vintage this year was 14,000,000 hectolitres the gift to the army will amount to 140,000 hectoliters, or 14,000,000 liters.

The army authorities take charge of the transportation and the wines are exempt from the sales tax.

Pretty Hopeful.

"I like the way Fairleigh faces things. He's so wonderfully hopeful."

"Hopeful! I should say he was. What do you suppose he's doing now?"

"Dunno."

"Why, he's getting up a program for the celebration of the anniversary of the first hundred years of universal peace."—Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

527 DAYS FOR BOOZING.

The Court Also Rubs In a Fine of $200. Must "Stay Sober."

Sandusky, O.—James Smith, thirty-five, was brought to the county jail here from Castalia to serve 527 days for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Justice Charles Canfield, before whom he entered a plea of guilty, gave him six months after assessing a fine of $200 and costs.

Canfield in passing sentence told Smith he was determined to have him stay sober for awhile.

ZEPPELIN RAIDS TEST OF MACHINE

New Dirigible Used In Recent Flights Over England.

OFFICERS FEAR MORE BOMBS

Motorcycle Said to Have Toured Path of Raider and Indicated Route With Brilliant Headlight—People Treat Bombs Lightly, but Officials Take Many Precautions.

Lowestoft, England.—A tour by motorcycle over the path which the latest Zeppelin raider took across and around this section of England supports the opinion that he had no particular military object in view. The big dirigible first was sighted at Southwold soon after midnight and disappeared over the sea at Lowestoft about an hour later. It made an extended tour over a considerable area, dropping a large number of incendiary bombs and a few explosive bombs, but spending nearly half its time maneuvering in the neighborhood of Henham hall, a rambling old mansion. It is possible the pilot mistook the hall for some other building which he supposed to be of military importance.

The dropping of the numerous incendiary bombs appears to have been done in an effort to set fire to barns or haystacks, which would illumine the landscape and enable the pilot to locate some landmark by which he could get his bearings.

Photo by American Press Association.

TYPE OF BOMB DROPPED ON ENGLAND BY ZEPPELINS.

Dispatches from Holland quote German naval officers as stating the Zeppelin used for this raid was a new one and the trip was in the nature of a test. Oversea navigation is an art only to be acquired after long experience, and it is possible the visit to this section had little significance except as training for pilots and men.

The raider passed over Lowestoft two or three times, a calm night making maneuvering easy. A fire bomb which fell into a pile of timber did damage estimated at $25,000, and the two or three explosive bombs which found targets did slight damage.

Elsewhere there was nothing to tell of the passage of the invader except some holes in the ground, some broken windows, doors torn from their hinges and a gossiping countryside. The broken windows and damaged doors were regarded lightly by the inhabitants, and their feelings were rather of astonishment and surprise than fear or dismay. "I've lived in this house twenty years, and nothing like this ever happened before," was a characteristic comment in the farming districts.

There are many stories of miraculous escapes, but most of them have little basis in actual fact. Countryside gossip is also busily engaged in rounding up mysterious spies, and fully half the people in the visited district believe the hackneyed story of a mysterious motorcyclist who piloted the visitor by means of a headlight of peculiar brilliancy.

While the civilians are generally inclined to treat lightly the result of the Zeppelin activity, military men in charge of the various defense projects incline to a more serious view. They are generally of the opinion that the raids are in the nature of reconnoissances and will be followed by more determined attempts shortly. Zeppelins have now reached the English coast several times, and with good luck and favorable weather they may be expected to return eventually in larger numbers and with more serious intentions.

Allies' Air Man's Brilliant Escape.

Paris.—An air man of the allies was fired on near Ghent, but by flying upside down he made the Germans believe he had been killed, and they ceased shooting. Suddenly he resumed his upright position, dropped two bombs and escaped.

Paris Idolizes Jacques Goujon.

Paris. — Before he lost an arm Jacques Goujon, seventeen, killed two German sentinels, blew up two quick firers with bombs, was captured, escaped and [illegible] to the French lines a German machine gun. He has been given a medal.

VICTIMS BORNE TO GRAVES WITH HONORS

(Continued from Page One)

There were only three bodies, one each in a hearse, in this cortege, the other eighty-nine already having been placed in the graves.

The coffins of the sixty-four unidentified dead were filed past by weeping men, women and children, who sought the last opportunity to see if there were among the dead those for whom they were searching. This delayed the funeral procession, the entire forenoon being devoted to last efforts to make identifications.

The churches in Queenstown, both Protestant and Catholic, all held memorial services in the morning. Assisting the bishop at the Cathedral was Father Cowley Clark, of London, a survivor. Participating in the Protestant service was the Rev. Mr. Swan-Mason, chaplain of the battleship Ocean, which was sunk recently in the Dardanelles.

Many children and little babies still lie in the morgues like so many dolls. The townspeople covered them with flowers yesterday and it is probable these little ones will be placed in a grave together.

Some on crutches, many limping and nearly all bruised, the survivors left their hotels in silent groups throughout the afternoon. There were some Americans and many Canadians and English. The presence of so many children on board the Lusitania was due to the fact that Canadian women were going to England to join relatives while their husbansd were at the front.

Not single body was brought in yesterday from the spot where the Lusitania disappeared, but some bodies may yet be found if a storm does not scatter them. There will not be so great a number picked up, however, as was the case in the North Atlantic after the Titanic disaster, for that vessel remained afloat so long that all on deck had ample time to carefully adjust lifebelts.

"Peace is Healing and Elevating, Strife is Not," Says President

"The special example of America must be an example not merely of peace because it will not fight, but of peace because it is the healing and elevating influence of the world and strife is not.

"There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as a nation being so right that it does not need to convince others by force that it is right."

President Wilson tonight in these words gave to the waiting world its first idea of what is in his mind after four days of solitary consideration of the course the United States shall pursue toward Germany for the murder of more than fifteen hundred non-combatants; men, women and children, aboard the Lusitania.

This message Mr. Wilson sent out from convention hall, and was heard by approximately eighteen thousand persons, who, as a single body, rose and cheered wildly. They interpreted the speech as one of peace—but also one of firmness.

Never once did Mr. Wilson mention the Lusitania. Never once did he mention Germany, or Great Britain, or France, or Russia, or any of the other countries now at war.

To the crowd it seemed that Mr. Wilson does not intend to plunge the United States into war—at least not now—but it seemed that he regarded as unspeakable the outrage committed by Germany in the torpedoing of the Lusitania. It seemed as if he had too great contempt for such action to fight a nation which employs such methods of warfare.

Mr. Wilson condemned bitterly on the efforts of some Americans who are trying to trade on the nationalities of those of foreign birth who have adopted America as their home, those who are spreading dicontent and who are working for personal gain on the passions of their countrymen who are of foreign birth. Again he mentioned no names and no country. But between the lines the throng felt that he meant those who are striving to spread the cause of Germany in America.

"The man who goes among you to trade on your nationality is no worthy son to live under the Stars and Stripes," he shouted amid applause.

First Thought Must Be Humanity.

"I am sorry for the man who wants to create personal capital out of the passions of our fellow man."

The United States, Mr. Wilson said, is constantly growing stronger by the addition of the flood from foreign lands—an intermingling of thoughts and ideals.

He said our first thought must be of humanity, for with these ideals the preservation of our country is dependent.

Mr. Wilson reminded the 4,000 newly naturalized Americans, for whom the city of Philadelphia gave the celebration, that they had just taken an oath of allegiance, but he added that it was not an oath of allegiance to any one unless to God. Most of the new citizens were Russian Jews, although other nationalties were represented. Few of them were Germans.

PLANNING FOR EAGLES

Auburn.—The members of the Auburn Aerie of Eagles have preparations almost completed for the entertainment of delegates to the state convention to be held in this city next month. Notifications have been received from many aeries abou the state, especially from cities in this section, that large delegations will be sent for the parade and prize competitions.

A delegation left Auburn for Syracuse today to ask Theodore Roosevelt to be the principal speaker for the convention. The former president is a life member of the order.

FIVE BOOK PASSAGE BY THE ORDUNA

New York, May 11.—Evidently undeterred by the fate of the Lusitania, [illegible] five persons yesterday engaged passage on board the Orduna, of the same line, which is due to steam from here for Liverpool on May 18. The total number of passengers engaged so far is fifteen.

The Orduna is now on her way to New York from Liverpool with a heavy passenger list and is expected hereby Thursday.

CHARITIES BILL VETOED

Albany.—The Thompson bill, intended to compel charitable organidations to give detailed reports of their receipts and expenditures, was vetoed today by Governor Whitman. He said its provisions were too broad.

New carload of Bowker's Fertilizers. VanWagenen, Inc. adv122

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Rogers, 40 First st. adv

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Boston.
Cincinnati at New York.
Chicago at Brooklyn.
Pittsburgh at Philadelphia.

Results Yesterday

Brooklyn, 5; Philadelphia, 0.
Pittsburgh, 10; Chicago, 7.
Boston, 14; New York, 9.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	13	7	.650
Chicago	13	8	.619
Boston	12	8	.600
Cincinnati	10	10	.500
Pittsburgh	11	12	.478
Brooklyn	9	12	.429
St. Louis	10	14	.417
New York	6	13	.316

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Detroit.
Philadelphia at St. Louis.
New York at Cleveland.
Washington at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Boston, 3; New York, 1.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Detroit	17	7	.708
New York	12	7	.632
Chicago	14	9	.609
Boston	9	8	.529
Cleveland	10	12	.455
Washington	9	11	.450
Philadelphia	7	13	.350
St. Louis	6	17	.261

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Baltimore.
Kansas City at Newark.
Chicago at Brooklyn.
Pittsburgh at Buffalo.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 10; Newark, 5.
Kansas City, 4; Brooklyn, 3.
Pittsburgh, 10; Baltimore, 4.
St. Louis, 5; Buffalo, 3.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	15	8	.652
Newark	14	10	.583
Chicago	13	11	.542
Brooklyn	12	11	.522
Kansas City	12	11	.522
St. Louis	10	12	.455
Baltimore	10	15	.400
Buffalo	8	16	.333

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Buffalo at Richmond.

Results Yesterday

Montreal, 9; Jersey City, 1.
Rochester 10; Newark, 3.
Providence, 6; Toronto, 4.
Richmond, 11; Buffalo, 8.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	9	2	.818
Montreal	8	4	.667
Jersey City	5	5	.500
Rochester	5	5	.500
Richmond	5	5	.500
Buffalo	3	4	.429
Newark	3	6	.333
Toronto	2	9	.182

STATE LEAGUE

Games Today

Syracuse at Albany.
Utica at Troy.
Wilkesbarre at Binghamton.
Scranton at Elmira.

Results Yesterday

Albany, 3; Syracuse, 1.
Binghamton, 9; Wilkesbarre, 3.
Utica, 11; Troy, 1.
Scraton, 13; Elmira, 10.

Teams Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Troy	3	1	.750
Binghamton	3	1	.750
Albany	3	1	.750
Elmira	3	2	.600
Utica	2	2	.500
Wilkesbarre	2	3	.400
Scranton	1	3	.250
Syracuse	0	4	.000

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

At St. Paul—	R.	H.	E.
Minneapolis	12	17	3
St. Paul	13	13	2

COLLEGE BASEBALL

At Brunswick—Univ. of Maine, 10; Bowdoin, 3.

At Hanover—Brown, 11; Dartmouth, 1.

EXHIBITION BASE BALL

At Detroit—Detroit (A.L.), 10; Cincinnati, (N.L.), 9.

AUSTRIA'S U-5 DESIGNED IN U. S.

Submarine That Sank French Cruiser American Made.

ENGINES WERE BUILT HERE

Small Vessel Which Covered Trip of Nearly 300 Miles to Reach Foe and Get Back Safely Proves Value of Undersea Craft For Coast Defense, Says Her Designer.

The Austrian submarine U-5, which made a trip of more than 280 miles from her base and sank the French cruiser Leon Gambetta off Otranto, in the Adriatic sea, with a loss of 552 men, including Admiral Senes, was designed in America and equipped with machinery made in this country.

The vessel and her sister ship, the U-6, are of the same displacement, speed, radius, etc., as the five United States submarines of the C class which now constitute the floating defense of the Panama canal. These vessels are, of course, smaller and less powerful than the more modern boats, but have both in maneuvers and in actual war shown their great value for defensive purposes.

Made Long Sea Trip.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the torpedoing of the Leon Gambetta took place approximately 300 miles away from the base of the U-5, thus illustrating the enormous value of the mobility possessed by even the smaller and older submarines. It was the engines, motors and other important parts made in the United States which enabled the U-5 to accomplish this big trip and safely get back to her base.

The U-5 was put together at Fiume, Austria, under the supervision of Americans and was handed over to the Austrian government in 1910. The same American concern as designed her is now building half of the new fleet of submarines for the United States navy on plans that are being kept secret.

"In view of the scant respect paid to the rights of weak neutrals by the great powers in the European war," said the designer of the Austrian U-5 in an interview, "our coast fortifications at the canal, no matter how efficient, cannot supply a complete defense. The submarine, however, can extend the area forbidden to the enemy's ships enormously and thus prevent the landing of mobile forces for the purpose of attack upon the canal or its fortifications.

Cites Dardanelles as Lesson.

"The operations under way at the Dardanelles form also an impressive object lesson, since the bombardment of the forts and the landing of French and English troops would be quite impossible did the Turkish navy possess even a small submarine flotilla. If these operations are finally successful and if the fall of Constantinople proves to be the turning point of the war the vital importance of the submarine will have the clearest possible proof."

Of the crew of the Leon Gambetta 136 were saved. Of these 110 landed at Syracuse and twenty-five at Brindisi. The bodies of Admiral Senes and fifty-two officers and men have been buried at Cape Leuca, near the scene of their death. The funeral was arranged by the officers of Italian torpedo boat destroyers. Residents of the neighborhood joined the Italian sailors in attending the services at the cemetery.

GIRL IS MADE LIEUTENANT.

Czar Honors Young Woman Who Fights Beside Brothers.

Recent Russian army orders contain notice of the promotion of a young woman, Alexandra Lagerev, to lieutenant. With sixteen other girls belonging to families of Cossacks, she has been fighting alongside her male relatives. Eight of the girls have been killed.

Lieutenant Lagerev was made a prisoner, but she killed her guard, escaped and led a reconnoitering party which captured eighteen uhlans in Suwalki with important documents.

JOBS FOR 4,000 DUE TO WAR.

American Mechanics Go to England to Make Ammunition.

Four thousand American mechanics, principally machinists, from New York and Jersey City have gone to England to work in munition factories.

A British agent named O'Connell has been rounding the men up, offering union wages, the best of living conditions and transportation both ways. O'Connell is now making a tour of the principal cities getting additional workmen for England.

HONORS GAILLARD'S MEMORY.

Wilson Renames For Him Culebra Cut, His Work In Canal.

Culebra cut, in the Panama canal, is no more.

President Wilson has changed the name to Gaillard cut as a mark of respect to the late Colonel Gaillard, who had charge of the construction of this difficult section of the canal and whose [illegible]

ENGRAVED STEPPING STONE

Found on Step Just Turned Over After Fifty Years.

Columbia, Conn.—Needing a flat stone for repairs that he was making, Edward Phillips pried up one which for over fifty years had been used as a stepping stone near the farmhouse back door. To his surprise he saw on the reverse side, in fairly plain letters, the inscription:

In memory of Emily, daughter of Mr. Joseph and Mrs. Eunice Smith, who died April 15, 1814, aged six months and fifteen days.

Rest, thou sweet slumberer, in the peaceful grave;
Short was thy life; forgotten soon shall be.
Except the few who, drowned in sorrow's wave,
With painful pleasure still remember thee.

Nobody knows where the stone had been used or where it came from. Mr. Phillips' father bought the house over fifty years ago and the stone was at the back door then for a stepping stone. It is five feet long and nearly two feet wide.

LAST SHOT OF CIVIL WAR.

Woman Asked Police to See if Old Gun Was Loaded—It Was.

New York.—The "last shot of the civil war" was fired recently in a courtroom. It came from a gun which had been hanging for years on a wall in the home of the late Willard H. Hodgson. The musket had been carried in the war of the rebellion by Mr. Hodgson's father.

Mr. Hodgson's sister was preparing to move to another house, but was afraid to take down the old musket. She called in Lieutenant Henry Brown of the Flatbush police station and turned the gun over to him. He took it around to the station house and showed it to Attendant Patrick O'Loughlin of the Flatbush court, which is in the same building.

Standing in the corridor O'Loughlin pointed the gun at the floor and pulled the trigger. The old war musket was heavily loaded, and there was a report which startled the police reserves and the people in the courtroom.

WANTS A NATIONAL BANK IN CANAL ZONE

Helm of Kentucky Would Go After South American Trade.

Washington.—Representative Helm of Kentucky has a plan to establish a national bank at Ancon, in the Panama canal zone, with branches elsewhere in that country. He would call it the Pan-American bank and give it a capital stock of $25,000,000, divided into shares of par value of $100 each.

Just before congress adjourned Mr. Helm introduced a bill to incorporate the Pan-American bank, and when the Sixty-fourth congress convenes he will press it for action.

"The commercial tieup resulting from the European war has convinced every thinking man in this country that foreign trade is a vital element in our domestic prosperity and that the continents of North and South America have greater identity of interests than was ever realized before," said Mr. Helm. "There never was a time when opportunity was knocking so loud at our doors. The commerce and business of a continent are within our grasp. The manufacturing enterprises in Central and South America are very limited, and it is to this matter that I wish the attention of the country to be directed.

"Few, if any, [illegible] to the south of us [illegible] of transporting of [illegible] products to any other country [illegible] all the trade of Central and South America [illegible] across the Atlantic. [illegible] from North America to Central and South America.

"About the only means of creating commercial and [illegible] relations are banking facilities, [illegible] bureaus and mercantile agents. Under the federal reserve act a bank with $1,000,000 capital in the United States can establish a branch bank in any of the countries in Central or South America. This provision, in my opinion, does not meet the conditions. What we need is a bank of sufficient proportions and magnitude and importance and prestige to handle the business of the continent.

"The government of the canal zone is going to be just as stable and steady as the government of the United States. If we establish a bank on the canal zone it becomes identified with the locality. Our government is behind it. That guarantees confidence and makes it a sure go. The governments to the south of us would be inspired with confidence in the institution."

Girl Made a Lieutenant.

Petrograd.—Army orders contain the promotion of a young woman, Alexandra Lagerev, to lieutenant, with sixteen other girls belonging to families of Don Cossacks.

She has been fighting alongside male relatives since the beginning of the war. Eight of these have been killed, and Miss Lagerev was a prisoner, but she killed her guard and escaped and [illegible]

ARGENTINE PRIDE SPURNS BIG PROFIT

Refuses Offer of $17,500,000 For New Dreadnought Moreno.

NATIONS AT WAR WANT IT.

Greece, Peaceful, Made Largest Bid Against Many Other Countries—Acquisition of Vessel Would Have Given Her a Big Naval Advantage Over Turkey.

New York.—Argentina's patriotic pride in her new super-Dreadnought Moreno, which sailed recently from Newport News, is strong.

Not even a profit of about $6,000,000 in cash could induce the South American republic to sell this warship, one of the largest afloat, which was built at Camden, N. J. The offer was made by Greece through an agent in this city, acting on instructions of the Greek minister in Paris, whose government was willing to pay £3,500,000 for the American built vessel. The cost to Argentina for the construction of the Moreno was about $12,000,000.

Greece, however, was not the only country that made bids for the immediate transfer of the warship for monetary considerations that would net Argentina a large profit.

Italy, it is understood, is anxious to add the great sea fighting machine to its navy, although her offer was not as large as that made by the Athens government.

The first intimation that negotiations had been in progress mentioned Russia as the bidder, but the fact of Russia's inability to use the navy she now has eliminated that country as one of the nations that coveted the Moreno.

"Yes, there have been offers for the sale of the Moreno," said Manuel A. Molina, acting Argentine consul in New York. "I am not sure which countries made the bids, but I know that all of them were rejected by my government."

The fact that Greece, not yet embroiled in the European conflict, was the highest bidder for the new sea fighter confirms a recent statement that the Hellenic power has been making pretentious military preparations, which included the purchase of the United States warships Idaho and Mississippi for $12,000,000 and are now followed by the further offer of about $17,500,000 for the Moreno to add to her ready made navy.

Greece has also bought about 100,000 tons of coal in this country and a large quantity of hospital supplies, besides ammunition. The further fact that Greece was able to pay $12,000,000 in cash for the two American vessels and was ready to pay the amount bid for the Moreno also indicates a favorable condition of the Greek exchequer or the readiness of a friendly power to advance the necessary money.

The New York agent to whom the Greek minister at Paris intrusted the important mission is in close social and commercial relations with Argentina, but the government at Buenos Aires refused to consider even the flattering offer that would mean a profit of 50 per cent of the battleship's cost.

The prospective purchaser or purchasers were encouraged in their negotiations by the controversy that developed between the Argentine government and the New York Shipbuilding company, which built the Moreno, over the payment for extra work, which delayed the delivery.

The acquisition of this vessel of 27,500 tons displacement and a speed of 22½ knots by the Greek navy in case of a conflict with her ancient and natural enemy, Turkey, would be of great importance and would give that country a greatly superior naval strength over that possessed by Turkey.

Argentina has proudly rejected the great inducement, and the Moreno will continue to fly the blue and white flag. The transport Chaco of the Argentine navy brought the crew for the Moreno and is now at Philadelphia. The Chaco will follow the super-Dreadnought south.

DOG A "PANHANDLER."

Bubbles Collected Pennies Enough to Pay For License.

Warren, Mass.—For the license of Bubbles, a dog owned by Edward W. Burns, former proprietor of the Hotel Ramsdell, 200 cents were paid to Town Clerk William F. Duncan. Bubbles collected the cents himself from traveling salesmen and other guests in the hotel. He is a Boston bull terrier, six years old and is known to every child here.

Bubbles will not be satisfied unless he is given a cent. At all times he will refuse silver. When a cent is thrown to him he grabs it in his teeth and runs to a corner of a room and then returns for more.

At the beginning of the year Mr. Burns' son began to save the cents received by Bubbles. The cents are on exhibition in the window of a Main street store.

New Shoes Every Six Weeks.

London.—It is estimated that the [illegible]

NINETEEN HUNDRED COPIES OF THE EVENING TIMES GO INTO FULTON'S HOMES DAILY. WATCH US GROW!

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume I, No. 124 Established, Dec. 17, 1914. THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1915 Price One Cent

Get Busy

CLEAN UP

and

PAINT UP!

All Hail! Contribute on May 21 to the City's First Official Rubbish Heap. Free Collection to Be Made on That Day.

The special clean-up campaign under the direction of the Public Safety Committee of the Chamber of Commerce will close certain designated tasks on Friday, May 21. The general campaign will be prolonged, the committee vouches until the city is beautifully clean. The motto of the committee is "This thing will we do well."

The big underlying principles which affect the cleanliness of the city will be dug to light—not hastily and unbacked by intelligence, but thru study. A survey of the city will be undertaken in which time and painstaking care will be exercised. Certain legislation may be needed to insure permanent results. Fulton, the committee recognizes, has its own peculiar problems to be worked out. No other city's plans direct for a clean, beautiful atmosphere can be adopted as a unit here. However each and every city that has done things in this way will be studied thru its system used.

That Fulton has not during this campaign been completely cleaned and beautified is no reflection upon the people as a whole or upon the individuals comprising the committee. The task is entirely too large and too new to be successfully completed within a few days. The committee at its last meeting decided to not indulge in pats on the back, but instead to honestly look facts in the face, "to call a spade a spade" and go to the work with a determination to do the task commissioned them in a direct intelligent manner.

An effort will be made to interest and educate as many Fultonians in the possibilities of a "clean city." Too many get but a [illegible] idea of such a term. To "clean house" is a general term, yet every housekeeper knows the elements that enter directly into the individual task. So it is in our city.

Friday, the 21st, eight teams will give their services to the city. Dig out boxes, ashes, cans and other rubbish from alley, garret and cellar. Contribute to the first official rubbish heap in the city. Make ready now. On the 21st place your rubbish near the curb ready for collection.

Let us make this the cleanest city in the world. Let us do something particular towards maintaining the position to which this city is entitled by claims of heritage as first and foremost of America's "biggest little cities."

There's a splendid awakening in this city—a genuine arousing of civic pride. Gigantic plans are forming. Big things are already under way. The community is planning fine things for the individual citizens. Let us, as individuals, do fine things for the community. And let us be first. Let us begin now, with—

CLEAN-UP WEEK.

Remember the date, May 21.

LET US MAKE THIS THE CLEANEST CITY IN THE WORLD

Clean Up Spick and Span

Getting rubbish on the run,
You can have a lot of fun
Making cleaner this clean town,
Adding much to her renown.
Clean-up, Spick and Span.

Soap, water, scrubbing-brush,
Chase the dirt out with a rush!
Out with rubbish, cut the weeds,
Sow a lot of garden seeds.
Scrub-up, Spick and Span.

Whitewash cellars, disinfect;
Every corner, please inspect.
What a lot of things need cleaning,
Surely you will get our meaning.
Sweep-up, Spick and Span.

Paint the house from top to toe
Varnish, polish, high and low,
Sweep the attic, clean the doors,
Put new rugs upon the floors.
Paint-up, Spick and Span.

Swat the fly and all the pool,
Get out every garden tool,
Seed the bare spots on the lawn,
Get up in the early dawn
Wake-up, Spick and Span.

After you are through with this
Cheerful smiles are not amiss.
Don't forget it through the year
Every day make full of cheer.
Cheer-up, Spick and Span.

Germany Suddenly Drops Warning to Americans Not to Travel by Vessels of the Allies. Opinion is That Kaiser is Trying to Avoid War With United States.

MOON CASE MAY GO BY DEFAULT

Injunction Suit Brought Against Local Body May Be Dropped

The injunction suit brought by Wm. Moon of the Oswego River Light and Power Company against John Stevenson et al., members of the Board of Public Works of this city, and the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company, may go by default to the defendants if Eugene M. White, the attorney for the plaintiffs, does not file a brief within the next few days with Justice DeAngelis. The case came up for trial in the Supreme Court last month and Moon asked for an injunction restraining the local Board of Works and the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company from completing the terms of a contract made between these parties in regard to the lighting of this city. Moon claimed that the awarding of the contract was illegal as he had not received the same specifications as the local company and consequently his bid was on other specifications.

Testimony at the hearing brought out the fact that the advertising of the bids was done in accordance with every legal requirement and the evidence was so weighty in favor of the local defendants that Mr. White, for the plaintiff asked time to prepare a brief. Justice DeAngelis granted him ten days, but that was more than three weeks ago.

It was reported yesterday that the [illegible]

GERMANS ARE READY TO BLOW UP VESSELS

Washington, May 13.—Information leaked out this morning of an action of the German Embassy which is highly significant of the changing attitude of the German government.

Orders were given to American newspapers all over the country to cancel the advertisement which has several times been published from the German Embassy warning Americans against taking passage on board belligerent merchant vessels. This advertisement was published a week before the Lusitania was blown up, and was again inserted after that tragedy. Its second publication raised a storm of indignation throughout the United States. The German government used this advertisement as justification for its action in destroying the Lusitania. The American passengers on board the Lusitania, it said [illegible] ample warning. If they failed to regard the warning the [illegible]ty was theirs.

When this new action of the German Embassy is considered in connection with the note so hurriedly sent through Mr. James W. Gerard, Ambassador at Berlin, on Sunday, promising immunity from attack for American ships in the future, and the German note expresssing regret at the death of Americans on board the Lusitania, considerable ground is given to the opinion that the German government is now bent upon checking resentment in this country and avoiding war.

The direct statement was made today from a German source familiar with German policy that Germany does not want war with the United States.

These considerations give basis for the prophecy, also from German sources, that the German government will suggest a compromise settlement to the United States if the text of the American note makes this course possible.

The German Abassador, Count von Bernstorff, when asked for an explanation of the cancellation of the advertisement, said he considered the republication would do no good as the warning has now been brought before all the American people and a third insertion would only cause comment without accomplishing anything.

"I naturally desire to avoid unnecessary comment at this time," said the Ambassador.

[illegible] newspapers.—

"[illegible] Imperial German Embassy advertisement ordered to [illegible] again next Saturday, May 15."

MILAN THE CENTER OF WAR MANIFESTATIONS

Geneva, via Paris, Thursday.—The correspondent at Rome of the Journal de Geneve says he is able to affirm that Italy's intervention in the war has been absolutely decided on.

"The government," the correspondent adds, "soon will take steps which will leave no doubt about Italy's intentions, and when the Cabinet appears before Parliament on May 20 that body will ratify an accomplished fact."

There is not even the shadow of a change in the situation. The government persists in following the line of conduct which it has traced for itself. Where that line leads is shown by the frantic efforts of Prince von Bulow and company to upset the Ministry.

Demonstrations against Austria and Germany are taking place daily throughout Italy every night.

Milan is the scene of an enthusiastic manifestation for war. Until early this morning the streets were seething, the entire population being out of doors either in procession of demonstrators or frantically applauding it, echoing "Lusitania!" mingled with cheers for France, England and Belgium.

A procession last night was addressed before the Corriere office by the Deputy, Signor Gasparotto, and before the Secolo office by the histrian, Signor Guglielmo Ferro, and Signor Riccardo Luzzatto, one of the survivors of the Garibaldian epic.

"BUY IN FULTON!" SAID THE MOTHER

It remained for a mother of a Fulton school-girl to point out to the teacher of her daughter's class yesterday that the slogan "Buy in Fulton" meant something. The little schoolgirl came home yesterday afternoon and said, "Mother, we must all [illegible] one of the boys up at the school as they want to get some baseball uniforms."

The mother very promptly said, "You go back and tell your teacher that we are not taking Larkin orders at present or any other orders which will take money away from the merchants of this city. If the boys want baseball suits, tell the teacher to send one around here and I will give him a little work to do, and will pay him for it and he can buy his suit without any Larkin orders." The actions of the teacher, when the child [illegible] the mother's remarks, have not been learned.

DISTRICT WOMEN GATHER HERE

Annual Meeting of W. H. and F. M. Societies of M. E. Churches Being Held

The annual meeting of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies of the Methodist churches of Ontario district, opened at 10:30 o'clock this morning at State Street church. Mrs. C. T. Townsend of Mexico, president of the association, presided. A large delegation was present and the session began with the singing of "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." Mrs. H. D. Holmes led in the devotional exercises.

The business session began with the report of the district officers. The literature committee reported concerning the new study book, "The King's Highway." The Mite Box

(Continued on Eighth Page)

INDEPENDENTS WILL PLAY BEEVILLE

It was announced late today that the Fulton Independents will journey to Baldwinsville Saturday and meet the Beeville nine. Tom McCullum, of the Independents arranged the game and about twelve men from this city will make the trip. No captain or manager has been elected thus far, but leaders will probably be chosen after the game. The lineup will be announced tomorrow.

MISS PADDOCK WILL BECOME MRS. ASH

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Lester Paddock have issued cards today announcing [illegible]

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 46

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 13, 1915

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

Opinions

Ice Cream

What, pray, is ice cream? Dietary detectives have said that it may be a combination of moistened milk powder and furniture glue, frozen and flavored, or that it may consist largely of fats worked through a homogenizer into a semblance of cream; of old cream rejuvenated or of any of a number of horrendous mixtures disguised with strong flavoring extracts and subjected to the impartial treatment of Jack Frost. The uninitiated public, from the hardened criminal to the innocent babe, knows it simply as a malleable substance of low temperature which tickles the palate so outrageously that one forgives it the cramps which follow its injudicious consumption.

There is a movement on foot to grade ice cream officially in this city and nation as milk is graded. But, obviously, if all the things said to be done in the name of ice cream are true one might as well try to measure art with a yardstick; unless of course, these products of the poisoner's art are to be prohibited or labelled "ice cream, second class," or "frozen mucilage, ice cream type," or "assorted fats, frappes." And then what is to become of the cone trade, from which, it must be, Coney Island derives its name? For whatever may be said of the rose and its odor, ice cream by any other name, and particularly its real name, does not taste as sweet.

What, indeed, is ice cream if it is not a great big problem at the foundation of one of our cherished institutions?—N. Y. Tribune.

Elbert Hubbard

Elbert Hubbard was not a perfect man, the only one of which we have heard having lived some 1,900 years ago. But as men of ability and achievement go, he may have been a little worse than the average. His morals were not of the model sort, neither as expressed in his daily life, nor in his writings. He was recently barred from testifying in the United States Court of this district as to the value of a mailing list, because he had been convicted of sending obscene matter through the mails. He had also some difficulties in the divorce court. And what was thrown at him in the orthodox publishing world was the fact that he had published an essay of Emerson's and inserted some lines of his own, passing the whole off as that of Emerson's.

In spite of all his faults, Hubbard did some good work. He provoked thought, which is more than many writers and speakers can do. He had originality of expression, which helped wonderfully to circulate his ideas. Some of these ideas were worth circulating. He called attention to beautiful and good literature and he established a plant in East Aurora where he treated his employes in a manner that lent weight to what he had to say in his "Letter to Garcia." His preachings on loyalty to industry were not for profit.

Fra Elbertus applied his own thoughts to various institutions and the different point of view was at least refreshing, though it may have brought firmer conviction in the worth of the institutions he attacked. —Utica Press.

RICHARDSON THEATRE
—OSWEGO—
Friday, May 14, 1915
The Biggest and Most Important Musical Comedy of the year
McINTYRE and HEATH
in the Big Joyous Musical Furore
"THE HAM TREE"
Company of 80 Artists
The World's Best Dancing Chorus
PRICES—50c to $2.00
SEATS NOW ON SALE AT
Quirk Theatre Box Office

OUR SAVINGS BANKS

One of the wise men of the world said that while he admired two of the great inventors—Fulton and Edison, he was sure that the greatest of all inventors was the man who invented interest.

Great are the three things—Saving, compound interest, conservative investment, but the greatest of them is believed to be saving. Thousands of men can make money, but the knack or art of keeping it is unknown to them.

Money grows, not on trees, but by working. It is the most efficient worker in the world, for it never rests. Day and night it is at its task, earning interest, bringing in income. But it must be invested before it can work, and it is not invested if it is squandered.

It is not a pleasant thought that few people really know the value of money. We know it will buy peanuts, popcorn, clothes, theatre tickets, candy and furniture—and food, but money as a worker is the money that only a few persons know anything about.

We can work for our pennies or have our pennies work for us. The more of the pennies that we work for that we put to working for us the better off we will be. Modest savings soon become something upon which we may lean. How easy it is for us to throw away today what would be comfort in future days. And yet we do not need to become miserly. There is always a happy medium.

Right here the people of Fulton are fortunate, in that they are provided with financial institutions—two sound National banks and one savings bank—all three of them wisely and conservatively managed, and whose officers and directors are men of high character and experience in financial matters. High rates of interest are paid on savings accounts in the Fulton banks, and it is the interest paid by the banks that works for the workers of this city.

Foolish persons are known by the rapidity with which they separate themselves from their money. Why not learn to be a saver in a savings department of one or more of this city's financial institutions and avoid becoming a loafer.

LIMITING CONVENTION ACTIVITIES

President Root's policy, backed up by a vote of the delegates, that no proposals may be introduced into the Constitutional Convention by individual members after June 11 is eminently wise and proper. It is by no means to be construed as interfering with the proper exercise of any delegates' powers.

If within the month that remains before the taking effect of that policy he cannot rid himself of all the burning thoughts on governmental reform which fill his throbbing mind, he doubtless would be able, for one sufficiently important, to obtain unanimous consent for its introduction or the sanction of a committee.

It is highly desirable that this convention get to its work and get it accomplished promptly. That Mr. Root's endeavoring to make possible by this limitation of the period for introducing proposed amendments to the constitution. Without such limitation there would be a reproduction of the overloaded calendars, the frantic scramble and the ill-digested product of recent legislative sessions.

It is bad enough to have statutes built on a hit-or-miss scheme; the new constitution certainly should not be constructed that way. No project worthy of discussion is likely to be kept out of debate by this policy, but the calendars may be kept free of ill-considered measures or notoriety seekers' proposals. —New York Tribune.

Always Breaking Out

Interviewing himself for world-wide publication in regard to the sinking of the Lusitania, Colonel Roosevelt declares: "I called attention of our people," "I said that not only our duty," "I called attention to the fact," "I can do little more," etc., along his accustomed way of making himself the only guide and mentor of the nation, as though the country waited for his words. And then, when he has shaped himself squarely around in the glare of the spotlight, he insists that "action be taken by us without an hour's unnecessary delay."

We suppose, however, it is not fair to criticise the Colonel, who is like a bottle of sour beer that will foam and run over every time it is disturbed. He can't help breaking out, no matter what the consequences. Muzzle him and refuse him the privilege of his dearest ambition—publicity—and he would burst into fragments.—Utica Observer.

DAKOTA-COW. GIRL

(Communicated)

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Henderson of the great west are the guests of their father, Orin Henderson of Rochester st. The wild west has become great by smart, enterprising men of the east going west. Mr. Henerson was compelled to be a resident of the west at thirteen years of age on account of the asthma. At present New York State climate seems to agree with him.

He has been a newspaper man nearly all his life in Chicago and Minneapolis. In the meantime having spent several years in Alaska, being clerk of the U. S. District Court. I understand that he has been offered a position as U. S. Marshal to return to Alaska. Mrs. E. A. Henderson, his wife, has been a successful teacher, rancher, homesteader and cow girl. There were two boys and two girls left of her family as orphans and had to get out and rustle western style for themselves. The oldest brother bought three thousand acres of railroad land and Mrs. Henderson preempted two homestead claims next to her brother's land of one hundred and sixty acres each. She had to "rough it" for a few years and teach school in remote districts, enduring many hardships with slim accommodations, to earn money to prove and settle up her claims. She has recently sold one of the one hundred and sixty acre claims for forty dollars per acre. She can ride a broncho and throw the lasso. She finally threw one so skilfully as to capture Mr. Henderson.

By, S. D. Gardner.

IMPORT FIGURES FOR 2 MONTHS

In Times' Weekly Capital Letter Readers Are Told of Then and Now

Washington, May 12 (Special Correspondence).—The following comparative table of import statistics for January, 1915, under a Republican tariff, and January, 1914, under a Democratic tariff, shows why thousands of American workmen lost their jobs or went on half time when the markets of the United States were thrown open to the producers of Europe and Asia:

Products Imported	Jan. 1913	Jan. 1914
Aluminum, Mfrs.	$66,925	$113,220
Aluminium Scrap	576,074	208,576
Automobile parts	37,668	42,192
Breadstuffs	1,483,343	5,144,399
Clocks and parts	62,495	53,422
Cotton Cloths ...	958,097	1,682,785
Cutlery	143,561	201,854
Eggs	none	236,662
Enameled ware	80,392	60,800
Fish	1,233,800	1,518,635
Fruits and Nuts	2,562,175	2,924,166
Films & Plates..	160,006	281,752
Glass, less plate	485,605	598,048
Gloves, leather..	620,226	704,338
Handks, linen...	72,869	118,360
Knit Goods.....	31,810	282,998
Lace & Lace Atc	2,304,875	2,268,911
Leather, tnd sks	778,681	1,542,056
Meat & Dairy pd	1,104,552	3,189,085
Oilclot, Linoleum	146,359	210,309
Paper, mfrs. of ..	1,759,711	2,337,676
Perfumery, etc..	113,880	129,385
Plate Glass	31,810	84,584
Seeds	2,084,481	2,119,972
Shingles	67,097	99,845
Silk, artificial ...	359,785	323,014
Silks, mfrs. of....	2,466,623	3,406,160
Stockings	209,010	261,385
Tin Plate.......	31,458	245,619
Vegetables	1,066,005	1,577,764
Patches, parts...	192,853	227,223
Wood pulp........	1,269,774	1,418,792
Wool, Class 1-2-3	3,545,669	5,442,418
Wool, mfrs. of....	1,468,228	4,668,349
Yarns, linen....	69,911	96,753
	$27,705,331	$45,972,194

Probably every state in the Union is a producer of one or more of the commodities enumerated above and was injured by substitution of foreign goods for the article "made in America."

* * *

Three years ago, when Wilson was Governor of New Jersey, he made a trip to the Pacific Coast and told people what he was going to do. This year he will make another trip over the same road and will probably tell people why he didn't do it.

* * *

A Philadelphia newspaper has been gathering the views of business men on current industrial conditions. They all report great improvement "in sentiment" and a slight improvement in business. The advance effect of next year's Republican victory is thus early beginning to develop.

* * *

At the present rate of decline of the balance in the treasury, it won't be long till a silver dollar will look as big as a cart wheel to Brother McAdoo. And there are some millions of jobless men to whom a dime will look like a dinner.

* * *

Evidently in Brer Bryan's lexicography "Desiring" and "Deserving" are synonymous.

* * *

Over 150,000,000 horses have been purchased in America for shipment to the warring nations of Europe. At a fair estimate the average price was not less than $150, which would make a total of more than $22,000,000 paid for horses alone. This accounts for a part of the balance of trade in favor of the United States, credit for which the Democrats have made a vain attempt to assume.

Wake Up and Paint Up

Don't overlook the fact that it is as important to paint up as it is to clean up while the renovating war is on hereabouts.

Paint is not only a cleanser and a beautifier, but it is a disinfectant as well. Also it preserves the life of buildings, fences, wagons, etc. Many a barn is leaky because Farmer John would not spend a few dollars and a few hours on the simple job of giving it the needed coats of paint from year to year.

Many a community has attracted new residents, new business and new reputation by having a bright, prosperous appearance. Well painted buildings and fences, cleanly kept streets and sidewalks and neatly trimmed grass plots do more to give the impression of prosperity than any other things we can suggest.

GET A-MOVE ON, FOLKS.

And where you consider the use of paint to be a useless expenditure use whitewash. It is cheap and clean and not unpleasing to the eye. Cleanliness never is annoying.

A SHREWD WOMAN

By EUNICE BLAKE

Martin Kempfer was a mountaineer in the Swiss Alps. He owned a number of goats and made cheese of their milk. One day when Martin was climbing up to a considerable height he came to a man lying on his back in a dying condition, for he had slipped and fallen over a cliff. Martin stanched the blood flowing from the wound and otherwise cared for the sufferer until he died. Then he went down to the valley to report the matter.

Martin's wife, Gretchen, was a very shrewd woman, and before doing anything of importance he was used to consulting her. So he went home and told her of his experience and that he was about to report it that the body he had left on the mountain side might be buried.

"Don't you say anything about it," said Gretchen. "You might be accused of having committed a murder."

Martin had thought of that himself, and this was one reason why he had mentioned the matter to his wife. He concluded to keep his mouth shut. But there were two things he did not think of. In succoring the stranger he had got some blood on his sleeve, and when descending the mountain he had met Jacob Kirshner going up. Kirshner found the body and in telling of his find mentioned having met Kempfer coming down the mountain. This excited some suspicion that Kempfer had been the cause of the stranger's death, and a man was sent to his house to investigate. Kempfer received him, and the visitor noticed a spot on his shirt sleeve that looked like blood.

To make a long story short, Kempfer's not having reported the stranger's death led to his undoing. He was tried for murder and convicted, to be sentenced on a Friday at the hour of 12 noon.

Gretchen, his wife, was horror stricken at the result of the advice she had given her husband, who attempted to comfort her by saying that if he had reported the matter he might still have been convicted. The misfortune was in finding the stranger. Gretchen, who, as has been said, was a woman of great shrewdness, set her wits to work to think of some plan whereby she might save her husband.

She went to Adolph Switzer, the head man of the canton, and besought him to save her husband, assuring him that it was her fault that he had been convicted and it was she, if any one, that should be punished. Switzer replied that the verdict was a matter for the courts, over which he had no power, and Gretchen went away disconsolate.

One morning some time before the hanging Gretchen, being still asleep, dreamed of a plan by which she might save her husband. When she awoke, though, she did not consider it likely to succeed; still she believed it possible. At any rate she determined to try it.

Her husband had, among other things, a chronometer which had been given him by a watchmaker in Geneva and which he valued very highly. He secured the time once a month regularly and found that his watch never varied more than a few seconds. The result was that Martin furnished time for the whole valley. The day before the hanging the sheriff asked a citizen to go to Gretchen and get the time, that he might be sure to execute his prisoner in exact accordance with the sentence. Gretchen gave the inquirer time fifteen minutes behind what was correct, stating that she had learned that owing to bad weather the astronomer in Geneva who observed the sun had been unable to do so for several weeks and had discovered a considerable error in his chronometers. The sheriff set his watch in accordance with the time given him.

On the morning of the hanging Gretchen went to the head man of the canton and asked him for an order for the body of her husband that she might give it burial. Switzer replied that he would give her the order after the execution had taken place and not before. Half an hour before 12 she went to his house with her chronometer, which she set ahead fifteen minutes, and when the hands pointed to 12 Switzer signed the order. Gretchen had a horse and a cart in waiting a short distance from the house, and, jumping into the cart, she whipped the horse to a gallop, traversing a mile to the jail. On the way she turned the hands of her chronometer backward to correspond with the time she had given the sheriff. When she reached him his and her timepieces both marked ten minutes to 12. She held the head man's order aloft, crying:

"A reprieve, a reprieve!"

The sheriff read the order and, thinking that the condemned man had been pardoned, turned him over to his wife. Then the two jumped into the cart and drove like mad to a railway station a few miles distant, where they caught a train bound for the French border.

The misunderstanding that Gretchen had brought about between the head man of the canton and the sheriff was not discovered till an hour after that fixed for the execution and when the convicted man was well on his way to foreign territory. As soon as the truth was known a conference was held by the authorities, but nothing was ever done about the matter, for when they learned that Kempfer was in a foreign land they did not try to get him, and in time his wife convinced them that he was an innocent man. Then he returned to his home.

Theatrical Sarcasm.

The actor was pleased with himself.

"I feel," said he, "as if the mantle of Booth had fallen upon me."

His rival in the profession smiled a sardonic smile.

"I should think you would," said he, "for if it didn't break your back falling from that height, it would be a wonder."—Browning Magazine.

GOOD IDEAS FOR CLEANUP CAMPAIGN.

Various localities where cleanup and paintup crusades are waged appoint special committees of women and girls to aid in the work.

Also many schools organize their pupils into bands of dirt annihilators. The young folks are found to be especially effective in this sort of activity. Most of them like to feel that they have become old enough and big enough to assist the grownups in doing the grownups' work.

LOCAL :: SPORTING NEWS :: GENERAL

The management of the Rochester Federal league team is trying to kid the public of Rochester and the fans of Buffalo, Newark and Baltimore into thinking that the Federal league is not a major league. Charles Chapin of the Rochester club came out with a long statement yesterday, in which he pointed out several reasons why the Federal league was not a major organization. The sporting department of the Rochester daily has asked Chapin to explain the lack of patronage at the games of the Newark and Buffalo Internationals. Chapin tried hard to, but his explanation doesn't satisfy.

* * *

The Feds are on deck to stay and they deserve to win. The new league was allotted a period of life varying from two months to ten days by magnates of the major leagues who have been boasting baseball ever since the game has been in the public favor, but the Federals are still going along nicely and will continue to operate. Chapin stated that the Federal league team in Buffalo did not outdraw the International team last year. The attendance figures prove that Chapin's statement is all wrong, Clarence, all wrong. The real reason for Charlie's grouch is identical with that of several other International league magnates who see "everythin' going out and nothin' comin' in." Rochester did not come up to the standard set by the Feds and it peeves Charlie to think that Buffalo and Newark have been regarded as live towns while Rochester has been allowed time to grow. Harsh words from Charlie will never hurt the Feds.

* * *

Pat Powers of the Newark Feds is handing out some real inducements to the fans of that city. In spite of the fact that the Federal league grounds are some distance from the centre of the city, out in Harrison, the new leaguers have the Internationals beaten to a frazzle by the gate-receipt route. And Pat has inaugurated a system of celebration days that makes Charley Ebbets, the former holder of the celebration day belt, look like a piker. Charley used to have a special day about three times as often as Harry Lauder offers to buy a drink, viz. about once every fortnight. But Pat has set new records,—A Stovall Day, Tinker Day, Opening Day and several others up his capacious sleeve.

* * *

Hugh Fullerton opines that baseball is on the eve of a revolution. In an recent article from the pen of the noted baseball writer, drastic actions in the big leagues this season has been forecasted. Fullerton states that two new leagues will hold the place of the three big leagues after this season and the Federal and National league teams will incorporate into a new ten-club league with teams in New York, St. Louis, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Baltimore, Brooklyn and Philadelphia. The fate of the American league is not explained in detail but it is probable that ten clubs will also comprise that organization. Whether Fullerton's statement has any solid foundation is uncertain but the dean of baseball writers generally gets straight dope.

* * *

Fulton High school's next game will be played Friday with Solvay. Coach Stauring has been working with the boys as much as possible this week and has hopes that the team will show a complete reversal of form in Friday's game. The team seems to be able to get started early and manages to keep in front until the last few chapters but in most of the games dropped by the locals this season the blow-up occurs just when every fan thinks the victory is clinched.

* * *

O'Brien's arm has been steadily improving and he hopes to be able to stay the full game with Solvay. Keeler has been practising hard this week and seems to have recovered from his slump of the last few games. Several new faces will be seen in the Fulton lineup Friday. Reynolds failed to show enough class in right field and he has been supplanted by Thompson. Krause has been playing first base in practise this week and he may give "Specs" Caffrey a hard run for the position. "Specs" made two miscues in the last game, one of which was excusable, but they came at critical times. All the players have been ordered to report in uniform for practise and this rule will be strictly enforced by Captain Bray in the future.

* * *

Much interest has been evinced by local baseball fans in the matter of the proposed four-town league in this section of the state. Many local followers of the game think that such a league would be well supported here provided grounds centrally located could be secured, and some good baseball material rounded up. There is no dearth of material here, but the question of the grounds is an important one. It is doubtful if new grounds could be laid out any nearer the city than Athletic Park except at a great expense and with business conditions as they are at present, anything that costs money will be tabooed. The fact that many are out of employment will doubtless work for large attendances at the games this year, however, as the admission fee is not large and a good game of ball will attract the busy man as well as the idle. A meeting of several representative baseball fans of the city will be called in the near future and the league question will be given a thorough examination.

* * *

A good baseball team is recognized as one of the best advertisements any town can have and if the call comes for the support of the local merchants in the matter of the new league, it is probable that many of them will respond without great urging. It is also planned to enlist the support of the Chamber of Commerce in the movement.

LELAND STANFORD CREW TO COME THIS WAY

All indications are that Easterners will be given another chance to see how Pacific coast collegians swing their oars at the Poughkeepsie regatta in June. Stanford University is about to take the plunge and send its eight-oared crew to compete on the Hudson. This means that a crew which has overcome enormous handicaps and worked its way to the top of the heap on the Western coast will make a bid for the highest rowing honors of the country.

It may sound like fiction, but the champions of the Pacific coast have to ride miles on a train and then walk nearly a mile to get to their practice waters. Insofar as the location of their university is concerned, that Stanford oarsmen are real "land-lubbers," but transport them a few miles, make a splash like a mill pond and they are there like ducks. The Cardinal crew simply rowed the husky Washington University eight off its feet in the recent races of Oakland when they copped the championship. Not only did the varsity crew push their shell over in front of the Washington and California boats, but the freshmen came through with a similar performance and gave Stanford a cleansweep.

CONSERVATION COMMITTEE MEETING NEXT TUESDAY

Albany, May 12.—The Conservation Committee of the Constitutional Convention will hold its first public hearing upon proposed amendments relating to the forests, fish, game, waters and other natural resources of the State, in the Senate Chamber of the Capitol at Albany on Tuesday, May 18, at two p. m.

The members of the Committee are Charles M. Dow of Jamestown, Chairman; Edward M. Angell of Glenns Falls, H. LeRoy Austin of Catskill, George A. Blauvelt of Mansey, George Clinton, Sr., of Buffalo, W. Bartow Dunlap of Amsterdam, Olin H. Landreth of Schenectady, Ferris J. Meigs of Tupper Lake, Rush Rhees of Rochester, Edward M. Smith of Watertown, James S. Whipple of Salamanca, and Arthur J. Baldwin, William P. Bannister, Timothy A. Leary, Louis Marshal, Morgan J. O'Brien and John G. Saxe, of New York.

NOTED TENNIS EXPERT KILLED IN TURKEY

Anthony F. Wilding, of New Zealand, former lawn tennis champion of Great Britain, and who several times has been a member of the Australasian team in the Davis Cup matches, has been killed in the fighting in the Dardanelles. Mr. Wilding was a second lieutenant in England's Royal Marines.

We are Agents for
CHASE & SANBORN'S
Fine Teas and Coffees
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Boston.
Cincinnati at New York.
Chicago at Brooklyn.
Pittsburgh at Philadelphia.

Results Yesterday

Brooklyn, 11; Chicago, 5.
New York, 6; Cincinnati, 5.
Boston, 6; St. Louis, 2.
Philadelphia-Pittsburgh (rain.)

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	14	7	.667
Chicago	14	9	.609
Boston	13	9	.591
Cincinnati	11	11	.500
Pittsburgh	11	13	.458
Brooklyn	10	13	.435
St. Louis	11	15	.423
New York	7	14	.333

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Detroit.
Philadelphia at St. Louis.
New York at Cleveland.
Washington at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 4; Washington, 1.
New York, 4; Ceveland, 2.
Boston, 4; Detroit, 1.
St. Louis, 3; Philadelphia, 0.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Detroit	18	8	.692
New York	13	8	.619
Chicago	15	10	.600
Boston	10	9	.526
Cleveland	11	13	.458
Washington	10	12	.455
Philadelphia	8	14	.280

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

St. Louis at Baltimore.
Kansas City at Newark.
Chicago at Brooklyn.
Pittsburgh at Buffalo.

Results Yesterday

Pittsburgh, 3; Buffalo, 2.
Baltimore-St. Louis (rain.)
Newark-Kansas Vity (rain.)
Broklyn-Chicago (rain.)

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	17	8	.680
Newark	14	11	.560
Chicago	14	11	.560
Kansas City	13	11	.542
Broklyn	12	12	.500
St. Louis	10	13	.435
Baltimore	11	15	.423
Buffalo	8	18	.308

STATE LEAGUE

Games Today

Trcy at Syracuse.
Albany at Utica.
Binghamton at Scranton.
Elmira at Wilkesbarre.

Our third Birthday Party, Saturday, May 15th. Roberts & Wood. adv126

Results Yesterday

Syracuse, 2; Troy, 1.
Utica, 2; Albany, 1.
Binfhamton, 8; Scranton, 7.
Wilkesbarre, 5; Elmira, 4.

Teams Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Troy	4	2	.667
Albany	4	2	.667
Binghamton	4	2	.667
Elmira	4	3	.571
Wilkesbarre	4	3	.571
Utica	3	3	.500
Syracuse	1	5	.167
Scranton	1	5	.167

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Montreal at Providence.
Rochester at Richmond.

Results Yesterday

Providence, 4; Montreal, 1.
Jersey City-Buffao (rain).
Newark-Toronto (rain).
Richmond-Rochester (rain).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	10	2	.833
Montreal	8	5	.615
Richmond	6	5	.545
Jersey City	5	5	.500
Rochestre	5	5	.500
Buffalo	3	5	.375
Newark	3	6	.333
Toronto	2	9	.182

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

At Milwaukee	R.	H.	E.
Indianapolis	7	15	1
Milwaukee	6	7	1

Batteries—Burk, Schardt and Cossett; Slapnika and Hughes.

At Kansas City	R.	H.	E.
Louisville	1	11	1
Kansas City	3	7	1

Batteries—Taylor, Ellis and Clemons; Delhi and Alexander.

At Minneapolis	R.	H.	E.
Columbus	1	5	3
Minneapolis	11	12	0

Batteries — Scheneberg and Coleman; Williams and Wilson.

At St. Paul—	R.	H.	E.
Cleveland	7	8	2
St. Paul	3	9	1

Batteries — James and Devoght; Karger and Johnson.

CENTRAL LEAGUE

Erie, 6; Terre Haute, 4.
Youngstown, 15; Evansville, 8.
Fort-Wayne, 7; Dayton, 2.
Wheeling-Grand Rapids, rain.

COLLEGE BASEBALL

At New Haven—Dartmouth, 5; Yale, 4.

At Andover, Mass.—Phillips Andover, 10; Harvard, second team, 1.

At Cambridge, Mass.—Harvard, 6; Pennsylvania, 5.

At Lewiston, Me.—Maine, 4; Bates, 3.

At Providence—Brown, 1b; Vermont, 4.

At Brunswick, Me.—Colby, 12; Bowdoin, 7.

At West Point—Army, 5; Holy Cross, 2.

At Middlebury—Middlebury, 8; St. Anselms Institute, 2.

At Princeton—Princeton, 10; Williams, 3.

At Easton—Lafayette, 14; West Virginia Wesleyan, 4.

At South Bethlehem—Lehigh, 8; Dickinson, 2.

SCHANG IS LEADING NATIONAL SWATTERS

Bobby Schang has been hitting the ball hard and often since the season's opening. Schang heads the National League batsmen in the list published yesterday. If Bob hits better than .250 he will be an extremely valuable man on the attack. The little backstop has what is the crying need on the Pittsburgh club—speed and the ability to use it properly on the base paths. Schang has thrilled Forbes Field fans on two occasion this year with his dashes for extra bases, making successful plays out of what looked very doubtful. The new Pirate has not the polish of George Gibson, who is one of the most finished receivers in the bnsiness, but he should improve fast as he continues to work. Manager Clarke is fotunate in having a very fomidable catching department.

NEWARK FRANCHISE NOT TO BE SOLD

Even if the Internationa League has to play to empty grandstands, President Edward G. Barrow says the Newark club will finish its season right at Weidenmayer's Park. He characterizes as foolish the talk of the club's transfer to Hartford, Conn., and he is positive, he says, that fans of Newark will some day appreciate what good ball is being played by the Indians.

PLAINFIELD WOMAN LEADS "MET" GOLFERS

Displaying a brand of golf which, although a trifle erratic, bids fair to make her a power on the links this year, Mrs. R. Reeve Stockton, of Painfield, N. J., Country Club—who is well-known here and in Oswego—practically swept the field in the first one-day tournment of the season Tuesday at the Montclair Golf Club.

Mrs. Stockton's card, of 86-2-84, not prizes, but also topped the list in the prizes, but also topped the bist in the bogie competition, her maryin over the "coone" being 1 up. Limited to only one of the two chief trophies, she chose the gross score cup, which left the net for Miss Elsa Pickhardt, of Englewood, with a card of 95-7-88.

Mrs. Stockton's success in the bogie competition was not affected by the ruling regarding the number of prizes won.

BOXER DIED FROM OPPONENTS' BLOW

New Orleans, May 12.—Edward Kern, whose opponent in a boxing bout, Natalis Lafauci, died last night after collapsing in the ring, was released today from custody.

Physicians said Lafauci's death resulted from acute heart dilation, superinduced by pleurisy.

FIGHT OVER BOXING IN GLOVERSVILLE

Headed by the Mayor of Gloversville, N. Y., a delegation of citizens entered a protest Tuesday against the issuance of a boxing license to a club in that town when the State Athletic Commission held its weekly meeting at 41 Park Row, New York City.

The Darling Athletic Club, of Gloversville, has applied for a license, and the protestations came from ministers, church clubs, officials and former officials of the town.

Mayor George W. Schermerhorn said the citizens are opposed to having boxing, on the ground that it tended to degrade and make vicious theg rowing boys.

Another delegation of citizens, headed by a lawyer, also appeared for the club.

In the opposition were two former Mayors, two bank presidents, several aldermen and some Y. M. C. A. members.

Among those who favored boxing were men from surounding towns, who spoke of the excellent condition of boxing in this state at the present time and the need for such a club in Gloversville.

Affidavits were filed by both sides and the commission reserved decision.

CARPENTER IS NOW AN ARMY AVIATOR

London, May 12.—Georges Carpentier, the heavyweight champion of Europe, has proved one of the handy men of the French army. After spending a long spell in the trenches Carpentier took up the exciting role of a dispatch rider.

His next work was as a chauffeur to an officer of the aviation corps, and he now has succumbed to the fascinations of flying himself. Georges recently, obtained his pilot's certificate, and is now attached to the aviation corps.

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Bogue's, 61 First st. adv

At 3 A. M.

Dad—I'm gonna paint the baby with phosphorescent paint.

Ma—Goodness! Why?

Dad—So I can find her in the dark without stubbing my toes.—Philadelphia Ledger.

POLICE MOTOR HAS FINE SPEED RECORD

"The tremendous speed being shown by the Harley-Davidson in the opening speed events this year has been the wonder of the motorcycle and the automobile world," says James Bogue the local Harley-Dafidson dealer of 121 First st. "The fact is made all the more remarkable when it is considered that this unusual speed has been developed with unported machines.

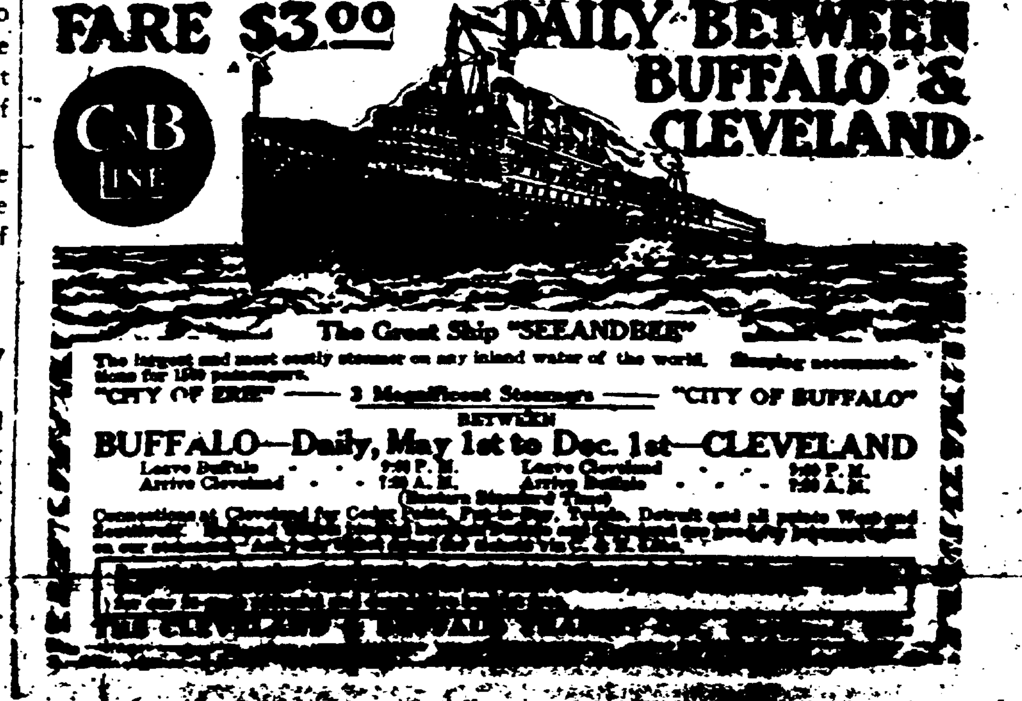
"On April 20, Red Parkhurst, at Okahoma City, covered 150 miles over a rough course, full of treacherous holes and with short turns that resembled plowed fields, in 140 minutes, defeating the cream of riders in the motorcycle world, representing all makes of machines. Joe Wolter, Parkhurst's team mate, brought the Harley-Davidson in for second place and the Harlei- Davidson also finished fourth and fifth at Oklahoma City.

"This unusual cleanup comes as an echo of the victory achieved by the Harley-Davidson at Venice, Cal., in the 300-mile international classic held Easter Sunday over a specially constructed speedway where Otto Walker broke all existing motorcycle records for that distance by covering the triple century in 2:24:17 1-5 with Red Parkhurst only 15 3-5 seconds behind. The two carried away $1,400 for first and second money in the Venice race.

"A few days later at Bakersfield Roy Artley on a Harley-Davidson captured the one-hour feature event, covering 68.7 miles in that time. On May 2, Otto Walker demonstrated his skill at short distance events as well as long grinds by taking first in the 5 and 10 mile stripped stock races at Sacramento, and showed also the consistency of the Harley-Davidson in short sprint work where excessive bursts of speed are necessary as well as in the long distance events where durability is an important factor for sustained high speed.

Woodcraft.

You can make fire by rubbing two pieces of dry wood together, but it is not believed this method will ever supersede the plan of rubbing a match against a piece of sandpaper.—Kansas City Journal.



SEWING MACHINES

all makes at

ONE-HALF REGULAR PRICE

We are closing out our stock of Sewing Machines

Get one of these Big Bargains

BICYCLES - PIANOS - SUNDRIES

BOGUE

61 FIRST STREET PHONE 4249

New Wall Paper

Thousands of rolls of New Wall Paper in

"The Store Downstairs"

Pretty patterns for every room in the house; prices from 5c to 50c per roll.

MacNamara's

30 FIRST STREET

MOOSE CAN NOT HOLD SHOW IN OSWEGO PARK

The Oswego Common Council will probably refuse the Loyal Order of Moose of that city permission to hold an open air street show in Fitzhugh park, Oswego, in June. Commissioner of Public Works Linsley announced yesterday that the parks would not be used while he was in charge for any shows of any kind but that they would be improved and beautified as city play-grounds for the children and resting places for the residents of the city. The Mooose have ocered to pay for any damage done the parks by the show, but it is not likely that the council will allow the lodge to use the park. The lodge has already signed a contract obligating itself to the extent of several hundred dollars, but another site may have to be selected.

MEXICO MAN HURT ON ROAD TO FULTON

William B. Gass of Mexico, well known here, narrowly escaped serious injury Tuesday when his car overturned on the edge of a seven-foot embankment and rolled down the incline pinning him beneath it. Claude Baker, also a resident of Mexico, was in the car at the time and he was thrown clear. Baker immediately called aid and Mr. Gass was rescued from beneath the car. In addition to a badly sprained shoulder he sustained many cuts and bruises and was badly shaken up. The car was wrecked.

The accident occurred on the road to this city near South Mexico and Mr. Gass was on his way to Fulton at the time.

Happy Hour Theatre

TODAY

Big L-Ko Comedy in two reels

"UNDER THE TABLE"

with Hank Mann, Gertrude Selby and Reggie Morris and Four Other, Big Reels

TOMORROW

"THE TROUBADOUR"

a Mexican drama in two parts with Murdock McQuarrie and Agnes Vernon

Four Others.

We show the Universal Feature Program.

Admission 5c

STORES WILL CLOSE EARLY

Merchants Who Close Monday Night Will Close at 10 o'clock Saturday

The Chamber of Commerce announced this morning that all the merchants who signed the agreement to close their stores Monday evenings are required by the same agreement to close at ten o'clock Saturday nights. It is expected that every store in town of any prominence will be closed at that time Saturday and it behooves shoppers and householders of the city to do their shopping early and to endeavor to do as much of it as possible on Saturday evening for the stores will be closed Monday evening. This rule is enforced without any difficulty in other cities, some places even going so far as to close all stores at 6 o'clock every evening including Saturday. On account of the industrial conditions here that is impossible but the present rule is sure to meet with the approval of the store owners, and shoppers to say nothing of the clerks, who have been working 14 hours on Saturdays and Mondays in the past. The clerks in particular are well pleased with the new ruling and the progressive merchants who have decided to close have been thanked personally in many instances.

INN AT MEXICO POINT WILL OPEN MAY 29

The Inn at Mexico Point, which is well patronized during the summer months by Fultonians, will be open May 29, according to an announcement made yesterday by O. E. Hungerford, the owner. It is expected that a large number of people will arrange to spend the week-end at Mexico Point. Special dances will be a feature this year, with music furnished by a large orchestra, and the hotel will be managed jointly by H. A. Dunkle and J. S. Waltz formerly of the Onondaga, Syracuse.

THE QUIRK TODAY

A program complete with the best of features is provided for approbation today. The first of the series, "Who Pays?" in 3 reels should prove a winner. It is to run for 12 weeks. Each three reels furnishes a complete, powerful drama of vital questions, the first of which is "The Price of Fame." Charles Chaplin, in "The Face on the Barroom Floor," and "The Test of Manhood," a William Fox drama in 3 parts completes a program of genuine merit.

SHOE CONTRACTS REACH NEW ENGLAND

Boston, May 12. (Special).—Contracts have been placed with New England shoe manufacturers for 2,000,000 pairs of army shoes for Russia. Further large orders are likely to be received in the immediate future. This is news of the first importance, as the shoe and leather industries at this time are rather dull and slow.

THE QUIRK

Matinees, 5c

Nights; Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.

Sundays—5c, 10c.

CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TODAY

RUTH ROLAND and HENRY KING in "THE PRICE OF FAME" the first of "WHO PAYS?" Series in 3 Reels CHARLES CHAPLIN IN "The Face on the Barroom Floor"

"THE TEST OF MANHOOD" 3-Reel Fox Drama of Virility The Picture Beautiful

SATURDAY—David Belasco's

"THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME"

and

Charles Chaplin in "A NIGHT OUT"

THE 17 "DONT'S" FOR MOTORISTS

Compiled and Issued by Head of Police Department of Fulton

The appearance of the new police motorcycle has led many motorists in the city to believe that wholesale arrests will begin immediately whether there are any flagrant violations of the law or not. The Police Department wishes to contradict this report and it is authoritively stated that no one who complies with the law will be molested.

Motorists, however, are anxious to get an idea of the speed that will comply with the ordinances. Some claim that a 15-mile gait is impossible in some sections. The law that requires a 7-mile speed on corners has also come in for some protest, but as this measure is rigidly enforced in other cities, it can be complied with here.

Chief Dyer has issued a list of "Don'ts" for the motorist who wishes to comply with the law at all times and avoid accident. The list follows:

DON'T!

1—Toot your horn when old people are crossing the street.

2—Fail to be careful of children, as they get confused and run.

3—Try to cut off a team with a heavy load. Remember a horse has feeling, while your machine has none.

4—Try to pass another vehicle at a crossing as he might turn short.

5—Back from a side street into a busy street, always run ahead and turn around.

6—Always look ahead.

7—Stop cars on cross-walks to let passengers off.

8—Try to force your way.

9—Argue with a policeman. If you think an injustice done, report same to chief of police.

10—Fail to signal the traffic officer, direction you wish to go.

11—Run in car tracks on a wet day as it throws mud and water on pedestrians' clothing.

12—Condemn a policeman because he made a mistake. Remember where he makes one mistake, he overlooks a dozen made by others.

13—Talk business on First street in center of the block or near cross-walk as it holds up traffic behind you.

14—Try to beat the street cars.

15—Run ahead of a machine, turn in the rear of the machine.

16—Run over five miles an hour on a wet day as a sudden stop would skid you into something.

17—Violate the ordinance as you may get into trouble.

PAPERMAKER STRIKERS HANDLE MAN ROUGHLY

Carthage, May 13.—The first disorder to take place at Deferiet since the strike in the St. Regis mill was declared Saturday afternoon occurred yesterday afternoon, when a teamster who was attempting to do some work about the mill yard was assaulted and roughly handled.

It is said that when he refused to desist from work he was attacked by several men and quite severely beaten. Officials of the company took the matter up as soon as it was reported to them and at a conference held in Watertown later in the afternoon decided to try to make an example of the case, in the hope of preventing any future occurences.

G. H. P. Gould, president of the St. Regis Paper Company, thinks that the present strike wil be one of long duration. Over the long distance telephone today he stated that he thought the mills would be shut down for a long period, but refused to specify as to what he regarded as a long time.

Mr. Gould refused to say whether he would recognide the union. A rumor was current that he had said he would shut down his St. Regis mills indefinitely before he would recognize the union. He said he had made no such statement.

STRIKING HUNGARIANS THREATENING TROUBLE

Norwood, May 12.—Riots with probable damage to the paper mills of the Remington-Martin group and workmen are feared from today's attitude among the striking Hungarians at Norfolk. There was considerable disturbance last night with the foreigners drinking heavily. Officers of the mills today communicated with the company's headquarters in Watertown asking that deputy sheriffs be sent at once in order to guard against disturbance that threaten.

WHITMAN VETO ON BROWN BILL?

Governor Refused to Sign Salary Bill For Mayor of Batavia

Advices from Albany indicate that the Brown bill which was approved by a five to one vote of the aldermen of the city of Fulton at a special meeting held last Friday night may not become a law if Governor Whitman pursues the same policy that he adopted Tuesday in the matter of a bill amending the charter of the city of Batavia, (which is about the same size as this city), so that the mayor would receive a salary. After signing a bill amending the Batavia charter so that the city may do its own paving without the formality of advertising bids and providing that the unpaid school taxes may be spread on the city tax-roll, the Governor flatly refused to sign the bill providing the mayor with a salary which was fixed by the bill at $600 per year.

The Governor learned that the common council had approved of the salary of $600 and that the people had not had any opportunity to vote on the question and vetoed the bill, saying that the people were to decide such a measure and not the common council. The Brown bill was passed here in exactly the same manner, no election being held an inasmuch as several letters have been sent the Governor making that fact plain, it is highly probable that he will also veto the Brown bill, particularly as not a set salary is named and the Aldermen, as well, can be given salaries by the Brown bill without any possibility of opposition by the taxpayers. The amount of the Aldermen's salaries has not been set by the bill, and under the bill any salary, no matter how large, could be named by the Council and the desires of the taxpayers given no consideration.

An amendment to the charter of Olean (population about 18,000 at present) has been signed by the Governor, under which the Mayor will receive a salary of $1,000 a year. Criticism of this act of the executive, it is reported, has led him to consider all similar measures very carefully before he signs them, and it may be that the Brown bill will be vetoed in spite of the fact that the Common Council here approved it.

WOMAN SCIENTIST MET DEATH ON LUSITANIA

One of the American women lost on the Lusitania was Mrs. R. D. Shymer, of 31 West Forty-seventh street, New York. She was a scientific chemist and recently formed the United States Chemical Company, of which she was president. She sailed on the Lusitania for England to organize the London end of the business, and was about to put on the market a formula which she recently had perfected for bleaching textiles and for germicidal use in hospitals. Mrs. Shymer had been a chemistry student for many years, having studied at Cornell University, and in New York, where she equipped a private laboratory in which she spent much of her time experimenting with her invention.

During a recent visit to England, Mrs. Shymer interested the King's physician in her formula, and was dined by Premier Asquith, Mrs. Asquith and othe notables. This time she was to have been presented to King George and Queen Mary at St James "scientifically, if not socially," as she told her friends.

A survivor identified the body Monday night at Queenstiwn. It will be brought to New York for burial. Mrs. Shymer leaves her mother, Mrs. J. J. Hankins, of 41 West 47th st., and a sister, Miss Mabel H. Justice.

HORNELL AROUSED BY "JACK THE HUGGER"

Hornell, May 12.—Miss Grace Carney, a silk worker in one of the local mills, who lives at 26 Fulton street, was attacked and brutally assaulted by an unknown man in Seneca street between Maple and Genesee streets shortly before 11 o'clock last night.

At the point where the assault took place a dark lane leads into the rear of a wagon works. Miss Carney, who was on her way home from town, was passing this alley when the man stepped out and grabbed her. she screamed and several persons in the nearby houses rushed to her assistance.

By the time the first man arrived the stranger had Miss Carney down in a corner of the lane and was choking her. The man jumped up and ran down the alley and escaped.

NEMO SALE

Friday and Saturday

NEMO CORSETS

$3.50 Corsets for $2.69

$3.00 Corsets for $2.19

$2.00 and $1.50 Corsets for $1.25

FINE EMBROIDERY

15c Edge and Insertion for 10c

PHONE 200

O. HENDERSON & CO.

ONEIDA STREET

CANNING FACTORY MAY HAVE BIG SEASON

A factory owned by the Fort Stanwix Canning Company in Farnham, N. Y., was destroyed by fire Tuesday according to reports received at the local branch. Loss on the building, contents and machinery will amount to $35,000, and it will be impossible to rebuild the plant in time to take care of the canning rush in July and August.

While nothing definite could be learned at the local factory this morning, it is reported that this fact may make it necessary for the company to divide the work of the Farnham plant between the huge plant at Rome and the factory in this city. The Farnham plant is a large one and draws the produce from a very rich farming district. It is situated on the New York Central and it isp robable that much of thec rop will be shipped to this city and to Rome as the company has already contracted for great quantities of produce in that section. The produce isr ipe at the time of picking and would have to be shipped to this city and to Rome by fast freight.

O. Lester Todd, manager of the local factory, could not be reached today as he is in Farnham to assist in the adjusting of the fire losses there. The factory here employs about 200 people in the rush season and if the company decides to give the local plant any of the Farnham produce it will mean a large increase in the force here.

Fulton Keynotes

Mrs. Lay Allen Palmer and son left today for a few weeks' visit at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Curtis, of Hilton, N. Y.

* * *

The following have been named as moving picture censors by Mayor Fox: Irving Gahisha, A. P. Bradt, Prof. Fairgrieve, Mrs. C. S. Robertson, Mrs. L. P. Smith.

* * *

Mrs. David Katz has had as her guest Miss Mabel Thalheimer of Syracuse.

* * *

Mrs. Herbert Lake is ill at her home in South 4th st.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Hyatt of Homer has been in the city for a few days.

* * *

Mrs. Fred Chubb will entertain the 1909 Shakespeare Club this afternoon at her home in West 1st st.

* * *

Dr. N. H. Haviland is in New York visiting his two sons, Ross and Floyd, both hospital physicians in that city.

* * *

Miss Virginia Hillick has been the guest of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Pritchard at Ingals' Crossing.

* * *

Henry Sanford of Niles, Mich., a former resident of Fulton, is visiting friends in this city.

* * *

W. W. Coe of East Broadway is ill at his home.

* * *

Mrs. J. Hoff of Indiana is visiting relatives in this vicinity.

* * *

Mrs. Edward Patterson of Syracuse was in the city Monday to attend the funeral of Monroe Skeel.

* * *

Rev. M. G. Buck of this city will give the address of welcome Friday at the Boys' Conference to be helo in Oswego.

* * *

Mrs. F. E. Goodjon and Mrs. N. H. Haviland attended a banquet at Syracuse in honor of Mrs. Whitman.

Lawn Mower Hospital at Roy's Quick Shoe Repair, 110 Cayuga st. ad

SOLICITOR WAS INTOXICATED

Syracuse Herald Representative Attempted to Hug Servant Girl Yesterday

An incident was reported at this office this morning by a prominent resident of the city, who wishes his name withheld but who is prepared at any time to prove the truth of his assertion, demonstrates very clearly the class of men who have been sent into this city by an out-of-town newspaper in an effort to increase the circulation among the residents here. This newspaper is offering special inducements to beguile Fultonians into subscribing to the paper.

One of these solicitors, employed b ythe Syracuse Herald, made his way very unsteadily to the back door of the house of the resident in question yesterday afternoon. He knocked and the servant girl appeared. He was intoxicated and the girl, noticing his condition did not wish to bandy words with him but after hearing his proposition told him that her employer was not subscribing for any out-of-town papers since a daily had started here, and attempted to close the door. The drunken solicitor grabbed her by the arm and attempted to put his arm about her neck, becoming meanwhile disgustingly affectionate. The girl was too startled for a moment to do anything but finally she broke away and ran into the house. The solicitor pursued the uneven tenor of his way. Fulton householders who desire to prevent a similar occurrence on their own premises are advised to stop and inspect the out-of-town solicitors carefully.

ATTORNEY HILLICK DEFERS APPRAISAL

It is expected that the appraisal of the estate of the late Cadwell C. Benson of Minetto will be made in a short time. Comptroller's Attorney W. S. Hillick has stated that the matter had been deferred owing to the delay in making a final settlement for the purchase of the Minetto Shade Cloth plant by the Minetto-Meriden Company, recently merged in the Columbia Mills, Inc. This matter was recently adjusted.

WATER GLASS

EGG PRESERVER

Qt. or Gal. Sizes at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

BOAT SERVICE

FREIGHT and PASSENGER

Fulton to Syracuse daily except Sunday

Steamer "CITY OF FULTON" Leaves foot of Rochester St. 5:15 a. m. Arrives Syracuse 11 a. m. Return trip leaves Syracuse 2:50 p. m.

FIRST TRIP MAY 17

Freight House on Rochester St. Dock, open from 7 a. m. until 6 p. m.

Freight rates cheaper than by rail.

C. S. BURLEIGH, Captain

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Wanted—By a family of four; no children; a middle aged woman to do general housework; permanent situation; good wages. Address "Enquirer, this office before June 1st. 123c

Clark Irish Harp—Will sell cheap; brand new. Just the thing for a home. Address Z., Evening Times office. tf.

Wanted—By young man; board and room with private Catholic family. Refined surroundings. Address C, Times office. 124c

To Rent—Furnished apartment for housekeeping; 3 rooms; bath and all conveniences; desirable locations. Inquire S, Times office. 125

To Rent—Furnished apartments, also one large front room. Inquire 115 Rochester st. 125

For Sale—Large ice box, suitable for store; also 16-foot row boat at 510 So. 1st st. Phone 148. 128c

Man Wanted—To work on farm by the month. Inquire 612 Fay st., or phone 2206. 124

Furnished Rooms—3, single or en suite. 205 Cayuga st. 129c

To Rent—Rooms for light housekeeping. 512 E. First, South. 126c

To Rent—5 rooms, upper flat. 412 Erie st. 126c

BROOKLYN MAN DEAD, AGED 101

Joseph De Long, who settled in Williamsburg, N. Y., when it had only one street, Grand, and a number of cowpaths, died Tuesday at the home of one of his grandchildren, Mrs. Jesse Stafford, at 62 Devoe st., Brooklyn. He was 101 years old on October 28.

Stricken just thirty-eight days ago, the centenarian had resisted death for thirty-five days on a diet of water. His vitality was amazing, and his physician, Dr. William De Long, his eldest son, admitted that he was puzzled after he had summoned the family several times to say a last farewell. Six children, 27 grandchildren, 26 great-grandchildren and 2 great-great-grandchildren survive him.

The family gatherings have been social events in Brooklyn, where most of the younger branches still live. Each year the venerable head had asked to give his rules of longevity. Always his answer was that he had no rules. He maintained his physical and mental virility to the end.

Mr. De Long as born near Allentown, Penn., the son of a poor shoemaker. He began life as a bricklayer, and at the age of sixteen went out into the world. Bricklaying did not prove profitable, and he got a job in a hat factory at Elizabeth, N. J. Several years later he went to Norwalk, Conn., which was the center of the hat industry.

In 1837, when he was twenty-four, he came to New York, married Mary Sophia Lopes and entered a large exporting and importing concern. In 1845 he moved over the East River into the village of Williamsburg. There he lived for seventy years, with only one sorrow, the death of his wife in 1907 at the age of eighty-eight. He retired from business twenty-five years ago.

CANADA SENDING RAILS INTO THIS COUNTRY

Pittsburgh, May 12 (Special).—Canada has a duty of $7.84 per ton on steel rails. The underwood tariff act put steel rails on the free list. In recent months 60,000 tons of rails have been imported into this country from Canada. In an address delivered here recently, Representative McCall asserted that in the vicinity of the great rolling mills at Gary and South Chicago, which are closed down, they are laying rails that were made in Canada.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, May 13.—Notwithstanding the fact that the delegates to the Constitutional Convention are substantial men and in the majority of instances well equipped with the goods of the world, provisions have been made to prevent them from drawing the full amount of their salaries until after the session has come to an end. One hundred dollars will be withheld from every elegate, although the provision is merely an act of custom.

During legislative sessions it has always been the custom to hold out two hundred of the fifteen hundred dollars, the pay of each member, until the end of the session. The practice has been followed in connection with the convention.

The delegates are paid in much the same fashion as are senators and assemblymen. They can draw once a week, however, while with the legislators the rule is once every two weeks. Every Thursday is pay day and the delegates may sign the voucher book up to Wednesday of each week.

A number of the delegates have not yet applied for a portion of their salaries, yet some have been paid up to date. The rate is at $10 a day, Sundays being included. After fourteen hundred dollars have been drawn, one hundred is held back.

Fred M. Bishop of Oswego, the financial clerk of the convention is in charge of the payroll. He has been instructed by Chairman Elihu Root to keep two separate sets of books; one for mileage disbursements and one for salaries.

Each delegate is entitled to ten cents a mile going and coming from his home, for one round trip during the session. All of the claims for mileage have been paid.

No rubber stamp is used by Chairman Root in approving of the vouchers for salaries. That his name may appear in writing in approving of the paying of salaries, he has caused a detailed list of members of the convention, or to be exact delegates, to be sent to him each week showing how much has been drawn and by whom. This statement he signs after examination.

The financial department of the constitutional Convention is located in the same room which has been used by the financial clerk of the Assembly. It is located on the third floor of the Capitol and at the end of the long corridor running north and south the entire length of the building. A space twenty by twenty feet has been partitioned oe and iep rotected by a wire screen where the affairs of the financial clerk are transacted, much after the fashion of the window of a bank cashier.

An electric fan, a few tables and some chairs, complete the furniture which has been ample in the past and which is not likely to be added to, since Chairman Root has not taken kindly to unnecessary expenses, having refused to have the newspapermen supplied with typewriters for use during the convention.

Although the presiding officer, Senator Root receives the same amount for his services as though he were but an ordinary delegate. The same salary is also provided for the delegates-at-large. Neither the chairman nor the delegates-at-large have any more privileges as regarding salary and the drawing thereof than the delegates.

CLUB WOMEN TO PROTECT YOUNG GIRLS

Watertown, May 12.—The Present Day Club believing that the treatment which many young girls receive when on trial in thisc ity is cruel and unjust, have adopted a resolution which provides for a committee which will attend the trials of girls.

The Present Day Club in doing this hopes to exert a moral influence which will lessen the treatment which girls receive when the usual curious court crowds are present.

It was said at the Present Day Club meeting that the lawyers were vefy careless in the manner in which they addressed girls and often insulted them to obtain evidence. This they believe would necessarily be stopped if there was a body of women present such as thec lub would send. The members of the club were not anxious at first to do this because, to the majority it was distasteful, but after the situation had been explained there were many volunteers to help Mrs. Kellogg in this work.

ROAD WORK HERE MAY BE POSTPONED

Senator Thompson of Niagara county left Lockport for Albany last night in an effort to induce the highway department to do things for the city of Lockport and prevent the service of papers in a mandamus action against the State to force the building of Market Street and Lake avenue roads in that city. The city raised the money for its share of the work in 1912 and has been unable to get the State to do the work.

Alderman Burke threatens to bring a mandamus action through the Lockport Common Council, and had resolutions ready to direct such a move last night at the regular meeting when Senator Thompson agreed to go to Albany and endeavor to get something done by Highway Commissioner Duffey. Unless some action is taken the mandamus resolutions will be passed by the aldermen next Monday night.

If the mandamus proceedings are brought, it is said that it will tie up every bit of highway work in the State of New York until it is settled. The highway department takes the position that there are other roads in Niagara county ahead of Market street and Lake avenue in the order for improvement and that unless the supervisors agree to sidetrack these, the State cannot proceed with the work on the city roads this summer.

If the mandamus proceedings result in any prolonged litigation it will probably be some time before the improvement on 1st st. here will be begun. It was announced yesterday that the city has appropriated the sum necessary to improve the street but the State is to pay a portion of the costs.

COURT REFUSES STAY FOR TWO MURDERERS

Albany, May 12.—Joseph Ferri and Samuel Haynes, a negro, convicted murderers, must die in the electric chair, the Court of Appeals decided today.

Ferri shot and killed Florinto Viovonni, his brother-in-law, at Inwood, Nassau county, following a dispute over money. At the time of the trial Ferri declined to accept a life sentence, but chose rather to take his chances on appeal.

Haynes killed his employer's wife, Anna Patterson, in Patterson, Putnam county. She had repulsed his attentions.

METHODISTS RAISING FUNDS FOR VETERANS

The two Syracuse districts of the Central New York Methodist Conference are raising $50,000 for the fund in aid of veterans Methodist preachers of that conference. Reports from a number of churches show the total amount in hand up to last Sunday to be $19,000. There are many churches that have not yet reported. University church of Syracuse has already raised $2,200 and leads the conference. The $50,000 will be added to $210,000 alreay raise toward the $300,000 required. The remaining $40,000 will be contributed by the other districts of the conference.

MALPRACTICE SUIT AGAINST PHYSICIAN

It was announced yesterday that Carlton P. Clifford of Oswego had, through Attorney John J. Mc Grath, filed a suit for mal-practice against an Oswego physiscian for $10,000 damages. The case is said to have arisen from injuries received by Mr. Clifford on April 30. One physician had been summoned and another happened to be nearby andg ave first aid. Mr. Clifford alleges that the physician who gave first aid removed the bandages when the other physician arrived.

MAYOR OPPOSES BOXING EXHIBITIONS

Headed by the Mayor of Gloversville, N. Y., George W. Schermerhorn a delegation of citizens of that place entered a protest against the issuance of a boxing license, when the Boxing Commission held its weekly meeting yesterday, to the Darling Athletic Club of Gloversville, on the ground that boxing tends to degrade and make vicious the young element. The commission reserved its decision.

TRADE BALANCE LARGE

Washington, May 12.—Secretary Redfield reported to President Wilson at today's Cabinet meeting that the balance of trade in favor of the United States for the week ending May 8 was $20,555,707, as compared with $23,323,204 for the preceding week.

Our third Birthday Party, Saturday, May 15th. Roberts & Wood. adv106

COMMISSION GOVT. BIG IN N. J.

Three Big Towns Vote Favorably for Old and New Officials

Trenton, N. J., May 12.—Returns from yesterday's commission government election in Trenton show that the present five commissioners, Mayor Frederick W. Donnelly, George P. La Barre, William F. Burke, Edward W. Lee and J. Ridgeway Fell, have been re-elected by an overwhelming vote. Only three of the other twenty-odd candidates made any showing.

Although women were unable to vote, suffragists and "antis" were involved in a row over the election. Mrs. E. Yard Breeze, president of the Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, charged her opponents with violating the corrupt practices act by distributing literature and soliciting money and votes within the prohibited zone.

Passaic, N. J.—Results were slow in coming in yesterday. Late figures from eleven of the nineteen districts show that J. H. Kehoe has 1542 votes; Edward J. Levendusky, 581; John H. McGuire, 1095; J. H. Osborn, 824; A. Prieskel, 674; William A. Reid, 1168; George N. Steger, the present mayor, 1168, and Bird W. Spencer, 658.

Steger, Kehoe, Reid and Osborn were considered sure of re-election. The race for the fifth commissionship is close, but McGuire leads.

Ocean City, N.J.—The present commissioners were defeated today for re-election. The voters considered their four years' service had been one of too much extravagance. The new commissioners chosen were Joseph G. Champion, William H. Campbell and George O. Adams.

NOW IS THE TIME

The increasing orders for war material from the belligerent nations of Europe have forced the price of metal, used in chandelier making, up over 16 per cent. since November. As you know, the price of zinc, copper and brass are still advancing.

The rise in prices of Fixtures will take place about July 1st. The above information gives reason why you should have your home wired for Electricity NOW.

Estimates Cheerfully Given

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

103 Oneida St. Phone 144

FISHING TACKLE

REFRIGERATORS
SCREEN DOORS and WINDOWS
PERFECTION OIL STOVES

A. M. DRUSE & CO.

7 S. First Street

TO PARADE

Oswego Suffragists Will March in Syracuse Saturday.

Plans for the Onondaga and Oswego counties' convention of suffrage workers, which will be held Saturday at the Kanatenah Club, Syracuse, are already completed. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, chairman of the Empire State Campaign Committee, will be present at the afternoon session to give instructions for women watchers at the polls on November 2d and to outline the plans for the State Fair. Miss Harriet May Mills, chairman of the Fifth campaign district, in which the two counties are located, will preside.

There are to be two sessions of the convention, one opening at ten o'clock and the afternoon session, which is to open at two. Previous to this the morning session will adjourn and the delegates will march to the station to give a fitting welcome to Mrs. Catt. At the adjournment of the afternoon session there will be an automobile parade about the city.

Large committees of suffrage workers will spend the morning decorating the cars which will be run in the parade. Yellow and white banners and streamers will be carried and many suffrage slogans will appear.

All Kinds of

GARDEN SEEDS

by the ounce or pound at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your Merchants for National Red Stamps and insisting on getting them with everything you buy. If your merchant does not give you National Merchandise Stamps it is absolute proof that he does not appreciate your trade. Merchants who give National Red Stamps want your trade and are sharing their profits with you. Every full book of Red Stamps is worth $2 in cash or $2.50 in merchandise, dry goods, clothing, etc., or can be applied for $2.50 on purchase of larger amount or $2 on account. Full books will be redeemed by any merchant who gives National Red Stamps.

FREE COUPON.

This Coupon good for 20 Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 15.

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP
Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear
106 Oneida St. Phone 3177

H. C. DANN & SON
City Meat Market
High Grade Meats at the right prices.
11 South 2d St. Phone 42

A. ALDERMAN
Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes
214 West First St.

JOHN CRAHAN
GROCERIES
124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

J. BELASKI
GROCERIES AND MEATS
174 West First St.

JAMES J. KENYON
GROCERIES
518 South 1st St. Phone [illegible]

M. H. JOYCE
The New West Side Grocery
518 West Third St. Phone 4260

J. R. WARD
GROCERIES—Open Evenings
314 Seneca St. Phone 4458

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY
DEPARTMENT STORE West Third Street and Broadway

W. G. INGRAHAM
GROCERIES, DRY GOODS, NOTIONS
Corner North Sixth and Seneca Streets Phone 1200

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps and Bargain Prices. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

Merchants wishing to learn more about this Wonderful Business Boosting Plan, call Mr. Beynon, at McDonald's New York Shop, Phone 3177

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

If Results count for anything, The Evening Times has almost reached the much-discussed

"Pschycological Moment"

WHY?

Because of the leaps and bounds made by the circulation department within a fortnight

Circulation Growing Every Minute! Watch It Grow More!

After several months of painful illnesss and a couple bad sinking spells, The Evening Times believes

MR. BUSINESS

of Fulton, N. Y., is back on the job. From the very first The Evening Times knew he would recover.

He has recovered always.

And now is the time to advertise in YOUR PAPER—the local home paper, because YOUR PAPER—the the Peoples's Paper is a home institution. The Evening Times leaves the People's money in YOUR TOWN; Does not take it away never to return.

Make Yours the Livest Ads in the Evening Times

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

EXPERT TALKS ON CLEANUP WORK

Says German Cities Provide Model For Americans.

STREET CLEANING SCIENCE.

No Refuse Should Be Placed on Sidewalk—The Sweeping Process Should Be Started When No Traffic Is on Street—Early Morning Best Time.

By FRANK KOESTER.

The lack of system and want of technical training on the part of many American officials in charge make street cleaning unnecessarily expensive, leave the streets in a bad condition and cause the cleaning to be carried out in a disagreeable, insanitary way.

In foreign cities engineers specialise on this subject. Street cleaning has been reduced to a science, and economy, efficiency and the comfort and convenience of the public are considered.

The purpose of street cleaning is to remove as quickly and as cheaply as possible all foreign matter in the streets and thus to conduce to the health of the public by minimizing the circulation of germ laden dust.

The cleaning of streets should be carried out in a systematic and thorough manner. The cleaners should proceed in crews with the necessary apparatus both to clean the streets and the sidewalks as well, if necessary, and the layout of the work should be such that no member of the crew needs to wait on the progress of the other, but all proceed simultaneously, and when they have passed through the street the work will be done. The method of piecemeal street cleaning, with the householder sweeping dirt into the street, the street cleaner sweeping it into piles and the piles being removed by wagons, with the occasional passing first on one side of the street and then on the other of some piece of street cleaning apparatus, results in a continual stirring up of dust to the great discomfort and inconvenience of all concerned, while the street never really gets cleaned.

The number of men in the cleaning crew depends on the kind of machinery used. As no machine is capable of reaching all parts of the street, a certain amount of manual sweeping is necessary, especially when the sidewalks are cleaned in conjunction with the machine sweeping, so that, as indicated, the whole width of the street will be cleaned at once.

Must Be Clear of Traffic.

In order that such cleaning may proceed with efficiency and dispatch, and consequently with economy, the streets must be practically clear of traffic, as the presence of vehicles, especially those standing at the curb, greatly delays the work of the crew.

As the operation of such a crew also handicaps traffic and as the public prefers to see the streets clean, rather than to see them being cleaned, it is essential to select a suitable hour for cleaning. German cities have conducted numerous tests for finding out the most favorable hour. The city of Dresden adopted the practice of cleaning the main streets in the early morning hours, beginning about 4 o'clock and finishing the business sections by 6 o'clock, some 20 to 30 per cent of the entire street area. The cleaning of the remainder of the streets proceeds immediately after the main streets are finished, and the whole city is cleaned by 9 a. m.

The Early Morning Plan.

The advantages of the system are that the cleaning can be carried out by daylight and is consequently better performed than when carried out under artificial light, that the workmen are more efficient as day workers than as night workers, and that during the early morning hours the traffic is at the minimum.

No refuse may be placed on the sidewalk, but must be kept on the householder's premises in such places as will not cause annoyance to the neighbors. As the street cleaning crews may be expected at a fixed time daily the householders are able to make their arrangements accordingly, and thus the whole proceeding is carried out in the most expeditious and convenient manner.

Most Urgent Duty.

Perhaps the most urgent of the duties of the street cleaners is the removal from the streets of the carcasses of dead animals, not only on account of the unsightliness of such objects, but also because, especially in summer, they are a menace to health. Singularly enough, in many American cities, including those constantly exploiting their civic improvement plans, there is a lack of co-operation between the police, to whose notice such matters naturally first fall, and the street cleaning departments, so that the carcasses remain often for days before being removed.

It would certainly seem a necessary preliminary to street planning to have the streets free of such impediments.

Street cleaning machinery consists principally of three classes—sprinkling, sweeping and removing apparatus.

Earthquakes.

The loss of life occasioned by earthquakes generally depends upon the [illegible]

VALUABLE HINTS ON DISPOSING OF REFUSE.

How Pits With Covers Aid the Cleaners of Streets and Walks.

When streets and sidewalks are cleaned by hand sweeping there should be provided receptacles of appropriate design and suitable capacity for the reception of the street sweepings awaiting removal.

A useful form of such receptacle would be one which could be removed without being emptied, another being left in its place for the next day's sweepings. The same method is equally applicable for small garbage and household refuse.

There are other receptacles for street refuse that may be sunk in pits. They are made of steel with a dumping bottom, and the removal cart is provided with means of lifting them out of the pit to the top of the cart, which is covered with a top having special openings so that the contents of the cans may be dumped into the cart without being scattered by the wind.

After being so dumped the cans are lowered again into place in their pits.

In order to avoid handling such cans pits are located in the sidewalk near the curb, and the street refuse is swept directly into them, small hinged flaps bridging the gutter. The pit is, of course, provided with a cover.

The removal of all town street sweepings and garbage refuse should be done in wagons invariably having covers in order to protect the passing public and the workmen from escaping particles. It is better, however, to have it removed in the original cans, leaving empty cans in place, as this is an absolute protection to all concerned and gets the wagons off the streets sooner.

THE TOWN BEAUTIFUL.

Movement to Distribute Flower Seeds Should Spread.

In Nebraska several public spirited communities have adopted the practice of distributing flower seeds to children in connection with the cleanup and paintup propaganda.

The children are instructed in the planting and care of flowers and also in the simple methods of digging gardens.

The practice is known as "the town beautiful movement." Many a yard after being cleaned up becomes a spot of real beauty when a flower garden decorates it. Even a back yard can be made a pleasure to the eye in this way.

TRY IT, NEIGHBORS!

Transposition.

What in winter you feel,
When the frost's on the ground
Transposed it will reveal
(And it is truth I'll be bound).
A name that to rustics we give,
Who in clownish simplicity live.

Answer—Cold, clod.

CLEAN UP AND KILL THE MOSQUITOES.

"Cleanup time is here, and so is mosquito time. Gird on your swatting armor and go forth. One moment, however, before you go—'the female is more deadly than the male.'

"Among mosquitoes the members of the 'fair' sex are fierce bloodsuckers that inject an irritating poison into our skins, and they may accompany the dose of toxin with a few fever germs. The males lead a comparatively tame existence, subsisting on the juices of plants and fruits." So says a member of the University of Wisconsin biology department.

"The speckle winged anopheles, the malarial mosquito," he continues, "hibernates during the winter in our attics, cellars and closets. The presence of many lakes, swamps and ponds often makes mosquitoes an intolerable pest.

"The female mosquito gorges herself with blood in order that the eggs may have abundant nourishment. She deposits her little egg raft on the surface of quiet water during the night, and it floats there until the larvae hatch. The larvae are the 'wigglers' or 'wiggletails' which are seen in ponds and rainwater barrels the world over. Though mosquito larvae always develop in water, they must breathe air and frequently come to the surface. After a few days the larva sheds its skin and becomes a big headed pupa, which rests at the surface until it splits up the back to allow the adult mosquito to emerge.

"The best way to get rid of mosquitoes is to destroy their breeding places. This not only means draining swamps and filling in ponds, but gathering up tomato cans, putting netting over horse troughs and rainwater barrels and watching the eave troughs. If it is impossible to get rid of standing water near your premises, oil placed on ponds will kill the larvae. Kerosene or any light fuel oil will serve for this purpose. About one ounce of oil will cover ef- [illegible]

DOCTOR SOUNDS ALARM FOR ALL

He Tells How Dust Causes Throat and Lung Trouble.

ONLY STRONG CAN RESIST.

Chaff From Hay Wagons, Dirt Dropping From Contractors' Loads, Etc., a Distinct Menace to Any Community. Prompt Reports to Authorities Necessary.

"In the many small streets in the poorer parts of towns and cities," writes a prominent doctor, "where nuisances occur, a considerable time often elapses before they are reported to the proper authorities. The nuisances continue unabated during this time and may result in infection of some kind. That is not willful negligence. It is simply because it seems to be nobody's business to report those nuisances, which continue until the tenant complains to the real estate agent or it reaches a local department in some other roundabout way.

"Why could not a department of public safety use inspectors and police officers and have them report every occasion if they found that garbage was scattered over the street or was not properly covered, that a main was broken, a drainpipe stopped or that any such nuisance had occurred?

"When excavations are made throughout a city a great deal of the dirt blows about and fills the air with dust. The children of the neighborhood, too, play in the dirt and scatter it about. Why should not the excavated material be covered with a tarpaulin so that the dust would be minimized? Another preventable cause of the dust and dirt comes from the hay wagons which trail their loads through the streets, dropping dust and chaff along the way. Finally, there are the drop bottom carts of the contractors, which carry dirt and refuse from one place to another. Often one sees a trail of earth sifting from the improperly closed trap bottom of these wagons to be scattered and blown about the streets.

"All these and many more things go to make up the dust which especially in the summer makes a haze which the eye can discern. Smoke often causes part of this haze, particularly in damp weather, when it descends in clouds, but dust is largely responsible for it.

"The effect of these dust particles laden with all sorts of disease bearers depends simply on the resistance of the individual who breathes them in with the polluted air. They are responsible for many cases of conjunctivitis and, I think, are an important cause of catarrhal and other head, throat and pulmonary troubles."

CLEANUP POSTCARDS.

An Effective Novelty First Used in a St. Paul Crusade.

Cleanup postcards are a novelty introduced in St. Paul.

No less than 40,000 were mailed to persons a year ago, and this year probably double that number will be utilized. The cards, with appropriate illustrations and text or with text alone, prove very effective in getting volunteer cleaners into action.

The cost of printing them is very low. They can be either mailed or distributed by individual workers.

SPOILING THE WILDWOOD.

The wind blows free, and the hovering mist
Gives way to the sun's bright glow.
The sighing oak by the zephyr kissed
Has a song that is sweet and low.
Afar in the valley the stream extends
Like a ribbon of silver bright,
And the birds that build where the willow bends
Are happy from morn till night.
Along come people who bring their lunch,
And they scarcely regard the scene.
The chipmunk sits and observes them munch
A pickle or a sardine.
Oh, Nature, with all her splendid plans,
Anger must surely feel
As we strew the landscape with old tin cans
And paper and orange peel!

DON'T DO IT ANY MORE!

Rescued by Nature.

"Were you ever lost in the woods?"

"Almost."

"Who rescued you?"

"Nature."

"What do you mean?"

"The wind was blowing so hard that the girl didn't hear me when I proposed."—London Standard.

Smoked Ceilings.

Smoke from a lamp or gas often soils a ceiling in the one particular spot, while the rest remains beautifully white. It is useful to know that soiled ceilings caused by lamp and gas will be rendered less conspicuous if rubbed over with dry whiting.

Just What He Meant.

"Is the rain still keeping up?"

"Why, what d'ye mean? I haven't seen any rain."

"That's what I asked you, if it was still keeping up?"—Exchange.

Cheap.

"Mrs. Gabby just loves to indulge in cheap talk."

"Then let her try a little conversation on the line between New York and [illegible]

Lucy Dove's Wedding Cake

A Fine Creation and Richer Than She Thought

By CLARISSA MACKIE

It was a magnificent cake, a mountain of dark richness masked beneath thick white frosting. About the edge it was ornamented with sugar flowers and Cupids, while it was completed by a delicate, airy ornament in the middle. This was a miniature church in white sugar, before the open doors of which stood a bridal couple, wee manikins, appropriately attired.

Little River never had seen such a cake, and they talked a great deal about it and about Lucy Dove's rich cousin in New York, who had sent it as a wedding gift.

While their neighbors admired the beautiful structure, the Doves, Mrs. Dove and Lucy, were disappointed.

First because Cousin Archibald had actually promised to make Lucy a valuable present on her wedding day—"to build a home," he had said, with twinkling eyes, and who could blame Lucy and David for counting on it?

Besides, Mrs. Dove had whispered the secret to one or two friends, and, lo! it was known all over Little River that Cousin Archibald would give Lucy a handsome present of money on her wedding day.

And all that came was the cake, brought from town by the caterer's special messenger, with a brief note from Archibald, who was sailing that very day for Europe.

"This, my dear Lucy," he wrote, "is my wedding gift to you and David. May you be happy and blessed is my heartiest wish."

"And that is all he sent?" quavered Mrs. Dove.

"Yes," said poor Lucy with quivering lips, for she and David had planned—why, they were going to build the home on a piece of land David's father had given. Now the home must wait awhile until they could save money.

"And we really don't need the cake," she said resentfully.

They really didn't need it, for inside the parlor cupboard was a high bandbox which contained a large wedding cake baked by Mrs. Dove herself after a recipe which had been in the family for many years.

So Cousin Archibald's wedding cake was displayed among the presents, and the guests marveled at it and whispered to one another while they nibbled at the cake made by Lucy's mother.

"I thought he was going to send them money," was the burden of their remarks.

So Lucy and David were married, and instead of building a cozy home they hired a shabby little cottage. But so happy were they that they forgot all about Cousin Archibald and the present which had disappointed them.

It is true that Lucy wrote to her cousin thanking him for the cake, but the letter pursued him around the world, and he didn't receive it until three years afterward just as he sailed for home.

"GWAMMA SAYS COUSIN ARCHIBALD IS COMING TODAY!"

David Wyatt worked in the grocery store. He was head clerk and made good wages. Lucy was industrious and saving, and one fine day she and David rode over to Graytown and drew $800 from the bank. This was to build a home.

"I am so happy, dear," sighed Lucy as they stopped the horse so that they could gaze at the plot of ground on which their home was to be built.

"It's our own money. We earned it ourselves," said David sturdily. "It will be a small house, but it's plenty big enough for folks who love each other."

Lucy blushed, and little Lucy, tucked away on the stool at their feet, chuckled with glee, as she did whenever her father kissed the adorable being she called mother.

The Wyatts built their little house and moved into it and were happy. Little Lucy divided her time between her grandmother's home and the new house.

One day she came pattering in bubbling with news.

"Gwamma says Cousin Archibald is coming today!"

Lucy smiled sympathetically. She had quite forgiven her cousin his broken promise.

"We must put the wedding cake in a place of honor," she told David.

"We better save it for Lucykins' wedding," laughed David.

So when Cousin Archibald came to call at the cottage he saw the untouched wedding cake and smiled a little while he examined it. He was a gray, elderly man, lonely, and fond of travel. Now, he was about to start on another expedition—this time to Alaska.

Before he went he gave little Lucy a five dollar gold piece and that appeared to be the extent of his generosity.

A week later disaster fell upon the little family.

David, the wage earner, fell down the cellar stairs at the store and besides breaking a leg was otherwise seriously injured.

It was a dreadful winter.

The money in the bank dwindled; another man took David's place, for he grew no better. They borrowed money and placed a second mortgage on the house and in the spring they lost the place and had to move away.

Lucy's mother made room for them in her house.

"It's all that dratted wedding cake," complained Mrs. Dove; "I've heard it was bad luck to keep a wedding cake a long"—

"If it will change the luck, mother, I will give it away," said Lucy.

"For land's sake!" cried Mrs. Dove. "Who would you give it to, child?"

Lucy meditated.

"There's Hannah Morey—she's going to be married next week—she'd be glad to have such a handsome cake."

"Do as you like, Lucy," said her mother, "only I'd hate to have it bring bad luck to Hannah and Joe."

"Nonsense!" laughed Lucy.

She lifted down the bandbox and trudged down the dusty road to the Morey house. The Moreys were poor and proud. Hannah received the cake with ruffled pride.

"I couldn't accept a secondhand wedding cake," she said stiffly. "Mine won't be anything like this one, but it will be made just for me!"

"Of course it will!" cried poor Lucy, ashamed of her errand. "It seemed a pity that it should not be used, and of course, it will be years before little Lucy will be ready for it."

"Why don't you eat it, then?" asked Hannah.

"Eat it—why, I never thought of eating wedding cake—like that!" said Lucy as she picked up her bandbox.

"I felt so foolish, mother," she said when she arrived home. "Of course Hannah wants a cake made especially for her, and I suppose Lucykins will want one made especially for her when she grows up."

The wedding cake went back into its box and was locked in the parlor cupboard.

The fortunes of the Wyatts did not improve. David's broken limb knit firmly together, but there was some internal injury that puzzled the village doctor.

"If I could have a specialist from town," he said regretfully, "I am sure the matter could be solved at once. There's some injury to the nerves. Now, Dr. Beudrey, the French specialist, could put his finger on the very spot."

"I suppose it would cost a great deal of money," faltered Lucy.

"A couple of hundred to get him way up here," admitted Dr. Smith.

Lucy shook her head.

"You will have to do the best you can, doctor," she said sadly. "We can't afford it."

Dr. Smith drove away much perturbed. If he could only help Dave Wyatt to regain his health he would gladly forget to send in his bill. But these specialists! He sighed profoundly. Without money one can do so little, and a doctor who forgets to render his bills is not usually very well to do.

David fretted the days away in close confinement of his bedroom off the parlor.

Little Lucy played around his bed, making timid excursions into the little used parlor.

Lucy had a passion for collecting keys.

Her mother said Lucy would be a good housewife. David laughed and predicted that his daughter's hobby meant she would be a burglar some day.

As for Lucy herself, she went on collecting keys from the various doors and enjoyed the baffling pursuit of fitting them to other doors whose locks refused to turn. Oh, the joy of suddenly finding the right key for the right door!

Lucy had tasted this bliss.

One afternoon when her mother and grandmother had gone off to the sewing society Lucy sat beside her father's bed.

His eyes were closed, and there was a grim look of suffering in his young face.

Presently slow tears coursed down his cheeks.

Lucy, awed and frightened, tiptoed into the parlor.

On the marble top table was a brass key, a different key.

Lucy picked it up in her fat fingers and looked around.

It might fit the cupboard door, she thought, and promptly climbed upon a hassock and tried it.

To her delight the lock shot back and the narrow door opened. She brought a chair and climbed upon it.

Now to take down that mysterious bandbox and discover its contents!

Lucy tugged at the strings, and the box tumbled into her arms, almost throwing her to the floor.

Breathlessly she clambered down and was making for the bedroom to share her treasure with her father when the time worn strings broke and the box crashed to the floor.

The cover flew off, and Cousin Archibald's splendid wedding cake, shattered in a hundred crumbly fragments, lay in ruins on the floor.

Fear smitten, Lucy snatched at her one remaining hope.

The cunning little church with the two "dollies" was intact. Carefully she picked it up from the ruins and carried it in to her father.

He had heard the sound and was startled.

"What happened, Lucykins?" he asked, and Lucy answered swiftly:

"This didn't bweak, daddy." She placed the little ornament in his hands.

"IT WAS A CHECK FOR $10,000, MADE OUT TO LUCY AND DAVID WYATT."

Then she broke into wild sobbing, and to soothe her David made up a pretty story about the bridal couple.

"And she holds pretty flowers," smiled Lucykins, "and what is he holding, daddy, a cane?"

David laughed and looked closer.

Securely tucked under the bridegroom's arm was a tiny roll of white paper.

"It's the marriage license, I guess," he laughed, unrolling it. Then his face grew pale as he stared at the long slip of white paper which Cousin Archibald had concealed in the wedding cake.

It was a check for $10,000, made out to Lucy and David Wyatt, and it was dated nearly five years ago!

This was Cousin Archibald's gift. And when he came and found them so happy and independent of his help he had said nothing and gone away again.

"We need it now more than we ever will!" sobbed Lucy Wyatt when she came home.

And little Lucy did not understand until she was quite grown up why it was that she was never punished for ruining the beautiful cake nor why her mother and her grandmother and even daddy cried while they kissed and hugged her for joy.

Romance of a Tree.

In the beautiful gardens of Gray's inn, upon the finest stretch of grass in the heart of London, is what the Americans would call "some" tree—a catalpa—for it was planted in 1598 and is still alive and flourishing and, indeed, puts forth its blossoms every year. The catalpa has a very fine blossom, indeed, in a great bunch, something like a horse chestnut.

The catalpa tree was brought to England by Sir Walter Raleigh and was planted by Sir Francis Bacon, then a resident in Gray's inn, with which his name is so intimately associated. In course of time a shoot was taken from that parent plant, which has produced an even finer tree.

Then a curious thing followed: From the shoot another shoot was cut and taken back to America, and in Philadelphia the grandson of the original tree brought home by Raleigh grows today.—London Spectator.

Theatrical Caste.

"Muster Richardson," christened John, was a successful but illiterate traveling showman of the early nineteenth century in England. His "special train" consisted in a cart and other primitive means of locomotion, including a sturdy pair of legs. It was in the early part of his career that he boasted Edmund Kean as of his company. The old showman was not a little proud of the association and used to give himself credit for having had a part in the great tragedian's professional education. When Macready's name was becoming known in the theatrical world Richardson was asked if he had seen him.

"No, muster," he replied. "I know nothing about him. In fact, he's some vagabone as no one knows—one o' them chaps as ain't had any edication for the thing. He never was with me, as Edmund Kean and them rigiars was."—Detroit Free Press.

Good Form

Etiquette of Games.

The subject of games—that is, games that are played for the purpose of entertaining invited guests or even as a means of relaxation in the home—is one that may readily come under the control of those "laws of social usage" defined in the one word, "etiquette."

One of the most important rules to be followed in any game is really one of the first rules in etiquette, that courtesy to partners as well as opponents is called for under any and all circumstances. Whether a player loses or wins, the same graciousness of demeanor that distinguishes the well bred person is maintained; to have the temper under such perfect control that no wordy arguments are likely to take place is to show that politeness is ingrained, that both birth and breeding have combined to teach the value of self restraint.

In the heat of a game, unless this habit is really part of the personality of the players, argument is very likely to assume a decided turn toward abuse. Right there is where the really courteous man or woman shows the value of good breeding. Even if the fault is glaring in his partner's play the man who is a gentleman in every sense of the word will pass it over with a pleasant manner, whether it is felt within him or not. To show violent temper at a failure of one's own or of one's partner is to appear excessively disagreeable, and perhaps it is still worse to show great triumph over a victory over an opponent.

The latter is in the worst possible taste; it evinces a mean disposition outright and therefore outrages all the tenets of etiquette. Because, no matter how pleased such a happening makes a player, it is always better to put the face on it of having had to do a little more than the possible to overcome such an opponent. In any game, no matter what, it is poor policy to claim an easy victory; better far, if a player wishes to enhance his own success and also claim the praise, even unwillingly given, perhaps of those opposing, is to declare that only by strenuous and the very best work could the victory be won.

Like everything that is called "proper" this has its deeper meaning; no one is humiliated in the least and to that end etiquette teaches the advantages of true politeness and consideration.

What Would You Do?

What will you do when an obliging but awkward young man drops a glass of sorbet on the front panel of your best frock, or a misguided acquaintance comes to an afternoon function in evening dress, or when one of your guests makes scathing remarks about a certain religion of which you know another one of your guests is a strict adherent, or when a friend breaks a highly priced vase or topples over the lighted dinner candles on your most expensive damask?

To be sure, every woman who makes a pretense at good manners knows in theory what to do on these and similarly trying occasions, but if you want to be sure to be able to meet the emergency when it comes sit down right now and make up your mind what you would do to lessen the embarrassment of the offender and to minimize the general disquieting results.

There is a rule of hospitality that demands loyalty on the part of the hostess to any guest. She may regret having extended hospitality to this guest, but so long as the relation of guest and hostess exists the greatest loyalty and courtesy must be preserved. So when one of your guests makes a great blunder swallow your amazement and your pride and make the best of it.

We have heard the story of the tactful Washington hostess whose guest broke a priceless wineglass at dinner. The guest was uncomfortable until a few seconds later the hostess, as if by accident, pushed another one of the set from the table, with merely a passing exclamation of surprise, although her heart must have been playing a tattoo for each one cost a small fortune.

The Fine Art of Hospitality.

No hostess should invite friends to stay at her home unless she thoroughly understands how to make them comfortable. The art of hospitality may be acquired, however, even when the natural aptitude is wanting.

The perfect hostess does not over-entertain her guests. She makes it her duty to study the preferences of those whom she has invited. She does not ask them to drive, walk or play tennis when they prefer, perhaps, to read, write or do other things. Nor does she ask them to arise at unusual hours.

At English country homes the custom of visiting is systematic. Guests are asked for a certain number of days, and they are expected to leave on the last morning. A guest arriving after the luncheon hour seldom sees the hostess until the dinner assemblage. A well trained maid conducts the guest to a well arranged room, serves tea or some simple refreshment and informs the newcomer of the dinner hour. The American hostess manages her establishment in a less ceremonious manner. She frequently drives to meet the guest and, though she may have a retinue of servants, often personally conducts her friend to her room.

Fall In Line For Cleanup Day

THEY'RE ON THE JOB—ARE YOU?

CHIC NOVELTY.

Hose That Carry Out the Idea of Military Boots Shown in Shops.

It sometimes seems that there is nothing new to be evolved in the way of smart hosiery, but a firm has demonstrated the fallacy of such an idea by presenting for women's consideration hosiery in which buttons and buttonholes, a line about the ankle and a tassel in the front simulate a high boot. These hose come in every conceivable color and are considered by the ultra smart as a very desirable addition to the list of novelties in hosiery. Below are given some hints which will be valuable about the care of silk hosiery:

With a little care and attention silk stockings may be made to wear two and even three months. If before wearing they are washed through lukewarm water they become more glossy and also strengthened, as silk takes very kindly to water.

SILK MILITARY HOSE.

After each wearing also the stockings should be washed in lukewarm water and white soap.

If the stockings are white they should be put in a dark room to dry. Never dry white or colored stockings in the sun. The Japanese are said to put all white silks in a dark closet to dry. This will absolutely keep them from yellowing. The use of hot water, according to those who know, is prohibited in the washing of silks; also avoid rubbing.

And now as to the wearing of silk stockings. They absolutely must not be worn tight. If the stocking is pulled to its full length and caught at the hem there will be few if any "runners" occurring within a reasonable time. Wear your stockings comfortably, not too loose or too tight. One extreme is as bad as the other.

A stocking with a lisle top and foot will wear better than all silk one.

This Player "Quick Study."

For remarkable memory it would be hard to outdo a strolling player of the eighteenth century, of whom Sir William Robertson Nicoll has written. For a wager he once undertook to memorize the whole of the next day's Daily Advertiser and accomplished his task by repeating every line in the journal, news, headings, advertisements and all in perfect order and without a slip.—London Tatler.

Good Advice.

William—I must speak, but I'm so furried! James—Bill, collect yourself.—Baltimore American.

FLORAL CENTERPIECES.

Poetry and Beauty Lie Even In the More Commonplace Flowers.

To hark back to unusual floral centerpieces, have you ever thought what can be done with tulips in the springtime or even now when they are to be had? If you haven't, try massing them in a flat bowl of sand instead of in high glass vases of water, and then collect smaller vases or glasses that harmonize with your bowl, stick a single tulip in each one and set them around your table among lighted candles.

Tulips are stately flowers, and there is something regal in their coloring and the fling of their brilliant heads. Choose the variegated ones for your table and when the candles are ablaze see if the effect is not one of what Mr. Kipling would call "truly oriental splendor."

Yellow has long been a favorite color scheme for the table, and yet there are ways and ways of using yellow. Cut glass has been voted a soulless thing, cold and unimaginative, and yet one woman who used her ever active brain to plan feasts for the eye fairly took away her guests' breath by a recent spectacular arrangement of a crystal laden and yellow decorated dinner table.

Yellow shades softened the flare of lights to a mellow glow. Yellow roses banked in a crystal basket formed the centerpiece, and more yellow roses nodded from cut glass vases, set here and there and everywhere. Yellow tied favors and place cards, each with a touch of yellow, gleamed among the rows of glasses at each table. And broad bands of yellow satin ribbon broke the even whiteness of the cloth, their reflection in the glistening glass adding to the colorfulness of it all.

Did it ever occur to you, you hostesses seeking after novelty, that a combination of purple and yellow flowers on a table is as charming as it is rare? Purple and gold are used for kings' robes, and yet in the tiniest gardens in season grow daffodils and violets, pansies both purple and yellow, heliotrope, dwarf sunflowers and sometimes yellow roses, while along the country roadsides may be had for the mere joy of picking them buttercups and dandelions.

And, after all, it is cleverness in making use of the everyday things that often counts for most. One of the prettiest shower bouquets imaginable for a bride was made up in a little Maine village of that feathery white wild carrot, known more poetically as queen's lace.

Cedar Chest.

Get or make a large pine box of desired size. Hinge on the cover neatly, and if there are any cracks or holes putty them up; paint the outside of the chest; get some oil of cedar of the druggist and paint the inside with it, using plenty of oil. This will soak into the pine and retain the odor for years.

They Go Together.

"Henry," said the young wife, who had taken up physical culture, "how do you think I am built?"

"My dear," replied her husband fondly, "you are built very much like a watch."

"Thank you, Henry. And, Henry?"

"Well."

"If—if I am built like a watch, don't you think I should have a few jewels?"

And then Henry frowned and said the man who compliments a woman is an idiot.

D/34

LUSITANIA'S COMPARTMENTS ARE FOUND TO BE INTACT

London, Thursday.—The American Embassy yesterday in a [illegible] the sinking of the Lusitania presents the view that probably only one torpedo struck the vessel. The absence of suction when the vessel went down is attributed to the fact that her bow had reached the bottom before the stern disappeared. The statement [illegible]:

"As to thes inking of the ship, it appears from all statements which have been secured thatn o warning was given. A torpedo hit amidships on the starboard side and the ship listed because of the longitudinal character of the bulkheads, the port air spaces re[illegible]. Later she righted.

"The sinking was in sixty fathoms, and the captain believes her nose [illegible] the bottom before her stern disappeared, accounting for [illegible] suction.

"[illegible] from reports rather dubious whether a second torpedo [illegible].

"The sinking took eighteen minutes and occurred at twenty-three minutes after three o'clock."

[illegible] WILL CONVENE HERE

Oswego County Association Will Meet In This City Next Tuesday

Local members of the Oswego County Medical Association met at the City Hall last evening for the purpose of arranging for the semi-annual meeting of the association in this city next Tuesday as well as completing the regular business of the local branch.Eight local members of the association were present.

The plans for the meeting of the county association next week were decided on and the session Tuesday will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning with a meeting in the Masonic Temple in the Quirk Theatre buildng. After the morning session the association will adjourn to the Clark House where a dinner will be served. It is probable that several members of the asciation will be called upon for speeches at the dinner.

In the afternoon the association will meet again in Masonic Temple and routine businesss will be transacted. During the day addresses will be made by Dr. George F. Cott, of Buffalo; Dr. Dowdle, of Oswego; Dr. Anderson, of thisc ity, and the association is arranging for an address by a representative of the State Educational Department on the subject, "School Inspection." The name of the speaker has not been announced. Dr. Cott wil llecture of "The Significance of Temperance, in Infections from the Throat and Ear." Dr. An. derson will read a paper on "Acute Nephritis." Dr. Dowdle's subject will be announced later.

Dr. Schlappi, of this city, president of the association, will make an address and Dr. Harvey of Oswego, vice-president, will also speak. Almost every doctor in Oswego county is a member of the association and probably ninety per cent of the members will attend the meeting. The delegates may have a chance to make a tour of the city during their presence here, but nothing definite in that line has been decided on yet.

ONCE AGAIN THE OX CREEK CLAIMS

Once again the State Court of Claims is in session over claims for damages from residents along the Ox Creek section along the upper west side of the Oswego river. Almost every year claims are put in by owners of land in that vicinity for damages caused by the flooding of their lands due to high water and the raising of the upper dam in this city some seventeen years ago.

The State now faces claims aggregating $30,000 of residents along Ox Creek, who state that their land has been damaged by the water overbowing the bank. Sidney Kelley, who owns land in that section, is the attorney representing all the claimants and the first case to go before the court was that of George E. Sickles who claims $274. Members of the Wilcox family, William Wyborne, [illegible] Whitcomb, Ebenezer Whipole, and many others have entered claims. [illegible] Wilcox claims $9,000. The [illegible] enough money in [illegible] the past ten years to have [illegible] the land in that [illegible]

VANDERBILT BABY IS NOW A MILLIONAIRE

Little Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Jr., by the death of his father, the Senior Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, will share in the great fortunes of between $50,000,000 and $70,000,000. Young Alfred is little less than three years old, having been born September 22, 1912. The lad's mother was the former Miss Margaret Emerson, of Baltimore. It is an interesting co-incident that Mr. Vanderbilt escaped from the other great sea disaster, the sinking of the Titanic three years ago.

RECEIVER FOR THE FROHMAN ESTATE

London, May 12.—Justice Eve, in the Chancery Court today, appointed Wilfred Hunt receiver and manager of the estate of Charles Frohman in this county, consisting of a year and a half lease of the Duke of York's Theatre and "Rosy Rapture," now being produced at that playhouse by Mr. Frohman, in conjunction with Gaby Deslys.

Application was made by Dion Boucicault, who is a creditor of the estate, for about $2,500. Mr. Rrohman's attorney said he had received a cable from Daniel Frohman that there was no will and that letters of administration were being taken out in New York.

DISTRICT WOMEN GATHER HERE

(Continued from Page One)

secretary reported a fund of $78, and the following were appointed to the nomination committee: Mrs. Munson, of Mexico; Mrs. Stallwood, of Oswego, and Mrs. Sprague, of Sandy Creek.

Many of the women of the district have taken up sufficient special work for missions either by supporting a Bible woman or a student's aid.

Miss Carrie Crosier, secretary of the Young People's Work, reported 284 standard bearers, three young woman's auxiliaries, also on the use of the text book, "Children's Minds." Miss Anna Berry, of Mexico, reported the children's work.

The nominating committee reported, and the following officers were elected for the coming year. They are as follows:

Honorary president, Mrs. M. B. Peck, Mexico; president, Mrs. C. T. Townsend, Mexico; 1st vice president, Mrs. George Shepherd, Rome; 2d vice-president, Mrs. Earl Brown, Fulton; recording secretary, Mrs. Van Allen, Camden; district secretary, Mrs. Fred Maunder, Camden; secretary oi literature, Mrs. C. H. Allen, Oswego; mite boxes, Miss May Brodock, Rome; special work, Mrs. Mattie Baker, New Haven; young people's work, Miss Carrie Crosier, Mexico; child's work, Miss Aanna Berry, Mexico; tithing, Mrs. G. R. Blount, Sandy Creek.

A luncheon was served at noon to the vistors. The session will continue tomorrow.

Unsettled.

"I hear that they belong to the early settlers."

"Well, you wouldn't think so if you could see the bill collectors climbing their front steps."—Judge.

An Empty Dream.

Bobby—Say, pa, what's a "empty dream"? Daddy—One you have when [illegible]

HANDLING OF THE STRAWBERRY CROP

The stage of maturity at which berries should be picked in this section depends upon the distance they are to be shipped. When grown for a local market they should be picked when thoroughly ripe, but not soft. If grown for a distant market the berries must be picked before they are thoroughly ripe, but they should be fully grown and about three-fourths ripe. If picked before they are colored the berries wil shrink and wither, making them unfit for sale. Strawberries should be picked with a short piece of steam attached (about one-fourth to one-half inch). They should never be slipped from the stem, as that spoils their appearance and injures their shipping and keeping qualities.

Uniformity in the pack is essential in order to obtain high prices for strawberries, and this can be secured only when the berries have been carefully graded and sorted. Some growers have the berries graded in the field.

A common practice in some sections is to pick the ripe berries of all grades into the same box and when the tray is full to take it to the packing shed, where the berries are sorted and packed. The graders dump the berries on a table and pick out all green, over-ripe or small berries. The others are placed in the boxes, one of the gardners arranging the top layers in such a way that the berries show to best advantage. When berries are packed in this manner, care should be taken not to put the small, inferior berries in the center of the box and the fine large berries on top. The fruit should be uniform throughout the box, with thetop layer merely placed to add to the attractiveness of the pack and to hold the fruit in place. Where a fancy pack is put up, the berries should be divided into two grades.

After the berries are picked they should be placed in the shade as soon as possible, for heat injures the fruit in a short time. The pickers should not be allowed to leave the filled boxes along the rows, where the berries will be exposed to the sun. The shorter the time that elapses after the fruit is picked before it is put into refrigerator cars or refrigerator boxes the better it is for the berries, which will continue to ripen rapidly until they are chilled.

BROWN SAYS COLONEL WAS LEADER 4 YEARS

Syracuse, May 12—Elon R. Brown, of Watertown, Republican leader of the state senate, swore on the witness stand in the supreme court here that he considered Theodore Roosevelt was the leader of the party in this state from 1906 until 1910. Colonel Roosevelt was President of the United States during a part of that period. Senator Brown was not allowed to answer a direct question as to whether he considered Colonel Roosevelt was "the boss" then.

GOVERNOR VETOES BILL DEALING WITH MEDIUMS

Albany, May 12.—Overriding the objection of the State spiritualists, Gov. Whitman today vetoed the Thompson bill relative to the practice of spiritualism. The measure's intention was to amend the criminal procedure by exempting ministers of the General Assembly of Spiritualists or its auxiliary societtes from the provisions making fortune telling disorderly conduct.

NEUTRAL LINES FEEL SAFE FROM ATTACK

New York, May 13.—The officials of the Holland-America line and the Scandinavian-American line in Hoboken stated yesterday that they had no intention of being influenced by the Germans and that their vessels would carry as much contraband goods as they had room for. They will not, however, transport ammunition or other munitions of war.

A TIMELY WARNING.

The arrival of hot weather always brings with it an increase in infant mortality.

The typhoid fly and other germ carriers breed and multiply in piles of waste matter and refuse of almost every kind.

CLEAN UP AND SAVE THE BABIES' LIVES.

These deadly insects just dote on alighting on the babies' milk bottles and foods. They are responsible for thousands of deaths a year. Destroy their breeding places and you will be aiding in a great, grand cause.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Louis D. Brandeis, Special Treasury Counsel.

Photo by American Press Association.

In the trial of the suit instituted by the Riggs National bank of Washington against officials of the United States treasury department Louis D. Brandeis of Boston will act as special counsel for the accused officials. The bank has accused Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, Treasurer John Burke and Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams of conspiracy to wreck it.

For many years Mr. Brandeis has been a national figure in American public life. He is an advocate of social reforms, a publicist of renown, a lawyer of distinction, who has served as special counsel for the government in many celebrated cases. Mr. Brandeis is regarded as an expert in legislation and administration efficiency.

While Mr. Brandeis is largely a product of New England, he is not a Yankee. He was born of German-Jewish parents in Kentucky in 1858. After a preliminary education in Germany he went to Harvard Law school, was a professor there for awhile and then began practice in Boston. Soon he was recognized as one of the most successful lawyers and acquired one of the biggest practices in the city. Although a man in public life, Mr. Brandeis is not in politics. His use of politics has been merely as a means to the end of pushing social and economic movements. Several years ago his admirers tried to get him to run for mayor of Boston on a nonpartisan ticket, but failed to get him interested.

Nephew of the Czar.

Recent dispatches from the scene of war operations in Poland have made mention of Grand Duke Dimitri of Russia, who was attached to the army which invested Przemysl and compelled the capitulation of that fortified city. Grand Duke Dimitri is a cousin of the czar, being a son of Grand Duke Paul, brother of the late Czar Alexander III. He was born near Moscow on Sept. 6, 1891, his mother dying six days later.

Photo by American Press Association.

GRAND DUKE DIMITRI.

Like all of the Muscovite grand dukes, he was educated for a military career, and after graduating from the war college he entered the cavalry. After serving as a subordinate for a time he was appointed aid-de-camp to the adjutant of the Eleventh regiment of Grenadier guards and later was made captain in the Second regiment of the fusileers of the Imperial guard. Since hostilities began he has been on the fighting line and [illegible]

RURAL BILLY SUNDAY WINS.

[illegible]

Greencastle, Ind.—The Rev. Julius Pfeiffer, who has charge of the Patricksburg circuit in the northwest Indiana M. E. conference, is making good. Pfeiffer is using a brush and liberal quantities of paint. He has advertised himself all over his circuit.

At the crossroads he has painted his name and the time of his meetings in big red letters. He says "balks" and "kickers" and "threats" will not go with him as long as he is on the job.

One of his familiar phrases is: "I am on the job to stay; must see the thing through. If you want that soft taffy kind of preaching I am not the man to give it to you. As long as I am here I am going to talk about a big God, who has a broad humanitarian platform and who really makes folks do something."

Mr. Pfeiffer says his business is "picking up" since he started his advertising scheme, and he "expects to be running his shops on full time" by June 1. He desires to "double his output" by Sept. 15.

HUNTING BURIED GOLD.

Mayoralty Aspirant Has Men Digging For Indian Treasure.

Pendleton, Ore.—R. F. Kirkpatrick, a claimant for the mayor's chair and prominent rancher on the Umatilla Indian reservation, is using all his farm hands in an industrious search for supposed buried treasure.

The excitement was caused by Ko-ko-yea-lash, an aged Indian woman, whose land Kirkpatrick has rented. The old woman is ill, and, fearing she is about to die, she told Mr. Kirkpatrick that about nineteen years ago she buried a large quantity of gold in a tin can near her tepee.

She said she buried it about two feet deep, leaving a string attached and extending to the surface of the ground so she could find it again. The string has long since rotted off, and the woman has either forgotten the exact location of the treasure or is too ill to describe the spot. All the ground within a radius of several rods of her old tepee has therefore been plowed up and scraped away, but so far no treasure.

TO FEED WORLD ON 300,000,000 ACRES

United States to Become Cattle Raising Center.

Chicago.—One of the results of the European war will be great increase in American output of horses and cattle. This country will become the meat producing spot of the world. The annual output of [illegible] head will probably be increased from 20 to 50 per cent.

Reports from Europe have shown that the destruction of live stock due to the war is beyond all present realization. All the countries have been chary about emitting statistical information concerning it because they are trying to maintain an air of calm and confidence about their food supplies.

But the truth is getting out, and it is, in brief, that Europe will be impoverished in regard to live stock supplies sooner than in almost any other economic direction.

Two chief results are already beginning to be perceived. One, and the obvious one, is that all the world will need meat from the United States as never before.

The other is that the United States will change places with Europe in regard to supplying the finest breeding stock. The [illegible] breeding stock of Holland, [illegible], Great Britain, France [illegible] being [illegible] freely [illegible] American [illegible] in [illegible] they have [illegible] to import. [illegible] country in the world [illegible] as a whole [illegible] those of the United States of [illegible] America [illegible] monly thought of as the [illegible] regions. But Europe, because of its immense population, [illegible] that must be made up by [illegible], and so its place as a stock [illegible] continent is not lightly [illegible].

The greatest of the stock raising territories are involved in the war. They are killing off first their horses, destroying them in battle and the deadly transport service and also making it impossible to raise the annual crop of colts. Thus the loss is really a double one.

For a long time the capacity of the western ranges for producing and maintaining stock has been growing less. As a result government statistics show a reduction of the number of cattle in seventeen western range states in a period of four years from 30,000,000 to 23,000,000 and of the number of sheep from 39,000,000 to 32,000,000. The range has been overfed in some sections until great areas of it are becoming well nigh denuded of grass and actually tending to reversion to desert conditions.

Mother Has Son Arrested.

Paris.—When two French soldiers returned to Paris and couldn't give a good reason for it the mother of one [illegible]

$10,000 MAN HEAD OF HOLDUP GANG

White's Dramatic Confession of Crime Stirs Court.

LIVED HYDE AND JEKYLL LIFE

Was Respected Sales Manager by Day and, All Unknown to Wife, Who Remains Faithful, Was Associate of Robbers and Frequenter of Vile Dens at Night.

No more dramatic scene has ever been witnessed in a criminal court than that which arose in Brooklyn supreme court when Philip T. White, a $10,000 a year sales manager, tore off his Masonic emblem and confessed that he was the leader of a band of taxicab holdup men and consort of the frequenters of the vilest dens in Manhattan's Tenderloin.

Beside White stood his faithful wife, with their baby in her arms and four-year-old daughter by her side. Until her husband opened his lips she had believed him always the upright, respected business man he was by day. There was hardly a dry eye in the room.

White was charged with being concerned in the robbing of two messengers of his firm who were held up and deprived of $3,032, the company's pay roll. Last October a man named Cinnen was charged with the robbery, but immediately acquitted by the jury, who readily believed the handsome, honest looking, highly paid sales manager when he said that at the time of the robbery Cinnen was with him at Brooklyn's noted club, the Crescent. His salary was $10,000 a year.

Torn With Deep Emotion.

While his counsel arranged with the court for him to make his confession, White, pale and haggard, gripped the oak railing in front of him. He gave one quick, pained glance toward his wife and then, steeling himself for the ordeal, began, his voice choking with emotion:

"Your honor, I wish to confess my guilt and my shame before your court and the world. I had the full confidence of my employers and the love of my wife and babies. I was trusted and esteemed by my relatives, my business associates and my friends before I was tempted and before I fell. I have no just excuse to offer for my crime.

"But one thing I wish to ask here is that the good Lord will give me the strength to serve out the sentence which you will impose and that I may be spared to make full restitution for every dollar I have taken and for every cent of expense that has been caused through my dishonesty. And I also want to pay back to the state all that my crime has cost it.

"I wish to be spared to help J. Edward Darrick, my friend, who has lost his position through helping me, and I want to help Arthur Barlow, who has lost his position, although I do not know why.

"This is the bitter cup that the Lord has willed I shall drink. I have prayed to the Lord, and he has guided me. I am guilty, your honor. That is all."

As is the custom, several bailiffs crowded up to the bar.

"Stand back, officers!" commanded Justice Aspinwall. "This man is not going to run away."

Wife Puts Hand in His.

Mrs. White, pallid as he, but trembling less, stepped softly to her husband's side, slipped her arm through his and put her hand in his. Weeping, White bent over her and whispered:

"Helen, I'm guilty of all they've said about me. I'm going to make a clean breast of it."

"I see you wear the button of the Mystic Shrine," said Justice Aspinwall, himself a member of the order.

White bowed, and his hand went to the lapel of his coat.

"I can't wear this any longer; I have disgraced it. I strip myself of my Masonic emblem, for I am not fit to wear it."

In the tense silence of the court only the sobs of the heartbroken wife could be heard.

"I have been impressed with the sincerity and frankness of this man," said the justice. "Before pronouncing sentence I would like to make an investigation. I would like to look up his record and also to hear from his friends, so I will postpone sentence."

White, a member of an excellent Virginia family, has enjoyed for his own sake a high reputation among those with whom he lived and moved by day. But for his own confession of his doings and associates at night his Hyde and Jekyll existence would not have been credited by his friends.

GERMANY RESUMES RACING.

Ten Day Meet For $92,500 to Be Held Near Berlin.

At a meeting of the Union club in Berlin, the controlling body for horse racing in Germany, the vice president announced that permission had been received to reopen the race tracks, but without the operation of betting machines.

The first meet will begin at Hoppegarten, near Berlin, May 24, and [illegible]

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 125 — Established, Dec. 17, 1914. — FRIDAY, MAY 14, 1915 — Price One Cent

Get Ready to Contribute to the Official Rubbish Heap. Free Collection

"STOP PIRACY OR FIGHT," WARNING

President Wilson Demands Immediate Steps Be Taken to Prevent Recurrence of Attacks on Merchant Ships

Washington, D. C. Friday.—Positive, uncompromising, ringing with Americanism, fraught with the gravest possibilities to the United States, and of the utmost importance to the fuure of all mankind—his is President Wilson's note to the German government in answer to the wanton destruction of the Lusitania, with the loss of more than one hundred American lives.

This tremendously important State document was made public by Mr. Bryan, Secretary of State, early this morning. By now it has reached the Berlin Foreign Office.

The whole document cannot but stir the American people, to the core. It is not only a strong declaration that the United States government will defend to the end the rights and lives of American citizens on theh igh seas, but that it will stand to the end for the rights of all humanity against ruthless militarism.

This final sentence of the note must give every American the gravest concern, for its meaning cannot be misinterpreted; its consequences in the event of an unfavorable reply from Germany must only be too plain.

"The Imperial German Government will not expect the government of the United States to omit any WORD or any ACT necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the Unied States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment."

Those of Mr. Wilson's advisers who have read the note realize to the full that Germany must yield or that the United States will stand pledged to make her yield.

The President requests a clear statement of future policy from the German government as ayecting this inhumane warfare on non-combatants on the seas. The German reply must cover the following points:—

It must be a disavowal of such acts as the sinking of the Lusitania and the Falaba, British merchants ships carrying Americans, and the attacks on the Gulflight and the Cushing, American merchant ships.

Reparation must be made for the American lives lost and American property destroyed.

Germany must cease her submarine warfare on merchant shipping.

What will Germany's answer be? On it hangs the answer to the far greater question, peace or war.

It is with the utmost gravity that the President's advisers agreed with him in that portion of the note which calls upon Germany to abandon the much heralded submarine policy of Admiral von Tirpitz in these words:—

"Manifestly submarines cannot be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity."

German's reply can ither be a flat refusal to abandon her undersea piracy or an order to dischss the subject further.

It is up to Germany. Her government must decide, and decide quickly, whether she wants war with the United States.

Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, today issued a statement to the press, in which he specifically denied that the embassy [illegible] a report that the reply of the German government would be a "polite but firm refusal to cease submarine warfare against belligerent ships."

He added that he was ignorant of the terms of the American note and had received no instructions from his government regarding it.

That Germany will offer to stop her submarine warfare against merchant ships "with the understanding that the United States will at once take as firm a sstand against the interference with neutral merchant ships on their way to other neutral ports with food by Great Britain" is the first reply to be expected to President Wilson's note, in the opinion of some Germans here in touch with the Embassy.

But it is known that President Wilson has no intention of bargaining to the slightest degree with Germany on this point. The United States is pursuing its own course regarding Great Britain's actions, none of which have resulted in the loss of a single American life, and it will pursue a separate course with Germany, who has caused the loss of the livs of mor than one hundred American men, women and children.

Arrangements were made to make the communication public in the United States just as soon as it had been received by Germany. Mr. Bryan thought this ould be by eleven o'clock Berlin time, Friday, so he announced that the ful text would be given to the American public, at five o'clock on Friday morning, Washington time.

The tone of the nte is most courteuus. It is not believed here that the Kaiser or the German Foreign Ote can take offence at its form.

The President almost ironically observes that he cannot believe it possiblle that such acts as the sinking of the Lusitania were performed by order of the German government, but must have been due to a misapprehension on the part of the officers in charge of the submarines.

Nowhere in the note does the President directly accuse the German government of these atrocities. He proceeds on the assumptioh that the German government could not possibiliy be directly responsible for such inhuman acts, except in so far as it must assume responsibility for anything its naval commanders may do, under orders or otherwise.

PLAINTIFF GETS SMALL VERDICT AGAINST FARMER

In Supreme Court yesterday, in Pulaski, H. U. Bontius of Mexico, was awarded $60 by the jury, in his suit against Pulaski's "Strawberry King," Lawrence J. Farmer.

Plaintiff brought the action to recover $250 for alleged breach of contract, the controversy arising from the handling of strawberry plants. The case was started Tuesday in Supreme Court.

At the afternoon session of court, a verdict of no cause of action was returned by the jury in the negligence action of Fred L. Bohannon of Selkirk against Potrer T. Champlin, of Syracuse. Freelon J. Davis, of Pulaski, attorney for thep laintiff, moved to set aside the verdict, but the court denied the motion.

The plaintiff is a painter and sued for $5,000 for injuries alleged to have been sustained last September by falling from the roof of a cottage at Selkirk, owned by defendant. Among the witnesses for the defense were Henry Funda, a Syracuse contractor, and Mr. and Mrs. Newton Greene of that city. Attorney George W. Driscoll of Syracuse represented the defendant.

Edgar Munson, a Syracuse real estate man and a former resident of Mexico, is the defendant in an action brought by Benjamin W. Wilds to recover money damages for an alleged breach of contract in a land deal which went to trial this morning.

Frank Massaro's negligence action against Kirk N. Sweet, of Phoenix, may not be reached until the Monday session. This case is one of damages resulting, it is alleged, from an automobile collision, last summer.

BOATS CANNOT PASS THE OSWEGO LOCK

Tomorrow at noon navigation on New York's canals will open, and yet no dredging has been done in the old channel leading from the river into the lock at Oswego. A long time ago General Wotherspoon signified his intention of taking up the work so that boats drawing seven feet of water could pass through the lock.

David S. Burleigh, assistant superintendent of the middle division of the State's canals, called a meeting today in Syracuse of all lockmasters when these men received full instructions relating to their duties.

Pulpwood will be brought into Fulton this year through the Oswego canal, unless the cost is made prohibitive by the Montreal transport companies. The Granby Paper Company, it is said, has made inquiries regardng the cost of water transportation and a reply is awaited.

SMALL-POX CASE FOUND IN OSWEGO

Oswego, May 14.—Health Officer Stockwell was called to the home of Arthur Chetney at 12 Porter street yesterday morning to look into the illness of a three year old child of Mr. Chetney, reported to him as suspicious by one of the local doctors. After another visit to the home Dr. Stockwell ordered it quarantined for smallpox. He says that it is a very well defined case and there is no chance of any mistake in the diagnosis. He has made as careful an investigation as possible but cannot trace the source of infection. In the Chetney family there are [illegible] other young children beside the sick one.

Wake Up and Paint Up

Don't overlook the fact that it is as important to paint up as it is to clean up while the renovating war is on hereabouts.

Paint is not only a cleanser and a beautifier, but it is a disinfectant as well. Also it preserves the life of buildings, fences, wagons, etc. Many a barn is lastly because Farmer John would not spend a few dollars and a few hours on the simple job of giving it the needed coats of paint from year to year.

Many a community has attracted new residents, new business and new reputation by having a bright, prosperous appearance. Well painted buildings and fences, cleanly kept streets and sidewalks and neatly trimmed grass plots do more to give the impression of prosperity than any other things we can suggest.

GET A MOVE ON, FOLKS.

And where you consider the use of paint to be a useless expenditure use whitewash. It is cheap and clean and not unpleasing to the eye. Cleanliness never is annoying.

BOY STARTED FOR THE WEST

But Nelson Richardson Was Taken Into Custody By a Syracuse Cop

Nelson Richardson, the adventurous youth of some ten years who attempted to take an impromptu joy-ride in an automobile owned by O. Lester Todd of the west side early this week, offered an entirely new coup d'etat for the appreciation of his boy admirers last night when he started for the golden west via the "rods" and the "side-door Pullman route." Nelson reads ads. and he decided that the advantages offered by the New York Central lines were far in advance of any of the other roads here, so he climbed nonchalantly aboard the train that leaves this city shortly before 10 o'clock and doubling himself into a ball, crawled beneath the platform which forms the vestibule of Pullman coaches when the train is in motion. The platform was not up at the time and no one saw the lad embark on his journey.

Last night was a pretty cool evening, especially on a fast train, and Nelson probably got his fill of "huggin' the rattler" before Syracuse was reached. At any rate the porter opened the vestibule at that station and Nelson was found exhausted. A policeman took him in tow and he was given a warm bed in the station house after he had told his story, which would do credit to the ingenuity of a Jules Verne.

According to the tale he told the Syracuse cops, Nelson was a Pulaski product and had been visiting friends in Oswego. He wanted to see hisp arents and, having no money, he decided to beat his way hoping to reach Pulaski somewhere along the road. And the credulous patrolmen believed him.

His description was sent out this morning, however, and the lad's father learned that his son had taken French leave and started for Syracuse to bring him back. Evidently before that parent reached there, Nelson probably foresaw the result if his story should be discredited by another and confessed to the police that he had fabricated and told them is real name. The police immediately wired to Fulton but the elder Richardson had already left to accompany the prodigal home.

LOWDIN BOY IS MISSING

Adventurous Youngster Spent "Evening Out" and Left No New Address

Alonzo Lowdin, son of Mr. and Mrs J. Lowdin of Rochester st., was reported as lost, strayed, or stolen to the police this morning by his anxious parents. The youngster is possessed of an adventurous disposition and once in the past he occasioned hisp arents many hours of worry when he disappeared for a day leaving no address. This time, however, the disappearance has become protracted so long that his parents are afraid that he has met with serious injury.

Young Lowdin is a newsboy and he delivered his route as usual yesterday afternoon and came home for his supper like a dutiful son. After the meal he wandered out on the street and with a boy chum was seen in front of the New York Central station about ten o'clock. There another boy met the pair and accordin gto the newcomer, young Lowdin proposed that the trio should stay out all night. Lowdin's companion agreed but the newcomer had visions of a stout rod and faltered, saying that he would go home to bed.

One of the roomers in the Lowdin household as often shhared his room with Alondo and when Mrs. Lowdin did not see the boy in his bed last evening she thought he was in the other room. Accordingly she went to bed but she was surprised and shocked this morning when the roomer told her that Alonzo ad not been in is room. Alonzo's bed had not been occupied during the night and the parents became alarmed and notified the police. Chief Dyer seems to think that the youths may ave jumped on board a freight and were carried some miles from home before they could get off. The police of all the towns in this section of the state have been furnished with a description of te missing boy and he will be held if e s recognized. Mr. Lowdin, who is an employe of the Happy Hour theatre, learned that his son had contemplated a fishing trip yesterday and this afternoon he intends to search along the river bank and on the shores of Lake [illegible] for the boy. Needless to say, Alonzo will be treated in the manner approved of by King Solomon when he finally returns.

D/34

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 46

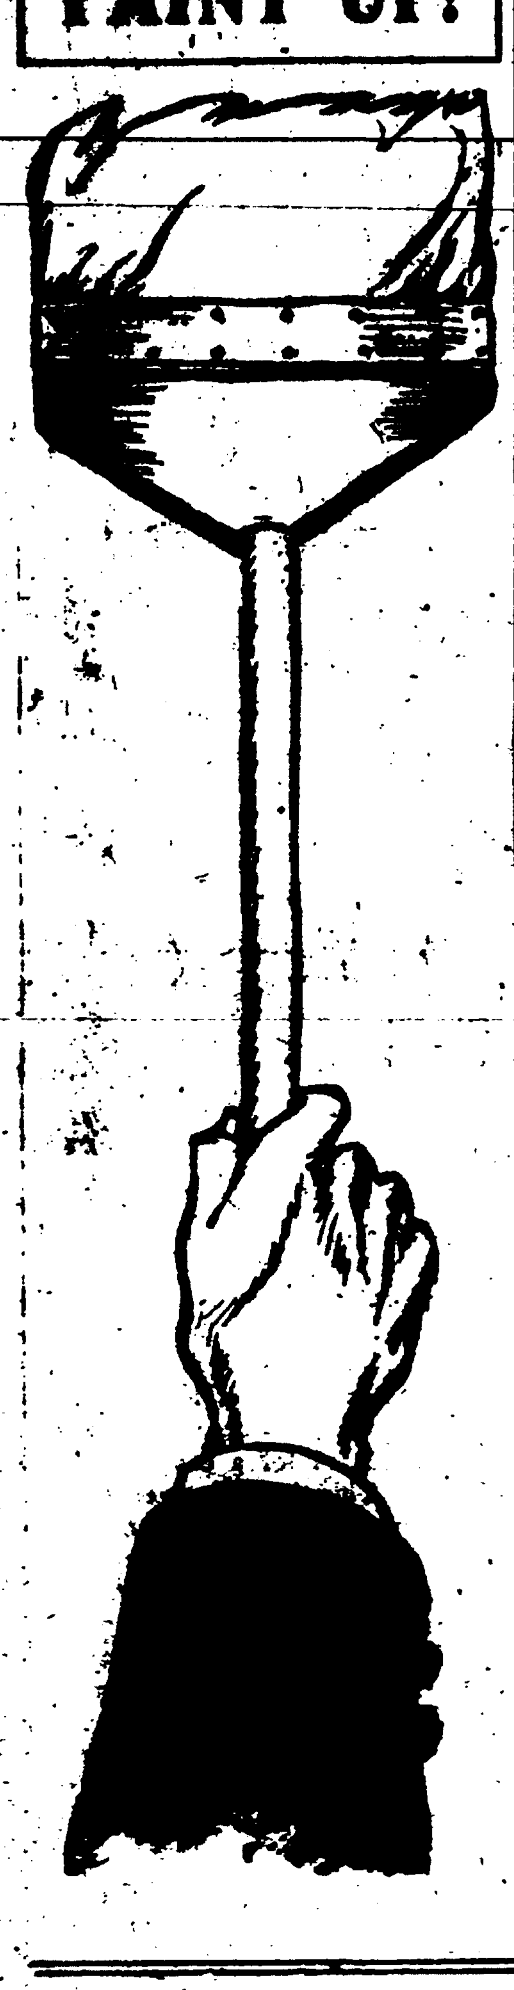
G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
R. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer.

Entered as second-class matter December 12, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 14, 1915.

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

Get Busy
CLEAN UP
and
PAINT UP!



All Kinds of
GARDEN SEEDS
by the ounce or pound at
LaPorte's Grocery.
Oneida St. Hello 75

RICHARDSON THEATRE
—OSWEGO—
Friday, May 14, 1915

The Biggest and Most Important Musical Comedy of the year
McINTYRE and HEATH
in the Big Joyous Musical Furore
"THE HAM TREE"
Company of 80 Artists
The World's Best Dancing Chorus
PRICES—50c to $2.00
SEATS NOW ON SALE AT
Quick Theatre Box Office.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Automobiles and Baseball.

Somebody has discovered that the number of automobile owners in our country is nearly equal to the number of baseball patrons. In this connection it is suggested that, while the fans haven't the same cause for pride, they don't worry any over tire trouble. On the other hand, the car owners are not annoyed by outlaw leagues and umpires.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sadly Beautiful.

Some of the courtesies imposed upon armies and navies are at times beautiful in their expression. For instance, a Japanese warship the other day steamed about the spot where the F-4 went down. Its crew was drawn up in salute, and its flag was dipped in honor of the men entombed below.—Rochester Union and Advertiser.

A Seasonable Explanation.

Every woman wants a new hat that makes her look better than she looked in her old hat, which was more becoming than the one she had before, and so on, back to the time she was an angel in appearance; hence the difficulty of finding a hat to suit.—Toledo Blade.

The Irish Tongue.

Seumas McManus declares that the Irish language is "the most forceful to curse, pray and make love in, as it is the most expressive," and he adds, "It has 365 terms of endearment for a girl." In that respect it runs a close race with Spanish.—Boston Globe.

Bulls and Bears.

They are getting so gay again in Wall street that seats on the Stock Exchange that were selling a little while ago for $35,000 have been bid up to $70,000. Still, a trifle like that can be made in a few minutes' operations—sometimes.—Philadelphia Press.

Let Us Be Thankful.

Summer colds are bad enough in all conscience, whatever that means, but let us turn to the silver lining of the cloud and cheerily reflect that there are no summer chilblains.—Boston Globe.

Emerging From Despotism.

Fifteen hundred arrests for bribery in the Japanese election show that Nippon is rapidly emerging from the gloom of despotism into the full light of self government. —Boston Transcript.

Oldest Chess Problem.

The oldest chess problem on record is thought to be that contained in an ancient Persian manuscript attributed to Caliph Kalifen Mutasin Billah, who reigned in Bagdad A. D. 833 to 842. But the reader would have to learn the old rules before it was intelligible. For example, the queen could make a move of only one square at a time and that on a diagonal, but a queen promoted from a pawn was allowed to make a move of two squares diagonally. The bishop had no power over any square except the third from which it stood on its own diagonal line, but it was allowed to vault over any piece that happened to be between. In short, it was a totally different game. Chess in the precise form in which we know it and play it today is a comparatively modern game.—London Strand Magazine.

Misnomers of Chemistry.

One of the strangest features of chemistry is the fact that many of the chemical names are misleading and do not describe the articles. Here are a few examples; Oil of vitriol is no oil, neither are oils of turpentine and kerosene. Copperas is an iron compound and contains no copper.

Salts of lemon is the exceedingly poisonous oxalic acid. Carbolic acid is not an acid, but an alcohol. Cobalt contains none of that metal, but arsenic. Soda water has no trace of soda, nor has sulphuric acid of sulphur. Sugar of lead has no sugar, cream of tartar has nothing of cream, nor milk of lime any milk. German silver has no silver and black lead no lead. Mosaic gold is only a sulphide of tin.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Stopping the Idle Talk.

"Pardon my interrupting you, old chap, but really you're wasting your time."

"What's the matter? Aren't you interested in what I'm saying?"

"Not particularly. Besides, it won't accomplish anything."

"I don't understand you."

"It's no use telling me how your boss ought to run his business. Tell it to him or keep still about it."—Detroit Free Press.

What He Wished to Know.

"Here's an article in this magazine entitled, 'How to Meet Trouble,'" said Mrs. Wedderly. "Shall I read it to you?"

"No, thank you," replied his wife's husband. "How to dodge trouble is the brand of information I'm looking for."—Chicago News.

Going Down.

Redd—He started out with a $6,000 automobile.

Greene—And what car is he using now?

"A street car."—Yonkers Statesman.

A Definition.

Banquet—A social function at which one endures a poor meal for the sake of the speaking which is to follow and then endures poor speaking for the sake of the meal.—Life.

FULTON'S CHAUTAUQUA

The article in Wednesday's issue of the Syracuse Journal informing its readers that the 1915 Chautauqua may not be held owing to the fact that "no financial benefit to local merchants or people in general" can result is silly.

The absurdity of such statements scarcely warrants more than a passing smile, especially from those Fulton people who found last season's Chautauqua a veritable "oasis." No doubt there are persons in Fulton as in every other place who do not need food for intellectual growth, and the writer of the quoted article evidently belongs with those "sufficiently endowed."

In the first place, the article comes with very poor grace from the pen of one who day by day coaxes and teases Fulton's perfectly good dollars into Syracuse. In the second place the article is without a truthful foundation and deserves the censure of the intelligent, thinking people. The Entertainment Committee of the Chamber of Commerce had given the Chautauqua its fullest endorsement, and as the contract was signed and the guarantee given months ago, for the appearance this summer of the Chautauqua in this city there is no question but what Fulton and the surrounding country will have the opportunity to again enrich itself mentally, and in that event the merchants will profit along with all the other people.

As a matter of town-boosting the Chautauqua is recognized far and wide as one of the strongest factors to be employed. A recent leading magazine devoted space to commenting on the value of the Chautauqua as a community builder. People of intellectual worth often avoid the small city as a home place because of the environment which lacks those mediums through which the finer qualities thrive and grow. The Chautauqua overcomes this great lack and fills the niche completely.

Small cities cannot hold great musicians and lecturers of worth, therefore, it must undo its purse strings in order to satisfy itself.

Lucius Wilson in his last talk before the Chamber here quoted from Paul, "Be ye therefore transformed by the renewing of your minds." The quotation is an apt one here.

Hats off to those who fathered the Chautauqua movement here in Fulton. May they live to eat the chickens that scratch above their graves.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In Syracuse last week the presence of Mrs. Whitman, as the guest of honor at the Women's Political Union banquet, amounted to an official announcement that the social power of the present state administration would be thrown on the side of the suffragists in the campaign now pending in New York State.

* * *

At the Occupational Conference held Monday and Tuesday at Cornell University, Mrs. A. M. Crocker, examiner in the municipal civil service commission of New York city, spoke on the civil service as a new and unexplored field open to college women.

"In the equal suffrage states," said Mrs. Crocker, "it is of course easier for a woman to get admission into the civil service," and in explaining the procedure in New York city she said, "I must admit in the beginning that women are discriminated against all along the line."

"Well, girls," one of the co-eds was heard to say as they filed out after the session, "It looks as though we had better go and join the suffrage club, if we want a fair chance to earn a living in this state."

* * *

"What is your nationality?" asked the Judge in Buffalo last week of a man seeking citizenship in this country. "Rags," was the answer. "What is Congress?" was another question and as the applicant hesitated the Judge kindly prompted him, "Is it a man or a woman or a house?"

Of the hundred or more who applied, the press reported that "about a dozen of the badly informed applicants were temporarily rejected." It would seem so the suffragists comment on the incident, as though no amount of intelligence could secure for a woman the right to vote and no amount of ignorance could keep it away from a man, save "temporarily."

* * *

Another blow at the Solid South was given at the Southern Conference for Education and Industry, just held at Chattanooga, when it declared in favor of votes for women on the ground that the South needed the help of women which could only be effectively given if women had votes.

* * *

In Nebraska, according to Helen Hoy Greeley, who is conducting a series of Sschools for Watchers at the Polls in the various towns and cities of New York State under the auspices of the W. P. U., thousands of ballots were counted against woman suffrage last November that were perfectly blank. And it is believed by many that if the polls had been watcher, as they will be in New York State, Nebraska might even now be equal suffrage territory.

The suffragists may be beaten at the polls next November but they don't intend to be counted out.

McCUTCHEON RELEASED FROM JURY DUTY

New York, May 14.—George Barr McCutcheon, the novelist, after being summoned as a talesman in the trial of Frank Madelina, formerly a saloonkeeper of 199 Hester st., charged with the murder of Frank Pappa, was challenged peremptorily in General Sessions yesterday when he admitted prejudice against any man who might carry a revolver.

Pappa, according to testimony taken before Coroner Harburger, entered Madelina's saloon on December 13, 1908, and demanded money. After the killing Madelina ued to Steubenville, Ohio, but some months ago sent on his lawyer, Ralph B. Kohn, to clear up the case.

NOTED SUFFRAGIST ILL AT BROOKLYN HOME

Mrs. Alma Webster Powell, suffragist, singer, linguist and social reformer, is seriously ill with peritonitis at her home, 915 President st., Brooklyn. She is the wife of A. Judson Powell, the organist. She has appeared in grand opera roles in Europe and was successful in "Martha" while touring this country with the Savage Opera Company a few years ago. Mrs. Powell has a law degree from the New York University.

H. PUTNAM ALLEN & SON
Established in 1893 by Horatio A. Allen
Dealers in FINE GROCERIES 53 South First Street

We will have Everything you need for your SUNDAY DINNER
Our prices are RIGHT, quality considered. No store in town can undersell us on HIGH-GRADE FOOD PRODUCTS
CALL US ON PHONE 32

TELEPHONE DIRECTORIES TWELVE MILES LONG

The J. W. Clement Company, one of Buffalo's largest printing houses has just been awarded by the New York Telephone Company the contract for the printing of the Bell Telephone directories for Buffalo and Western New York. This is one of the largest contracts for printing which has ever been secured by a Buffalo firm.

Following out the idea of keeping good things in Buffalo and promoting business for Buffalo industries, the Clement Company has in turn contracted with the R. H. Thompson Company for the paper stock to be used on this job.

There will be more than 1,750,000 directories printed in the three-year term of the contract. These books will contain in all about 23,000 solid pages of listings of telephone numbers and will require over 1,000,000 pounds of paper. The preliminary linotype composition required to set up these books will use up over 10,000 pounds of linotype metal.

It is also interesting to note the figures which have been compiled by one well-known writer in Buffalo in presenting the facts in connection with this directory printing contract.

If all the books averaged a bare half inch in thickness—and some of them will be more than that—they would, if piled one on top of the other, make a column 800,000 inches in height, or about 67000 feet, and getting down still further, a little over 12 miles high.

SHIP YARDS CAN BUILD ONE SUBMARINE A WEEK

Washington, May 12.—American shipbuilding yards are capable of furnishing submarines at the rate of one a week, or even faster after a start of two hundred days, according to high officials of the Navy Department.

It is now possible to build and equip a submarine in the United States in six and a half months. This refers to submarines of the coast defence type, now in use in the present navy. The larger seagoing submarine cruisers require a longer period, but it is the belief of navy officials that even they can be constructed under America's system of working in structural steel more rapidly than anywhere else in the world.

This statement was obtained today in discussing with an official the present status of the submarines built for the British government in American yards. It is now known that the ten submarines built for British of materials and parts manufactured by the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, have been assembled and are in shape at Montreal, and will be ready for service in a few weeks. The ten submarines built by the Fore River Ship Building Company, at Quincy, Mass., will be ready for delivery before July first.

The United States today has more than $80,000,000 of shrapnel shells ready for shipment abroad most of them destined for Russia. Archangel will be open to sea traffic in a few days and the consignment will be sent to Russia by that route.

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Bogue's, 61 First st. adv

KRUPP WORKS GREW FROM SMALL SHOP

From a little blacksmith's shop founded at Essen in 1812 the mighty firm of Krupp the makers of German guns, has grown into the largest armament concern in the world. Fredrich Krupp originated the smithy, and for fourteen years struggled against poverty. He died a poor man and on his deathbed confided the secrets he had discovered to his son, Alfred. It was more than twenty years before Alfred Krupp gained recognition, but after obtaining fame through exhibiting a forty-five-ton cast ingot of steel at the Crystal Palace Exhibition in 1851 he never looked back. When he died, in 1887, sixty thousand people follower him to the grave. Today Krupp's works cover one thousand acres. Even before the war rush the firm employed 60,000 men at the main works at Essen and thousands of others at their collieries, shipbuilding yards and private testing grounds. It is estimated that more than 300,000 people depend on Krupps for their livelihood.

At the works forty thousand cannon are turned out every year.

Work at Krupps' is conducted in great secrecy. Each worker is forbidden to enter any office or workshop not connected with his own department. He has a passport for his special job, and must take no interest in any other. Hundreds of watchmen guard the secrets of the Krupps' works day and night, and the grounds are a mass of electric traps which immediately signal the approach of an intruder.

CARD OF THANKS

Mrs. Grace Smith and Dora Packley wish to thank friends and neighbors for kindness shown and flowers during the sickness and death of their daughter, Mrs. Jennie Owens.

WATER GLASS
EGG PRESERVER
Qt. or Gal. Sizes at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

Steer this way for the Insurance that spells peace of mind—our Automobile Accident and Liability Insurance.

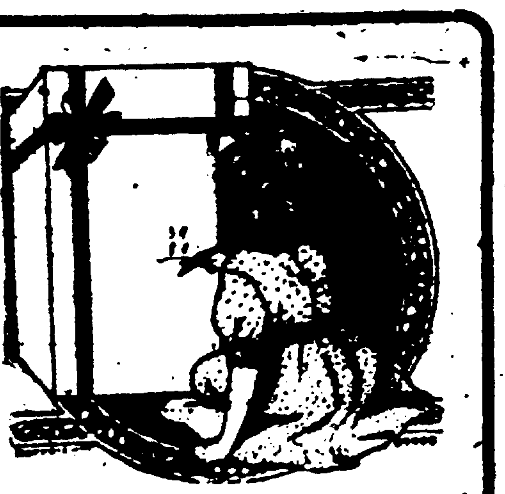
The accident that generally occurs is the unavoidable one—but that does not stop the "hold up" suit that costs money to defend against—BUT our insurance protects you against property and personal damages and the company fights the case.

See us today for rates.

DAVID & MASON AGENCY
55 N. FIRST STREET

FRUIT - - CANDY
SPECIALS
To-day—Everyday
Delicious Ice Cream
Light Lunches for the Business Man or Woman

SPECIAL—We have just received a shipment of Booth's "Milk and Butter" Chocolates, 80c per lb.



BOSTON CANDY KITCHEN
ANDRIANOS BROS. Phone 308

Saturday Specials

AT

THE CITY MARKET

The Store that Shares its Profits with its Customers

Fresh Beef, Veal, Lamb, Pork, Sausage, at lowest prices. Vegetables, all kinds.

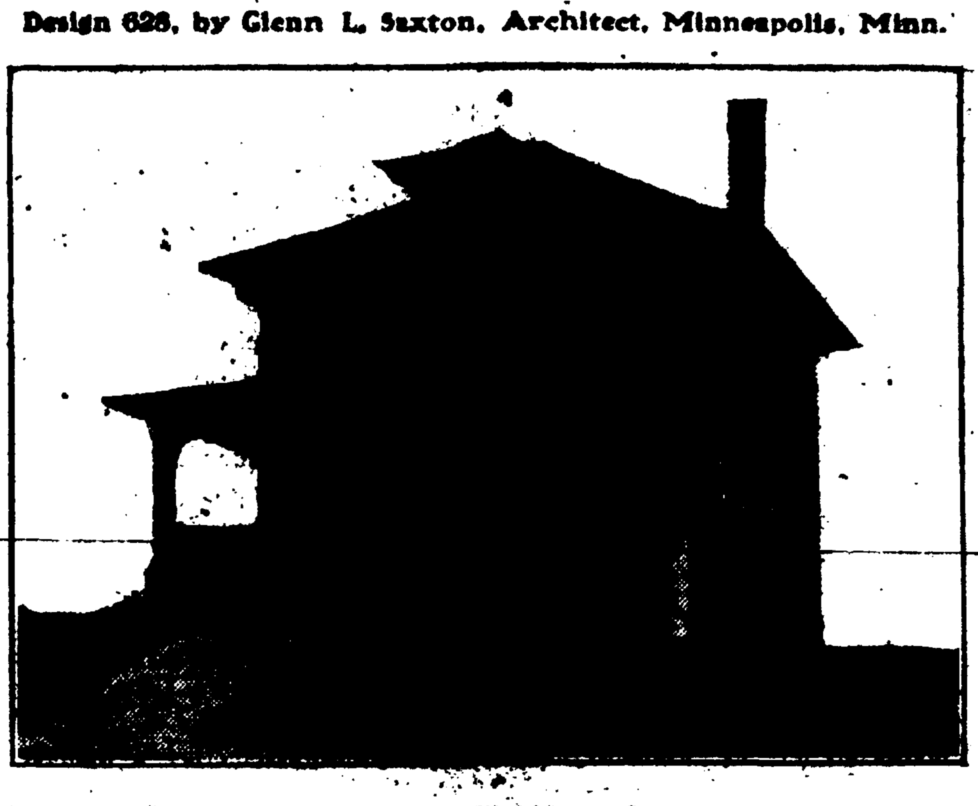
Telephone Your Order. We Deliver Free

We give National Red Stamps. Ask for them.

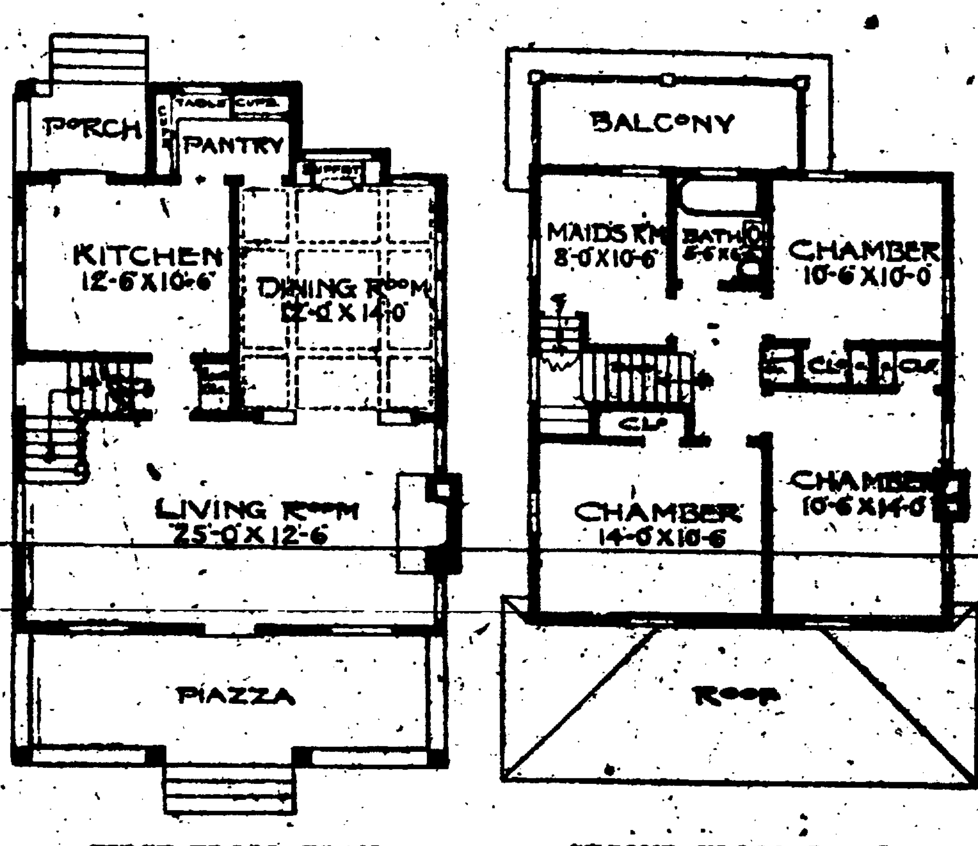
H. C. DANN

THE CITY MARKET PHONE 42

Design 628, by Glenn L. Saxton, Architect, Minneapolis, Minn.



PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.



FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

This is a combination of rough cast exterior on the first story and siding on the second story, divided by a belt course. The wide piazza and large chimney add much to the general exterior effect. The large living room has a fireplace and plenty of windows. Dining room fitted with a built-in buffet, beamed ceiling and a battery of three high windows. A butler's pantry connects with the dining room and kitchen, with cupboards and table for serving. There is a grade door. Stairway leads from the living room. Size, 26 feet by 28 feet. First story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet; basement, 7 feet under entire house. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $3,800.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will furnish a copy of Saxton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains 310 designs costing from $1,000 to $6,000; also a book of interiors, $1 per copy.

Wall Paper Special

10% Discount

on Cash Purchases of Wall Paper, on THURSDAY, FRIDAY and SATURDAY

OF THIS WEEK

WE DO PAPER HANGING

Paints, Oils and Varnishes

HULETT-TAFT CO., Inc.

208 ONEIDA STREET PHONE 354

Woman's World

Spirit of Human Kindliness Being Born In Spite of War.

PRINCESS PIERRE TROUBETZKOY (AMELIE RIVES).

"Human beings are growing kinder. A new spirit of brotherly love is being born within us. We are beginning to realize more than it was ever felt before that the woes of our neighbors are our woes and that he who would seek happiness must give happiness. It sounds old, doesn't it? But I tell you it is new. We are just beginning to feel our responsibilities to others."

Here is one who dares sound a note of hope in the face of the great world catastrophe, and the optimist who sees promise for humanity at even such a time is a woman and a novelist, the Princess Pierre Troubetzkoy (Amelie Rives).

But the war has not been the pyre out of which the princess' phoenix of brotherly love has risen. She believes that the great spirit of kindliness becoming more manifest in the world was being felt before that.

"The war has made some of us feel for others, but this great new spirit of kindliness was being felt before that," she explained. "The activities of the women of our country show that. The women here have been interesting themselves in all sorts of legislation to bring about better conditions for other women and other children than their own. We are beginning to understand the old philosophies of the east. I remember reading in ancient Hindu lore the belief that all human beings were part of a great whole and that instead of looking upon ourselves as separate individuals we should regard the whole."

The effect of this transitory stage which precedes a new social order is shown in the literature of our day, the princess believes. "There are no definite tendencies in literature today," she said, "because our books reflect a chaotic state." And then she went on to deplore the attitude of some American writers who are willing to "write for the market."

"I think that is the trouble with much of our literature," she deprecated. "It is written to order, just as clothes are made to order. Our plays, our novels, show this tendency. There are always people who are willing to sell their birthright for the mess of pottage. I couldn't write, however, if I were ordered to write such and such a thing for so much money.

"And money means something to me. We are not rich," she confided. "I am a breadwinner, too, you see, my husband's helpmate. I believe in women working. That is the only way to be happy. Of course it is not right for some women to work so hard and so long as they do, and it isn't right either for some of them to do nothing. I think the proper adjustment will come."

Chairs re-seated—cane, splint or leather; upholstering at reasonable prices. Wm. Lyets, 304 Pine st., Fulton. advt

LIFE IN A SUBMARINE.

How the Crew Gets Air Fit to Breathe While Under Water.

The commander of a submarine observes what is going on at the surface by means of the periscope, but when that is submerged he sees nothing. And if he moves his vessel while using the periscope he leaves a white flake on the water, which exposes him to the enemy.

However, the periscope is sometimes of a length—about seventeen feet—to give partial safety, as when only the tip shows the boat is unlikely to be damaged by an enemy's fire, although if the periscope chances to be shot away it might cause a fatal leak. Also the submarines can be rammed.

The diving rudders are mounted in pairs, one on either side, fore and aft, with an ordinary vertical rudder at the stern for lateral steering. Each motor set drives a reversible propeller. The accommodation for the navigating officers is in the conning tower, while the quarters of the crew of ten men are in the bow, as is also the galley.

Special arrangements have been made to secure an adequate ventilation of the interiors of the boats. During surface operations the air is drawn in from outside. When traveling submerged the heated atmosphere of the engine and the exhaled air of the crew are drawn off through ventilators which pass it through various filtering, oxygenating and cooling devices, after which it is returned to the interior and is fit to be breathed again.—Exchange.

TELEPATHY.

That, Like Other Mental Operations, Cannot Be Explained.

"Marie Corelli has attributed telepathy to electricity. Is there any scientific truth in the matter, or is it but a theory?" writes a correspondent, and we answer:

Entirely theory. None knows how telepathy originates because nothing is known of the nature of mind—that is, no law of the mind has been discovered. Everything is theory until the law is discovered and then proved beyond all possibility of doubt. Every possibility of doubt or error of any kind, however minute, must be annihilated before anything is published as a law in any scientific book.

The mass of obscure things, such as telepathy, mind reading, action of mind on mind (as in hypnotism), action of mind on matter without physical contact, influence, suggestion, personal magnetism, automatic writing, drawing, painting, reading closed books, causing sound to be heard, conversations in space between invisible personalities, warnings; sending of messages from dying persons to their friends, rescues from danger by mind influences, transmission of drawings and pictures to minds of others by mind processes—all these and perhaps as many as 100 more most remarkable mental things are now occurring constantly in some part of the world.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

Teeth of the Ancients.

The silence of the classics certainly seems to indicate that the Greeks and Romans suffered very little from their teeth. Words for toothache and for tooth extracting instruments can, indeed, be found in the Greek and Latin dictionaries, but the authors quoted for them are generally late and always uninteresting. We can hardly believe that if toothache had been common in Athens Aristophanes would have made no jokes about it. But a classical scholar may pretty safely be defied to cite a single Greek or Latin passage about it. Even Lucretius when he gets on the subject of teeth in a passage where a reference to toothache might be expected, merely refers to the jar given to the teeth by very cold water or by biting a stone in one's bread.—London Chronicle.

Reciprocity.

"Dear Harold," with sadness she wrote to her former fiance, "as you are probably aware, I am to be married to Mr. Anthony the coming month. I shall therefore appreciate it if you will burn all the little notes I sent you, assuring you of reciprocity in regard to those you sent me."

She immediately received this reply: "Dear Dorothy—I shall certainly comply with your request at once. And, incidentally, as your new fiance holds a few notes of mine I shall deem it a great favor if you will induce him to burn them with the rest."—National Food Magazine.

WHITMAN CUTS FAIR $70,000

Commission Will Not Build New Race Track and Grandstand

Albany, May 13.—Governor Whitman has whittled $510,71 more out of the appropriation and supply bills, makinga total in all to date of $1,-322,083.

The hospitals for the insane, under the control of the State Hospital Commission suffered principally from the pruning knife, the Chief Executive taking from their appropriations $236,v77.

The Highways Department came under the executive scrutiny, but no cuts were made in its appropriations. Highways Commissioner Edwin G. Duffey, who was an Amherst College classmate of the Governor, and one of his first appointees, was questioned about a reappropriation of $149,716 for a Greene county highway. He declared the money was absolutely necessary. The Governor gave him until Monday to investigate more thoroughly the necessity for this item.

The appropriation for Dr. J. J. O'Connell, Health Officer of the Port of New York, also went through the ordeal unscathed.

"Why couldn't your department be turned over to the Federal government?" asked the Governor.

"There would be too many delays from Washington—red tape," replied Dr. O'Connell.

He explained that at present the steamship companies pay 80 per cent. of the expenses of the office and the state only 20 per cent. He estimated that if the Federal government took charge the state would be assessed about 30 per cent. of the expenses of the office.

The sum of $3,993 was cut from the expenses of the State Health Commissioner and $70,000 from the State Fair Commission. The $70,000 was to be used for a new racetrack and the removal of the grandstand at the state fair grounds at Syracuse.

The cuts in the appropriations for state hospitals for the insane were made over the loud protests of the heads of these institutions and the members of the State Hospital Commission. They said that the overcrowding of the hospitals, particularly in the metropolitan district, was beyond description and brought about a condition that was both inhuman and wasteful. The practice of cutting down state hospital appropriations, they said, caused the situation.

Dr. Andrew D. Morgan, president of the Hospital Commission, said there were at present 1,400 patients on parole, many of whom he believed should not be at large. The condition, he said, was unavoidable because of the lack of funds.

The motor vehicle tax bill, designed to increase the state revenue several hundreds thousand dollars annually, was vetoed by Governor Whitman. It was found that the bill as drawn would exempt all motor propelled machines except motorcycles from taxation after this year. Such a condition would mean a loss of about $1,500,000 a year to the State.

POLITICAL BOSS' PHOTO PRINTED ON CIRCULARS

Sheriff Lawrence Serven of Rockland county, delegate to catch Wm. C. Cleary, who was acquitted of murder, but is now indicted for irregularities in his accounts as town clerk of Haverstraw, began a country-wide search for the former boss yesterday.

He had Frederick Newman, father of Eugene Newman, whom Cleary killed for marrying his daughter, Anna, print 500 circulars bearing Cleary's photograph and calling for his arrest. Cleary is about five feet ten inches tall, weighs about 200 pounds, has a full, round face and sandy hair.

It is reported in Haverstraw that Deputy Attorney General Wilber Chambers is determined that an unremitting search be made for the boss, and is planning to set detectives and the New York police on his trail.

All Kinds of

HOME-MADE JELLIES

at LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

WANTS A NATIONAL BANK IN CANAL ZONE

Helm of Kentucky Would Go After South American Trade.

Washington.—Representative Helm of Kentucky has a plan to establish a national bank at Ancon, in the Panama canal zone, with branches elsewhere in that country. He would call it the Pan-American bank and give it a capital stock of $25,000,000, divided into shares of par value of $100 each.

Just before congress adjourned Mr. Helm introduced a bill to incorporate the Pan-American bank, and when the Sixty-fourth congress convenes he will press it for action.

"The commercial tieup resulting from the European war has convinced every thinking man in this country that foreign trade is a vital element in our domestic prosperity and that the continents of North and South America have greater identity of interests than was ever realized before," said Mr. Helm. "There never was a time when opportunity was knocking so loud at our doors. The commerce and business of a continent are within our grasp. The manufacturing enterprises in Central and South America are very limited, and it is to this matter that I wish the attention of the country could be directed.

"Few, if any, of the republics to the south of us have the means of transporting or delivering their products to any other country. Under existing conditins nearly all the trade of Central and South America flows across the Atlantic. It ought to be flowing from North America to Central and South America.

"About the only means of creating commercial and business relations are banking facilities, transportation, press bureau and mercantile agents. Under the federal reserve act a bank with $1,000,000 capital in the United States can establish a branch bank in any of the countries in Central or South America. This provision, in my opinion, does not meet the conditions. What we need is a bank of sufficient proportions and magnitude and importance and prestige to handle the business of the continent.

"The government of the canal zone is going to be just as stable and steady as the government of the United States. If we establish a bank on the canal zone it becomes identified with the locality. Our government is behind it. That guarantees confidence and makes it a sure go. The governments to the south of us would be inspired with confidence in the institution."

At 3 A. M.

Dad—I'm gonna paint the baby with phosphorescent paint.

Ma—Goodness! Why?

Dad—So I can find her in the dark without stubbing my toes.—Philadelphia Ledger.

BRAVE FRENCH AIR MAN CAN FIGHT NO MORE

Capture of Roland Garros Big Loss to Allies' Aerial Fleet.

Paris.—When Roland G. Garros, the daring French aviator, was captured by the Germans one of the most picturesque careers of the war came to a halt. The lieutenant had proved himself to be the most brilliant and daring air man in any army.

Lieutenant Garros is well known in the United States, having flown in many competitions in that country. One of his latest exploits was at Dunkirk, when he shot dead in the air the aviator and the observer of a German aeroplane. He went out against this machine alone, and as his machine was the faster he was able to gain an advantageous position, from which he fired with fatal precision.

Photo by American Press Association.

ROLAND GARROS.

Garros was born of French parents at Cape Town, South Africa, in 1885. He is a graduate of the University of Paris and of its law school and for a time practiced his profession in the French capital.

The exploits of Garros have made him a prominent figure in aviation circles throughout the world. He has appeared in meets in Richmond, Chattanooga, Memphis, New Orleans, Dallas, Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, Waco, Houston, San Antonio, El Paso, Mexico City, Vera Cruz, Havana and New York and holds a number of speed prizes won at tournaments held in many European cities.

On Dec. 11, 1912, Garros ascended to a height of 19,082 feet and established a world's altitude mark. On his flight from Tunis to Sicily in December, 1912, he traveled for a distance of 160 miles entirely over water. When he flew across the Mediterranean from St. Raphael to Bizerta he traveled 500 miles in 7 hours and 53 minutes.

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND

The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"

The largest and most costly steamer on any inland water of the world. Sleeping accommodations for 1500 passengers.

"CITY OF ERIE" —— 3 Magnificent Steamers —— "CITY OF BUFFALO"

BETWEEN

BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND

Leave Buffalo . . . P. M. Leave Cleveland . . . P. M.
Arrive Cleveland . . . A. M. Arrive Buffalo . . . A. M.

(Eastern Standard Time)

Connections at Cleveland for Cedar Point, Put-in-Bay, Toledo, Detroit and all points West and Southwest. Railroad tickets reading between Buffalo and Cleveland are good for transportation on our steamers. Ask your ticket agent for tickets via C. & B. Line.

D/34

BOYS

SUITS

Special at $2.98

30 Suits that we only have one or two left of. Values up to $5.00, while they last

$2.98

Sizes 10 to 18 years

Better Look These Over

New Blouses for Boys
25c -- 50c

Many new patterns

THE SPORT BLOUSE
With the New Collars for Boys
50c and $1.00

S. LIPSKY & SON
27 First Street Fulton, N. Y.

JAMESTOWN GETS GRANGE

Watertown, May 14.—State Grange Master W. H. Vary announced yesterday that the next annual meeting of the State Grange would be held at Jamestown starting February 1, 1916.

TRIMMED HATS $1.75
see window display
DIX MILLINERY STORE

MAZDA LAMPS
...at...
THE ELECTRIC SHOP
22 South First St. Phone 59

STILL APPEARING

Rhode Island Woman Furnishes List of Those Living and Dead

If further proof of the traveling qualities of The Evening Times were needed it would be forthcoming.

On April 17 this newspaper printed a letter from one of San Francisco's attorneys asking for information of heirs of the estate of Moses Ludington who died in the far western state about fifty years. That particular news article attracted attention in many quarters—in Fulton and surrounding country, in Rhode Island, Maine, in Connecticut, in Hull, Canada, etc., with the result that Sid. M. van Wyck, the San Francisco attorney, has been able to get into communication with a number of probable heirs to the fortune left by Moses Ludington. As each piece of information was received of a new claimant to the estate publicity was given in the newspaper, and each time results were secured.

Yesterday's mail brought from Pittsburgh, Pa., another letter that may help Mr. van Wyck in securing the desired information. J. W. Chesbro is the writer. He lives at 2450 Hazelton ave., Pittsburgh, and he states that he is a grandson of Moses Ludington and a son of Sabrina Ludington Chesbro. Within a few hours after receipt of Mr. Chesbro's letter news that is quite specific regarding a Ludington heiress came to hand. This time from Mrs. Clarinda E. F. Iden of North Scituate, Rhode Island, RD. 2, who informs The Times that she is a granddaughter of Moses Ludington, whose eldest daughter was Mrs. Iden's mother. Mrs. Iden states also, that she is familiarly known as "Clara" by her friends. Mrs Iden has compiled a list of names of the descendants of Moses Ludington, living and dead. Those living follow:

Henry Franklyn Foster, Pulaski, N. Y.; Clara Foster Iden, North Scituate, R. I.; Loura May Calkins, at., Syracuse, N. Y.; Helen M. Calkins, Bridgeport, Conn.; Claribel Calkins, Bridgeport, Conn.; Herbert Calkins, Watertown, N. Y.; J. W. Chesbro, 2450 Hazleton ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Minna Craiger Ross, Heilwood, Indiana Co., Pa.; Cumo P. Craiger, Heilwood, Indiana Co., Pa. (these two are children of Mary Chesbro); Cora Ames, Bridgeport, Conn. (widow of Frank Ames); Alzaide Ludington, Middletown, N. Y. (widow of Austin Ludington).

In the list following Mrs. Iden has included the names of descendants of Moses Ludington who are dead:

Lucena Cordelia, who was married to David Chalon Foster, Fulton, N. Y., five children were born to the Fosters, viz: Moses Eldred; Sophrona, who married Job Peckham, Volney, N. Y. (one child was born to the Peckhams); Amelia Ludington, who was married to Henry Rockwood, Fulton, N. Y. no children (both dead); Esther Sophia Ludington, married to Alansing Inoe, Scriba, N. Y. (both dead); Ellen Ludington, married to John Robinson, Syracuse, N. Y., (both dead); two children, Adelaide Robinson-Litts, 20 Taylor ave., So. Norwalk, Conn.; Frank Robinson Ames (dead), married Cora (?) lives at Bridegport, Conn.; Adelaide Ludington, married J. N. Ames, Esq., (both dead). No children but they adopted Frank Robinson Ames. Child Austin Eldred Ludington (dead) married Alzaide McCoy of Buchanan, Mich.; wife lives at Middletown, N. Y.. Sabrina, married to William Chesbro, Fulton, N. Y., (both dead). They had five children: Charles (died unmarried), Mary Chesbro-Craiger (dead). Tow children living—Cuno Parker Craiger, Heilwood, Pa.; Minna Craiger Ross, Heilwood, Pa.; Joseph William Chesbro, 2450 Hazelton ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.; two infants who died in infancy. Mary Ann, who was married to Eliphlet Calkins (both dead); three children—Helen M. Calkins, Bridgeport, Conn; Clarabel Calkins, Bridgeport, Conn.; Herbert Calkins, Watertown, N. Y.

All information concerning the whereabouts of Ludington heirs is forwarded by The Evening Times to the San Francisco attorney, and Mrs. Iden's will be included in the next mailing.

BAND CONCERT

Final Arrangements For First Concert of Season Were Made Last Night

At the regular weekly meeting of the Elks last night the final plans for the formal dedication of the new veranda and concert-platform wer settled upon. Next Wednesday night is the date set and at that time the Elks' Citizens' band will give the first of a series of summer band concerts, which have been held in the city throughout the warm months from time immemorial. In connection with the concert the Elks will hold a strawberry and ice cream festival and the committee is at present selecting a number of pretty girls of the city to act as waitresses at the event. J. C. Fisher heads the committee on arrangements and these gentlemen pledge themselves last evening to work hard for the success of the affair.

It goes without saying that the present location of the band concerts is the most central, and, in addition, the most beautiful as regards the stage setting, of any the city has ever had. The Elks' home with the addition of the new porch and bandstand above it has assumed the proportion of a modern fraternal gathering place far in advance of anything in this section of the state. The porch has added one-hundred per cent to the attractiveness of the grounds and the building and in fact the entire neighborhood, and with the building as a sounding board, so to speak, the acoustic qualities of the site are very desirable. The large crowd that has attended the concerts in former years can well be accommodated in the spacious grounds of the order and hundreds of people can be seated across the street in the park along the river edege. The kitchen of the Elks is modern in every respect and will insure clean and prompt service of any delicacies which may be served at the concerts.

Police supervision of traffic in that section Wednesday night will probably be needed and arrangements have been made for that feature. Automobiles can be parked along the street and in the rear of the Elks' home and suitable seating arrangements for many people will also be made.

Due in a great measure to the work of John W. Stevenson, the present Exalted Ruler, the membership of the local lodge has incrased by leaps and bounds in the past year. With the new home as an added attraction the roll of members is sure to increase further, particularly as the officers of the lodge intend to leave no stone unturned this year to make the lodge attractive to its members by the inauguration of many special social events to which the members and their friends will be invited. A monster clam-bake is being talked of, and an excursion to some nearby resort will probably be planned. There is also some talk among the members of putting a baseball team in the field, which will play the teams of other fraternal orders in this section as well as Elks' teams from other points in the State. As almost all the Elks' lodges of any size in the state have representative basebal lteams it is very likely that the movement among the members of the local lodge will receive encouragement. The membership of the Fulton lodge is greater in proportion to population, with possibly one exception, than that of any other lodge in the state.

At the meeting last night the subject of the state convention of Elks at Troy was taken up. Mr. Stevenson and L. F. Cornell were in Syracuse yesterday conferring with the railroad companies in regard to rates, etc. as most of the transportation companies have decided to give special rates to the Elks' for convention week. The Fulton contingent will probably make the trip by special train and it was the purpose of Messrs. Stevenson and Cornell to learn the approximate cost of the train. The Syracuse lodge is also planning to engage a special train but nothing definite was announced last night.

The members of the local body who will attend the convention expect to leave early in the morning of June 10.

NEMO SALE

Friday and Saturday

NEMO CORSETS

$3.50 Corsets for $2.69
$3.00 Corsets for $2.19
$2.00 and $1.50 Corsets for $1.25

FINE EMBROIDERY

15c Edge and Insertion for 10c

PHONE 200

O. HENDERSON & CO.
ONEIDA STREET

Ice Costs Money,
Eclipse Refrigerators
insure Economy and Convenience
L. P. SMITH CO.
Your Hardware Dealer

FRESH VEGETABLES
EVERY DAY
at LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

"By Serving You Best We Help Ourselves Most"

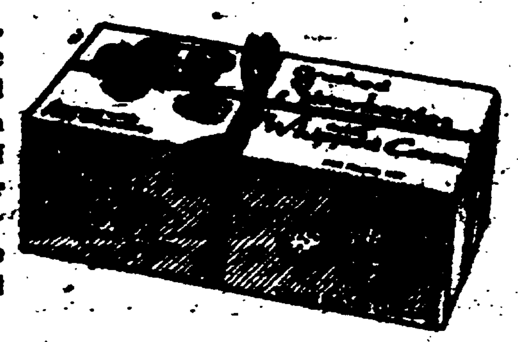
OUR THIRD

ANNIVERSARY DAY

Saturday, May 15, 1915 Carnation Day

¶ This day—Saturday, May 15, 1915—is the beginning of another year of business for this store in Fulton. For the three years just past we have endeavored to give to the people of this locality a Strictly High-class Quality Drug Store Service in every respect, and the people in turn have shown their appreciation by very loyal and liberal patronage for which we thank them. We call this, our third birthday, "Carnation Day" for we will give to each customer at the fountain a Carnation.

CANDY SPECIAL
CHOCOLATE COVERED CRUSHED STRAWBERRIES WITH WHIPPED CREAM
Can you imagine a more delicious combination than this?



They are made of fresh strawberries, crushed in sugar so as to retain all the flavor, combined with rich whipped cream, and then heavily coated with pure chocolate. The result is one of the most delicious confections ever devised This is what we offer on our great candy special tomorrow and we give you our word you never tasted better 60c candy in your life.

Full Pound Box, 33 CENTS

TALCUM SPECIAL TO-MORROW ONLY
we will offer you our twenty-five cent Talcum Powder, Violet, Rose, or Corylopsis, and a ten cent Face Chamois, both for 19 Cents

Palmolive Free Coupon $1.31

This coupon entitles the holder to the $1.90 assortment of Palmolive specialties upon presentation of 59 cents.

Towards the purchase of the $1.90 assortment as advertised.

This Offer Absolulety Expires May 15, 1915

6-CAKES OF PALMOLIVE SOAP .... .90
1-JAR OF PALMOLIVE CREAM .... .50
1-BOTTLE OF PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO .. .50
Total Vaue $1.90

ROBERTS & WOOD
"The Metropolitan Druggists"

"The New York Shop"
is showing

Great Specials
For Saturday

15 New Suits, [in the newest effects and materials] at $15.00

~~25 New White Sport Coats . . . $10.75~~

10 New Covert and Black and White Check Coats $6.75

50 New Models in Blouses (Crepe de Chene, Crepe Meteors, Taffetas, $2.98

Our Great Sale of Wash Waists

is in full swing and will be conducted Saturday at each 49c, usually sell for twice as much.

ASK FOR AND INSIST UPON GETTING NATIONAL MERCHANDISE STAMPS. THEY SAVE YOU 2 1-2 PER CENT ON YOUR PURCHASES

M. J. McDONALD & CO.

Oneida Street Fulton, N. Y.

WAS INJURED

Willam Middleton Lost His Right Eye By Unusual Accident

William Middleton, a rural mail carrier of the local post office, who has just moved from Utica st. to State st., lost the sight of his right eye yesterday by a peculiar accident. Mr. Middleton had finished his rounds and, during the afternoon, he was engaged in making some repairs to a shed in the rear of his property. Several planks on the side of the shed were held in place by a steel rake and some violent motion of Mr. Middleton dislodged some of the boards. In their fall they carried the rake down with them and as Mr. Middleton turned see what was the matter the iron point of the rake entered his right eye. Blinded with blood the man called for help and several neighbors responded. In spite of the pain and shock Mr. Middleton went at once to the office of Dr. Lake where a close examination disclosed the fact that the sight of the eye was permanently ruined.

An operation for the removal of the optic was decided upon and it was performed this morning at the Lee Memorial hospital by Dr. Lake. Mr. Middleton is still suffering from the shock but it is expected that he will be able to return to his work in a few weeks. The sight of the left eye was not injured.

SON FINED $125

West Side Junk Dealer Was Found Guilty of Receiving Stolen Goods

Daniel York and his son, Charles York, who conduct a junk shop on West 1st st., were arraigned in Police Court this morning charged with receiving stolen goods. The Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company reported to the police Wednesday that some boys had entered the old plant of the company below the lower dam and had stlen a large quantity f copper wire. The police immediately made a search among the junk shops of the city and the loot was discovered on the York premises. The elder York, confessed to having purchased the stuff from two boys and Wesley Conway and Harry Wilson were arrested charged with the theft. They admitted their guilt and after a severe reprimand were allowed to go.

Daniel York has been arrested before on the same charge and in the first instance he was fined $100 or 100 days in jail. This morning Judge Wilson told the man that he could not do otherwise than impose a like fine and promptly fined Daniel York $100 with the alternative of 100 days and Charles York was fined $25 or 25 days. York made a plea for clemency, but Judge Wilson would not consider it, saying that the junk dealers of this city must be discouraged from buying goods from small boys as the goods were stolen prpetty in nine out ten instances.

"Just as soon as the boys find that they can not market their plunder," said the Jude, "they will stop stealing. The manufacturers of this town are up in arms about this thing and it must be stopped. I consider it a deliberate encouragement of larceny for a junk dealer to buy goods of this kind and in such quantities of a small boy. A man must know that they were stolen and if he as the slightest suspicions he should inquire at the boys' home before he buys teh goods. The mother of one f the boys, who is n probation, comes in with her son every week and although he shows signs of incorrigibility, she considers it hard that junk dealers are allowed to buy such goods and thus encourage the boy to steal. I cannot lower the amount of this fine, Mr. York, but I can give you a few days in which to pay it if you wish. And if you are arrested again on the same charge I shall consider it my duty to give you the limit of the law as this practice must be stopped."

York asked the Judge repeatedly to lower the fine claiming that he did not have the money although he has property. The Judge was inflexible; York finally produced his son's fine and said he would like a few days' grace in which to pay his own fine. This was granted and the letter of the law governing stolen property was read to him, after which he was allowed to leave, promising that he would never be guilty of the same offence.

In his statement in the court room York brought a smile to the faces of the attendants by telling the Judge that he had been robbed of $300 worth of junk some years ago and called up the man who was chief of police at that time telling him of the theft. "He said, find out who the parties are and I'll have them arrested," said York, "and that's all the satisfaction I got."

SALE OF

60 New Dresses

Made to Sell at $7.00 to $10.00 on Saturday at 9 A. M., at . . $2.50

A manufacturer's overstock of latest and best selling styles, all this season's make, and good enough for anybody for afternoon or evening dress.

Come early and get your size.

Our $25,000 Gloversville Stock
at 50c on the Dollar is selling fast in our bargain basement.

Are You Getting Your Share of the Bargains?

You surely will be in need of some of the hundreds of articles which we are selling in our basement at 1c, 2c, 3c, 5c, 10c, 15c, 19c, 34c, 48c, 59c, 69c, 79c, 88c, $1.50 and $4.50. Many of these articles sold from 5c up to $25.00 and your dollar will go as far as $2 or $5 elsewhere.

Clean-up Sale of Tailored Suits

See Window

Our entire stock of Ladies' Suits on Sale at about 1/2 price $12.00, $15.00, $19.00, $25.00 and $30.00 Suits at $6.00, $9.98, $14.98

New Millinery

Bought underprice and offered to you at same reductions.

$3.00 Shapes and Ready-to-wear Straw Hats at $1.25

New Trimmed Hats and Shapes value to $5.00 at $1.98

Porch Furniture

Porch Hammocks, Porch Shades, Lawn Seats, Crex Rugs, Matting, Cocoa Mattings. Specially priced for this week

New All Silk Crepe De Chine and Wash Silk Waists
Value $3.00, at $1.98

Silk Sale for Saturday Only

$1.25 Silk Poplins, 40-in. wide for $1.00

$1.25 and $1.00 Fancy Silks, per yd 89c

Assorted lot of 75c and 89c silks per yd. 50c

$1.00 Black All Silk Messaline, yd. wide, per yd. 79c

Why trade elsewhere and pay more when you can buy it for less at

M. KATZ & CO.

"The Store That Makes Good"

58 S. First Street Fulton, N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

For Sale Cheap—House and barn on large lot 50x150; finely located at 310 Highland st. Inquire R. E. Harrison, at Spencer's office, 28½ East First st. 125c

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Rooms to Rent—Furnished or unfurnished, for light housekeeping; all modern conveniences. F. G. Dolbear, 203 Worth st. 127

To Rent—Furnished apartment, for housekeeping; 3 rooms; bath and all conveniences; desirable locations. Inquire S. Times office. 125

For Sale—Seven tons hardwood ashes James Hunter, Jr., 322 Oneida st. 127c

To Rent—Furnished apartments, also one large front room. Inquire 113 Rochester st. 125

For Sale—Large ice box, suitable for store; also 16-foot row boat at 510 So. 1st st. Phone 148. 128c

Furnished Rooms—3, single or en suite. 205 Cayuga st. 129c

To Rent—Flat, lower, at 608 Rochester st, 130c

To Rent—Rooms for light housekeeping. 512 E. First, South. 126c

To Rent—5 rooms, upper flat. 412 Erie st. 126c

THE HUBBARDS CARRIED HEAVY LIFE INSURANCE

Elbert Hubbard and his wife, Alice Hubbard, who went down with the Lusitania, carried accident insurance aggregating $82,000. The Aetna wrote a policy of $57,000 on Hubbard's life, and the same company carries a policy of $25000 on Mrs. Hubbard's life. Mrs. Hubbard's policy was only recently taken out, and her only premium payment was one of $5. The amount of the policy goes to her estate.

SIMPLICITY TO MARK ONE GRADUATION

Little Falls, May 13.—At a regular meeting of the Board of Education held last night, a committee consisting of Commissioners Burrell and Lundstrum was appointed to have charge of the graduation exercises. The board went on record as favoring simplicity in the matter of the exercises, having only flowers that are picked from fields or garden and encourging small expense in the matter of dress. Superintendent De Camp voiced the opinion that he was hopeful of the day arriving when the graduates of any school of which he was the head would have to receive their diplomas in gowns made by themselves. Mr. De Camp has generally refused to permit giving flowers of any kind to the class members. A resolution was finally passed that the graduates of the High school this year should adopt a uniform costume at small expense for the exercises.

Community Notes

[illegible] of the firm of Gilbert & Nichols, will return from Clifton Springs tomorrow. Mr. Gilbert's friends are glad to hear he has improved greatly in health.

Ex-Mayor Joseph Conners and Mrs. Connors are removing to the house recently vacated by Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Burgard.

* * *

For Rent—Bedroom with use of bath, telephone and all conveniencees. For information call Telephone 1429 or 4552. 127

* * *

Ministers of the city who desire to have inserted in Saturday's Evenings Times their church notices are requested to supply "copy" at the publication office Saturday morning very early.

* * *

Mrs. R. B. MacRae has returned from Syracuse where she has been for some time. Mrs. MacRae attended the music festival while there and heard Miss Margaret Wilson sing.

* * *

Dr. and Mrs. Halstead are in Syracuse, called there by the death of Mrs. Halstead's mother.

* * *

W. J. Halk who has been a guest in the home of his sister, Mrs. R. B. MacRae returned to his home in western Ontario, Canada, on Wednesday.

* * *

Miss Norine Porter, formerly of this city but now of Syracuse, is visiting friensd here for a few days.

* * *

Edward Joslyn, of the Peoples' Hardware Company is in New York for a few days on business.

AUTO CLUB PLANNING FOR FIRST SEASON RUN

The commitee in charge of the first club run of the Fulton Auto Club will meet early next week to decide on the final plans for the event. The committee comprises Messrs. Morin, Penfild and Van Sanford. At a recent dinner of the club, President McCully announced that the club has been invited to make Weedsport its objective point for the first run and Cicero the place visited last year has also been mentioned as a stopping place on the first run. This morning it was suggested that the Inn at Mexico Point will be open May 29 and as Mr. Morin stated today that the run would in all probability be made either Tuesday or Wednesday evening in the first week of June, the Mexico proposition may be considered.

At any of the places mentioned a good dinner can be served at moderate price and the club will extend an invitation to every auto owner in this section, whether he be a club member not, to accompany the club on its run. Granted good weather it is expected that the first run of the club will break all records as he turnout at the club banquet and ther epresentation of cars in the parade proved that there are hosts of live automobilists in this section.

POLICE MAY GET EARLY VACATIONS

At the last meeting of the Fire and Police Board the subject of vacations for the police and firemen was discussed but nothing definite decided upon. Although vacations in the past have generally started for the police about June 15, the patrolmen may be able to get vacations earlier this year than heretofore. The middle of the summer always proves to be one of the busiest times of the year for the local department and several of the local force prefer a vacation early in June or early in the fall.

The men are alloted ten days and special officers are appointed to take the places of the men on vacation.

OSWEGO TO HAVE NEAR-SKYSCRAPER

Yesterday's Palladium publishes a statement, in effect that a company is in process of formation in Oswego, whose idea is to build a five-story office building on some West 2d st. lots owned by H. D. Pierce. It is proposed to build a structure costing about $100,000.

Tentative plans have already been drawn by Architect L. L. Cope and a number of prominent business men are interested in the proposition. The ground floor would be given over to stores and the other stores to offices.

A FOOD SALE

There will be held a food sale, tomorrow, by the women of Zion Episcopal church, at the People's Hardware store, in E. 1st st., where every appetizing and substantial dainty may be bought.

STORAGE OF EXPLOSIVES IS A MISDEMEANOR

Watertown, May 14.—Since last Saturday's explosion of gunpowder, by which two boys lost their lives and the city received a severe shaking up, it has been found that a new phase is shown in fixing the responsibility.

According to section 1894 of the penal laws of the State is is a misdemeanor for any person to keep gunpowder or a high explosive within the limits of any city or village and according to City Engineer E. W. Sayles the storehouse of Thomas H. Bradley was well within the boundary line of the city.

Fire Chief H. C. Bundy was advised of the authority of the state labor department today in a letter from Commissioner James M. Lynch in answer to an inquiry sent to the department Saturday by the chief.

"Chapter 24 of the laws of 1915 gives this department jurisdiction over black powder, dynamite and other similar explosives," writes Commissioner Lynch. "We have organized a bureau to take care of the explosives and as soon as we receive a supply of the law from the printer, we will be pleased to send you a copy."

STATE STREET SCOUTS WON FROM ERIE ST.

In five innings the Boy Scouts attached to State Sstreet M. E. church won, 6-5, from the baseball team belonging to Erie st. school, Wednesday.

A gloomy air pervaded the camp at the end of the third inning, when the score stood 3-0 in favor of the Erie st. lads, a condition due to some bad playing on the part of the Scouts, but Pickett, Crandall and Woods came to the rescue at the critical stage of the game and soon conditions were reversed.

The batteries for the Scouts were Crandall and Pickett and Pickett and Woods, while for Erie st. Evans and Rashburn held the important positions.

RECENT AUTO BUYERS

Frank LaPorte, the Oneida st. grocer, has purchased a new Oldsmobile touring car.

* * *

Frederick G. Spencer is contemplating the purchase of an Overland touring car.

* * *

John R. Sullivan of the West Side has purchased a new Franklin touring car.

* * *

Albert Roberts, the druggist, has purchased a new Overland.

* * *

E. W. Putnam, the druggist, recently purchased a Reo touring car.

* * *

Grove Gilbert has purchased a new Franklin touring car and is entertaining his many friends with rides in the new bus.

* * *

Francis Stafford has purchased a new Overland touring car.

* * *

Harlow Spurbeck of South Granby is another Overland buyer.

* * *

H. P. Rockwood, who lives south of the city, purchased an Overland this week of the Van Wagenen Co.

We are Agents for
CHASE & SANBORN'S
Fine Teas and Coffees
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

MRS. JOHN DRESSER DIED LAST NIGHT

Sophia, the wife of John Dresser, of 518 Cayuga st., died at her home last night after an illness of several months. Mrs. Dresser was 73 years of age and had lived here for the past thirty-odd years. Mr. Dresser formerly conducted a business here but retired about three years ago.

Mrs. Dresser was a member of the Zion Episcopal church and despite her advanced age took an interest in the work of the church and whenever possible worked actively in church circles. Rev. M. J. Peters of the Zion church will have charge of the funeral services whic will be held at her late home at 2.30 o'clock Sunday afternoon and from the church an hour later.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Dresser is survived bf Miss Mae Burke, a niece, who has always made her home with Mrs. Dresser, and a sister, Mrs. Elizabeth McCullough of Kingston, Ont.

Happy Hour Theatre
"THE HOUSE OF FEATURES"

TODAY
Big Feature Drama in Two Parts
"THE TROUBADOUR"
Four Others

TOMORROW
"THE BOMBAY BUDDHA"
A Drama of the Far East, featuring two famous players, Hobert Henry and Frances Neilson.
"ALL IN THE SAME BOAT"
(comedy)
and Two Others

WATCH FOR OUR BIG SUNDAY BILL

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

If Results count for anything, The Evening Times has almost reached the much-discussed

"Pschycological Moment"

WHY?

Because of the leaps and bounds made by the circulation department within a fortnight

Circulation Growing Every Minute! Watch It Grow More!

After several months of painful illnesss and a couple bad sinking spells, The Evening Times believes

MR. BUSINESS

of Fulton, N. Y., is back on the job. From the very first The Evening Times knew he would recover.

He has recovered always.

And now is the time to advertise in YOUR PAPER —the local home paper, because YOUR PAPER—the the Peoples's Paper is a home institution. The Evening Times leaves the People's money in YOUR TOWN; Does not take it away never to return.

Make Yours the Livest Ads in the Evening Times

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

Story of a Little Girl Who Is a Successful Farmer.

MYRTLE MANN PRIZE WINNER.

She Won the State Championship of the Nebraska Boys and Girls' Gardening Club—Puzzle and Games For Small People—Interesting Information.

When boys and girls make up their minds to do something worth while they usually can win success if they stick to their tasks. Last summer in the state of Nebraska there was conducted under the joint auspices of the United States department of agriculture and the agricultural extension service of the Nebraska university farm a contest among boys and girls. The object was to teach the children farming in a practical way. There were a large number of contestants, and many fine crops were raised. Miss Myrtle Mann of Chadron, however, proved to be the best farmer of the lot. On a plot of ground about half the size of a city lot Myrtle raised over a ton and a quarter of vegetables and made a net profit after all expenses were paid of $71.40. Pretty good for a girl of twelve years of age. When it is considered that a city lot is but 25 by 100 feet in area, Myrtle's farming seems all the more wonderful. She was awarded the state championship, having beaten all competitors.

MYRTLE MANN, CHADRON, NEB.

Rapid Count.

For this game the hostess should write on morsels of paper all the numbers from one to twenty, writing each several times.

Jumble the numbers several times in a basket and place the basket on a table or stand around which the company sit.

Each person in turn takes one of the papers and, upon seeing what number it contains, must name some celebrated thing connected with this number. For example, a person drawing the number seven could name the seven sleepers, the seven wonders of the world, "We Are Seven" and seventh son of a seventh son.

The papers are retained to count to their credit by all those who succeed in answering.

Those who fail must pass their papers to those seated next to them, who in turn try to name something appropriate.

Any one failing must give a forfeit to be redeemed later on.

Facts About Bells.

We do not know in what country bells were first used, but their origin dates way back in the past. In the writings of Moses we are told that "bells of gold" were suspended from the robe of the high priest when he officiated in the service of the sanctuary.

History tells us that bells were appendages to the royal costumes of the ancient Persians, and Aeschylus and Euripides say, "They were concealed within the hollows of the shields of Grecian heroes and commanders."

Buddy's Wish.

There is a long fence in our yard
 And one day I peeped over
And saw upon the other side
 A daisy field of clover.

It made me wish and wish so hard
 That I was big like Rover,
For when he's tired of our yard
 He runs and jumps right over.

Right into that big clover field
 He jumps and rolls all over.
I wish I were a doggie, too,
 To play in that nice clover.
 —Philadelphia Record.

Riddle.

I live in wealth from week to week,
In poverty I live and meek.
You always see me in a pet
And always I am found in debt.
Alas, you find me in your fears!
'Tis I that help you make your tears;
But yet in happiness I dwell.
What is my nature—can you tell?
Answer—The letter E.

Dropped Letter Puzzle.

Whole I am a Roman governor; extract a letter and I am very useful at dinner; extract another letter and I am a part of the body; curtail and I am a gentle blow.

Answer.—Pilate, plate, pate, pat.

Bed Adjuncts.

Of course you use them in summer, the delightfully crinkled, comfortably light, quaint and pretty dimity counterpanes. Besides, dimity is reminiscent of grandmothers and four posted beds, and we are all hunting up all the old family furniture we possibly can.

Then, too, to consider the practical as well as the artistic points of a dimity counterpane—it is so easily laundered that it can be washed at home as readily as a sheet.

All this you know and acknowledge—yes, indeed. The dimity spread is the best all round spread for summer. But do you know its uses in winter—in fact, in all the four seasons—or do you store your dimity "spreads" in a neat pile in the linen closet each fall to await the call of spring?

The very best use of all to which you can put this little housekeeper's friend is to use it next the blankets, and the very best time to use it is all the time.

It protects them from soiling; it is light in weight; it saves laundering and mussing of the handsome, heavy Marseilles spreads that we all like to use in winter, and it gives that necessary "white" finish to a bed that so many fastidious folk require.

A Marseilles counterpane is not only too weighty to be comfortable, but lacks the warmth of the lighter quilts and blankets. It should be folded back half its length and then thrown carefully over the footboard, leaving the dimity counterpane for use.

Whether the quilt goes under or over the dimity spread is a matter of taste. As many so called "full sized" quilts are often rather scanty for two people, placing the quilt under the counterpane holds it from slipping and really seems to increase its size. Besides, it keeps it clean and leaves the outer bed covering the white one, so restful to most eyes.

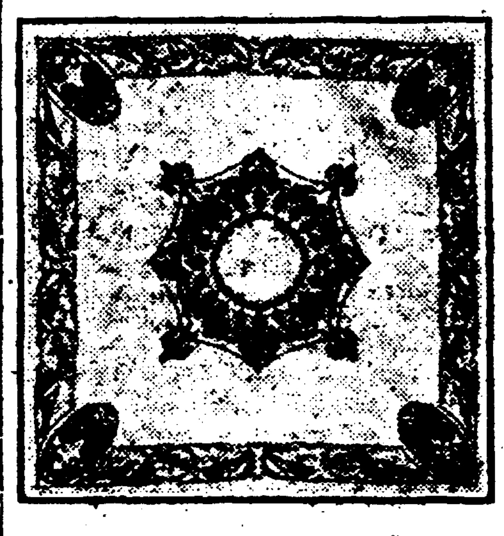
Some people turn back a heavy spread and on nights too warm for a comforter leave the blankets uppermost. This soils them, does not look inviting and often brings their woolly surface next the face, an unpleasant experience.

Try the all year round dimity spread. The price is small and will soon be saved in laundry bills and in the length of wear of the heavier sort.

PILLOW SQUARE.

The Art of Cross Stitch Is Being Revived In Many Handsome Designs.

The art square shown in this illustration was done in cross stitch in beautiful dull browns and greens and crimsons upon a background of yellowish tan.



NEW ART SQUARE.

Cross stitch is growing in favor as a means of decoration and can be very easily learned by even the novice.

TO MAKE A BRIGHT SPOT.

If your living room or your bedroom is in need of a bright spot get to work and make a cushion of bright colored material. It is surprising how one solitary cushion will change the whole atmosphere of a room. A cushion made of old rose poplin, denim or silk would just sing with joy and happiness if you would place it amid your surroundings. Through the center of the cushion sew a strip of white poplin on which large old rose flowers are printed. Around the edge of the cushion sew a strip of narrow old rose silk fringe. Should you find that old rose will not harmonize with your wallpaper or your hangings, select a color that will blend with them—bright green, blue or yellow will have the same cheerful effect as the old rose.

POCKETS ARE "IN."

As for pockets, they are "in." Here is a point for all women to consider in connection with the pocket question: Do not be persuaded into permitting them to be placed where they cannot be easily reached.

At present they are boldly placed where every one may see them and are more decorative than practical, but as soon as the polonaise modes really make their presence felt you will miss seeing the pockets. It does not follow they won't be present, for they will be hid, as they were when they were modish before, underneath the polonaise draperies or within the folds of numberless puffs.

For the tailleur of dressy proclivities the pocketed skirt eliminates the possibility of a pocketed coat. And with the plaited skirt, of course, the pockets appear on the coat only.

New vogues for these also introduce braided effects which simulate pockets and this, too, for skirts or suits made of novelty materials.

Beautiful Fabric Well Liked For Boudoir and Bedroom.

NEVER SO CHARMING AS NOW.

The Material Which Has Been Lent a Romantic Charm by Its Use In Old English Country Houses Is Now Coming Into General Use In This Country.

Patterns of chintzes and cretonnes were never prettier than they are this season. Most of the new patterns are large, but there are still many charming patterns of chintz printed in the small block designs. Probably these old English patterns will remain a part of the stock in trade in chintz and cretonne for years, now that they have been so definitely revived. They are always suitable when a small patterned chintz is required.

In the illustration is shown one of these chintzes fashioned into a window draping quaintly charming. Valance and side curtains are draped over hemstitched lengths of dimity

This year, too, there are some very attractive designs with big pictorial patterns—of trees and landscapes, in tapestry fashion. They are especially suitable with colonial furnishings, and a white enameled, mahogany furnished bedroom with white paneled walls hung with one of the chintzes of this type would be charming.

The fad for black that came from Vienna by way of Paris into the world of interior decorating a few seasons ago has become a concrete factor in the patterning of chintz, and this spring there are many good designs that have much black in their coloring. Very often a definiteness and character can be gained by the use of a black and white chintz that no other colors could give.

Decorators and furniture makers realize each season more fully the decorative value of chintz, and this spring there are many new bits of boudoir and bedroom furniture upholstered in or made of chintz.

There are many charming lounging chairs—some on the conventional lines of the French chaise lounge, some consisting of a comfortable deep upholstered chair of some sort with a wide, comfortable foot rest that is placed close against the chair and supports the knees, legs and feet.

CHINTZ VALANCE AND SIDE CURTAINS.

White enamel furniture is often furnished with cushions and other embellishments of cretonne. One bedroom set shows chairs of white enamel cushioned in a chintz of rose, yellow—of a deep, soft shade—and dull blue. The writing desk, dressing table, bureau and bedside stand are all topped with glass, under which is a panel of chintz.

There is a screen with chintz panels, too, and various boxes and bags and cushions of the material add to the general effectiveness of the idea. Chintz curtains hang at the sides of the windows, with ivory white net over the glass to tone with the enamel.

One of the new ideas in bedroom furnishings is a hanging cupboard of chintz. This cupboard, of course, is washable, and it can be folded into small space. Therefore it would be ideal for the woman who stays at a hotel in the summer.

The shelves of the hanging cupboard are big enough to hold hats, underwear, shirt waists in neat piles and all the accessories of women's dressing. There are little clasped pockets on the inside of the cupboard occasionally, and these can be used to hold hairpins, handkerchiefs, manicure articles and other little knickknacks. The shelves are stiffened with boards, so that they are quite firm, but when the cupboard needs laundering the boards can be removed.

We are all used to the pretty and convenient little stands of enameled wood that hold boxes of cretonne. These stands are made in various shapes—for window seats, for dressing table, and just in the most convenient shapes to hold hat boxes or long flat boxes that accommodate blouses and light frocks.

Then there are the thousand and one little boxes and bags that add color to a room and at the same time prove convenient receptacles for everything from note paper to biscuits to serve with the afternoon cup of tea.

It is a pretty fancy to place in a chintz furnished room a small white enameled basket with a trimming of little flowers in relief, of plaster or wood, colored in shades matching the cretonne. These baskets can be used for knitting, needlework, fruit or flowers.

Birdcages, too, are made in the same manner, and these lend another touch of daintiness and charm to the room they grace.

LOCAL :: # SPORTING NEWS :: GENERAL

Here's luck to Hank Mott; May he successfully evade the corkscrew passes of Burke, and may he have a chance to demonstrate his nail driving ability at the expense of Burke's phizog! Ataboy, Hank!

* * *

Meany will also endeavor to put Fulton in the limelight as a live town that produces good boxers when he stacks up against Crozier. The Syracuse lad will outweigh the Fulton representative but Meany hopes to make him swallow the morpheus powders all the same.

* * *

There must be money in this box-fighting!

* * *

The Fulton High school team will attempt to set a new pace this afternoon in the session against the Solvay team. The soda city combination comes here with a strong lineup and although the season is still in its infancy the visitors have some victories over strong organizations to their credit.

* * *

The locals will beo bliged to play the game at all stages and to cut down that error column if another victory is to be added to the Fulton list, which is not as large as it should be. Continued practice this week has had the effect of more certainty on the part of the local infield and the basemen are gradually getting wise to the topography of the field in their immediate vicinity. Holes in the diamond and little knolls always work havoc with a player's fielding average until he masters all the little bumps and makes a careful study of the ground about his position. After he learns the eccentricities of the ground before him he is better able to judge the course of a hard-hit ball. In all justice to Keeler it must be stated that there is a hole in the vicinity of third base which will make it extremely difficult for the man on that sack to play handle hard-hit balls without errors. The ball takes a sudden dive oftimes directly opposite to its normal course and although the infielder may be able to tickle the horseside the sudden bound makes it impossible for him to gather himself in time to field the pill and the result is a hit or an error as the scorer sees fit. The Fulton infield has had time to learn all these things now, however, and this fact should give them a decided advantage over the visiting teams.

* * *

Speaking of scoring, a high school scorer handed in a score of last Saturday's game and the putouts for nine innings totaled fifteen with sixteen assists the next column. Inasmuch as three men must be put out each inning for nine innings the record of fifteen putouts for the game is evidently to be considered higher math.

* * *

The Syracuse Stars opened the season at home Wednesday very auspiciously, winning from Troy. The game Thursday was postponed because of rain. Frank Bruggy, an old friend of the writer, is playing first base for the Trojans and inasmuch as Frank didn't get a hot off Frill, the Syracuse hurler, he was the object of much kidding after the game, especially so since Bruggy had a tryout with the Boston Braves this year, and was farmed out to Troy until his services are required again. Frank dropped a postal to Hank Gowdy saying, "Am burning up this league. I'm driving hot liners right at the catcher." Bruggy received his early baseball training in New Jersey playing first with the Elizabeth team and afterwards with the Plainfield team of the Central league. He has always worked as a catcher except in emergencies but he is holding down the first sack for Troy at present.

Plans have already been discussed for a series of three baseball games between the Police and Firemen of the city, the proceeds of the games to be donated to some charitable institution. The fire laddies have plenty of material from which to pick a team and the coppers have some old time stars in their midst. Just as soon as the force has learned to navigate the new motorcycle practise for the series will start in earnest. The announcement of the first game being awaited with bated breath by hosts of city fans.

* * *

Motorcycle riding is a sport and although the riding of a motor for several hours a day is a business, the residents along the park have been furnished much amusement during the past week by the police who are learning to ride the new motor. According to good authority this motor is equipped with collapsible wings which can be brought into play at any time and will enable the officers to make a quick trip across the river on a hurry call without going around the bridges. At any rate, the important features of the machine are rapidly being mastered but some of the officers have a little trouble in staying on the contraption and several laughs have resulted. "Never mind, consarn you," said one the other day as a passing autoist smiled as he flew past, "Wait until I get wise to this bike, you'll laugh on the other side."

* * *

According to the Oswego Palladium, "the baseball team of the Y. M. C. A. is after the scalp locks of any team in this section of the state." Not at all particular, blonde or brunette, white or black. Any local ball-tossers who care to mingle with these blood-thirsty fellers can arrange a battle by writing to the manager, care of the Oswego Y. M. C. A. (Put a two-cent stamp on the letter).

LEAGUE IDEA PLEASES FANS

Plan Proposed By Times Will Be Submitted to Three Other Teams

Inquiries among the sporting fraternity of the city in regard to a four-town league in this section embracing Fulton Phoenix, Oswego and Baldwinsville disclose the fact that such a league will be well supported and is regarded as an important step in local sporting activities. The movement has been fostered by the Sporting Department of the Evening Times and several members of the old Independents and other fans of the city have been interviewed on the subject in the past few days in an effort to learn the sentiment of the local fans on the question.

Tom McCullen who was captain of the Independents in 1913, the last playing season of the team, stated last night that, in his opinion, such a venture would receive the support of every Fulton fan. Plans for the league were explained to McCullen and he agreed that the league would be an important step in local baseball and that the idea should meet hearty support. A close inquiry into the drawing powers of a good local baseball nine disclosed the fact that the Independents made out very well on the whole when they played ball here and that a league fight with its added interest to the fans would be even more worthy of support.

Although a meeting of the Independents was announced yesterday, McCullum considered a meeting unnecessary until after the game of the team which will be played in Baldwinsville tomorrow afternoon., The lineup of the locals has not been fully decided but McCullum has arranged the game and announced last night that any fast young player in this vicinity would be welcomed in the Fulton crew. The tilt Saturday will be more in the nature of a tryout for the local team as they have had very little practise so far this season. Many fans, however, expect to make the trip and will attend the game with a view of lining up the Fultou team with the Baldwinsville players from a league standpoint.

McCallum will interview the manager and financial backer of the Baldwinsville team Saturday on the league question and on Sunday the sentiment of thhe Phoenix players and several Oswego men will be learned. If the idea meets with the approval of the other three teams a meeting will be called in this city some time early next week, probably Monday night. At that time the plans for the league will be presented to delegates from each town and an election of officers will follow. The Independents intend to defer the election of a captain and manager of this year's team until the league question is decided. McCollum will act as captain in Saturday's game.

Sentiment seems to favor Saturday and Sunday games for the league teams with such arrangements made that each team will have an open date about once a month at which time games with semi-pro organizations can be arranged. Several merchants of this city have announced their intention of offering suitable prizes for the teams in the league if it is organized and it is very likely that the merchant of the other towns will also offer special inducements. Heavy padding of the teams for special games will be prevented by the setting of a salary limit and the submitting of a list of probable players to the league officers before the season opens. Any team which signs a new player whose name is not on the submitted list will have to obtain the sanction of the league officials before the new man will be allowed to play. The team which invariably meets with the best support in a small league is the team composed of home talent and there are plenty of good ballplayers in Fulton. Baldwinsville has always put out a fair team and Phoenix can present a strong front when necessary while the Stars of Oswego will be asked to enter the league.

It is probable that the Independents will use the grounds at Stop 28 again this season and as the fare to that point is only five cents, the trip will be well worth making when the locals get started. The fact that the field is some distance away never made any perceptible difference in the gate receipts but the management is anxious to get the special trolley car service again this year. After the wrangle over the ten cent fare, which was settled by an order of the Public Service Commission ordering the S. L. and N. company to charge only five cents, the special cars were taken off and poor service before and after the games caused the absence of many fans. Only a few dolars will be needed to put the grounds at Stop 28 in good condition and it is probable that the special car service can be arranged with the trolley company. It is reported that the Chamber of Commerce is willing to assist in this matter.

The announcement of the meeting of the Independents and the league meeting, if one is held, will be made in these columns and all followers of local baseball will be invited to attend the meeting.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

Games Today

St. Louis at Boston.
Cincinnati at New York.
Chicago at Brooklyn.
Pittsburgh at Philadelphia.

Results Yesterday

Brooklyn, 3; Chicago, 2.
New York, 4; Cincinnati, 3.
Pittsburgh, 3; Philadelphia, 1.
Boston-St. Louis, (rain).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	14	8	.636
Chicago	14	10	.583
Boston	13	9	.591
Pittsburgh	12	13	.480
Cincinnati	11	12	.478
Brooklyn	11	13	.458
St. Louis	11	15	.423
New York	8	14	.364

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

No games scheduled.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 4; Washington, 3.
New York, 6; Cleveland, 1.
St. Louis, 6; Philadelphia, 5.
Boston, 4; Detroit, 2.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Detroit	18	9	.667
New York	14	8	.636
Chicago	16	10	.615
Boston	11	9	.550
Cleveland	11	14	.440
Washington	10	13	.435
Philedalphia	8	15	.348
St Louis	8	18	.308

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Rochester at Richmond.
Toronto at Newark.
Buffalo at Jersey City.

Results Yesterday

Rochester, 10; Richmond, 4.
Montreal-Providence (postponed).

MOTT WILL BE ON THE SPOT

Local Heavy Will Swap Punches With Burke In Syracuse Tonight

Hank Mott, the "Man with the Steel Vertebra" will hurtle his sylph-like form into the roped arena in Syracuse this evening and endeavor to put Jack Burke, the "Fighting Motorman" down and out for the count in short order. Hank has left the wrestling game flat on its back and for the past three weeks has devoted his time to boxing, foot-work and bag-punching in anticipation of his debut into the fistic fraternity. Hank has all the qualifications of a good heavy weight, except the science and his sparring advisor. John Ward, states that the West Side grappler is acquiring the fine points of the game rapidly. Mott is in perfect condition, weighs about 190 pounds in fighting togs and stands 5 feet 11 inches in his socks. He has a reach only two inches shorter than that of Jack Johnson and a wallop that was acquired through the playful pastime of driving nails with his bare fists. He failed to show very much speed on his feet in his early workouts but continued shadow boxing, and bag-punching has worked wonders with the "Iron Man" and his foot-work in the ring now is a revelation to his friends.

Hank is modest and doesn't anticipate an easy victory over Burke as the Syracuse husky has born the brunt of many battles and although he is rated as a ham of the top notch order, his knowledge of the ring game and its tricks will give him a decided advantage over the local pugilist. Hank is confident that the Syracuse slugger will come close enough to him so that the Fultonian can uncork his well-known hay-maker and then it will be "Good-Night" according to the followers of the local fighter. Hank is as hard as a rock and one of his favorite exercises consists in letting his sparring partners stand off and wallop him their hardest in the pit of the stomach, (a vulnerable spot for most fighters) and on the point of the jaw, and the terrific blows seem to have little or no effect on Henry who plays "Oliver Twist" until his co-workers are exhausted. Another training stunt devised by Ward, which has enable Hank to develop a lot of speed is a three-round session in which Hank takes on two men at the same time. In order to evade their blows and at the same time get some of his own efforts home, the local heavyweight is forced to keep going at top speed and this has also developed his staying powers remarkably.

His friends here feel confident that he will make an auspicious entry into the ring game and many are backing their opinions with coin of the realm. Hank will be accompanied to Syracuse tonight by a host of fight fans from this city who will root their hardest for the Fulton-battler. He will be seconded by John Ward and Sailor White.

Jimmy Meany, another local boxer who fights at the lightweight limit, will meet Young Crozier, a Syracuse lightweight of some prominence in one of the semi-finals. Meany is a fast aggresive little boxer who has a host of friends in this city and his work here and in Oswego has stamped him as a comer. He has been sharing training quarters with Mott at the Westover poolroom.

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Chicago at Pittsburgh.
Brooklyn at Baltimore.
Newark at Buffalo.

Results Yesterday

Brooklyn, 6; Chicago, 1.
Kansas City, 12; Newark, 1.
St. Louis, 9; Baltimore, 0.
Pittsburgh, 12; Buffalo, 7.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	18	8	.692
Kansas City	14	11	.560
Newark	14	12	.538
Brooklyn	13	12	.520
St. Louis	11	13	.458
Baltimore	11	16	.407
Buffalo	8	19	.296

CONGRESSMAN LECTURES TO PRISON INMATES

More than seventeen hundred Sing Sing prisoners were entertained last evening by Rrepresentative William M. Calder, of Brooklyn, with an illustrated lecture on the Panama Canal

There were two performances. "Curly Joe" Cassidy, former Representative William Willett, Augustus Price, the lawyer, and a number of other men formerly prominent in Brooklyn attended.

STATE LEAGUE

Games Today

Troy at Syracuse.
Albany at Utica.
Binghamton at Scranton.
Elmira at Wilkesbarre.

Results Yesterday

Wilkesbarre, 3; Elmira, 2.
Syracuse-Troy (wet grounds).
Scranton-Binghamton (wet grounds.
Utica-Albany (wet grounds).

Teams Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Troy	4	2	.667
Albany	4	2	.667
Binghamton	4	2	.667
Wilkesbarre	5	3	.625
Elmira	4	4	.500
Utica	3	3	.500
Syracuse	1	5	.167
Scranton	1	5	.167

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	10	2	.833
Montreal	8	5	.615
Rochester	6	5	.545
Richmond	6	6	.500
Jersey City	5	5	.500
Buffalo	3	5	.375
Newark	3	6	.333
Toronto	2	9	.182

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

At Milwaukee	R.	H.	E.
Indianapolis	1	7	0
Milwaukee	2	8	3

Batteries — Merz and Gossett; Young and Brannon.

At Kansas City	R.	H.	E.
Louisville	9	13	3
Kansas City	11	12	3

Batteries — Middleton, Northrup, Marks, Ellis and Clemons; George, Allison, Regan, Sanders and Alevander, Geibel

At Minneapolis (13 innings)	R.	H.	E.
Columbus	4	11	0
Minneapolis	1	7	4

Batteries—Davis and Coleman; Ingersoll and Gharity.

At St. Paul—	R.	H.	E.
Cleveland	0	5	3
St. Paul	7	8	2

Batteries—Collamore and Devoght; Leifield and Johnson.

COLLEGE BASEBALL

At Ithaca— Cornell, 2; Columbia, 0
At Princetown—Princetown, 6; Notre Dame, 5.
Bowdoin-Tufts cancelled—rain.

D/34

AEROLUX

— Also —
PORCH HAMMOCKS PORCH CHAIRS
LAWN SWINGS, ETC.

Large Assortment to Choose From at

J. R. SULLIVAN'S
West Broadway, Fulton

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, May 14. — The return of William Barnes to the Constitutional Convention, which is expected shortly is likely to mark the introduction of a number of important proposals for the considerations of the delegates. Since the opening of the convention, Mr. Barnes has been present but two or three times, owing to the fact that his presence was neiessary in Syracuse where his libel suit against Theodore Roosevelt is still in progress.

Mr. Barnes, as is well known, has long been an ardent defender of the Constitution of the State and his ideas concerning what amandments should and should not be made have been exploited in his public remarks upon more than one occasion. Up to the present time he has presented nothing yet as the end of his libel suits draws nearer expectation concerning what constitutional amendments he will advocate grows more keen.

It is understood that Mr. Barnes will join the up-State delegates who have arrayed themselves against the short ballot proposition in a number of instances. Mr. Barnes, however, has not made plain hisp osition in this respect yet hisf riends say that the short ballot proposition will not meet with his approval. These friends say that the adoption of the short ballot scheme by the Constitutional Convention will mean the giving to the governor of the State, almost dictatorial powers which are not in accord with the ideas of Mr. Barnes.

Mr. Barnes is chairman of the committee Legislative Powers. On the same committee are Frederick Tanner, chairman of the Republican State Committee, former Senatof Edgar T. Brackett, former Congressman James W. Wadsworth, former Majority Leader of the Assembly Harold J. Hinman and former Majority Leader Jesse Phillips, all powerful members of the Republican party. This committee has met several times in a perfunctory manner, yet no hearings have been held and very likely non will be held until the return of Mr. Barnes. There are a number of important proposals before this committee which is regarded as the third in importance of those dealing with the convention.

Mr. Barnes is said to be one of the half score big men in the convention and it was predicted before the one hundred and sixty-eight delegates met that his influence would be second only to that of Chairman Elihu Root. The remaining nine important factors mentioned are Lemuel E. Quigg, Seth Low, Louis Marshall, George W. Wickersham, Jacob G. Schurman, Edgar T. Brackett, John B. Stanchfield, Morgan J. O'Brien and Alphonse T. Clearwater. The majority of the delegates are of that party, their influenee in the convention will be greater than members of the opposite party who are also well known and prominent in public life.

Not until one or more of the committees have favorably reported a proposed amendment to the Constitution will debate begin; it is expected that within the next two weeks action of this nature will be made, when the important work of the delegates will begin. They point out that it is not the introduction of proposals which counts, but rather the adoption or rejection of them.

There are over two hundred proposed amendments before the respective committees of the convention at the present time.

CIRCUS MAN LEFT $5,000,000 ESTATE

New York, May 14.—William Washington Cole, an old time circus owner, at one time of Cole Brothers and later a part owner in the Barnum & Bailey show, left an estate valued at $5,000,000, according to his will filed with Surrogate Daniel Nobel in Queens county.

Mr. Cole died in Whitestone, L. I., March 10. He left a widow, but no children, brothers or sisters. Distant relatives live in England and in Scotland.

He left to his widow, Mrs. Margaret Cole, $200,000 and two-eighths of the residue after the bequests are paid. Mrs. Cole is also to receive certain specific bequests. Sixty-five persons receive bequests and annuities aggregating about $200,000.

CIGARETTES BLAMED FOR FILLING INSANE WARDS

Albany, May 13.—The political ... of labor unions, an educational test for voters, a reapportionment of Assembly districts, a curbing of the introduction of bills in the Legislature and a tax on cigarettes were among the ideas embodied in the proposed amendments to the constitution offered by the delegates in convention yesterday.

The last mentioned proposal came from Patrick W. Cullinan, a delegate at-large and a former State Excise Commissioner, in the form of a resolution. Mr. Cullinan's idea, if carried out, will result in a speedy census of all inmates of the state institutions, the poor, the felon and insane. Mr. Cullinan, believes that this census will show that the vast majority of the wards of the state have the cigarette fiends.

"The state," said Mr. Cullinan, explaining his resolution to the delegates, who laughed at its title, "is supporting many persons who have been victims of the cigarette. It is only fair that those who profit from the sale of cigarettes should reimburse the taxpayers for their care of the cigarettes fiends.

"The constitutionality of the excise tax was upheld by the Court of Appeals on the ground that the state has a right to be indemnified, inasmuch as it is supporting criminals and lunatics who have been made through drink. There are now in the institutions of the state far more people than you realize who have been sent there by cause of cigarette smoking, and my object is to follow out the thought of the excise law."

OIL STOCK SCHEMERS GIVEN SIX YEARS

Archie L. Wisner and John J. Meyers, convicted a year ago for using the mails in a mining and oil stock scheme that cost investors $5,000,000, lost their fight to escape punishment. Each was sent to Atlanta for six years, and Wisner was fined $10,000. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals has affirmed the conviction.

One of the grounds on which the appeal was taken was that the prosecutor had been objectionable in his cross-examination of one of the defendants. Judge Lacombe agreed that they had ground for complaint, but held this was not sufficient to set aside their conviction.

The prisoners, ho had been out on bail pending appeal, spent last night in the tombs.

RAE TANZER PLEADS TO PERJURY CHARGE

Rae Tanzer, who has said that James W. Osborne was and was not, and now is, the mysterious Oliver Osborne, who promised to marry her, yesterday pleaded not guilty when arraigned on a federal indictment charging her with perjury.

The indictment grew out of the girl's testimony at the trial of Franklin D. Safford, the Plainfield, N. J., hotel clerk who was tried and convicted on a charge of perjury in having identified James W. Osborne as Oliver. She has been under $5000 bail on a charge of using the mails to defraud James W. Osborne, and the same bail was extended to cover the perjury charge.

DECOLLETE SHIRTS COMING FULTONWARDS

The question of what the gentlemen will wear this summer has at last been settled, relieving all nervousness. News that has been eagerly awaited the last fortnight and more was ordered published last night by the Nation Fashion Committee of the Merchant Tailors' Association meeting now in Chicago.

Inquiry at all of Fulton's haberdasheries elicited the information that last summer there was a decided demand for a low-neck silk shirt by comfort-loving men; that in response to that demand and the edict of the Merchant Tailors' Association, customers are to very soon find on display the new article of solid comfort.

One will or will not wear with the shirt, according to personal taste, a loosely tied four in hand clasped with a beauty pin.

John Spann, secretary of the Central organization of fashion tailors, suggested that shantung, rajah or ... sam silks will prove most popular for suit material.

FRATERNAL ORDERS IN MEMORIAL PARADE

A meeting will be held Monday night at the rooms of Schenck Post, G. A. R., at which time the officers of the post will confer with representatives of all the local fraternal organizations in regard to the parade and special services on Memorial Day, May 31. The parade this year promises to be larger than ever before and it is expected that large delegations from all local lodges will be in line. Positions in the line of march will probably be drawn for, with the Elks-Citizens' band heading the procession followed by the members of Schenk Post.

ENTERTAIN NEAR-BRIDES

Mrs. V. C. Lewis and Mrs. C. M. Allen entertained this afternoon in honor of Miss Kate Gilbert, and Miss Warfield of Unadilla, N. Y.

The engagement of Miss Warfield to C. M. Allen, Jr., was recently announced. Miss Gilbert's engagement to Lewis Rice was announced last winter.

WEATHER FORECAST

Unsettled weather tonight and Saturday; moderate northwest winds; cloudy tonight and Saturday.

Get cash for second-hand bicycles. At Bogue's, 61 First st. adv

FRESH STRAWBERRIES
EVERY DAY
at LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

WANT A GOOD PIANO SLIGHTLY USED?
MUST SELL—LOW PRICE
TELEPHONE 4249

Fulton Keynotes

Mrs. Dewitt Gardner and Mrs. May Coles were upon a rural trip Thursday and dined with Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Holmes, in the Carrier road.

* * *

Dewitt Gardner is slowly convalescing from his recent illness.

* * *

The annual prize speaking contest of the High school will be held at The Quirk tonight.

* * *

Frank Sears of Worth st. has recovered from his recent illnes.

* * *

Mrs. James McCoy of Hannibal st. is visiting friends in Ilion.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Jennings and daughter Miss Ruth, and Mrs. Frank Bowman motored yesterday to Syracuse to attend the music festival.

* * *

Mrs. Guilford Mace and children of Syracuse are spending a few days with Fulton friends.

* * *

Frank McIntyre and family have removed to Rochester where he has a position as a weaver.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Crouch of Phillips st., are entertaining friends from Syracuse and Oneida.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. George Wells are at home in this city after their winter's stay at Orange City, Florida.

* * *

Mrs. William Bidwell of Highland st., has as her guest Mrs. Oscar Clark of Hannibal.

* * *

Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robertson of the Presbyterian church is assisting his son on the Herald. Rev. Robertson is a former newspaper man.

* * *

Edwin Foster is critically ill at his home.

* * *

Mrs. Ernest Parker entertained the Aid Society of State St. M. E. church at her home in West Fourth st.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. B. Keller of Hannibal st. are entertaining friends from Port Huron, Mich.

* * *

Mrs. A. T. ennings entertained Wednesday evening at her home in Academy st.

* * *

Mrs. Lottie Haynes of Rochester st., has as her guest, Mrs. C. C. Townsend of Mexico.

* * *

Mrs. James Tyrell of Seneca st., is seriously ill at her home.

MR. TAFT INDORSES PRES. WILSON'S POLICY

A letter from ex-President Taft was received by President Wilson yesterday. It dealt with the situation created in the foreign affairs of the nation by the events of the last three or four days.

Its contents will not be made public, but it was said that the president was deeply gratified at the tenor of the communication. The views outlined by Mr. Taft and his opinion as to the proper course of the administration are said to coincide in all essentials with those of President Wilson.

In a few details the views of the President and ex-President do not harmonize. According to an authority close to the President, however, the variance was so slight as to lead the President to believe that in his predecessor he had found an earnest supporter of the administration.

SOCIALISTS LEGISLATE AGAINST ALL WARS

Chicago, May 14.—A stand against war was taken here yesterday by the National Committee of the Socialist party, which augmented anti-militarism resolutions by an amendment to the Constitution which read:

"Any member of the Socialist party elected to any office who shall vote for appropriations for war shall be dropped by the party."

The amendment was adopted only after lenghty discussion in which it was argued that the amendment failed to provide against military appropriations of which the proposed object was to maintain peace.

JUNE
Month of Weddings

Wedding Rings
Engagement Rings
and Suitable Gifts for the Newlyweds

BIKES ARE GOING FAST
Get Yours Now
SUPPLIES—TIRES—SUPPLIES
REPAIRING—EXCHANGE
Wanted!
50 Used Wheels at once, we pay cash
BOGUE
61 First Street Phone 4249

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your Merchants for National Red Stamps and insisting on getting them with everything you buy. If your merchant does not give you National Merchandise Stamps it is absolute proof that he does not appreciate your trade. Merchants who give National Red Stamps want your trade and are sharing their profits with you. Every full book of Red Stamps is worth $2 in cash or $2.50 in merchandise, dry goods, clothing, etc., or can be applied for $2.50 on purchase of larger amount or $2 on account. Full books will be redeemed by any merchant who gives National Red Stamps.

FREE COUPON

This Coupon good for 20 Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 15.

TAYLOR & WILCOX
370 W. Third St. —Phone 1399
Meats and Groceries Best Western Steer Beef

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP
Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear
106 Oneida St. Phone 1177

H. C. DANN & SON
City Meat Market
High Grade Meats at the right prices.
11 South 2d St. Phone 42

A. ALDERMAN
Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes
214 West First St.

JOHN CRAHAN
GROCERIES
124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

J. BELASKI
GROCERIES AND MEATS
174 West First St.

JAMES J. KENYON
GROCERIES
518 South 1st St. Phone 3299

M. H. JOYCE
The New West Side Grocery
518 West Third St. Phone 4260

J. R. WARD
GROCERIES—Open Evenings
314 Seneca St. Phone 4450

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY
DEPARTMENT STORE West Third Street and Broadway

W. G. INGRAHAM
GROCERIES, DRY GOODS, NOTIONS
Corner North Sixth and Seward Streets Phone 1266

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps and Bargain Prices. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 127 — Established Dec. 17, 1914. — MONDAY, MAY 17, 1915 — Price One Cent

A City, Like a Man, Looks Better and Feels Better After a Bath, Shave and Haircut

GERMAN INFLUENCES ARE WORKING FOR PEACE

New York, May 17.—"If the United States and Germany make war against each other we will stand by the President, uphold the Stars and Stripes and do our best to defeat the soldiers and ships of the Kaiser!"—

Could leaders of German extraction in the commercial, fraternal and social circles of sons of the Fatherland have spoken in a composite voice yesterday that one sentence would have summed up completely their answer to newspaper question, "Under which flag?" The question aroused much interest and some ire—interest because it is a burning one in view of the fact that the German imperial government is even now considering a reply to President Wilson's note on the sinkig of the Lusitania and violation of American rights on the high seas; ire because the question implied, in the opinion of some naturalized Germans, that they personally would not fight and die for the United States, even though the enemy country should be the aFtherland.

General approbation was given to the newspaper announcement that it would canvass the great centers of German population in this country when it was explained that many citizens were not cure just what the attitude of so-called German-Americans would be in case of a war. Prominent German-Americans here predicted that the canvass would prove beyond any doubt whatever that Germans would stand shoulder to shoulder with the President in this or any future crisis in the affairs between the two countries. The special dispatch from Chicago published to the effect that German residents there unhesitatingly would uphold the administration and if necessary fight the Kaiser did not cause much surprise among Americans here of German origin, who gave general approbation to the statements of leaing German-Americans in the largest western city.

AUSTRO-GERMAN CAVALRY MOWED DOWN IN GALICIA

London, Monday.—The Morning Post's correspondent telegraphs from Petrograd:—

"The Russians' successes against the German raiders in the Baltic province continue. More than a thousand German prisoners, with nine Maxim guns, were taken Sunday.

"In western Galicia the Russians continue to withdraw steadily, destroying their communications and carrying off all supplies in perfect order. While the Russian forces hold up the German onslaught from Cracow, the destruction of the Austrian armies in Eastern Galicia and in Bukowina is being completed.

"The enemy has retired behind Pruth, evacuating strongly fortified positions extending nearly a hundred miles from Bistritsa to the Roumanian frontier. Hungarian cavalry sacrificed themselves to give the main army a chance of getting away. Russian artillery caused appalling losses in the ranks of the finest cavalry possessed by the enemy. Russian cavalry at many points broke through the retreating lines of the enemy and did terrible execution.

"The number of prisoners keeps increasing beyond all attempts at calculation. In fact, the Austrian or Austro-German armies in Bukowina and East Galicia may now be reckoned demolished.

TURKS LOSE HEAVILY IN MAKING ASSAULTS

London, Monday.—Martin H. Donohoe, the Daily Chronicle correspondent at Athens, telegraphs:—

"According to advices from Mitylene and Lesbos, the British on the Gallipoli Peninsula for the last three days have been subjected to a series of violent attacks by the Turks. All were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. Many prisoners and machine guns were taken.

"The allied forces are gaining ground slowly. Their advance is much hampered by wire entaglements. The British are using hand grenades with telling effect. Under cover of darkness on Thursday the Turks stampeded a number of transport animals toward the British lines. This onrush was followed by an infantry attack, which was beaten off.

"The naval bombardment has been continuous, and for three days the war ships' fire was concentrated on the defences of the narrows."

FULTONIANS ATTENDED WEDDING AT SYRACUSE

A number of Fultonians, among them Mr. and Mrs. I. Alderman, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Waldborn, Joseph and [illegible] Waldhorn, were in attendance yesterday at the wedding of Miss Ida [illegible] to Joseph Alport, at the residence of the bride, [illegible] E. Adams st, Syracuse. The out-of-town guests included also J. Stein, from Palestine.

Mr. Alport, who is a jeweler of Syracuse, is well known in Fulton and the couple received many handsome gifts from friends here. Mr. and Mrs. Alport left last night for the East. They will visit New York, Philadelphia, Washington and Atlantic City and on their return will reside in Syracuse.

MACKIN'S CAR UP IN FLAMES

Gasoline Explosion Resulted From Causes Unknown to Owner of Valuable Car

A Michigan touring car owned and driven by James Mackin of Oswego caught fire on the West River road north of this city yesterday at a point near the home of George Washburn and was completely destroyed. The car was valued at $1800 and the loss was covered by insurance.

Mr. Mackin was driving along slowly when he perceived flames coming out of the hood and he was barely able to stop the car and get a safe distance away when the gasoline tank went up with a flash. The fire evidently started from a gasoline leak or a short circuit in the ignition system. After the explosion the car burned rapidly and attempts to save it were futile. The body burned off completely and all that remained of the outfit a half hour later was the chassis. Four good tires were saved and some of the acessories, but a Fultonian who passed the point about two hours after the fire stated that Mr. Mackin had left the scene and that the contents of the car had been carried away by parties unknown. The tires which were in good condition were missing and it is thought that some passing autoist made away with them. [illegible] was appropriated by a near-by farmer, it is reported and another wayfarer made away with the two large headlights.

Mr. Mackin had purchased the car only a short time ago, but he was thoroughly familiar with the operation of it, and the accident could not be laid to carelessness.

MRS. JAMES TYRELL DIED THIS MORNING

Mrs. James Tyrell died at her home, 510 Seneca st., this morning after an illness of three weeks. Mrs. Tyrell suffered a stroke some time ago. She was born in Granby and her maiden name was Miss Jennie Lynch. She had lived in thisc ity for the past thirty years.

Mrs. Tyrell is survived by her husband, one son, Edward J.; and one daughter, Helen Marie. The funeral will be held tomorrow morning from the church of the Immaculate Conception at 9.30 o'clock where a requiem mass for the repose of the her soul will be said, and Rev. Father Lindsman will officiate.

FOSTER FUNERAL TUESDAY

The funeral of Edwin R. Foster, who died at the age of 70 at his home near here Saturday, will be held tomorrow afternoon from his late home. Rev. H. D. Holmes will officiate and burial will be made in Mt. Adnah.

Mr. Foster had lived near here almost all his life and was survived by a widow, four sons, three brothers and five grandchildren.

MAX MARIN

Friends of Max Marin, who for a number of years was engaged in business at 314 Seneca st., today received word of Mr. Marin's death at Rutland, Vermont, to which place he had gone after leaving Fulton. The body will be interred in that city.

The deceased is survived by five sons.

THAW'S TRIAL DELAYED

New York May 17.—The Attorney General in the Harry K. Thaw case appealed today to have a stay of proceedingsf or two weeks more, or until it can be decided by the Court of Appeals as to whether the impending trial shall be by a jury. The Attorney General's application was fought by Thaw's counsel, [illegible] B. Stanchfield.

LAZAR WANTED BY [illegible]

Polander Deserted Wife Whose Efforts to Sustain Life Have Almost Failed

A distressing case of poverty and a fight made against unsurmountable odds came to the notice of Commissioner of Charities Woodbury this morning at the City Hall. Mrs. Frank Lazar, a Polish woman of frail physique, who showed the results of hard toil and a battle against the wolf at the door, appeared accompanied by a kindly interpreter from the Polish colony on the West Side, and through her interpreter recited a story of privation almost incredible.

Married some time ago to Frank Ladar, a Polish laborer, Mrs. Lazar had happy-home life for a time, but some months ago her husband left her witout giving his future address just before the birth of her child. Bearing up bravely under her trial, Mrs. Lazor tried by her own efforts to feed herself and her little one but her strength finally gave out and today she was forced to ask the Charity Bureau for aid. When Mr. Woodbury told the woman her expenses would be paid by the city from now on, she broke down and wept tears of gratitude.

Mrs. Lazar stated that several of the Polish residents in the colony knew of her husband's whereabouts [illegible] Dyer told the interpreter that he would personally conduct an investigation and that the man would be found and brought back to this city to answer for his heartless act. It is rumored that he is working in a railroad camp in the central part of the state under an assumed name and as soon as the police find him he will be arrested and brought to this city immediately.

CELEBRATED HIS 91ST BIRTHDAY YESTERDAY

Washington, May 16.—Levi P. Morton, former Vice-President of the United States, ex-Governor of New York and ex-Ambassador to France, celebrated his ninety-first birthday today at his Washington house, 1500 Rhode Island avenue.

Gov. and Mrs. Morton intended to be at their New York home, 998 Fifth avenue, but were detained. They will be in New York on Monday and will soon leave for their summer home at Rhinecliff.

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS JUMPED AT ENORMOUS RATE

New York, May 16.—For the first time in nearly two months the receipts for duties on imports at the Custom House exceeded the $3,000,000 mark in the week ended Saturday. The total for the week was $3,057,262.88. The amount received Saturday when the collector's office closed at noon, was $433,557.73; of which $183,920.08 was for goods withdrawn from bonded warehouses and $249,628.65 was for recent importations.

WATER WAS TOO COLD FOR WOMAN TO DIE

Peekskill, N. Y.—Finding the water too cold, Mrs. Frank Sheehan, arrested in Bedford on a charge of attempting suicide, shouted for help after throwing herself into the Katonah resevoir. John Coster ran to the bank and fished her out.

She became enraged after a quarrel with relatives.

RED MEN DID NOT MEET ROWAN STARS

The game scheduled for yesterday afternoon between the Red Men of this city and the Rowan Stars of Oswego was postponed on account of wet grounds.

SCHOOL PUPILS GET POINTS ON MAKING FULTON A CLEAN CITY

Various Divisions Will Not Hereafter Hold Evening Sessions—Idea Proves Popular

The executive committee of the Retail Trade Division of the Chamber of Commerce met this morning at 9 o'clock. The new idea of meeting during the day has met with the approval of all the members of the chamber since its inauguration last Saturday. Hereafter no meetings will be held in the evenings. Several ideas were discussed informally at this morning's meeting but the plans decided upon by the executive committee will be submitted to the directors of the Chamber before they are given publicity.

* * *

The final week of the Clean-Up campaign, under [illegible] of the Chamber of Commerce, was ushered in this morning [illegible] concerted effort on the part of the members of the Division of [illegible] morning at the morning exercises by representatives of the division who explained to the children the purpose of Clean-Up Week and showed the boys and girls how they could help.

Ellsworth Rude, assistant chief of the fire department, was to have addressed the children at the Erie street school, but was unable to be present. Miss Graveley, the principal, addressed the classes instead. Dr. Gladman spoke at the Rochester st. school and A. Bristol spoke to the State st. students, C. W. Streeter spoke at the High school and Dr. E. M. Anderson made the address at the Phillips and Walradt sts. schools. Rev. Charles Olmstead spooke at the Oak st. school and Rev. John Lindsman at St. Mary's parochial school.

The children were urged to remind their parents that the city must be kept clean and the boys in particular were asked to clean up the yards, and keep them clean. The throwing of waste-paper in the streets was condemned and habits of cleanliness were advised.

The pupils were instructed to remind the parents that Friday will be "Rubbish Day," and on that date several teams will make the rounds of every house in the city. Householders are invited to clean their cellars, garrets, and backyards, and to be especially careful to collect all imflammable refuse. The refuse can be put into a box or barrel and placed on the curb and the wagon s from the Chamber of Commerce will collect it, without charge.

There will be a meeting of the entire division of Public Safety this afternoon at 4 o'clock and the executive committee of the division will meet every afternoon this week until Friday.

It is reported that the last three days of clean-up will resolve itself into a personal campaign on the part of the members of the division, and actual manual labor may be asked of them. In other cities this feature has been tried out with good results, and both men and women have grasped the shovels and brooms.

ARNSTEIN WANTS MORE CUT IN APPROPRIATIONS

Albany, May 17.—Additional cuts in the construction bill, aggregating $682,000, were suggested to William A. Orr, the Governor's Secretary, Saturday by Leo Arnstein, who represented Mayor Mitchel at the financial hearings last week. The letter specified the "lump sum" which acting Mayor McAneny told the Governor should be cut out.

The largest items are for $200,000 each for the Manhattan and Long Island State hospitals. A cut of $100,000 in the appropriations for the Middletown State Hospital is also suggested and another item of $100,000 at the Kings Park Hospital.

A total of $1,570,145 was eliminated from them oney bills by the Governor during the week.

D/34

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 East First Street, Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 45

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office in Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3, 1879.

May 15, 1915

45—PHONE NEWS ITEMS—45

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

The Scrap Book

Wanted Her Body.

An American woman invited to an English country house was assigned to the room of a gaunt looking governess, who solemnly transferred herself to another bedroom. The visitor, tired, soon fell asleep, and then:

"Not until the first dismal streaks of dawn began to show did I wake, and then because of a presence in the room.

"I could plainly make it out, standing near the door—a tall form in white—and, while I looked, it moved, and, having moved, it spoke in a deep, throaty voice.

"'I want my body!' it said.

"I don't know what kept me from fainting. I do know what kept me from screaming—it was because I was too frightened. I watched that dreadful figure move to a tall wardrobe in the corner and thrust its head and shoulders inside. I saw it tug and wrench something, and then turn toward me, holding the something in its hands. And then, in the brightening dawn, I saw that it was the stern looking governess, holding the waist of her dress!

"How on earth was I to know that in England a waist—even a shirt waist—is called a 'body,' I'd like to know?" demanded the young woman energetically. "I think I had a perfect right to be scared."—Youth's Companion.

Unattained.

Deal gently with us, ye who read.
Our largest hope is unfulfilled—
The promise still outruns the deed;
The tower, but not the spire, we build.

Our whitest pearl we never find;
Our ripest fruit we never reach.
The flowering moments of the mind
Lose half their petals in our speech.
—Holmes.

Quaintly Described.

President Lincoln frequently showed that he knew how to avoid a direct answer and evade inquisitive visitors when he thought it was impolitic to make known his opinions. One wanted to know his opinion of Sheridan, who had just come from the west to take command of the cavalry under General Grant. Lincoln said:

"I'll tell you just what kind of a chap he is. He is one of those long armed fellows with short legs that can scratch his shins without having to stoop over."

Took No Chances.

John Sharp Williams stepped out of the senate chamber in response to the card of Bob Gates, who is a Washington correspondent of distinguished appearance and much political sapience. Bob asked him a number of questions, and then in parting he asked:

"By the way, senator, have you got a good cigar about you?" putting the request under the head of unfinished business.

"No, I haven't but one left, and I just now bit the end off it preparatory to lighting it," replied John Sharp.

"If I'd just been a minute or two sooner," suggested Bob.

"Not exactly," said the senator. "The fact is, when I started out here I bit the end off the cigar just for fear you might ask for it."—Detroit Free Press.

"Good Credit."

At a very fashionable and equally expensive tailor shop about town a certain middle aged, out of town customer discovered that he lacked sufficient change to pay for his humble purchase—a pair of gray gloves.

"May I charge them?" he asked. "I find I haven't my check book with me."

"What was the name," demanded the rather displeased tailor in peremptory manner.

He was told the name and address.

"Oh, that's all right, sir," exclaimed the tailor, now beaming with exaggerated affability. "Your son trades here."—Yale Record.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the many friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted during the sickness and death of a dearly loved daughter and sister.

MRS. DORA TACKABY,
MRS. GRACE SMITH.

UNFAIR COMPETITION

Within the last forty-eight hours there has come to light in this city news concerning one of the most despicable attempts to crush and ruin a citizen, including a home enterprise, that one cares to imagine could emanate from the brain of a man, or set of men.

In the course of establishing and conducting a daily newspaper in the city of Fulton, with a full complement of attendant handicaps, common decency demands that there shall be meted out to the enterprise just a little of the old-fashioned brand of Ordinary Honesty, but the original expectation has not been realized.

In the first place The Evening Times entered the local field with the determination of giving to the people of Fulton something they have for years needed—a daily newspaper, in keeping with the size of the town and the amount of advertising support that might be expected. At this date The Evening Times is able to announce that its expectations have been realized, because the people have by word and deed demonstrated their keenness to stick through thick and thin to a home industry. That their loyalty has been the innocent means of arousing a belligerent spirit in the minds of competitors is a fact that has come out into the sunshine, for at this late date when The Evening Times has entrenched itself in the affections of the people of Fulton evidence is produced that at least one strong competitor in the field of evening papers is using, or allows to be used, the foulest form of rivalry. Evidence has reached The Evening Times office that agents of an out-of-town newspaper have called at the homes of Fulton people and in their attempts to dispose of premiums and subscriptions, those agents have assailed in the most despicable way a home institution—a home industry, but thanks to the stability of the people of this city, the injury done is so far superficial, and more than that, it has no connection with the latest instance of perfidy on the part of a person or persons who are ostensibly in the employ of a Syracuse newpaper or Syracuse newspapers. In this specific instance reference is made to an innocent-looking personal item which appeared in Friday night's issue of The Evening Times. It was intended to belittle and disparage in the eyes of the people of this city a young man who is innocent of doing harm to any one.

While the item in question was innocent-looking, the sting was there—the work of one who would not hesitate to use darkness as a cover for carrying on the work of a gangster in tearing down the good name of a good man.

It is with shame for the offenders that The Evening Times chronicles these incidents of the selfish-greed of a man or men—shame that anyone assuming to move in the realms of respectable society—should stoop to the point where loss of nerve overcomes the best instincts of manhood.

But the innocent in this world have nothing to fear. Their reward is certain—just as certain as the punishment that comes to the man who loses his nerve while mounted in an airship—he will very soon find himself hurlting in the direction of a non-resisting obstacle and will gain nothing better than the scorn of all decent people.

Opinions

Right and Wrong Laws

Senator Weeks hits the nail on the head when he says, let us have laws which punish enemies of the people, but let us at the same time pass no laws which will punish the innocent even more by ruining the national industries.

It was punishing the whole community to pass a Free-Trade Tariff merely in order to hit at one or two enterprises suspected of making unduly large profits.

The same is true of trust and certain other legislation.—San Francisco Chronicle.

New York and Taxes

The New York city officials are making a great noise about a direct tax. They are trying to make the public believe that New York city pays most of the taxes of the State. As a matter of fact New York city pays no more tax in proportion than the rest of the state. It only pays its share and it might be well to say that New York city is responsible for a large part of the taxes which must be paid. Nearly all of the big expenses which have been voted upon the state were carried by the voters of New York city.

It will be remembered that when the canal proposition was submitted to the people—the proposition to raise $101,000,000 for the barge canal—the voters upstate voted against the proposition by a majority of 164,164 while New York city voted for the proposition by a majority of 223,629. Now New York city having voted this expenditure upon the whole state against the will of the voters upstate is "yelling" because it is obliged to pay its part of the tax like every other section.

Let New York play the "baby act" for political effect! All of this noise about direct taxes comes from the Mitchel administration and it is all made for the purpose of attracting attention from the weaknesses of that administration. The Mitchel reform administration is a falure. He sees indications of Tammany returning to power at the next election and he is posing as an economist to fool the people and hide the ugly fact that his administration is drifting into the harbor of failure.—Lyons Republican.

A Youthful Research Scientist

The medical and surgical world has recently been given an instructive object-lesson in the important discovery of the germ of one of the most virulent epidemic diseases of the day, by a young man, only recently graduated from the medical schools, and who is only 25 years of age. This emphasizes the fact that young men, in the medical as well as other professions, are forging to the front under modern opportunities for research work.

Even twenty-five years ago, such was the strength of the opinion that little of value on lines of original research could be accomplished in student years and the first few years of professional practice. Dr. Harry Plotz, who isolated the germ of typhus and discovered what is hoped to be an effective vaccine for the disease, would have had difficulty in placing his discoveries before a professional body. Even in this more liberal and enlightened era a representative group of his medical brethren refused to allow him to read before it a report of his discoveries, because, without his knowledge or consent, a newspaper reporter had learned of the discoveries and made the fact known through the lay press.

Let us be just. Prominent members of the medical profession, at a recent pathological gathering in Philadelphia, not only listened to Dr. Plotz's thesis, but formally and unqualifiedly acknowledged the value of the young physician's efforts. As a result, the typhus vaccine is now being given the breakdown test, in an epidemic of typhus resulting from war conditions, which t was feared would spread through the world and assume the proportons of a pestilence.

The incident of the turning down of Dr. Plotz's original paper, which was done for strictly ethical reasons, will have been of real service if it calls attention to the desirability of carefully examining the results of original research, even if made by an investigator before years have whitened his locks.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

Last Week in Business

Nation Rises to Meet Emergencies of a Trying Time, Says Dun's Review.

New York.—The developments of the week afford new proof of the essential stability and power of the financial and business structure. While there is uncertainty as to the final outcome, there is faith in the ability of the nation to adapt itself, with financial readiness, to every contingency that may arise. Outside of the stock, cotton and other equally sensitive markets, the effect of the new war developments has not materially changed the generally favorable aspect of the trade situation. With scarcely an exception, statistical comparisons, by which business activity is measured, reflect progressive improvement, and that the steady gain in bank clearings is not wholly due to the expansion in speculative operations, is indicated by the continued increases at many of the leading centers outside of New York. Railroad earnings make a better exhibit and the larger traffic movements have resulted in a notable falling off in the number of idle cars. Failures and unemployment have decreased. The iron and steel trade holds its own and continues on the same encouraging basis of output as before. War orders still produce marked prosperity in many lines, taking the place of the reduced domestic consumption. There is continued activity in the cotton goods trade in spite of the irregularity caused by fluctuations in the raw material.

The volume of exports continues heavy, amounting to $51,584,000 during the latest week in the thirteen trading customs districts, but this sum was $6,000,000 less than the week previous. Imports, however, also declined, so that the excess of exports was over $20,000,000. Large imports of gold from France are reported. Weather conditions in the big crop sections are in the main beneficial and the outlook for a big wheat crop is one of the many things that favor this country.

With shipments of most finished products exceeding the volume of new business, the unfilled orders of the leading iron and steel interest fell off about 93,500 tons during April. Prevailing conditions, however, still afford considerable encouragement and quotations continue to reflect a firmer tendency. Pittsburgh advices indicate that activity is averaging 70 per cent., with a better record being made in a few instances. Equipment contracts from the transporting companies are not yet up to expectations, but factories specialifiing in spikes and railway supplies have increased working schedules and the wire plants are quite busy.

Recent war developments adversely affected certain divisions of the dry goods markets, prices of print cloths weakening in consequence of the violent break in cotton and other uncertainties. Colored cottons, however, are firmer and there is a steady enhancement of values in fine and fancy cottons to be made. The mills, as a whole, continue well employed and should labor troubles in New England be avoided, active operations throughout the summer are expected. This is the between-seasons period with jobbers and it is not anticipated that fall buying of staples will start much before the middle of next month.

PROJECT ILLEGAL; MUST RETURN MONEY

Albany.—The State Fair Commission of 1913 exceeded its authority in establishing the so-called "futurity races" to be run at the State Fair in 1915, 1916 and 1917, and the moneys collected from horse owners to cover the expense of these events, totalling $8,205 up to date, must be returned to the owners, according to an opinion rendered by Attorney General Woodbury to the new State Fair Commission. The "futurity" project, never before undertaken by a State Fair Commission, was plainly a violation of the agricultural law which compels the commission to make a full report of receipts and disbursements to the Legislature and to turn over unexpended balances to the State Treasurer each year. The plan virtually committed the State to the conduct of an unlawful enterprise and overstepped the injunction in the agricultural law against the Fair Commission retaining any of the moneys in excess of actual requirements for the conduct of the State Fair.

In view of the fact that the action of the former Fair Commission assumed to contract indebtedness in excess of the moneys appropriated by the State and in excess of moneys available, Attorney General Woodbury ruled as follows:

"The commission now in office should, I think, refuse to recognize the act of its predecessors in attempting to provide for futurity races. The sum of $8,205 deposited in one of the banks in the city of Syracuse is not the property of the State and should be returned to the owners thereof by those who now have such moneys in their possession.'"

LEADER A. E. SMITH'S GRAVEST MISTAKE

Albany.—Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic leader in the Assembly in a criticism of the Whitman administration s quoted as saying: "Last October Governor Whitman said the Democrats were extravagant. In February of this year the Governor said the Democrats failed to appropriate enough money so they could make a show of economy." That is nt a correct statement of the facts. The criticism of the Democratic administration was that it squandered the public monney on the salaries of men appointed to fill unnecessary positions created solely to make political patronage and reduced or entirely withheld appropriations absolutely necessary for the proper transaction of the State's legitimate business. The Republicans not only charged this but proved it to the entire satisfaction of the voters.

With a million shares a day, the brokers begin to see something better than a jitney ride and a city roof-garden. Some of them may even get to the big fair.

ARCADES AMBO

Tedy called Bill a political crook
And said he would swear to it on the book.
But has only proved, as fair men find
That he and Bill were two of a kind.

Two of a kidney, two of the same;
Both of them playing the world-old game,
Both of them seeking their hearts' desires,
By pulling levers and legs and wires.

Arcades ambo, fraters in hoc,
Chips of the same old gnarly block;
Forever seeking to gain for self
Perquisites, plaudits, power of pelf.

Teddy was staunch and Bill was true
And clean and pure as a drop of dew,
Until it developed that he had dreams
Inconsistent with Teddy's schemes.

They "deared" each other; their fondness grew.
They stuck and clung to each other like glue.
There was nothing too nice to be written or said
As long as Billy was boosting Ted.

But when he chose to stand by Taft,
Didn't he get a big-sticked and gaffed?
That was the unforgivable sin
Which showed as black spots on his skin.

Alack and alas, they have gone to law,
Those two old cronies, tooth and claw
In a terribly tedious legal mill;
Bill and Teddy, Teddy and Bill.
—Rochester Post-Express.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, May 17.—Conservative in their utterances upon the floor of the Assembly Chamber, the delegates to the Constitutional Convention have officially made no comment upon the prospects of the severing of diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany as the result of the sinking of the British liner Lusitania. There have been no talk of resolutions reflecting the sentiment of the convention with regard to the disaster, though the question of Germany's right to torpedo the steamship has been the cause of animated debate before the sessions have begun and ended.

There are among the delegates-at-large three former members of the federal cabinet, who are authorities upon international law and the rules of war. These distinguished diplomats are Hon. Elihu Root, once secretary of State; Hon. Henry L. Stimpson, at one time secretary of war, and George W. Wickersham who served as attorney general of the United States.

Neither of these three undisputed authorities upon the rights of the world powers in time of war have elected to discuss in any way the straightened situation which appeared to exist throughout the nation immediately following the sending to the bottom of the Lusitania as a member of the Constitutional Convention. Iit is a common practice, when the legislature is in sesson, to adopt resolutions which manifest the sentiment of that branch of the State government upon any matter of general importance, yet it is understood that no steps of this nature will be taken by the delegates to the Constitutional Convention.

Much has been heard in the corridors of the Capitol in favor of the note of President Wilson, the delegates, irrespective of party having apparently united in praising what has been termed by many of them as a masterly document.

It is doubtful if a stronger combination of statesmen than the three above mentioned, have been members of a single body, other than a diplomatic body, in the history of the State of New York. All have had wide experience in conducing the affairs of the Nation. If they have met and discussed the great question of the day in America, as it is said that has been the case, no indication of such a discussion has been admitted.

From the first Chairman Root made it plain that so far as he personally could prevent it, there would be no politics injected into the deliberations of the convention. He let it be known that the sole duty of the delegates was to gather to discuss and pass upon the various amendments presented as proposed changes to the Constitution of the State.

While Mr. Wickersham has perhaps let his position be known to a greater degree than his two fellow former diplomats, he has refused to give out an interview at Albany which in any way might have a bearing upon his ideas as to whether Germany was right or wrong. Mr. Simpson has taken a similar position.

Lesser lights may offer a resolution bearing upon the Lusitania incident, but it is not expected at this late date, especially after the matter has passed into the hands of the President. If such a resolution is presented it is predicted generally that it would be promptly and effectually defeated.

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next year.

PRAISE FOR WHITMAN, BLAME FOR GLYNN

Albany.—After praising Governor Whitman for upholding the merit system and high character of his appointments to the state civil service commission, the Civil Service Reform Association in its annual report has this to say of the preceding administration: "The very number of the exemptions granted by the commission in 1914 is sufficient to establish its clear disregard of the principles of the merit system. Only once in the last fourteen years has the record of the Sulzer-Glynn commission been exceeded in this respect, and that was during the Dix administration."

Cookery Points

Twenty New Vegetables.

There are more than twenty new vegetables that show a likelihood of coming into general use on the American dinner table within the next ten years. The choice of the housewife is going to be considerably more than doubled. She will have forty different vegetables from which to plan her meals instead of twenty. There is nothing of the "fad" proposition about any of these new vegetables. All have been and are being grown and already have some market.

All have been popular wherever they have been tried, and all can now be grown at a profit. In addition, over and above the forty, there are five or six other vegetables not so new, but still uncommon as foods because they have never been put widely upon the market. These latter have passed the public verdict of approval, but in most cities and towns it is difficult to obtain them. But all the new vegetables, the experts say, are going to be possible for the slimmest pocketbook.

The aquatic potato, which jokers, when they get wind of it, are going to designate as a "submarine" because it really grows, so to speak, under water, is one of the most spectacular of the new vegetables. The scientists and the progressive farmers who have looked into it say that the aquatic potato has a very fair chance of becoming one of the great American food products all by itself. It is good to the taste, and it grows where no potato worthy of the name could ever be induced to grow before—in very moist and marshy ground.

Along with the aquatic potato is the roselle. The roselle is almost the star among the new vegetables, for even now it has a brilliant record and has become a distinct commercial success. It is a substitute for cranberry, or really not a substitute at all, but something new and capable of making a jelly that can meet cranberry on its own ground and—some day—of surpassing that delicacy.

It will grow in southern climates impossible for cranberries and, best of all, a market for it is now established; Texas, California, Florida and South Carolina have all become roselle states. One advantage it has over the cranberry is that it is very easy of culture and can be grown in any garden.—Harper's Weekly.

About Spinach.

In the early spring days, when the weather turns suddenly very mild or warm, the appetite craves something cold, crisp and green. This is perfectly natural, for in the first green vegetables, although the nutritive value is small, there is a tonic quality that is invigorating and healthful.

Of all the greens, spinach is the most wholesome. A famous physician has declared that "it is the broom of the stomach." Spinach should be eaten at least twice a week during the spring season. Its value, however, can only be obtained by proper cooking. Use a very small quantity of water, just enough to keep it from burning, and cook in an uncovered kettle for fifteen or twenty minutes. Be sure that the water is actually boiling before placing the greens in it, as that is most important not only with spinach, but with all other spring greens, such as dandelions, mustard, etc.

French Dressing.

When you make French dressing how do you do it? Do you pour first the oil and then the vinegar over the salad and then sprinkle on the seasonings?

Or do you pour a little oil in a big spoon and then pour in enough vinegar to overflow it and repeat this process, beating the oil and vinegar with a fork until the salad is dressed?

You do neither of these things if you are really up to date in your salad making. Instead you use one of the little French dressing sets. It consists of a tray containing a cut glass jug for vinegar and one for oil and three shakers—one for salt, one for pepper and one for cayenne pepper or paprika. Then there is a little silver dish about five inches in diameter, in which the dressing is thoroughly and conveniently mixed before it is poured on the salad.

Small Green Onions.

When the tiny green onions appear try cooking and serving them as you would asparagus. Wash them well, tie in bunches, drop in boiling salted water and cook for ten minutes. This time allowance is for very young vegetables, about the size of lead pencils. Drain, place on toast and pour over them a hot cream sauce flavored with chopped parsley. These will be found delicious, as they do not retain the onion flavor to which so many persons object. Young onions are excellent in almost all spring salads and are especially good with fresh tomatoes, cucumbers and green peppers.

Baked Salmon.

One-half cupful salmon (fresh or canned), one-half cupful stale breadcrumbs, one beaten egg, one-half cupful milk, one-half teaspoonful lemon juice, one-half teaspoonful onion juice. Salt and pepper to taste. Mix all the above together, put in a buttered baking dish or any buttered tins or custard cups [illegible] twenty minutes.

Get the Health History of a House Before You Move Into It.

To those intending to buy or move into a house that has been occupied the following advice is offered by the Woman's Home Companion:

"Guard your family from contagious disease germs in the new house. It has been proved that thousands of tuberculosis and scarlet fever cases annually are the result of moving into houses which have not been disinfected.

"Secure the 'health history' of the house you expect to buy or rent. It will be supplied by your board of health, your health officer or any physician who practices in your town. If it has housed a tuberculosis patient don't take that house, find another.

"No matter what the 'health history' of the house, have the plumbing examined, the drains flushed and the entire house disinfected.

"If the walls are to be repapered have the old paper removed.

"Do not move into any house where the cellar has been flooded and is moldy.

"In towns where there is neither city water nor sewerage system make sure that the well and the cesspool are widely separated."

REPORTING FROM MEMORY.

When Note Taking Was Forbidden In the House of Commons.

Holcroft's feat in memorizing the whole play of "Figaro" after hearing it ten times could probably have been easily outdone by "Memory" Woodfall, who in the days when note taking was forbidden in the house of commons acquired fame by the extraordinary power of reporting from memory the speeches he heard in that august assembly.

His usual attitude during a debate, says the London Chronicle, was to close his eyes and lean forward with both hands upon his stick, being so well acquainted with the tone and manner of the several speakers that he seldom changed his attitude save to catch the name of a new member.

The speeches thus memorized he printed in his journal, and so wonderful was his memory that he could retain full recollection of a debate a fortnight after, though having listened to many long nights of speaking in the interval. He used to say he could put any speech away on a corner shelf of his mind for future reference.

The Fastest Colors.

It is said that the fastest colors on the market are what are known among dyers as hydrosulphite—colors that are dyed with hydrosulphite in a caustic bath. These colors are as nearly fast as any can be made and have been adopted by our government to be used in army uniforms.

The dyeing of these colors on cotton yarn is simple, especially when the Scotch tub system is employed. The proper way to dye these colors is to use the vacuum type of dye machine, as the dyestuff experts hold that all air should be eliminated from the cotton before the dyestuff is applied, and this type of machine is best suited for that purpose, because in this system the cotton is stationary and the dye liquor is forced through the cotton by means of pumps.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Traditions of Sandwich.

Sandwich is the hub of the universe—of golf. In times medieval it was one of England's five gates, through which passed heroes and saints, priests and kings. Here it was that King Arthur set out to play the emperor of Rome with Excalibur, and here on his return Guinevere welcomed him. St. Paul, says tradition, landed at Sandwich, but it is history that marks it as the landing place of St. Augustine. Picts and Scots were here beaten back by the army of the eastern Julian, and Theodosius landed to repel the Saxons. Becket escaped from England via Sandwich to France. Here Richard I. landed after his Austrian imprisonment and John, king of France, came as a prisoner of the black prince.—London Chronicle.

Tart Retort.

Of Lord Jeffreys, noted for his heartless cruelty, it is recorded when he was chief justice he had a witness before him whose evasive answers aroused the judge's ire. The witness wore an exceedingly long and bushy beard. Said Jeffreys, "If your conscience is as large as your beard you'll swear anything." Unabashed, the witness retorted, "If your lordship measures consciences by beards your lordship has none at all."

Your Chances.

The little chances linger and return, but the great chances come and go and never come again. If we could look back over the lives of the people by whom we are surrounded how many great and rich opportunities would we see that they have permitted to drift by them unimproved!

Food and Fresh Air.

You can live forty days without food, but you cannot live four minutes without air. These things being true, is it wise to stuff ourselves with food and starve ourselves for want of air?

No Difference.

Jinks—Which women have the worst tempers, blonds or brunettes? Binks—My wife has been both, and I could not see any difference.—New York Times.

Bind together your spare hours by the cords of [illegible].—William M. Taylor.

CHIC NEW COLLAR.

Milady Exhausts Her Ingenuity In New and Chic Neckwear.

SMART ACCESSORY.

There has never been a season when the shops have been so deluged with pretty neck "fixings." There are collars and jabots and kerchiefs, things smart, things quaint and things just handsome. There is another lot which would be classified as chic, and such a one is pictured in the illustration. It is a high standing collar of black satin, with pointed tabs, faced with white pique. A flat bow of black satin adorns the front.

CONCERNING GRAY.

Well Liked but Trying Color, Which Should Be Cautiously Chosen.

There is always a revival of gray when spring comes. It has been a feature of new spring frocks since the days of the last century novelists, who raved over heroines garbed in "sober gray" and "dove gray" and "silver gray."

Beyond a doubt all shades of gray are lovely in the piece, and it is almost impossible to keep from buying them unless you have wit enough to lay the material against your shoulder and look in the glass before purchasing.

As a matter of fact, gray is a very difficult color to wear unless you have a very pink and white skin. If you are a wee bit colorless or sallow avoid dove gray as you would putty. Sometimes a sallow complexion will stand a steel gray, or, better yet, a taupe, but the colorless woman will do better to avoid gray if she must go into neutral tints at all.

A soft pink gray is the most generally becoming, but the lavender grays must be carefully tried, lovely as they are. "Battleship gray" is, of course, the popular color this spring, and this and taupe are being much sought after, both in cloths and in the corded silks, such as faille or silk poplin.

The woman who cannot wear true gray must also be careful how she selects blue, as a blue of the color that turns slate under artificial light is apt to be unbecoming to her. It is a strange thing, but the colorless woman with hair of no decided hue usually looks well in rather intense shades of blue, such as peacock or even the new Joffre blue, whereas she will look faded in the pale true blues. In other words, she needs something to add tone to her rather colorless personality and she can often strike a becoming color that would be trying on anybody else.

It should be remembered, however, that a vivid color should always be chosen cautiously if one cannot afford many clothes. A vivid hue in silk or a summer fabric is always a wiser purchase than in an expensive cloth, which must be worn more than one season.

Leghorns For Summer.

Leghorn straw hats are a pleasant revival. Nothing could be lovelier for the warm weather hat with thin frocks than a leghorn at its best. And this summer's hats in leghorn are at their best. They are soft, with undulating crowns, and they are trimmed with velvet, flowers and chiffon in a charming way. One milliner manipulates flat leghorns plaques into smart little tricorns that sit with especial jauntiness above some of the new frocks.

FADS AND FANCIES.

In line with the craze for things black and white are the new hand bags of silk, which have striped linings to match, or in direct contrast are gayly lined with flowered satins or silks. The handles are of the black and white silk or of black moire, as when the bag is all black, ornamented with gilt clasps.

The newest clasp has a knob of cut glass, ivory, jet, enamel, pearl, jade, amber, moonstones or other imitation stones. Some are set alone to reflect their own glory, while others have gold or silver filigree or cloisonne decorations. Vachette is the stylish name for what we have known as patent leather and is much fancied just at the minute for practical use.

Dull bags of pin seal are ever modish, enlivened with gold or silver clasps and fancy knobs and filled up with the inevitable coin purse and vanity accessories. Square or melon shapes are de rigueur. One's monogram in gold, silver or colored enamel in the form of a clasp to fasten the envelope shaped bag is another idea favored.

CHIC PARISIAN FROCK.

Elaborate Afternoon Gown From Across the Waters.

BEAUTIFUL IMPORTED GARMENT.

In spite of the war Paris finds time to make wonderful frocks for the American importers, though Dame Rumor says her women are not wearing many gorgeous frocks during this terrible war. However, here is a sample of the handiwork of one great Parisian couturier who designs frocks even in the trenches.

Wavy goldenrod satin is draped in this instance with silk net which has an elaborate braiding of tan soutache. A girdle of the satin shows beneath the bolero bodice, which is also made of net and braided. Smart boots of two shades of tan leather are worn with this dress, and a parasol in blue and tan is carried. A hat of blue is trimmed with daisies, completing this interesting costume.

DOMESTIC KINKS.

New Methods Used In the Household Learned From Professionals.

Window washing is one of the tasks dreaded by many women, especially the outside of the windows, which are hard to reach. Notice the men who make a profession of window washing, who wash the windows of large stores, and see that they have developed several excellent washers, chief of them being the type which utilizes the so called rubber "squeegee" for drying the panes of glass.

This consists of a galvanized container of triangular box shape which will hold over a quart of water. At one edge of this box is fitted a pad of absorbent felt. At another edge is a rubber squeegee. The whole is equipped with a short metal handle, into which a long wooden handle is to be fitted. When in use the container is filled with water, to which are added a few drops of ammonia or alcohol. The pad is then allowed to soak and the whole device moved vertically up and down the window. When the window has been so washed the other edge of the device is turned toward the glass and the rubber squeegee used, which practically dries the panes of glass. This is the first device of the kind which adapts the commercial washer to the home.

Another kind of washer with points of advantage is a tonglike device fitted with bunches of chamois at each end. These are dampened and the tong fitted over the window casing so that one chamois operates on the outside, the other on the inside pane. This is particularly good in the upper stories, where it is dangerous to sit outside or impossible to reach the windows by any handled device. In cold weather either alcohol or kerosene will prevent water freezing as it is used on the windows.

GUEST ROOM FANCY.

While the careful hostess will not overload her guest room with a horde of useless trifles that will not fit any other place in the house, she will appreciate this latest novelty in a dainty guest room accessory and may hang it with a free conscience on the dressing table for her next feminine visitor. It is a light tinted chiffon bag, a shapeless affair gathered on to a ribbon covered embroidery hoop. In it are piled perhaps a dozen individual powder puffs of softest cotton. Each bit of fluffiness is tied with a piece of narrow ribbon of the color chosen for the bag, and a jaunty bow offers a comfortable way of holding the diminutive puff when in operation. The real practical value of such a dainty bag lies, of course, in the fact that a guest returning from various pleasure jaunts more or less soiled as to face and fatigued as to body will relish a [illegible] the refreshing bit of [illegible], powder or rouge.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Who Wears the Ring?

The number of persons participating in the game should not exceed nine. Some one of the company is selected, unknown to you, to put a ring on one of his fingers. You now say you will tell—first, who wears the ring; second, the hand it is on; third, the finger of the hand, and, fourth, the joint of the finger. This is apparently presuming to do a great deal, and your hearers will look on at first rather dubiously.

The company being seated in regular order, the persons must be numbered 1, 2, 3, etc. The thumb must be termed the first finger, the forefinger being the second. The joint nearest the extremity must be called the first joint; the right hand is one and the left hand two.

These preliminaries arranged, leave the room in order that the ring may be placed unobserved by you. Suppose that the third person has the ring on the right hand, third finger and first joint. Your object is to discover the figures 3131. Returning to the room, ask one of the company to perform secretly the following arithmetical operations:

1.—Double the number of the person who has the ring. In the case supposed this will produce	6
2.—Add 5	11
3.—Multiply by 5	55
4.—Add 10	65
5.—Add the number denoting the hand	66
6.—Multiply by 10	660
7.—Add the number of the finger	663
8.—Multiply by 10	6630
9.—Add the number of the joint	6631
10.—Add 35	6666

He must apprise you of the figures produced, 6666. You will then, in all cases, subtract from it 3535. In the present instance there will remain 3131, denoting the person No. 3, the hand No. 1, the finger No. 3 and the joint No. 1.

Growth of Boy Scouts.

Notwithstanding the rapid development and great extent of scouting at the present time in this country, we are, after all, reaching but a small percentage of the boys whose interest might be had if adequate leadership were provided. Judging from the reports from all parts of the country, the present basis upon which we are now organized and going forward seems to assure a greatly increased development during the coming year. From Oct. 1, 1914, to Feb. 5, 1915, 45,330 boys were enrolled, as compared with 32,929 for the same period of 1913 and 1914; 839 new troops were organized, as compared with 533 for the same period of 1913-14. Commissions were granted to 4,113 men to serve as scout masters and assistants, as compared with 2,251 for the same period of 1913-14.—Report of Boy Scouts of America.

Scouts Off on Long Hike.

With flags flying from a two wheeled trek cart built especially to convey their camp equipment and food supplies across the continent, six boy scouts under the leadership of H. S. Sorrels, former scout executive at St. Paul, recently left St. Paul for a 2,800 mile hike to San Francisco.

They expect to reach the end of their journey about Sept. 1. Sorrels said that every foot of the distance will be walked. Attached to the cart are six ropes, which the boys will use to haul the vehicle.

The Commercial club equipped the boys with cots and ponchos and has provided two signs to be displayed on their cart reading, "Boy Scouts of America of St. Paul, Minnesota, Hiking From St. Paul to San Francisco; Distance 2,800 Miles."

A Fine St. Bernard Dog.

In Minneapolis there is a St. Bernard dog that deserves a gold medal. He has trained himself to stop runaway horses and has performed several feats in that line. Not long ago, while this dog was taking a walk with his master, a runaway horse came clattering along. Just ahead a party of ladies were crossing the street, and there seemed to be no escape from certain death, when the dog gave a leap and caught the lines of the runaway between his teeth. His great weight brought the frightened animal to his haunches just as he was within six feet of the terrified women.

The Poorest Scholar Imaginable.

The other day a professor leaving the university was approached by a seedy individual, who pathetically asked:

"Won't you help a poor scholar with a dime?"

The coin bestowed, the learned man said:

"You tell me you are a poor scholar?"

"Sure," answered the other. "I never went to school in me life. So long."

SERVING TEA.

An easy way of serving a cup of tea is to place the cup on a matching plate and to put a folded tea napkin, a spoon and a fork on the plate. Then pass whatever sandwiches or cakes you may desire to serve with the tea. They can be accommodated on the plate and daintily and easily eaten.

If elaborate cakes or sandwiches are served with tea and no plate is provided it is difficult to manage them balanced on the saucer of the cup. If a separate plate is held under the cup and saucer it is practically useless, for the saucer so nearly fills it that the margin at the edge is not wide enough to accommodate the cakes.

Of course when a simple wafer easily eaten sandwich is to be passed with the tea the saucer of the teacup is sufficiently commodious to accommodate it.

Beheadings.

1. Behead to butcher and leave what follows a funny story.
2. Behead to recite or to argue in a wild manner and leave a small insect.
3. Behead not far away and leave a part of the head.
4. Behead something done to the floor and leave to cry.
5. Behead pleased and leave a small boy.

Answers: 1, s-laughter; 2, r-ant; 3, n-ear; 4, s-weep; 5, g-lad.

A Puzzle in Sheep.

Problem to be solved: A number of sheep were going into a field. There was a sheep before two sheep, a sheep behind two sheep and a sheep between two sheep. How many sheep were going into the field?

Answer.—Three sheep.

Charade.

In dewy fields, on summer morns,
The farmer's men go to and fro
About their work, and they my first
With steady motion, strong and slow.

Far off above the tossing waves
My second circles in the air;
Or, weary, sinks upon the sea
To float and rest in safety there.

My whole is but a happy memory now,
But in the days that are no more
His word was law, in India great,
From mount to sea, from shore to shore.

Answer.—Mow, gull—mogul.

Children of Today.

"If you don't give me a piece of your chocolate, Edith, I'll tell mamma that you are secretly engaged."—Fliegende Blatter (Munich).

FULTON'S BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONIAL DIRECTORY

SIGNS, BULLETINS, CARDS — any kind, anywhere. DECORATION, PAINTING. A. E. WORDEN, Academy and 6th sts. Phone 3432.

DENTISTS

FRED L. CARY, D. D. S. 122 West Broadway. Office hours, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.

DR. H. S. ORCHARD
Dental Parlors
Phone 444 — 112 Oneida St.

BARBER SHOPS

CAMPBELL'S BARBER SHOP has removed to 21 South First Street. Ready to meet all customers.

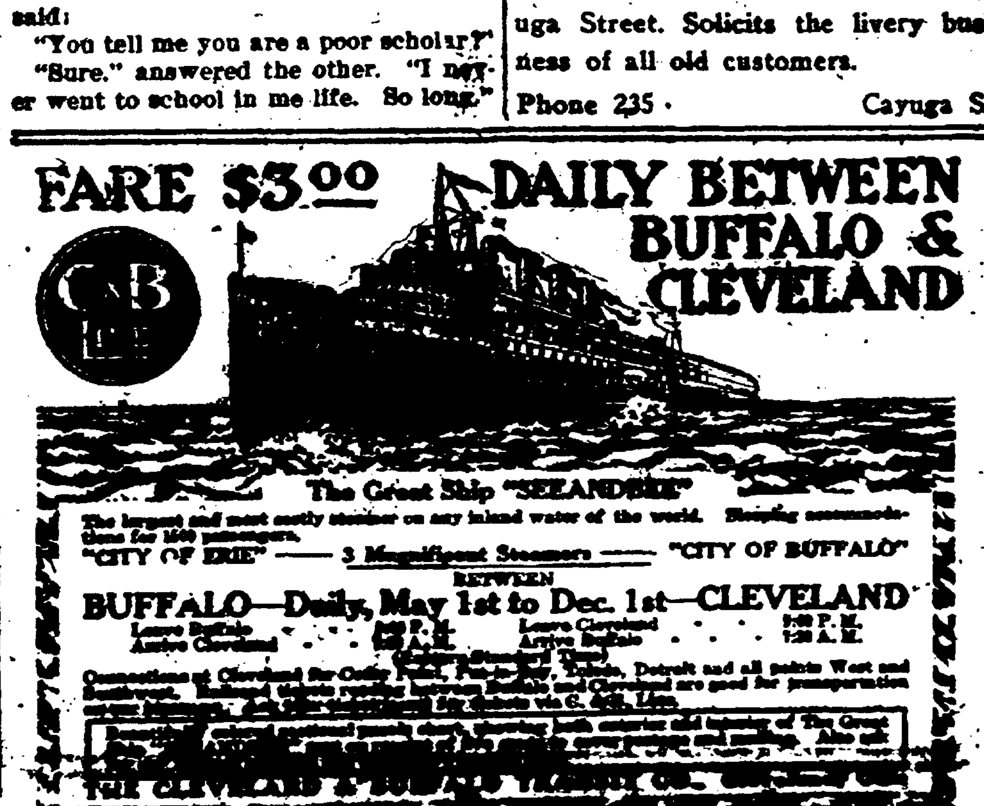
BARBER SHOP AND BATH ROOM — Opposite Lower Depot, Second St. Three Barbers: Martin, Donovan, Carroll. Baths ready at all times. J. Fred Carroll, Prop.

UNDERTAKERS

YOUNG & HILL, Open day and night at 117 Oneida. Phone 2172.

DELIVERY SERVICES.

FRANK DE LARM, Successor to GARRETT'S LIVERY, at 120 Cayuga Street. Solicits the livery business of all old customers.
Phone 235 — Cayuga St.



is the history of Wadsworth [illegible]
Works of Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE WADSWORTH IDEA

A gallon of Wadsworth Double-Thick Paint, a gallon of Pure Linseed Oil; stir the two together and what is the result,

Two gallons of liquid Paint ready for the brush at a saving of at least—

[illegible] PER GALLON

We want you to try Wadsworth Double-Thick Paint on at least one of your buildings, and compare the difference in cost between Wadsworth and the paint you used before, therefore, we will send you a trial order at a special price.

PEOPLE'S HARDWARE, CO., Inc.

The Big Paint Distributors of Fulton

DOING BUSINESS IN THE OPEN

Complete Publicity Obtains of the Work of Present State Administration

Albany.—The open hearings on the appropriation bills held by Governor Whitman ought to settle once and for all the insistent claim of President McAneny that the present administration is extravagant and that the levy of a direct state tax is unnecessary.

The hearings were open to every taxpayer in the state.

Mr. McAneny had two representatives on the job all the time and the comptroller of the city of New York was represented by the financial expert of his department.

All of the representatives of the New York city government were permitted to make suggestions on any one of the thousands of items in the four financial bills—the appropriation bill, the supply bill, construction bill and re-appropriation bill.

The appropriation bill makes appropriations for the general purposes of government and, after the legislature had finished pruning it, carried $33,271,733.58.

The supply bill which is to supply deficiencies in former appropriations totalled $5,592,975.24 after the legislature had finished cutting it.

The construction bill provides for new buildings, improvements and betterments in the state's public institutions and had a total of $3,818,142.19 when it got to the governor.

The re-appropriation bill re-appropriates unexpended balances of former appropriations which would lapse at the end of two years unless re-appropriated. It includes items for all kinds of construction work and the items are constantly changing in amount as bills come in against them. In some instances items were found where no work had been done under the appropriation since it was made. Those items had hard sledding on the assumption that really necessary work would not be delayed two years.

No cutting was made until the head of a department had been given an opportunity to explain the necessity for the item in question and if the explanation satisfied the governor the item got by.

When it is borne in mind that these bills carry more than 3,000 items and cover every line of activity in which the state is engaged it is possible to get some idea of the magnitude of the task of going through them item by item and hearing argument on those in dispute. That the hearings on some days lasted well into the night is not surprising.

A close following of the discussion at these hearings would have supplied any taxpayer who cared to devote the time to the subject with a liberal education on the public business of the State of New York, and the hearings were open for that very purpose.

Never before in the history of the State has such extensive publicity been given to the expenditure of the public money as has been given since January 1, 1915. Beginning with the Governor's inaugural address the financial condition and business needs of the state have been discussed in detail and at great length throughout the session of the legislature in order that every citizen might have full opporunity to inform himseff on these important matters. Finally every appropriation bill was spread on the Governor's desk and consdered in open session item by item, the chief crifics of the administration participating in the scrutiny.

TWENTY-FIVE BILLS FOUND AGAINST OFFICER

Cape May, May 14.—The Cape May County Grand Jury today handed in twenty-five bills of indictment against District Attorney Matthew Jefferson of ths county. The bills charge him with embezzlement, larceny, obtaining money under false pretense and malfeasance in office. Jefferson declars th indictments are a result of a plot of liquor dealers he prosecuted.

A month ago a cenference was held between Attorney General Westcott of New Jersey, Justice Charles C. Black of thhe Supreme Court and County Judge Henry H. Eldredge, at which Jefferson was requested to resign, but he refused.

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next year.

All Kinds of
GARDEN SEEDS
by the ounce or pound at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

NAUVEAUTE'

Since our great Millinery Emporium was remodeled, and from the time that its doors swung open for the magnificent Spring Opening, our great force has been kept on the alert continually. It was with extra force that we managed to prepare for the "Children's Day" last Saturday, which proved to be a big success and a novel idea. But, after all this, we are now working a bigger force than ever, making big preparations to introduce to the ladies of Syracuse and its surrounding country one of the most novel Summer Millinery Openings, on Tuesday, May 18, ever produced by any other merchant—other than ourselves when we began our most successful Millinery career fourteen years ago.

Tuesday, May 18, at 10 a. m., the doors will swing open. There will be a grand display, and a surprise to everybody who will have the opportunity to see it. Our big force of salesladies, dressed in white, will entertain and show you the newest fashions. They will explain to you all the lines of beauty in practical Millinery.

Music from 10 to 12 and 2 to 5.

Ladies are invited to attend our novel "Summer Millinery Opening," Tuesday, May 18, at 10.

Yours for Universal Peace,

ANDRE BOUTIN

FRENCH MILLINER 325 S. Salina St., Syracuse, N. Y.

ANTI-DRUG LAWS DOING THEIR WORK

Hundreds In New York Seeking Treatment In Hospitals.

SITUATION NOT UNEXPECTED

Price of Dope Has Advanced Over 1,000 Per Cent in Many Instances, and Fiends Find It Almost Impossible to Buy It at Any Price—Prisons Filled With Victims.

New York.—Since the strict enforcement of the drastic anti-drug laws in this city has made it almost impossible for dope fiends to buy narcotics the results are both sad and interesting.

"An appalling situation in which drug maniacs are allowed at large," is Ernest K. Coulter's characterization of the present state of affairs in New York. Mr. Coulter represented Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt in the long fight to suppress drug traffic in this city. He was asked to tell what ought to be done to handle the many cases of drug victims, who, deprived of cocaine, heroin and other habit forming drugs, are committing acts of violence and filling the city's prisons and hospitals.

"I don't believe the people of the city realize the seriousness of the situation," said Mr. Coulter. "It must be understood that these men who rob, assault and kill to get morphine or some similar drug are insane. They are the most dangerous kind of lunatics when the craving comes over them. The drug means more to them than life, and they will never hesitate to sacrifice lives—others and their own—to get the stuff.

"The situation which has arisen is perilous in the extreme, but it is not unexpected, and ample warning of what would come about if the city did not prepare for it was given a year ago before the Boylan law became effective on July 1 last. The city was told then that it must prepare to handle hundreds—yes, thousands—of unfortunates.

"Commitment of drug habitues to hospitals had been found to be a flat failure, because the hospitals were too overcrowded to keep these cases a sufficient length of time. In addition experience had shown that the hospitals were not the proper places for drug cases, because the clinical or medical treatment needs to be followed by a prolonged social, physical and mental rehabilitation. The prisons were then overloaded with drug users, and we found that in nearly every case the prison terms were too short for treatment to effect anything like a cure.

"Consider this: From 40 per cent to 65 per cent of prisoners are drug users. Leaving out those sentenced for this very thing, from 30 per cent to 50 per cent of persons convicted of other offenses are found to be drug users. They have to be treated for this, but the workhouse sentences, for instance, are so short that nothing adequate can be done to rid them of the habit."

The Boylan law, the Vanderbilt and other anti-drug crusades and to some extent the war have increased drug prices as much as 1,000 per cent.

A year ago a six ounce can of opium cost the "pipey" or smoker from $6 to $10. Now it costs from $35 to $55. Sold by the "toy," the smallest and most popular measure, it brought $1 for first class opium or 50 cents for lower grade. Now Lai Yuen, the best opium, costs $6 a "toy." Recently 300 six ounce tins of this opium sold for $15,000, and the buyer expected to make $3,000 profit.

Cocaine, now selling for $22 an ounce, could be obtained a year ago for $3 or less. A "deck" of cocaine, the small package generally used in the illegal drug trade, sells now for $4.50 to $5, and the user gets less than he used to for 25 cents. It is now sold in smaller packages, containing only a few doses, for 50 cents or $1. The drug now is often adulterated.

Heroin, or morphine diacetyl, was imported largely from Germany and little manufactured here. It comes in tablets, which are crushed and "sniffed" through the nose. A hundred tablets now sell for $5 to $6. Before the war they cost $1. Heroin [illegible] adulterated with sugar of lead is sold at a corresponding advance.

The morphine user pays almost as much as the opium smoker. Morphine is selling now at $5 for twenty-five grains. Formerly the same amount was sold for 25 to 35 cents.

MOVED BY PARCEL POST.

Old Way Cost Her $20—New Only $4.62.

Seattle, Wash.—Mrs. Annie Olson is believed to be the first housewife in the United States to "move" by parcel post. Postoffice clerks were astonished a few days ago when she demanded stamps for conveyance of her household goods from this city to Quinault.

"I figured it would be cheaper this way," said Mrs. Olson, handing in a barrel containing her kitchen stove.

Other articles of furniture followed, weighing in all 337 pounds and including kitchen utensils, a rocking chair and a dining room table, among other things. The moving cost her $4.62. [illegible] cost her $20 the old way [illegible].

AMERICAN GUNS HIT THE HARDEST

Daniels Tells Why We Use Fourteen Inch Cannon.

MORE GUNS ON EVERY SHIP

England's Queen Elizabeth Has Eight Fifteen-inch Guns, While the Pennsylvania Carries Twelve Fourteen-inch Pieces—American Boat Is 70 Per Cent More Effective.

Washington.—In a recent letter giving a detailed review of what had been done to improve and strengthen the navy in the past two years Secretary Daniels made this statement:

> The bureau of ordnance has developed a fourteen inch gun that will shoot farther, shoot straighter and hit harder than any gun now in use or known to be designed by a foreign country.

There has been much interest in the matter of the effectiveness of the guns of the navy, and Secretary Daniels has given out the following information amplifying his earlier statement:

"The question of the proper caliber for the main battery guns of our battleships is one that has received the most careful consideration on the part of the bureau of ordnance and the general board.

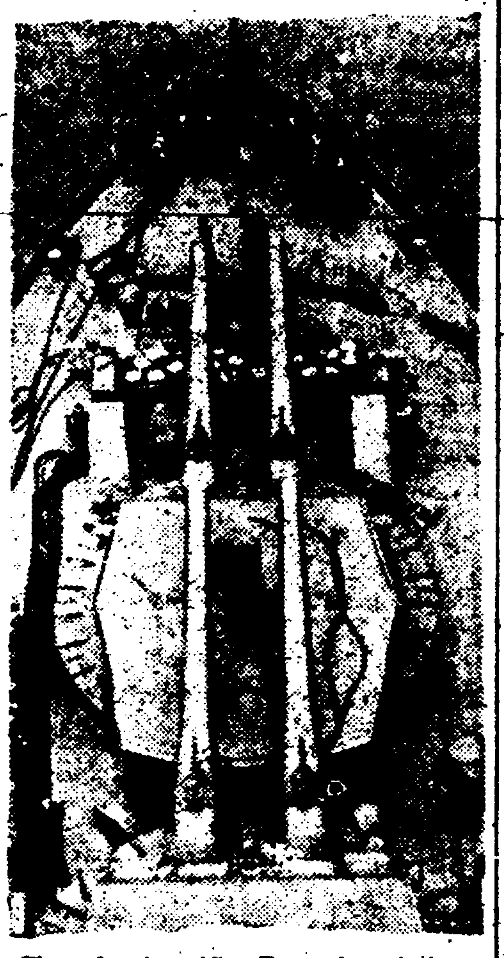


Photo by American Press Association.

BATTERY OF BIG GUNS DESIGNED IN AMERICA.

"There is an axiom with regard to calibers which amounts to this: That a ship should mount the smallest big gun that will pierce the enemy's armor over vitals at the maximum probable fighting range. The fourteen inch guns of the Pennsylvania will get through the maximum armor afloat, so far as our knowledge goes, at a range of 12,000 yards. The Queen Elizabeth's fifteen inch guns will do little more than that. If our information is correct as to the velocity of the British fifteen inch gun the fourteen inch guns on the Pennsylvania will range a little farther than the Queen Elizabeth's fifteen inch gun. The flatter trajectory of the fourteen inch gun gives it increased probability of hitting in comparison with the fifteen inch gun.

"The Pennsylvania mounts twelve guns to the Queen Elizabeth's eight. Therefore the volume of fire of our ship exceeds the volume of fire of the British ship by 50 per cent.

"The navy department has built and proved a sixteen inch gun superior to both the fifteen inch and fourteen inch so far as penetration of armor at fighting range is concerned. If the Pennsylvania were to be armed with the sixteen inch gun she could carry only eight as against the twelve fourteen-inch guns now assigned her. If we adopted the fifteen inch caliber we would have to make a sacrifice in number of guns as great or nearly as great as was done in the design of the Queen Elizabeth.

"Counting volume of fire and probability of hitting, we see that at battle range the number of blows delivered by the Pennsylvania in a given time will exceed those given by the Queen Elizabeth by 70 per cent. The fifteen inch gun, it is stated, fires a shell weighing 1,920 pounds. Our fourteen inch shell weighs 1,400 pounds. The bursting effect of the larger shell will be greater, of course, but we have little doubt that the destructive effect of the burst of the fourteen inch shell will be quite sufficient for its task. No one can doubt the advisability of delivering seventeen hits to ten of the enemy. Added to all of the above, we must recollect that the chance of having gunfire survive rests with the ship carrying the greater number.

"Now, if we compare these guns at range greater than battle range or armor piercing range and merely count the ability to reach the enemy's decks or unarmored parts we find that the Pennsylvania's guns range quite as far at a maximum as those of the Queen Elizabeth. Both guns range farther than they would have any hope of hitting a ship—that is to say, over 21,000 yards, or something like twelve land miles."

ON LUSITANIA.

The following are the figures furnished by the Cunard company and United States Consul Frost at Queenstown, Ireland, as to the loss of life on the sunk Lusitania:

Total loss of lives	1,154
Americans among lost	166
Passengers drowned or killed	789
Crew drowned or killed	365
Total saved	764
Passengers rescued	462
Crew rescued	302
Americans among saved	80
Injured among rescued:
Passengers	30
Crew	17
Bodies recovered	144
Americans identified among dead	23

SAW TWO TORPEDOES, SAYS CAPTAIN TURNER

Commander Denies Internal Explosion Sank Lusitania.

Captain W. T. Turner, commander of the Lusitania, gave out the following statement at Queenstown:

"I have heard that the Germans have already begun to spread the story that the Lusitania was sunk by an explosion inside. This is absolutely untrue.

"I saw the periscope of the submarine and saw the torpedo coming toward us through the sea. I watched its course and followed its bubbling wake until it disappeared beneath our counter. You might say I saw the torpedo strike the Lusitania, and the next instant the explosion occurred.

"I kept to the middle channel, following orders received from the admiralty. When I saw the torpedo I tried to change the ship's course in time to avoid it. The second torpedo followed almost immediately. The second struck right over the boilers, crippling the engines. For this reason it was impossible to beach the Lusitania.

"I did not order the lifeboats out sooner because it was foolish to try to get them into the water before the Lusitania lost all headway. Otherwise they would have been swamped.

"All talk of an internal explosion is foolish. Had there been high explosives or any amount of ammunition in the hold the liner would have been blown to bits instead of sinking as she did. There had been no reason for running under forced draft. That is why we were not at full speed.

"I saw the submarine again. I was in the water four hours, and while I was swimming I saw the craft rise amid the wreckage and dive again. Others saw it even better than I did."

SAW VICTIMS FLOATING.

Passenger on Canadian Liner Sends Remarkable Wireless Message.

A passenger of the Canadian Pacific steamship Missanabie, from Halifax, which passed over the scene of the Lusitania disaster twenty-four hours later, immediately sent the following remarkable message to the London Times. He was then in ignorance of the truth:

"Saturday, 1:30 o'clock, I see floating deck chairs and a boat upon the bow of which I read the word 'Liverpool.' Our ship swings her around and on the other side the word 'Lusitania.' My God, it has happened!

"I realize that we are on the scene of a great tragedy. There are other lifeboats about. One contains a pair of boots and a hat. There are collapsible boats awash, some with sides not up. There is a whaleboat keel upward with a body lying over it, the lifebelt slipping off the neck. Yes, a dead man.

"Captain Evans, our commander, has 1,000 lives aboard his ship to get to safety, and up goes our speed, and we are dashing away on a zigzag course. Just now a bald head bobs up in the water not twenty-five feet away from us. It is ghastly in the sunshine.

"The water is almost motionless. The silence and impressiveness of it all are coupled with the dawning sense of our own danger. It has brought wonderful calm to all. Our women are fine—silent and sad, with full sympathy which overrides fear.

"We can do naught but race on, but by 6 o'clock tonight our risk will be over. Captain Evans' calm and dignity are fine, yet no man could live his previous twenty-four hours unmoved, and his own thoughts must have flown to his own son in the trenches."

Lawn Mower Hospital at Roy's Quick Shoe Repair, 110 Cayuga st. ad

Get Busy
CLEAN UP
—and—
PAINT UP!

BUELL BROS.
PLUMBING and HEATING
Phone 186
17 N. Second Street

FRESH VEGETABLES
EVERY DAY
at LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

MERCHANTS and [illegible]
SHIPPERS
Save 25% on your Freight Bill, Order Goods Shipped by Boat.
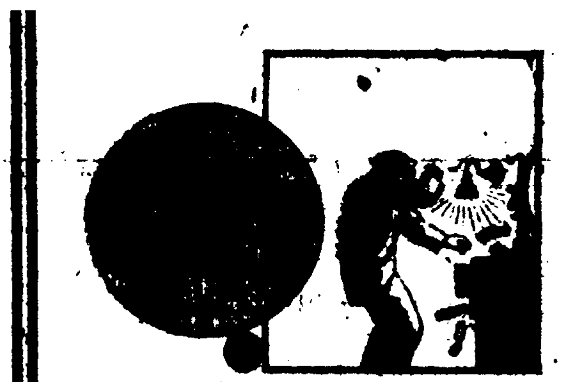
STEAMER
"CITY OF FULTON"
Now Running
Freight House on Rochester St. Dock, open from 7 a. m. until 6 p. m. Man in charge all day.
C. S. BURLEIGH, Captain

THE QUIRK
Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TODAY	TUESDAY
"THE WALLS OF JERICHO" with Edmond Breeze, as produced by Jas. K. Hackett at the Hacket Theatre N.Y.	BETTY NANSEN in Count Tolstoi's Masterpiece ANNA KARENINA
CHARLES CHAPLIN in "IN THE PARK" 1-Reel Essanay	If you have read the book, see the play.

SPECIAL—COMING WEDNESDAY
The Ill-Fated Lusitania on Her Fatal Trip
See the passengers arriving at the Cunard S. S. Dock. The big pull out into the Hudson river as the passengers are waving good-by to their friends on the dock and the ill fate that befell them. Absolutely genuine. No fake. Simply scenes before and after.



SAFETY

Have your home wired for Electricity and enjoy the comfort, convenience, cleanliness, economy and safety of Electric Light.

Let our representative give you an estimate.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

103 Oneida St. Phone 144

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Rooms to Rent—Furnished or unfurnished, for light housekeeping; all modern conveniences. F. G. Dolbear, 203 Worth st. 127

For Rent—Bedroom with use of bath, telephone and all conveniences. For information call telephone 1438 or 4552. 127

For Sale—Seven tons hardwood ashes James Hunter, Jr., 322 Oneida st. 127c

For Sale—Large ice box suitable for store; also 16-foot row boat at 510 So. 1st st. Phone 148. 128c

Lost—Thursday; small amount of money. Return to 309 W. Broadway. Reward. 128c

Furnished Rooms—3, single or en suite. 205 Cayuga st. 129c

Young Man Wanted—As clerk at the Onyx. tf

To Rent—Flat, lower, at 608 Rochester st, 130c

FRESH STRAWBERRIES
EVERY DAY

at LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

Communication

Fulton, N. Y., May 17, 1915.
Editor, Fulton Times,
Dear Sir:

I notice a statement in your paper last Friday that I am assisting my son, Harold, in his work on the Syracuse Herald. I wonder at the cause and source of such an absolute misstatement of the facts. I have not written one word for my son, in his work, other than my regular church notices, nor have I solicited or received for him one item of news or business.

I make this statement for the sole reason that I wish it to be understood that my energies are devoted to my own profession, as they should be, much pleasure as it would afford me to work with my son, or agreeable and honorable as newspaper work might prove.

Respectfully yours,
CHAS. S. ROBERTSON.

CHILD DROWNED IN CISTERN

A sad accident happened last Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Seymour, in Marcellus Falls, when their littled aughter, 18 months old, fell into a cistern and was drowned. Joseph A. Young, undertaker, returned today from Marcellus Falls, bringing with him the little body for burial, which will be made tomorrow from the home of the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Seymour, 16 N. 6th st. Burial will be made in Mt. Adnah cemetery.

WATER GLASS
EGG PRESERVER
Qt. or Gal. Sizes at

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

Community Notes

The Rev. J. W. Barett of the First M. E. church was in Syracuse today attending the regular monthly meeting of the Ministers' Association.

* * *

The Rev. M. G. Buck was in Oswego today.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Harrington of W. 4th st., have returned from Ithaca where they were called to attend Mr. Harrington's mother in her last illness. The funeral of Mrs. Hrrington was held Saturday afternoon.

* * *

The Rev. and Mrs. Charles Olmstead of the Congregational church have gone to New York where they will be in attendance at the New York State Conference of their church. They will not return until Friday or Saturday.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Jay piper of this city have been the guests of out of town friends.

* * *

Mrs. Darrow of West 4th st. is recovering from her recent severe illness.

* * *

Eugene Drury of Gansevoort st. has purchased a new auto.

* * *

Miss Kittie Collins of Syracuse was an over-Sunday guest of her mother, Mrs. C. Collins.

* * *

Prof. Lawton of the High School manual training department was an over Sunday guest of Charles Cooper at West Granby.

* * *

Mrs. Dora Munger of S. 5th st. was a recent caller upon friends at Ingalls Crossing.

* * *

Charles Casler of Parish is spending a few days with Fulton friends.

* * *

Mrs. James McCoy of Hannibal st. is a guest of Ilion friends.

* * *

Mrs. John Francis of Ithaca has been in Fulton to attend the burial of her father, Jerome Miller.

* * *

Thomas Devaney and daughters of West 3d st. have been entertaining Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Burke of Binghamton.

* * *

Miss Mabel Hart of Wells st. entertains the Upnifters of the State st. church at her home, this evening.

* * *

Mrs. L. F. Joy of S. 1st st. is visiting out of town friends.

* * *

Mrs. Charles Morris is in Elmira as a delegate from the local body of Rebakahs. The sixteenth annual session of the State Rebekah Assembly is being held.

* * *

A number of local people will attend the charity ball at Oswego for the benefit of St. Vincent de Paul's society.

* * *

Dr. H. M. Doane, Mrs. Harvey Mac Murchy and Miss Nancy Cook were delegates attending the suffrage convention in Syracuse on Saturday.

* * *

Dr. Lee, who has been ill for some time at his home in S. 1st st., was operated upon yesterday afternoon.

* * *

Dr. and Mrs. Halstead have returned from Syracuse where they were called by the death of Mrs. Halstead's mother.

* * *

Rev. H. D. Holmes attended the older boys' conference at Oswego on Saturday.

* * *

Miss Kennedy, manager of the O. Henderson store, is ill.

* * *

Miss Mary Frawley has returned from a short vacation spent with her parents at Palermo.

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next week.

WELFARE WORK BEGINS SOON

City Hall to Again House This Important Department. Miss Slanger May Be In Charge

It is reported that Miss Jessie Slanger, the visiting nurse, who is employed by the Women's Auxiliary of the Lee Memorial hospital will soon reopen the Baby Welfare station in the City Hall. Miss Slanger was making investigations at the building this morning and the apparatus which is nsed in the station wll soon be set up by janitor Young according to reports.

The Welfare station did a great deal of good work last year among the children of the city, particularly those of poor parents and foreigners. The station was open every day and the nurse was in attendance at all times. Mothers whose children were ill were invited to bring the little ones to the station where they were examined by the nurse. Treatment was then prescribed by the nurse and in that way diseases that ordinarily might have been allowed to flourish through ignorance or poverty on the part of the parents were checked.

The public vaccinations were made at the station last year and several cases of infectious and contagious diseases were reported by the nurse. The poorer people of the city appreciated the station and its work and the re-establishment of the Welfare department will meet with hearty approval, not only on the part of the parents and children benefitted but also of every citizen who wishes the greatest precautions taken in maintaining the health of the city. Miss Slanger is experienced in the work and has been able to show results in her capacity of visiting nurse during the past year. When the station is established, she will probably be in charge."

PLEADS FOR HARMONY IN HIS SUNDAY SERMON

The Congregational church held an appreciative audience at yesterday morning's preaching service, when the Rev. Charles Olmstead preached upon a subject near to everybody at the present time—"A Plea for Harmony." The subject bore upon the present national difficulties and embodied a plea that the people of this nation shall practice self-restraint. The speaker commended President Wilson's course in using the "padded hammer," saying that it is better to do that than it is to strike out.

At the evening preaching service Mr. Olmstead used as his subject, "The Spread of the Gospel."

At next Sunday's morning preaching service Mr. Olmstead will take as his subject, "Paul's Methods in Evangelism." In the evening the congregation will join with the members of the Baptist church in union services commemoration of Memorial Day. At that service the Grand Army of the Republic will be present in a body.

WATER POWER OWNERS MAY HAVE FREE BOOKS

Congressman Luther W. Mott, of Oswego, has at his office a limited number of copies of Water Supply Paper 354, a United States Geological Survey report on the St. Lawrence River Basin, which is of interest to those owning water power rights on streams in Oswego, Jefferson, Lewis and portions of Madison county, which discharge into Lake Ontario. The Congressman will send out this report on request as long as the supply lasts. It of interest and takes in streams such as Black river, Moose river, Salmon river, Oswegathcie river at Newton falls, Orwell brook, Oneida river and others in Northern New York.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Edmund Breese will appear today in a 5-reel virile story of English life, a message—a warning to modern civilization against the decadence of its very foundations. It is a clarion blast against gambling, dissipation and tendencies just as injurious to our social being. The story revolves about a selfmade millionaire who marries a lady of royal birth whose associates in the smart set almost leal her to destruction. Charles Chaplin also appears in a two-reel Essanay comedy, "In the Park," a really strong and satisfying bill.

John Perchway, of the McDonald Company, is in Oswego today on business.

* * *

All the stores in the down town section will be closed tonight promptly at 6 o'clock.

* * *

Harry O'Brien, City Sealer, will leavef or New York city tomorrow to attend a convention of city sealers.

* * *

Mrs. John Sprague of Cortland, N. Y., was a week-end guest of her daughter, Miss Florence Sprague, who is teaching in the public schools here. Mrs. Sprague returned to Cortland last night.

* * *

Miss Greata Burleigh of Oswego motored to this city with a party of friendsl ast evening.

* * *

Thomas Hunter has returned from a business trip to New York city.

* * *

Several young Fulton people have been invited to attend the Junior Prom of the Oswego Normal school which will be held in the school gymnasium next Friday evening.

* * *

A collision between two high-powered automobiles, the owners of which refused to tell their names, was reported by residents along the West River road north of the city last night. The accident occurred near the Frazier homestead and both cars were badly damaged although they were able to proceed under their own power.

* * *

Mrs. Margaret Cullen and her daughter, Miss Alice Cullen formerly of this city but now of Syracuse visited in this city last week.

265 SHIRT WAISTS for 75c

ON SALE WEDNESDAY 9 A. M.

In this lot you'll find SILK, NET, LAWN, CREPE, and WASH SILK WAISTS; not a waist in the lot is worth less than $1.00 and some $1.50 and $2.00, all on Sale Wednesday for 75c

CAN BE SEEN IN OUR WINDOW NOW

Attend our Sale of the $25,000 Gloversville Stock, in our lower floor, many of Bargains are left yet.

M. KATZ & CO.
Department Store

63-65 FIRST STREET FULTON, N. Y.

NAUVEAUTE

Audre Boutin makes an announcement, in this issue of one of his novel summer millinery openings at the famous French parlors, 325 S. Salina st., Syracuse. In addition to other novelties of the occasion M. Boutin will have an augmented force of saleswomen dressed in snowy white, whose duty it will be to conduct patrons throughout the display.

Do not let another day pass without trying some of the good things at the Roberts & Wood Fountain. adv

W. C. T. U. RECEPTION

Mrs. Ida McClellan will entertain the members of the local Union at her home in E. Broadway Wednesday evening at 7.30. This meeting will be the nature of a reception to new members.

We are Agents for
CHASE & SANBORN'S
Fine Teas and Coffees
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

Do You Want $2 in Cash, or $2.50 in Merchandise Absolutely Free?

You can have it by asking your Merchants for National Red Stamps and insisfing on getting them with everything you buy. If your merchant does not give you National Merchandise Stamps it is absolute proof that he does not appreciate your trade. Merchants who give National Red Stamps want your trade and are sharing their profits with you. Every full book of Red Stamps is worth $2 in cash or $2.50 in merchandise, dry goods, clothing, etc., or can be applied for $2.50 on purchase of larger amount or $2 on account. Full books will be redeemed by any merchant who gives National Red Stamps.

FREE COUPON

This Coupon good for Red Stamps Free when making a purchase of 50 cents or more at the following merchants. Coupon not good after Saturday, May 15.

TAYLOR & WILCOX
370 W. Third St. Phone 1399
Meats and Groceries Best Western Steer Beef

GEORGE B. LOOMIS
CHOICE GROCERIES FREE DELIVERY
371 West Fourth Street Phone 3309

McDONALD'S NEW YORK SHOP
Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear
106 Oneida St. Phone 3177

A. ALDERMAN
Groceries, Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes
214 West First St.

J. BELASKI
GROCERIES AND MEATS
[illegible] West First St.

M. H. JOYCE
The New West Side Grocery
518 West Third St. Phone 4260

H. C. DANN & SON
City Meat Market
High Grade Meats at the right prices.
[illegible] South 2d St. Phone 62

JOHN CRAHAN
GROCERIES
124 West 3d St. Phone 1233

JAMES J. KENYON
GROCERIES
518 South 1st St. Phone 3299

J. R. WARD
GROCERIES—Open Evenings
314 Seneca St. Phone 4450

THE FULTON SALVAGE COMPANY
DEPARTMENT STORE West Third Street and Broadway

W. G. INGRAHAM
GROCERIES, DRY GOODS, NOTIONS
Corner North Sixth and Seward Streets Phone 1266

Watch the papers for announcements of Free Stamps and Bargain Prices. Save your Tobacco Tags, Wrappers, Certificates and other coupons and exchange them for Red Stamps; we are redeeming over 2,800 different kinds of coupons.

D/34

The Fulton Evening Times

"The Paper of Results"

If Results count for anything, The Evening Times has almost reached the much discussed

"Pschycological Moment"

WHY?

Because of the leaps and bounds made by the circulation department within a fortnight

Circulation Growing Every Minute! Watch It Grow More!

After several months of painful illnesss and a couple bad sinking spells, The Evening Times believes

MR. BUSINESS

of Fulton, N. Y., is back on the job. From the very first The Evening Times knew he would recover.

He has recovered always.

And now is the time to advertise in YOUR PAPER—the local home paper, because YOUR PAPER—the People's Paper is a home institution. The Evening Times leaves the People's money in YOUR TOWN; Does not take it away never to return.

Make Yours the Livest Ads in the Evening Times

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

The Chinaman Thought the Missionary Was Going Too Far.

Dr. Frank Garrett, who has been a missionary to China for the last seventeen years, says that the first thing you have to do is to get the Chinese viewpoint. Like many of their customs, it seems to us upside down. In the United States if you call a man a liar you are likely to get into serious trouble. In China the man would be rather complimented than insulted.

A missionary had established a little church somewhere in the interior and put a native preacher in charge while he visited some other mission points. When he returned he missed one young man from the congregation. The native preacher said they had put him out of the church.

"Why, what was the matter? What did he do?" asked the missionary.

"He stole a bamboo rod," returned the preacher.

"Why," answered the missionary, "a bamboo rod is worth only about 10 cents. Don't you think you were a little severe?"

"No, no," and he shook his head indignantly. "We can't have a thief in the church. The Bible says a thief can't go to heaven, and we couldn't have any one in the church who couldn't go to heaven. Besides, it would give us a bad name in the community."

"Well," returned the missionary, "the Bible says a liar can't go to heaven. Are you going to turn the liars out too?"

"Oh," cried the preacher, "that's different! Entirely different! We all lie."—Youth's Companion.

OLD TIME MANNERS.

Rules of Good Behavior in the Early Eighteenth Century.

In a work entitled "Youth's Behavior," published in 1706, there is this injunction to young gentlemen, "Put off thy Cap or Hat to persons of Desert as are Churchmen, Justices and the like, turning the Cap or Hat to thy selfwards; making a Reverence, bowing thyself more or less according to the custom of the better bred."

In the midst of remarks which indicate the utmost refinement we come suddenly upon such directions as this:

"'Tis not manners as soon as you are set at Table to bawl out, 'I eat none of this, I eat none of that, I care for no Rabbit; I love nothing that tastes of Pepper, Nutmeg, Onyons,'" etc.

After stating that "some have been so refined in Foreign parts that they will neither be covered nor sit with their backs to the picture of an eminent Person," the writer goes on to remark that "there are some who eat with that eagerness and impatience, they eat themselves out of breath and will pant like a broken winded Horse, but these are not to be indured."

He also warns his pupil thus:

"When you are talking to any one do not Continually punch him in the side, as some people do; who, after every sentence keep asking the person they are conversing with, 'Did I not tell you so?' 'What say you, sir?' and in the meantime they are every moment jogging and thrusting him with their elbows, which cannot be considered as a mark of respect."

Lincoln Among Other Men.

Some years ago a series of pictures was printed showing Lincoln in many attitudes, either alone or in company with statesmen or military men in Washington or in camp. Attention was called by the writer, who had assembled the pictures, to the singular isolation and dignity of Lincoln when taken with any group of men. They, almost without exception, showed that they were conscious of observation, attitudes were studies, and the effort to look well in the picture was often evident. No matter in what company he was, the president seemed not to be conscious either of the artist, of himself or of the men who surrounded him. He stood or sat alone, as if he were an impersonal figure representing native strength and unique sublimity of character.—Christian Register.

A Cautious Reply.

At West Point they tell a story of a man known as Ginger, on account of the peculiar color of his hair, who graduated at the foot of his class after six years at the Point.

Ginger distinguished himself while reciting to an instructor in ordnance by a remarkable answer to the question "How many pieces will a twelve pound shell burst into?" the average number having been determined well by experiment. After due reflection Ginger lifted his eyes to those of the instructor and replied:

"Not less than two."—New York Times.

Hard Both Ways.

"When children want to marry they sometimes have a hard time in getting their parents to consent."

"Children have no kick when it comes to being hard hearted. When parents want to marry they almost never succeed in getting the children's consent."—Pittsburgh Post.

Famous Literary Compositions.

"Destroy this letter."

"I, John Doe, being of sound body and mind, do make and declare this to be my last will."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me."

"Please remit."

"R. S. V. P."—Milwaukee Free Press.

The child lives in the future, the old man in the past. The wise man lives in the present.

FOR THE BOUDOIR.

A new trinket to add to milady's boudoir is what might be called a telephone closet. It may be a most elaborate creation of brocade and gilt lace, or it may take on the more modest garb of dull flowered cretonne. It is usually made up, however, in the material of the rest of the boudoir or bedroom "fixings." This little telephone cover is made on a frame or cardboard, like the half of a cylinder about sixteen inches high, with a diameter of fourteen inches. A straight piece of cardboard sixteen inches high and about eighteen inches long is covered with the material to be used. If the outside is cretonne it may be lined with a plain color. A piece of wire is sewed into the bottom of this piece and bent so that it holds the covered cardboard into a half cylinder. Two doors are covered in the same way and connected to the cylinder by means of a cotton or gilt braid. A straight piece of the material is shirred into the top for a "roof" and caught in the middle under a covered button or cabochon of braid. At the back and bottom of the cage is cut a small hole to allow for the telephone wire to pass through. The whole closet is simply placed over the phone, and when the warning bell rings milady opens the little doors, takes her message and replies and replaces the phone in the cage, tucking away what is often a most jarring note in an otherwise quaint, old fashioned boudoir.

SEALING WAX KNICKKNACKS.

Beautify Yourself and Your House by Mastering New Art of Decoration.

Do you know how to use sealing wax to beautify yourself and your house? No? Well, it is a new art, but it is one worth mastering.

With sealing wax of various colors, some shoe buttons, a little lamp and a small metal dish or ladle you can make very attractive "enameled" buttons for your new chiffon blouse. Melt some pink and blue and green and gray wax in the ladle, without mixing them very thoroughly, and dip the buttons in. Then let them dry, and you will see that you have some lovely round buttons with almost opalescent coloring.

Or suppose you want a pair of pins for baby's frock and do not feel inclined to pay $1.50 for the blue enameled sort you desire. Buy a stick of the lovely pale blue sealing wax and a ten cent pair of pins at the notion counter, melt the wax carefully so that it does not scorch to a darker shade and dip in the pins. Dry, and, presto, you have the enameled baby's gift you desired.

Perhaps you want a string of beads. You can make them, too, of sealing wax. You can dip wooden beads—the kind that come for children to string on stout thread—in gold sealing wax, and when they have dried you can dip half of each bead in again and let that dry and then put just a little of the bead's surface in again and so work up a bead of irregular shape, like the lovely Venetian beads of glass and gold. You can use other colors, too, with the gold.

Then you can make beads entirely out of the wax if you learn to work skillfully, and so have a chain of beads with a foundation of nothing but wax.

BRASS FITTINGS.

Convenient and Handsome Articles For the Library Table or Man's Den.

Though milady doubtless does not smoke, it falls upon her shoulders to provide the necessary receptacles for ashes when her spouse lights up his

[illegible]

evening cigar. Shown in the illustration is a combination smoking and card set of brass, also a humidor for tobacco. The ash tray separates into four sections for individual use. In the center is a patent lighter, and beneath is provided space for the cards.

HINTS FOR EMBROIDERERS.

Very frequently embroiderers have their nerves frazzled when the silk frays while they work with it. Not every person knows that this condition is due to the fact that the eye of the needle is too small for the number of silk that is being used. It is just as big a mistake, however, to select a needle having too large an eye. In such a case the work takes on the appearance of having too few stitches and holes mark the edges of every stitch.

When embroidering a piece of work which requires shading the sewer will find it very convenient to have a needle for each color used and use them in succession as each color is required in her work. You will never find an experienced embroiderer confining herself to one needle where a number of colors have to be used alternately.

Peru Had Clever Physicians and Surgeons Ages Ago.

Both cocaine and quinine were first discovered and used by the prehistoric inhabitants of Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia. A cup made from the wood of the tree yielding quinine was filled with water and allowed to stand overnight. In the morning the liquid had become saturated with the medicinal properties possessed by the wood and its bitter contents were drunk. The quassia cups sold in drug stores in this country during the past century were the early method used to administer quinine.

The leaf from the tree giving cocaine is chewed today by the Indians living in the mountainous districts of Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia. It acts as a heart stimulant in those high altitudes and deadens the pangs of hunger so frequently felt by the half starved natives.

The Chumus, who lived in Peru, according to some authorities, 2500 years before Christ and whose dominions extended into Bolivia, Ecuador and parts of Brazil and Colombia, had a pharmacopoeia of their own. Most of the articles used by them as medicines aeons ago are used by the physician of today. Their surgeons were highly skilled too. I have seen skulls dug up in their old cemeteries that showed their owners during life had been injured many times in battle by blunt instruments, presumably clubs, and their lives had been saved by trephining. I recall one skull with four silver plates, several with three, very many with two and hundreds with one.—Leslie's Weekly.

SKILL OF THE BEAVER.

As a Canal Digger He Is an Engineer of Rare Ability.

According to a legend, the beaver is supposed to be a reincarnation of man, put back on earth to expiate past offenses by work, and in some of the early drawings it is depicted with the face of a man. And when we consider its extraordinary intelligence and skill as woodcutter, engineer (dam and canal maker), house builder and food storer the notion does not seem at all farfetched. Describing the canals which the animals make by scooping out the earth with their hands, A. R. Dugmore in the "Romance of the Beaver" remarks:

"It might be presumed that these canals are only run through level country, but here is the greatest evidence of the engineering ability of the beavers: They build their canals uphill by means of weirs or dams, the distance between them varying according to the gradient. Yet they never work uphill unless it is made absolutely necessary by the contour of the land. The width of these canals is usually about three feet, with a depth from one to three feet, seldom deeper except when small pools are made, evidently with the idea of providing a hiding place in the event of danger. The direction of the canals must necessarily be variable. Wherever conditions are favorable they are as straight as though laid out by human engineers, but when there is any advantage to be gained by curves they make curves."

The Almanac Trust.

The sale of almanacs was once a lucrative monopoly. Queen Elizabeth granted the sole right to publish "almanacs and prognostications" to the Stationers' company, and James I. extended the privilege to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, but for centuries only these three bodies were permitted to issue printed calendars. The monopoly ended when the claim of the king to the privileges of granting or withholding permission to issue calendars—a survival, perhaps, from days when kings asserted their right to regulate all things, including even the times and seasons—was definitely disproved and proclaimed nonexistent. Now anybody can say who's who anywhere.—London Spectator.

Munchausen.

"The Travels of Baron Munchausen," as we have them are a compound from a great variety of sources. The first installment, which professes to be based on the real baron's own tales, is scarcely a quarter of the whole, and even this has been traced in great part to various German, Italian and Portuguese origins. Afterward the author cribbed avowedly from Lucian and added a second volume intended as a satire on Bruce's "Travels." Most of the early editions were entitled "Gulliver Revived; or, the Vice of Lying Properly Exposed."—London Tatler.

How It Works Out.

"I'll never forget the favor you have done me," said the man who doesn't mind asking for what he wants.

"Don't say that," replied the cold blooded person. "When a man keeps brooding over an obligation he's almost sure to get resentful instead of appreciative."—Washington Star.

He Was.

"Jane, what time is it?" called down the irate father.

"I don't know, pa. The clock isn't going."

"But I am," spoke up the young man, who could take a hint.—Detroit Free Press.

Paradoxical.

She—These functions are so unnatural, people pretending to be something that they really aren't. He—Well, that's natural.—Puck.

Do not think that years leave us and find us the same. [illegible]

[illegible]TRIA'S U-5 [illegible]SIGNED IN U. S.

[illegible]rine That Sank French [illegible] American Made.

[illegible]NES WERE BUILT HERE

[illegible] Vessel Which Covered Trip of [illegible] 280 Miles to Reach Foe and [illegible] Back Safely Proves Value of Un[illegible] Craft For Coast Defense, Says [illegible] Designer.

[illegible] Austrian submarine U-5, which [illegible] a trip of more than 280 miles [illegible] her base and sank the French [illegible] Leon Gambetta off Otranto, in [illegible] Adriatic sea, with a loss of 552 [illegible] including Admiral Senes, was de[illegible] in America and equipped with [illegible] made in this country.

[illegible] vessel and her sister ship, the [illegible] are of the same displacement, [illegible], radius, etc., as the five United [illegible] submarines of the C class which [illegible] constitute the floating defense of [illegible] Panama canal. These vessels are, [illegible] course, smaller and less powerful [illegible] the more modern boats, but have [illegible] in maneuvers and in actual war [illegible] their great value for defensive [illegible]purposes.

Made Long Sea Trip.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the torpedoing of the Leon Gambetta took place approximately 200 miles away from the base of the U-5, thus illustrating the enormous value of the mobility possessed by even the smaller and older submarines. It was the engines, motors and other important parts made in the United States which enabled the U-5 to accomplish this big trip and safely get back to her base.

The U-5 was put together at Fiume, Austria, under the supervision of Americans and was handed over to the Austrian government in 1910. The same American concern as designed [illegible] is now building half of the new [illegible] of submarines for the United [illegible] navy on plans that are being [illegible] secret.

"[illegible] view of the scant respect paid to [illegible] rights of weak neutrals by the [illegible] powers in the European war," [illegible] the designer of the Austrian U-5 [illegible] an interview, "our coast fortifica[illegible] at the canal, no matter how effi[illegible], cannot supply a complete de[illegible]. The submarine, however, can [illegible] the area forbidden to the ene[illegible] ships enormously and thus pre[illegible] the landing of mobile forces for [illegible] purpose of attack upon the canal [illegible] its fortifications.

Cites Dardanelles as Lesson.

"The operations under way at the Dardanelles form also an impressive object lesson, since the bombardment [illegible] the forts and the landing of French and English troops would be quite impossible did the Turkish navy possess even a small submarine flotilla. If these operations are finally successful and if the fall of Constantinople proves to be the turning point of the war the vital importance of the submarine will have the clearest possible proof."

Of the crew of the Leon Gambetta 135 were saved. Of these 110 landed at Syracuse and twenty-five at Brindisi. The bodies of Admiral Senes and fifty-two officers and men have been buried at Cape Leuca, near the scene of their death. The funeral was arranged by the officers of Italian torpedo boat destroyers. Residents of the neighborhood joined the Italian sailors in attending the services at the cemetery.

GIRL IS MADE LIEUTENANT.

Czar Honors Young Woman Who Fights Beside Brothers.

Recent Russian army orders contain notice of the promotion of a young woman, Alexandra Lagerev, to lieutenant. With sixteen other girls belonging to families of Cossacks, she has been fighting alongside her male relatives. Eight of the girls have been killed.

Lieutenant Lagerev was made a prisoner, but she killed her guard, escaped and led a reconnoitering party which captured eighteen uhlans in Suwalki with important documents.

JOBS FOR 4,000 DUE TO WAR.

American Mechanics Go to England to Make Ammunition.

Four thousand American mechanics, principally machinists, from New York and Jersey City have gone to England to work in munition factories.

A British agent named O'Connell has been rounding the men up, offering union wages, the best of living conditions and transportation both ways. O'Connell is now making a tour of the principal cities getting additional workmen for England.

HONORS GAILLARD'S MEMORY.

Wilson Renames For Him Culebra Cut, His Work In Canal.

Culebra cut, in the Panama canal, is no more.

President Wilson has changed the name to Gaillard cut as a mark of respect to the late Colonel Gaillard, who [illegible] charge of the construction of this [illegible] section of the canal and whose [illegible] was due to hard work [illegible]

THE NATION'S CAPITOL.

Main Dimensions of Our Beautiful Building in Washington.

Our national capitol at Washington is a beautiful and impressive building. It fronts east and stands on a plateau eighty-eight feet above the level of the Potomac. The entire length of the building from north to south is 751 feet 4 inches, and its greatest dimension from east to west is 350 feet. The area covered by the building is 153,112 square feet.

The dome of the original central building was constructed of wood, covered with copper. This was replaced in 1856 by the present structure of cast iron. It was completed in 1865. The entire weight of iron used is 8,909,200 pounds. The dome is crowned by a bronze statue of Freedom, which is 10 feet 6 inches high and weighs 14,985 pounds.

The height of the dome above the base line of the east front is 287 feet 5 inches. The height from the top of the balustrade of the building is 217 feet 11 inches. The greatest diameter at the base is 135 feet 5 inches. The rotunda is 97 feet 6 inches in diameter and its height from the floor to the top of the canopy is 180 feet 3 inches.

The senate chamber is 113 feet 3 inches in length by 83 feet 3 inches in width and 36 feet in height. The galleries will accommodate 1,000 persons. The representatives' hall is 139 feet in length by 93 feet in width and 36 feet in height.—Philadelphia Press.

PLANETS AND OUR WEATHER.

Despite Popular Belief There Is No Connection Between Them.

That the planets and the moon have an effect upon the weather on the earth is a common belief. This belief is baseless, for all changes of weather depend upon differences in temperature.

Rainfall is due to the accumulation of water in the atmosphere. This water can accumulate only by being evaporated from the surface of the earth. And evaporation requires heat. Winds also are due to heat—greater warmth in one place than in another causing the air to rush toward where the warm air is rising.

If the moon and the planets could furnish heat they might affect the weather. But the heat they furnish is so infinitesimally small that it is not enough to change the temperature an appreciable fraction of a degree. The amount of heat they send us has actually been measured, but it needed the most delicately sensitive of instruments to perceive it.

Another proof that neither the planets nor the moon have any effect upon our weather is that careful comparisons of the weather with the positions of the planets and the moon show that there is no relation between them. If there were we should have the same weather when the planets were in the same position, which is not the case.—New York World.

Japan's Good Roads.

Japan is peculiarly well off in respect of good highways. The Tokaido which runs from Kioto to Tokyo, is over 300 miles in length and, as the writer can testify, is admirably constructed. There is also the Nakasendo, which is even longer and passes through some of the finest scenery in the world. The reason of Japan's excellence in the matter of roads is that in the old days, not so very long ago, the daimios, or territorial nobles, had to journey to Tokyo once a year in order to pay their respects to the sovereign. They traveled by road, with great retinues, and if the highways were not in perfect condition, feudal justice was meted out to the delinquents.—London Spectator.

Good Company.

As friends and companions, as teachers and consolers, as recreators and amusers, books are always with us and always ready to respond to our wants. We can take them with us in our wanderings or gather them around us at our firesides. In the lonely wilderness and the crowded city their spirit will be with us, giving a meaning to the seemingly confused movements of humanity [illegible] the desert with their own [illegible].—John Alfred Langford.

AN EVEN TRADE.

It Wasn't Made Simply Because the Law Wouldn't Allow It.

A traveling salesman for a Gansevoort street wholesale grocery firm, recently back from a trip through rough lands of a neighboring state, tells this possibly true tale:

"One day on my last trip I had a six mile ride to make to the county seat, and the small village in which I was had only one horse that I could hire and no other form of conveyance. I may say that a friend had landed me in the town that morning from his car, and I had sold goods enough to pay the expenses of the trip.

"Well, I got away on the sorriest specimen of a horse I ever straddled, and I was to send him back by the mail carrier, though not as a parcel post package. It took me two hours to cover the distance—I was sorry enough I hadn't walked—and as I passed the county jail on my old bag of bones a face grinned at me from between the bars of a small square window. I was too sore to smile, but I nodded to the grin, and the prisoner called to me:

"'Say, mister,' he said, 'how'd you like to trade that critter for thirty days in jail?'

"Just then I would have been glad enough to have traded, but the law wouldn't let me, and I rode on."—New York Sun.

ARGENTINE PRIDE SPURNS BIG PROFIT

Refuses Offer of $17,500,000 For New Dreadnought Moreno.

NATIONS AT WAR WANT IT.

Greece, Peaceful, Made Largest Bid Against Many Other Countries—Acquisition of Vessel Would Have Given Her a Big Naval Advantage Over Turkey.

New York. — Argentina's patriotic pride in her new super-Dreadnought Moreno, which sailed recently from Newport News, is strong.

Not even a profit of about $6,000,000 in cash could induce the South American republic to sell this warship, one of the largest afloat, which was built at Camden, N. J. The offer was made by Greece through an agent in this city, acting on instructions of the Greek minister in Paris, whose government was willing to pay £3,500,000 for the American built vessel. The cost to Argentina for the construction of the Moreno was about $12,000,000.

Greece, however, was not the only country that made bids for the immediate transfer of the warship for monetary considerations that would net Argentina a large profit.

Italy, it is understood, is anxious to add the great sea fighting machine to its navy, although her offer was not as large as that made by the Athens government.

The first intimation that negotiations had been in progress mentioned Russia as the bidder, but the fact of Russia's inability to use the navy she now has eliminated that country as one of the nations that coveted the Moreno.

"Yes, there have been offers for the sale of the Moreno," said Manuel A. Molina, acting Argentine consul in New York. "I am not sure which countries made the bids, but I know that all of them were rejected by my government."

The fact that Greece, not yet embroiled in the European conflict, was the highest bidder for the new sea fighter confirms a recent statement that the Hellenic power has been making pretentious military preparations, which included the purchase of the United States warships Idaho and Mississippi for $12,000,600 and are now followed by the further offer of about $17,500,000 for the Moreno to add to her ready made navy.

Greece has also bought about 100,000 tons of coal in this country and a large quantity of hospital supplies, besides ammunition. The further fact that Greece was able to pay $12,000,000 in cash for the two American vessels and was ready to pay the amount bid for the Moreno also indicates a favorable condition of the Greek exchequer or the readiness of a friendly power to advance the necessary money.

The New York agent to whom the Greek minister at Paris intrusted the important mission is in close social and commercial relations with Argentina, but the government at Buenos Aires refused to consider even the flattering offer that would mean a profit of 50 per cent of the battleship's cost.

The prospective purchaser or purchasers were encouraged in their negotiations by the controversy that developed between the Argentine government and the New York Shipbuilding company, which built the Moreno, over the payment for extra work, which delayed the delivery.

The acquisition of this vessel of 27,500 tons displacement and a speed of 22½ knots by the Greek navy in case of a conflict with her ancient and natural enemy, Turkey, would be of great importance and would give that country a greatly superior naval strength over that possessed by Turkey.

Argentina has proudly rejected the great inducement, and the Moreno will continue to fly the blue and white flag. The transport Chaco of the Argentine navy brought the crew for the Moreno and is now at Philadelphia. The Chaco will follow the super-Dreadnought south.

DOG A "PANHANDLER."

Bubbles Collected Pennies Enough to Pay For License.

Warren, Mass.—For the license of Bubbles, a dog owned by Edward W. Burns, former proprietor of the Hotel Ramsdell, 200 cents were paid to Town Clerk William F. Duncan. Bubbles collected the cents himself from traveling salesmen and other guests in the hotel. He is a Boston bull terrier, six years old and is known to every child here.

Bubbles will not be satisfied unless he is given a cent. At all times he will refuse silver. When a cent is thrown to him he grabs it in his teeth and runs to a corner of a room and then returns for more.

At the beginning of the year Mr. Burns' son began to save the cents received by Bubbles. The cents are on exhibition in the window of a Main street store.

New Shoes Every Six Weeks.

London.—It is estimated that six weeks is the life of an army shoe and that for a year of the war 71,000,000 pairs will be necessary.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Acute Indigestion.

The quickest remedy for the trouble is water. Drink one tumblerful of water after another as rapidly as possible until six or eight have been taken. This method dislodges the irritating substances in the stomach and causes vomiting and instant relief from the pain and intense nausea. After all the undigested foods have been removed lie down and rest and suck pieces of ice until the stomach is comfortable. A little brandy in ice water, a teaspoonful poured over a few pieces of ice, may be sipped every few minutes to relieve the weakness and while waiting for the doctor to arrive.

NEW RAPID FIRE GUN.

Water Cooled Weapon That Has Been Adopted by Uncle Sam.

After a series of tests the United States army has adopted a water cooled rapid fire gun of the type now in use on the European battlefields. The barrel of the gun is incased in a water jacket to prevent its becoming overheated. This is refilled during heavy firing, but when water is not easily available an apparatus is employed which condenses the steam generated in the jacket and allows the water to be used over and over again.

The gun, which is operated by recoil, has a maximum firing speed of about 500 shots a minute, a somewhat slower speed than the air cooled guns in ordinary use, but the water cooled guns are expected to fire a greater number of shots in a long period because of the saving of the time consumed by the air cooled gun in inserting the short feed strips.

The regulation 30 caliber cartridge is employed, and the range is 1,500 to 1,800 yards. Ammunition is fed into it by a belt which holds 250 rounds, the shells being automatically inserted and ejected as long as pressure is exerted on the trigger.

The gun, which weighs ninety-six pounds, is set on a tripod so constructed as to make the weapon available for use against air craft.—Indianapolis News.

COAL AT PANAMA.

Mammoth Storage Plants Planned For the Canal Route.

Coal storing plants of mammoth magnitude are being planned on the Panama canal route. One of the storage plants is to be situated at Cristobal and another at Balboa.

It is planned to have a coal storage basin at Cristobal with a capacity of 290,000 tons and one at Balboa with a capacity of 160,000 tons. In each place the storage will be within a large basin made of re-enforced concrete, in which approximately half of the coal will be stored under water for use in time of war and the other half above water to be added to and taken from continually for the ordinary uses of commercial and government vessels.

It also is planned if the policy should be approved to be able to lease parts of the storage basin to such private coaling companies as may wish to maintain their own coal stores on the isthmus, but in such cases all of the handling will be done by the government plant, a suitable charge being made for the service.—New York Press.

Calling on Wilson.

The average person who calls on the president is in no hurry to leave, and the less important his errand the longer he takes to explain it. President Wilson listens patiently, although perhaps with little enjoyment; then he gets up and moves toward the door, and it must be a very obtuse person who cannot take the hint, and if something more than a hint is needed then the president shakes hands with him, but it is done graciously and in a way that is flattering to the person who without knowing it is being dismissed.—New York Telegram.

Our Cotton.

The United States department of agriculture reports that both long and short staple cotton in California yields 300 pounds to the acre, while in the [illegible] best record—that of Missouri—[illegible] runs 325 pounds of long staple and 225 pounds of short. The price of short staple in California is about the same as elsewhere, but that of long staple is higher than in any state except Florida.

Breaks the Silo Record.

So far as is known, the silo which John Edwards, who lives near Englewood, Kan., is building will be the largest in the world. It will be fifty feet high, fifty feet across and fifteen feet in the ground. When completed it will hold 2,500 tons of ensilage. Mr. Edwards owns 10,000 head of cattle.—Kansas City Journal.

New Territory North of Siberia.

Valuable discoveries of new land north of Siberia, says Reuter, have been announced as the result of the hydrographical work in those seas of the Russian ice breakers Taimyr and Vaigatz. The new territory stretches for some 200 miles.—London Chronicle.

Size of Zeppelins.

Zeppelins vary in diameter and length, but most of them are of large size, being almost as big as battleships. The Deutschland, for example, is 485 feet long and 46 feet in diameter, with a capacity of 25,000 cubic yards and a lifting power of 44,000 pounds.

$10,000 MAN HEAD OF HOLDUP GANG

White's Dramatic Confession of Crime Stirs Court.

LIVED HYDE AND JEKYLL LIFE

Was Respected Sales Manager by Day and, All Unknown to Wife, Who Remains Faithful, Was Associate of Robbers and Frequenter of Vile Dens at Night.

No more dramatic scene has ever been witnessed in a criminal court than that which arose in Brooklyn supreme court when Philip T. White, a $10,000 a year sales manager, tore off his Masonic emblem and confessed that he was the leader of a band of taxicab holdup men and consort of the frequenters of the vilest dens in Manhattan's Tenderloin.

Beside White stood his faithful wife, with their baby in her arms and four-year-old daughter by her side. Until her husband opened his lips she had believed him always the upright, respectable business man he was by day. There was hardly a dry eye in the room.

White was charged with being concerned in the robbing of two messengers of his firm who were held up and deprived of $3,032, the company's payroll. Last October a man named Clinnen was charged with the robbery, but immediately acquitted by the jury, who readily believed the handsome, honest looking, highly paid sales manager when he said that at the time of the robbery Clinnen was with him at Brooklyn's noted club, the Crescent. His salary was $10,000 a year.

Torn With Deep Emotion.

While his counsel arranged with the court for him to make his confession, White, pale and haggard, gripped the oak railing in front of him. He gave one quick, pained glance toward his wife and then, steeling himself for the ordeal, began, his voice choking with emotion:

"Your honor, I wish to confess my guilt and my shame before your court and the world. I had the full confidence of my employers and the love of my wife and babies. I was trusted and esteemed by my relatives, my business associates and my friends before I was tempted and before I fell. I have no just excuse to offer for my crime.

"But one thing I wish to ask here is that the good Lord will give me the strength to serve out the sentence which you will impose and that I may be spared to make full restitution for every dollar I have taken and for every cent of expense that has been caused through my dishonesty. And I also want to pay back to the state all that my crime has cost it.

"I wish to be spared to help J. Edward Darrick, my friend, who has lost his position through helping me, and I want to help Arthur Barlow, who has lost his position, although I do not know why.

"This is the bitter cup that the Lord has willed I shall drink. I have prayed to the Lord, and he has guided me. I am guilty, your honor. That is all."

As is the custom, several bailiffs crowded up to the bar.

"Stand back, officers!" commanded Justice Aspinwall. "This man is not going to run away."

Wife Puts Hand In His.

Mrs. White, pallid as he, but trembling less, stepped softly to her husband's side, slipped her arm through his and put her hand in his. Weeping, White bent over her and whispered:

"Helen, I'm guilty of all they've said about me. I'm going to make a clean breast of it."

"I see you wear the button of the Mystic Shrine," said Justice Aspinwall, himself a member of the order.

White bowed, and his hand went to the lapel of his coat.

"I can't wear this any longer; I have disgraced it. I strip myself of my Masonic emblem, for I am not fit to wear it."

In the tense silence of the court only the sobs of the heartbroken wife could be heard.

"I have been impressed with the sincerity and frankness of this man," said the justice. "Before pronouncing sentence I would like to make an investigation. I would like to look up his record and also to hear from his friends, so I will postpone sentence."

White, a member of an excellent Virginia family, has enjoyed for his own sake a high reputation among those with whom he lived and moved by day. But for his own confession of his doings and associates at night his Hyde and Jekyll existence would not have been credited by his friends.

GERMANY RESUMES RACING.

Ten Day Meet For $62,500 to Be Held Near Berlin.

At a meeting of the Union club in Berlin, the controlling body for horse racing in Germany, the vice president announced that permission had been received to reopen the race tracks, but without the operation of betting machines.

The first meet will begin at Hoppegarten, near Berlin, May 24, and continue ten days. Seven races will be run each day. The purses will amount to $62,500.

LABOR AND ART CLASHED.

The Battle Was Rather One Sided and Labor Won the Night.

Among the experiences which Sir Frederick Cowen, the eminent composer, relates in his book "My Art and My Friends" is the following: Once while conducting in Melbourne a terrible noise of hammering started overhead as soon as the concert began.

"I put down my baton and stopped," writes Sir Frederick; "so did the noise. Thinking it was over, I began again; so did the noise. I then sent a messenger with a polite request that the noise should cease. After about ten minutes, during which the hammering grew more and more persistent, the messenger returned, and I said to him:

"'Did you give them my message?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'And what was their answer?'

"'They said, "Tell Mr. Cowen we've got our contract to finish by a certain time and we ain't going to stop for no concert or nobody."'

"Upon this I turned to the audience and said:

"'Ladies and gentlemen, as you have possibly noticed, there has been a fight between labor and art. Labor has won. I am very sorry, and I wish you all good night.'

"Then I dismissed the orchestra, and there was no concert that evening."

FIRE RISKS ON FARMS.

Safety First Should Be as Much the Rule There as Elsewhere.

A contributor to Farm and Fireside shows how appalling fire risks are on farms. He tells how to reduce some of these fire risks and writes in part as follows:

"The inveterate smoker is about as dangerous as a walking stick of dynamite. It makes me shudder to see a man smoking around the farm buildings. One man I know never will forget the way he was run off the farm when I caught him smoking a cigarette while stacking hay.

"Another dangerous practice of which the average man is guilty is that of carrying ordinary matches loose in his pockets. He should carry either safety matches or keep the ordinary kind in a metal box.

"On most farms the lantern is still the usual light for working about the buildings after dark. A good way to keep it clean and safe is, first, to take out the burners and clean them by boiling in strong soapsuds. This will keep the ventilating passages of the burner working properly. Then wipe all leaking or spilled oil off the base.

"Never set a lantern down. Either hold it or hang it up. Then when it is accidentally struck it will swing instead of upsetting."

A Gladstone Anecdote.

Lord Alverstone tells this anecdote of Gladstone in his "Recollections:"

"Mr. Gladstone was very much interested in the Caucasus. I had a friend, Captain X., who had recently come home from that district, and I gave him a letter of introduction to Mr. Gladstone. A few days later I met Mr. Gladstone in Parliament street. He stopped me and said, 'Your friend, Captain X., knows more about the Caucasus than any man I ever met.' A few minutes afterward I met Captain X. in Pall Mall. I said to him, 'Well, you have made a great impression, Mr. Gladstone.' 'Have I?' he said. 'Yes,' I replied. 'He says you know more about the Caucasus than any man he ever met.' 'Well,' said Captain X., 'that is very strange, for, though I was with him for three-quarters of an hour, I made only three observations.'"

Leather Medals.

Leather medals were originally conferred as a genuine mark of honor. When King John of France, captured at Agincourt, was forced to pay to Edward III. of England a ransom of 3,000,000 gold crowns to effect his release he was left without precious metal for coins or decorations. So he found it necessary to pay the palace expenses with leather money. He also used leather medals when he wished to confer honor on some nobleman. The custom quickly arose of presenting leather medals as a burlesque distinction.—American Boy.

Discretion.

"Mother"—Elsie's eyes were round with horror—"that little boy next door just said the awfulest thing."

"Come tell mother, dear."

"Oh, I couldn't possibly tell you; it was too awful."

"Elsie, tell me instantly."

Elsie backed toward the door. "I think I'd better run out in the garden and play. I feel it coming on that I'm going to tell."—New York Post.

Sound Advice.

"I wish Ingomar to think only of me."

"I would not distract his thoughts too much from business, my dear," counseled her mother. "Remember you will need a great many expensive things."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Why He Failed.

"I understand his marriage was a failure."

"Yes; he tried to run it the way he ran his business."

"How do you mean?"

"He was never in the office."—Detroit Free Press.

Gentle Gertrude.

Penelope—Gertrude is a gentle creature, isnt she? Percival—Yes; instead of whipping the cream she just scolds it.—Youngstown Telegram.

It belongs to great men to have great defects.—French Proverb.

D/34

LOCAL :: SPORTING NEWS :: GENERAL

INDEPENDENTS PUT SKIDS UNDER THE B'VILLE TEAM

With Feeley in the Box, the Locals Swamped Beeville by Score of 16-1. McCullum Stars For Local Team

The Fulton Independents got some good batting pratice Saturday afternoon at Baldwinsville coupled with plenty of exercise on the paths, for the local players ran themselves ragged, scoring runs almost at will and trimming the Beeville hopefuls by the score of 16 to 1. The game was a good burlesque of the national pastime, not because the Fulton lads weren't in earnest but because the Baldwinsville team persisted in booting every ball off the bats of the Fultonians and the support accorded pitcher Hall was enough to take the heart out of any man. The home boys didn't have a chance at any stage of the game, and it is doubtful if they could have trimmed the local high school team, playing as they did yesterday. Feeley had the Indian sign on them at all times, but after few innings, he saw that he could take it easy and he was not forced to exert himself after that. Hall, on the other hand, was touched up often, but several of the Independents' hits should have been fielded without trouble by the Beeville infield. They gave an awful exhibition of baseball and practically laid down in the last five frames. Hall was ready to quit two or three times, disgusted with the support he was getting but as there were no other pitchers in sight he was prevailed upon to finish it out.

The locals started off with a rush in the first inning. Rogers walked and H. Ingeamells singled. McCullum sent Rogers home with a grounder that Jones should have eaten up, and Ingamells came home when his brother bunted.

Fulton tallied four times in the third inning, three of the runs being made with none down. The Baldwinsville team registered four errors in this inning alone and Hall started to walk out of the box but his teammates begged him to continue. Roth, the Beeville first sacker, was the only man on the team, with the exception of the battery, who seemed to want to play ball. He put up a good game. Half of the home team played in street clothes. Cy Perkins in left field dropped an easy fly and Rogers, the Beeville center fielder attempted to play both fields after that, with disastrous results. The next fly ball hit into left field territory claimed the attention of both Rogers and Perkins with the result that neither man caught it and two runs came in. Hall had an altercation with a rough-neck spectator at this point and for a time it looked as though the crowd would get its money's worth, but some players separated the two men.

Baldwinsville scored one lone tally in the fifth inning. Feeley let up a trifle and A. Perkins lined out a pretty single. Jones fanned, but Westphal brought Perkins in from second with another hit. After that Feeley was invincible and no Beeville player reached third base.

McCullum starred for the locals, making two sensational one hand stops of hot liners in his territory as well as leading his team at the bat. Two excusable errors are charged against Fulton, but aside from that the local boys played perfect ball. The game was no real test however as the Beeville team was only a pick-up organization and in no shape to play a baseball game.

The score:

Independents

	AB	R	H	PO	A	E
D. Rogers, 3b.	5	1	1	2	2	1
H. Ingamells, 2b.	4	2	1	3	2	0
McCullum, ss.	5	2	2	3	4	0
W. Ingamells, lf.	4	1	0	2	0	0
Brown, rf.	5	2	1	1	0	0
Watson, cf.	3	2	1	1	0	0
Paige, 1b.	4	2	1	6	0	1
Fayette, c.	4	2	1	9	1	0
Feeley, p.	3	2	0	0	2	0
	37	16	8	27	11	2

Baldwinsville

	AB	R	H	PO	A	E
A. Perkins, 2b.	4	1	1	2	1	1
Jones, ss.	3	0	0	1	2	3
Westphal, 3b.	2	0	1	1	1	0
Failing, c.	3	0	0	5	1	2
B. Rogers, cf.	4	0	1	2	0	2
C. Perkins, lf.	4	0	0	1	0	0
Roth, 1b.	3	0	2	10	2	0
Spalding, rf.	2	0	0	3	0	1
Hall, p.	3	0	1	1	3	0
	28	1	6*	26	10	9

*D. Rogers out—hit by batted ball.

Score by innings:

Baldwinsville ..0 0 0 0 1 0 0 0 0— 1
Fulton ....2 0 4 3 0 1 2 3 1—16

Two-base hits, Watson, Fayette, Roth. Sacrifice hits, D. Rogers, McCullum. Sacrifice fly, Brown, Paige. Struck out—by Feeley, 9; by Hall, 5. Bases on balls, off Feeley, 2; off Hall, 4. Passed balls—Fayette, Failing, 2, Time of game, 1 hour 50 minutes. Umpires Knox and LaPorte.

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Richmond at Toronto.
Providence at Buffalo.
Newark at Montreal.
Jersey City at Rochester.

Results Yesterday

Montreal, 3; Providence, 1.
All other games postponed, wet grounds.

Results Saturday

Jersey City, 9; Buffalo, 1.
Newark, 5; Toronto, 3.
Providence, 4; Montreal, 1.
Richmond, 3; Rochester, 2 (first game).
Richmond, 9; Rochester, 9 (second game).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	11	4	.733
Montreal	10	6	.625
Richmond	8	6	.571
Jersey City	6	6	.500
Rochester	6	7	.462
Buffalo	4	6	.400
Newark	4	7	.364
Toronto	3	10	.231

Do not let another day pass without trying some of the good things at the Roberts & Wood Fountain. adv

INTEREST BEARING DOLLARS

Money that is idle cannot yield a return.

To accomplish the best results, your money should be working for you—invest it where it will yield a good return consistent with safety.

We offer you this opportunity and cordially invite your account.

4% PAID IN OUR INTEREST DEPARTMENT

CURRENT COMMENT

The Independents tried hard to make the contest at Baldwinsville a ball game Saturday, but the home team booted the game away and in several instances Hall, who had a sore arm, was ready to quit cold, and hec ould hardly be blamed.

* * *

"Swatty" Watson, of the local team, has Marty McHale of big league fame backed off the boards on the voice stuff. "Swatty" has a tenor that would make Caruso go back to truck drivink. He had a chance to demonstrate in a Baldwinsville ice-cream parlor Saturday, anr the proprietor and all within hearing distance were enthralled by the center-fielder's tuneful melodies.

* * *

Tommy McCullum got a hand, even from the B'ville fans, when he went five feet up for a hot liner in the fifth inning and pulled it down with one hand.

* * *

Fayette an Oswego player, who handled the big mitt for Fulton, played a heady game. His throws to the bases were fast and very few pillows were pilfered on his arm.

* * *

In spite of the fact that they lost the game in the tenth inning the Fulton High school lads were a happy bunch Saturday night, for they had at last errand the commendation of their coach, Bill Stauring. Bill will hand out the credit when it is deserved and he said Saturday night, "The boys lost out, but it wasn't their fault. They played real baseball today and if they can repeat the stunt throughout the season, I'll be satisfied."

* * *

"Spec" Caffrey bore up bravely under his prize-speaking honors and played first base again, while Krausse was stationed in right. Caffrey improved in his hitting somewhat and scored both runs for Fulton.

* * *

Thh Fulton Hige school team should have a scorer at every game and if necessary pay the expenses of one of the students. A box score is the only method of getting a line on the players and batting and fielding averages can not be figured unless the scores of all games are available. Some one should score every game. When the team plays at home, two or three scorers are on hand, but the box score of the Morrisville game was not kept nor was the score of the Auburn game.

* * *

With the Oswego-Onondaga County league playing Saturday games, the Athletic Park field will be available. Although some work has been done on the diamond this year, the expenditure of twenty-five dollars would work wonders at the park. Some new wire is needed in the grand stand, and unless the old wire is replaced very shortly there may be a fatality to report. The infield could stand a little filling-in without severe strain, and the players can get enough fresh air without the medium of the ventilation holes in the fence. These things should be taken care of at once.

FULTON LOST GAME IN TENTH

Local High School Boys Were Nosed Out After Hard Uphill Fight

Failure to get the breaks in luck at the proper moment cost the Fulton High school baseball team the game at Auburn Saturday when the Auburn High school nine won in thhe tenth inning by the score of 3-2. It was a hard game to lose and had all the earmarks of a well-earned victory for Fultonians until the fatal frame when an opportune hit coupled with an inopportune error, a base on balls and another wallop from an Auburn bat, brought in the run that put the ramper on the hopes of the local lads.

After the performance of the team here Friday when they trampled the Solvay High school team to earth by a score of 7-3 Coach Stauring felt confident that the locals would give a good account of themselves against thes trong Auburn team. And he was not disappointed. The locals started the ball rolling in the second inning and nicked the platter with one tally in that period. Auburn made it 2-1 in the fifth when O'Brien was touched for two of the five hits he allowed during the entire game. Then the contest wore on into the ninth frame with both teams fighting seemingly impossible. In the ninth, however, Caffrey leading off, made his only hit of theh game. O'Brien advanced him with a scarifice and Wilcox sent him over with a clean single. Auburn was unable to score in the last half and with renewed confidence the locals came to bat in the tenth determined to put the game on ice. Pullen landed on first with a clean hit and D. O'Brien followed with Pullen taking third. The next batter fanned and the Auburn lads blasted Fulton's chances at that juncture with a lightning double play that nailed Pullen at home and Barnes at first. In Auburn's turn at bat Miller walked. Barker missed a liner on a bad bound and a hit by the Auburn captain sent across the tally that won the game.

O'Brien pitched a good game for Fulton holding the heavy hitters of the Auburn team to five scattered bingles and passing but one man. Wilcox did some good work with the stick and Caffrey played a good game at first. The rest of the team performed well. No scorer accompanied the local team so the box score story of the game is not available.

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Baltimore at Chicago.
Brooklyn at Kansas City.
Newark at Pittsburgh.

Results Yesterday

Pittsburgh, 4; Chicago, 1.
Kansas City, ; St. Louis, 2.
Buffalo at Newark (rain).

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	19	10	.655
Newark	16	12	.571
Kansas City	15	12	.556
Chicago	16	13	.552
Brooklyn	14	13	.519
St. Louis	12	14	.462
Baltimore	12	17	.414
Buffalo	8	21	.276

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

At Minneapolis—										R	H	E
Cleveland	0	0	1	2	0	0	0	0	2	5	8	2
Minne...	0	0	2	4	0	0	4	0	x	10	11	2

At St. Paul—										R	H	E
Columbus	0	0	0	1	0	0	2	0	1	4	11	2
St. Paul	1	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	2	3	1

At Kansas City (10 inns.)— R H E
Indianp. 1 0 1 1 0 4 1 0 0 0—8 13 1
K. City 3 0 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 1—[illegible] [illegible] 2
Louisville at Milwaukee—wet grounds.

MORE BALL CLUBS FOR COUNTY LEAGUE

Baldwinsville Ready to Join Oswego-Onondaga Organization; Phoenix Also Agreeable

If the Phoenix representatives and the manager of the Rowan Stars of Oswego view the matter of the Oswego-Onondaga county league in the same light as the management of the Baldwinsville baseball club, fans of this section will be regaled with a live wire league this summer. Saturday, after the Independents-Baldwinsville game, Captain McCullum of the Independents and E. J. LaPorte of the Fulton Evening Times, which is promoting the league, conferred with Manager Carver of the Baldwinsville team and one of his associates on the question of the league and the matter met with great approbation on the part of both men. Baldwinsville is ready, even eager, to join such an organization and to that end the team has already made plans to open the season in approved style when the league starts. Manager Carver stated yesterday that he was heartily in favor of the project and was willing to enter his team at any time. The tentative rules and regulations of the league were explained to him thoroughly and he saw nothing that could be objected to. The Baldwinsville team will use the grounds in the rear of the high school and although the team has no facilities for barring spectators who do not pay, Carver stated Saturday that the people of the town were good baseball fans and willing to contribute at any time to the support of the town baseball team.

The team put into the field Saturday by the B'ville manager comprised only four regular players and the rest were eleventh hour pickups. Carver promises that the Baldwinsville league team will be on a par with anything in this section, and when asked if he thought the Rowan Stars of Oswego would be too fast for an strictly amateur league the B'ville manager said that he would be willing to clash with the Rowans at any time when is real team is in the field.

Carver offered to get in touch with the Phoenix manager before the first league meeting is called and hhe will see to it that Phoenix is represented at the meeting. Hestated that he was in favor of a bonafide amateur league, with no players paid, although he did not object to a division of receipts among the players. The amount of the league guarantee was not considered large by Manager Carver and the money question can be esaily taken care of in his town.

The Rowan Stars are now the only team yet to be interviewed. Feeley, who pitched for Fulton Saturday, said that he was almost sure that the Rowans would enter the league and when asked regarding their reported professionalism, he replied that the Rowans have no paid players and never have had. Thihs question will be well taken care of by league rules, in any case.

A meeting will be held in Fulton either the latter part of this week or early next week at which time representatives from all four teams will meet and the league will be formed.

The Rowans will be communicated with before that time and if they decline to enter some other Oswego team will be asked to represent thhat city.

Sunday games will not be possible in B'ville and as both the Rowans and the Independents have always played Sunday baseball it is very probable that all the league games will be played on Saturday. Many people who would otherwise support the league would object to Sunday baseball and as the support of all the fans in the city is needed, league games on Saturdays and holidays would be the safest way.

A schedule of twenty-four games has been suggested, which would enable each team to meet every other team four times, two games at home and two abroad. This schedule allowing for holidays, rainy Saturdays and postponed games would cover about three months, and will probably be cut to about sixteen games. A schedule committee will be appo[illegible] at the meeting and two league u[illegible] will also be selected. The gre[illegible] care will be taken in thhe selection [illegible] officials and the league will offer go[illegible] inducements to capable men. No [illegible]pire will be allowed to officiate at [illegible] the games in any one town, but [illegible] schedule will be mapped out for [illegible] by the league officials. An admissi[illegible] fee to all games will be fixed and v[illegible]ious other details taken care of.

Captain McCullum of the Fu[illegible] team is enthusiastic over the lea[illegible] idea and predicts a good race for [illegible] flag. Several promising new can[illegible]dates have applyed for positions [illegible] the Fulton team and as the league w[illegible] be given some prominence, good w[illegible] on the part of the players will not [illegible] without reward.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Pittsburgh at Boston.
Chicago at New York.
Cincinnati at Brooklyn.
St. Louis at Philadelphia.

Results Yesterday

No games scheduled.

Results Saturday

New York, 10; Chicago, 0.
Philadelphia, 11; St. Louis, 2.
Pittsburgh, 10; Boston 6.
Brooklyn 7; Cincinnati, 1.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	16	8	[illegible]
Chicago	15	11	[illegible]
Boston	13	11	.5[illegible]
Pittsburgh	13	14	.4[illegible]
Brooklyn	12	14	.46[illegible]
Cincinnati	11	14	.44[illegible]
St. Louis	12	16	.42[illegible]
New York	10	14	.41[illegible]

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Cleveland.
Philadelphia at Chicago.
New York at Detroit.
Washington at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

New York, 6; Detroit, 2.
Philadelphia, 4; Chicago, 2.
Boston, 3; Cleveland, 0.
St. Louis, 2; Washington, 1.

Results Saturday

New York, 4; Cleveland, 2.
Boston, 5; Detroit, 2.
Washington, 3; Chicago, 1.
St. Louis, 5; Philadelphia, 4.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
New York	16	8	[illegible]
Detroit	18	11	[illegible]
Boston	13	9	[illegible]
Chicago	16	12	[illegible]
Washington	11	14	[illegible]
Cleveland	11	16	[illegible]
Philadelphia	9	16	[illegible]
St. Louis	10	18	[illegible]

STATE LEAGUE

Games Today

Albany at Syracusse.
Troy at Utica.
Elmira at Scranton.
Binghamton at Wilkesbarre.

Results Yesterday

All games postponed, wet grou[illegible]

Results Saturday

Syracuse, 4; Albany, 3. (10 inni[illegible]
Troy, 13; Utica, 3.
Scranton, 5; Elmira, 1.
Wilkesbarre, 4; Binghamton, [illegible] (first game.)
Wilkesbarre, 6; Binghamton, [illegible] (second game).

Teams Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Troy	6	2	[illegible]
Wilkesbarre	7	4	[illegible]
Elmira	5	5	[illegible]
Utica	4	4	[illegible]
Albany	4	4	[illegible]
Binghamton	4	5	[illegible]
Scranton	[illegible]	5	[illegible]
Syracuse	2	[illegible]	[illegible]

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 128 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1915 | Price One Cent

Accumulated Rubbish is a Fire Hazzard on Which You Pay a High Rate of Insurance. Clean Up, it's Cheaper, and a Cleaner City is a Safer City—Chamber of Commerce

F. A. Gage Opposes Double-Tracking East First Street

Says That Railroad Company Does Not Show Disposition to Play Fair With City

At tomorrow night's meeting of the Common Council the question of the paving of 1st st. between Rochester st. and Broadway will come up for definite action. At an adjourned meeting of the Board of Public Works held at the City Hall this morning a resolution was passed asking the Common Council to approve of the paving plan and the widening of the street between the two points.

F. A. Gage and George Mason, two property owners along the street were present at this morning's meeting and they both approved of the plan. They were asked to be present at the meeting because of their connection with a committee drawn two years ago to decide on the details of the work.

President Stevenson of the Board asked Mr. Gage his opinion on the double track question and Mr. Gage stated that he did not believe it should be done. "However, if the street is to be double-tracked," said Mr. Gage, "the trolley company should be made to pay for the franchise of the other track. The company should have never been given a perpetual franchise on that street and if the city had only allowed a twenty-year franchise the company would have been willing to exert itself a little in order to keep on good terms with the city and the paving and tracks ont he street would be kept in better condition. As it is now, the company has the franchise and doesn't care what is done on the street."

According to the plan which will be submitted to the Council a strip of three feet in width will be taken on the west side of the street from Rochester street almost to the library and then, on account of the fact that the street above the library is wider at present than the street below, a narrower strip will be taken off so that the street will be 37 feet wide throughout its entire length. A walk will be laid to the curb on the west side of the street and the line of trees which stand along the curb on the street at present will be removed.

The cost of the improvement will total $10,300 and the State and City will bear almost $8,000 of the expense. The property owners along the street will pay the remainder. Assessments varying from $63. 5 to $244.96 will be paid by the property owners. The State of New York will contribute the strip on the west side of the street.

It is expected that the improvement will be a permanent one and the Board of Public Works is anxious to see the work commence at once. The Board is without funds and the council will be asked to borrow the money.

At the regular meeting of the Board held last night it was unanimously voted that the Clean-Up project under the direction of the Chamber of Commerce shhould receive the heartiest approval of the Board.

Ovid Perchway applied for city water on North 55th st.

E. H. Church applied for a grade on his property on West 3d st. Both requests were granted. The meeting adjourned after the payment of several bills had been authorized.

FIRE PREVENTION DAY FRIDAY, MAY 21

The Public Safety Division of the Chamber of Commerce met yesterday at 5 p.m. to consider further plans for the Clean-Up Week now in progress.

It was announced that Friday, May 21st, the day set aside for the collection of rubbish would be Fire Prevention Day. The Public Safety Division believe that it is cheaper to have one's rubbish burned in a community bonfire than in ones own home and they are asking all storekeepers and householders to gather all inflamable rubbish from their cellars, attics and backyards and put it on the curb early Friday morning. Teams have been offered to the Chamber by generous citizens and members for carting this rubbish to the city dumps. There is a pressing need for more teams and volunteers to go with them on their rounds.

Many merchants and householders have been paying a high rate of insurance on the rubbish piles and fire traps they have been maintaining. Now is their chance to get rid of these dangerous and costly hazards.

> "Holy Smoke! You can't profit from this campaign by just reading what is said about it. Why don't you stop in the middle of this article and go out and start something?"

If a fire ever got a good start in some of the back alleys in the bsuiness section nothing short of providence could save the buildings. Every wagon-load of inflamable material carted away next Friday will be a danger removed. This is not a movement for the "City Beautiful" idea alone. It is for Public Safety. A fire department no matter how efficient is at best only a curative measure. The time to stop a fire is before it starts.

The division of Public Safety want to make a fire like that which swept over Salem last year impossible in Fulton. They can succeed only if the people make use of this opportunity to get rid of their rubbish.

MAJOR W. D. FERGUSON DIED TO-DAY; AGE 84

He Rose from Rank of Captain to That of Major of the 184th Regiment Infantry in 1864

Major William D. Ferguson, 84, died early this morning at his home in this city. He was born at Orwell, and in 1876 was married to Miss Phoebe A. Prentice. He was captain of Company G, of the 24th New York Infantry. In 1863 he was honorably discharged and in August, 1864, re-enlisted and served as major of the 184th Regiment until the close of the war.

It was fifty years ago on May 9 that Captain Ferguson left Sandy Creek with his company of 100 men for Elmira. Their motto was "We go to fight and shall fight to win." At Rome one of the Sandy Creek boys ran across a Secessionist who displayed a Rebel flag. Whereupon the Sandy Creek boy reproved him and his reply was "I can whip any Sandy Creek boy of the Stars and Stripes." A bang from the Sandy Creek boy put the rebel out of business. The loyal lad said, "I have enlisted to fight for the Stars and Stripes and am as ready to do it in Rome as Baltimore.

After the war was over the Major spent a great part of his time in the South where he became a mill builder of due prominence.

The Major was an active member of Post Schenck, G.A.R., of the Borrowed Time Club, and of the American Mechanics.

Surviving are the widow, a son, James Ferguson of Indiana, and a daughter, Mrs. Nettie Shayes, of Oswego, also four grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. One brother, Hiram Ferguson, of Iowa, and one sister also survive.

The funeral will be held at 10 o'clock Thursday morning at the First M. E. church. Rev. J. W. Barrett will officiate. Burial will be made at Sandy Creek.

Common Council May Call Election to Vote on Falley

There Is Apparent a Decided Reversal of Opinion Relative to Purchasing Site for High School Purposes

What may prove tob e a decisive action in the Falley seminary proposition will be taken by the Fulton Common Council at a meeting tomorrow night. At that time the council will be asked to call a special election by which the people of the city will have an opportunity to decide whether or not the Falley site shall be the location of the new high school.

The Falley seminary purchase has been agitated at regular intervals for the past number of years and has been rejected at three different special elections by a public vote. This time, however, there has been a more concerted movement on the part of the Falley site supporters and they claim that public opinion has reversed and that many people who voted against the purchase in the past will cast their votes for the site at the next election, if the council decides to call one.

The site has many supporters and many oppose it vigorously. Under the will, it is said that the Gilmour heirs have been forbidden to dispose of the property except for educational purposes. Therefore the estate has made a special effort to sell the land to this city and has in the opinion of many offered really unusual inducements to the people. At present the city finds it necessary to rent several rooms in the building and for these rooms the sum of $1,000 a year is paid. Under the terms of the option now held by the city, which will expire in July the city can purchase the property for the sum of $16,000, which is considered a good buy by real estate agents, and pay that amount in yearly installments of $1,000, the exact sum that the city is now paying as a rental. The location is considered the most central and the fact that the Board of Education as a unit supports the purchase of the site and that several other men of prominence in city affairs have given their time to advocating the purchase of the property has influenced many to look into the merits of the purchase more fully.

On the other hand, many oppose the purchase saying that the cost of the building is too large, in spite of the fact that the building is centrally located. The city is not in a position, they say, to pay a large sum of money to buy the property when a site can be purchased in another district, perhaps not so centrally located but situated in the path of thec ity's eventual growth for less money. The residents of the West Side seem to have deep-rooted objections to the purchase of the Falley property and very little effort has been made to present the proposition to them by its supporters. Several men in a position to know claim that the building which stands on the grounds at present will have to be removed in a very short time as the state would condemn it. One man has declared that it will cost $3,000 to raze the building and this would mean that the city would pay more than $16,000 for the bare ground. The opposition asks why some real estate agent has not purchased the property if it is a good buy, but the estate has not been allowed to dispose of it under the terms of he will.

The sentiment of most of the aldermen seems to be in favor of the special election, and while some do not favr the purchase of a site, it is said, they are willing to let the question be settled once and for all by vote of the people. Alderman Sullivan stated at the last meeting that he could not vote for the election as he knows that his constituents did not want the site and would not care to vote on it again. It will be pointed out to the council Wednesday night, however, that as the petition represents a large number of tax-payers who are willing to vote on the question, the council should call the election. In order that the election may be called the council must vote [illegible] for it, and it [illegible] Alderman Sullivan [illegible] of the will.

MUSIC AND MIRTH FOR CLASS NIGHT

June 22, In the Evening, Students Will Give Play; Music by Orchestra

Arrangements have now been completed and active preparation is in progress for the annual Class Night Exercises to be given by the Class of 1916 at the Quirk on Tuesday Evening, June 22.

The Fulton High School Orchestra under the direction and training of Mrs. [illegible] Owens will furnish music for the occasion. The personnel of the orchestra follows:

First violin, Mrs. L. R. Owens.
First violin, Harold Gillespie.
Second violin, Evadne Austin.
Second violin, Joseph Keenan.
Coronet, Prof. Jesse A. Lawton.
Flute, Earl Lawton.
Flute, Albert Sanford.
Clarinet, Ralph Ferguson.
'Cello, Phillips Calkins.
Drums, Richard Murphy.
Piano, Miss Katherine Sullivan.

The officers of thhe class are: President, Harold Thompson; vice president, Eryma E. Paige; secretary, Fred'k B. Martin; treasurer, Leland T. Carner.

The class has selected the following members to represent them in the part of the evening's program:

Class History, Lola B. Palmer; History of the Historian, Amelia L. Rolfe; Class Poem, Florence L. Moody; Class Prophecy, Earl D. Hopkins; Prophecy on Prophet, Lillian P. Simons; Class Will, Matthew Frawley; Codicil to Will, Harold N. Gillespie.

Grand Marshal, Lester F. Gillespie, Class of 1916.

The second part of the evening's program will be the presentation of "The Fortune Hunter." Under the training of Mrs. Keslr, the members of the class whom she has selected for the parts are making excellent progress. The play is undoubtedly the most interesting as well as the most difficult ever attempted by our high school but Mrs. Kesler feels that she has a strong cast and that "The Fortune Hunter" will bring out some new stars to add to the high school list. The cast follows:

Thel Cast

Nathaniel Duncan—"Nat the Fortune Hunter" ... Leland T. Carner
Henry Kellogg—A rising young financier .... Harold F. Caflrey
George Burnham — A promoter .... Edward Markey Pullen
Robbins—Kellogg's servant .... Ramon F. Lewis
Tom—A Newsboy, Bernard Reswick

Village Characters

Sam Graham—The druggist .... Marshal G. Penfield
Mr. Lockwood—The banker .... Earl D. Hopkins
Tracey Tanner—The livery man's son .... Harold Scholz
Pete Willing —The sheriff .... Harold N. Gillespie
Mr. Sperry—The drummer .... Harry J. Lynch
"Hi"—The old inhabitant .... Harold Scholz
Herman—The errand boy ...., Albert L. Sanford
Roland Barnett—The bank clerk .... Harold Thompson
Betty Graham — The druggist's daughter ...... Florence L. Moody
Josephhine Lockwood—The banker's daughter .... Eryma E. Paige
Angie—The friend of Josie .... Rose A. Walsh

The price of reserved seat tickets will be 35 cents and can be secured at the box office at The Quirk. If purchased together reserved seat tickets for Class Night and for Commencement will be sold for 50 cents at the box office.

We are Agents for
CHASE & SANBORN'S
Fine Teas and Coffees
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

TWENTY-NINE DOCTORS SAT AT DINNER HERE

The meeting of the Oswego County Medical Society came to a close yesterday afternoon in the Masonic rooms in the Quirk building at 4 o'clock. A detailed account of the meeting was published in ths paper yesterday. Twenty-nine doctors were present, most of them making the trip by automobile.

Dr. Hervey, vice-president of the society, was unable to appear as was Dr. Dowdle of Oswego, who was to have addressed the meeting on "Goitre." Addresses were made by Dr. Cott of Buffalo, Dr. Anderson of this city and Dr. Howe of Albany. Dinner was enjoyed at the Clark House at noon.

The society will hold another meeting in the near future in Oswego at which time "Blindness, Its Cause and Prevention," will be discussed.

Marring of Mail Boxes Punishable

Postmaster Peter Conley announced this morning that the Clean-Up campaign begun by the postal department on the mail boxes of the city has been concluded and every box in the city is now resplendent in its new coat of green paint. The Postmaster stated that a close watch is being kept on the boxes and people who attempt to deface or mark the boxes in any way will be vigorously prosecuted under the government laws. The penalty callsf or a heavy fine or a term of imprisonment or both.

SURPRISE PARTY

A surprise in honor of the 21st birthday of Isidore Horwitz was held at the home of his uncle, I. Alderman, last night. The evening was passed with music and dancing and refreshments were served at a late hour. Leonard Roy presided at the piano and Mr. Horwitz rendered several violin selections.

Those present were the Misses Celia Cominkovitz , Bessie Mirsky, Lena Kaplan, Sam Srasoff, Leonard Roy and Isidor Horwitz.

ATTENDING THE DIOCESE

Early this morning Mrs. John Henderson and Mrs. F. L. Jennings left for Jordan, N. Y., to attend the annual session of the Woman's Auxiliary of the 4th district of the Diocese of Central New York. The convention is held in the Episcopal church at Jordan, today's meeting being addressed by the Rev. Mr. Chaplan of Alaska.

REAL BARGAINS
For Careful Buyers

$350 Styvesant Upright, Beautiful Figured Mahogany, used 6 months, at........ $225
$390 Claundon Upright, like new . . . $245
$250 Kremlin Upright, like new . . . $150
$300 Mason, Boston Upright . . . $165

The above great values sold on our easy payment plan or liberal discount to cash purchases.

DON'T MISS THIS OPPORTUNITY
COME IN AT ONCE

Bogue Piano Store
61 First Street

BEGAN TUESDAY

It Commemorates Giving the Ten Commandments to Ancient Israelites

The Feast of the Pentecost, or the Feast of Weeks, will be observed by the Jews all over the world, beginning yesterday at sunset and continuing until sunset on Thursday. The feast commemorates the giving of the Ten Commandments to the Israelites by Moses on Mount Sinai. Services will be held in all synagogues.

Because the law was given on Pentecost, the rabbis aim to make the day the most enjoyable holy day. A popular way to observe it is to eat dairy goods and cheese cakes in honor of the law, which is likened to honey and milk. In the synagogue the scroll of "Ruth" is read, because the story of Ruth, embracing Judaism and the description of the scene of harvesting is considered to be appropriate to the festival of the law and of the harvest. Another reason given is that King David, a descendant of Ruth, died on Pentecost.

The custom widely prevails of displaying greens on the floors and other wise decorating the home and the synagogues with plants, flowers and trees. The greens are said to bring remembrances of the green mountains of Sinai, the trees of the judgment day for fruit trees on Pentecost. The trees also commemorate the harvest festival of former times.

The rite of confirmation for Jewish girls in the synagogue on Pentecost was introduced by the reform group. This festival was selected because it was the birthday of Judaism. The story of Ruth's recognition of the Jewish religion also gives color to the exercise.

The three days preceding Pentecost are called "the three days of the bounds" to commemorate the incident of the three days' preparation before Mount Sinai. These days are distinguished by the permission of marriage celebrations, which are prohibited on the other holidays.

In Palestine, the grain harvest lasted seven weeks and was a season of gladness. It began with the harvesting of the barley during the Passover and ended with the harvesting of the wheat at Pentecost, the wheat being the last cereal to ripen. Pentecost was thus the concluding festival of the grain harvest, just as the eighth day of Tabernacles was the concluding festival of the fruit harvest.

As with many or the Jewish holidays there is a controversy as to the exact day of celebration. For this reason the orthodox Jews observe the feast for two days. This year they will celebrate it tomorrow and on Thursday. The reform Jews celebrate Pentecost on but one day, tomorrow. It is difficult to determine whether the controversy as to the date of the celebration of Pentecost was merely a question of calendation or whether it had its origin in an attempt to assign to the festival a historical motive whichw as lacking in the Old Testament.

Just as Passover and Tabernacles were associated with historical events, so Pentecost was brought together with the day on which the Torah was given on Sinai.

MACCABEES WILL PARADE MEMORIAL DAY

The name of one fraternal organization whose numbers will fall into line of march on Memorial Day was inadvertantly omitted from the list published in yesterday's Evening Times. It was that of the Order of Maccabees. The society's name was the first one to be drawn by lot to participate with Schenck Post, G.A.R., Sons of Veterans, Fulton Lodge of Elks, Order of the United American Mechanics, Red Men, Modern Woodmen of America, Odd Fellows and Boy Scouts. Members of the Sons of Veterans will act as escorts to the old soldiers.

The Citizens' band will head the procession.

WLADYSTARIA BROMAS

Wladystaria Broomas, six-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Karmun Bromas, died at the parents' home, 409 West 2d st., today after a brief illness. Private funeral services will be held from the home Thursday. Rev. Father Pnaik will officiate and burial will be at St. Mary's.

Big Opening of our New Store tomorrow. Shipman's, Oneida st. adv

The work of removing the Oneida st. bridge has been temporarily held up by an accident to an oxygen machine which is being used to cut the metal of the bridge. This machine is operated by an expert from New York city. One of the torches fell yesterday and was broken. The burner was sent to New York last night and will probably be back in commission again Friday. Until the machine returns work on the bridge will be delayed.

One third of the bridge has now been removed and work wil be commenced immediately on the pavement that has not yet been taken up. Contractor Rosoff will start work on the filling of the canal bed early next week and, as soon as the bed is filled to the street level, the trolley tracks will be shifted, and the portion of the bridge now occupied by the trolley will be torn down. The oxygen machine makes short work of the heavy iron girders, burning through them in an incredibly short time.

The bridge vibrates a great deal now when heavy loads pass over it, but the engineers in charge claim that the bridge is absolutely safe. Mr. Alderman narrowly escaped a serious accident the other day when a girder that had been burned through and on which he was standing gave way. Contractor Rosoff grasped Mr. Alderman and pulled him to safety.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH WILL MEET TONIGHT

The Common Council will meet tonight at City Hall at 8 o'clock. The meeting tonight will take up the Falley seminary proposition and a delegation from the Board of Education will request the council to call a special election for the purpose of voting on the Falley seminary as a site for the new high school. A petition signed by almost 500 taxpayers will also be presented to the council.

The Board of Health will also meet tonight at the City Hall and it is expected that several residents will be on hand to register complaints against unsanitary conditions in certain sections of the city.

Two Creeds Will Celebrate Feast Day

Next Sunday will be Pentecost Sunday, one of the great ecclesiastical feasts of the year. Special services will be held in the Catholic and Episcopal churches of the city on that day.

At the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Saturday will be observed as a day of fast and abstinence, being the vigil of Pentecost. On Sunday morning at the first mass, a class of more than fifty children, ranging in age from eight to ten years, will make their first Holy Communion. The celebrant of the mass will be Father Dooling and Father Lindsman will assist in the communion service. The children will occupy the center aisle of the church and a procession will take place before and after the service. The little girls will be dressed in white and the boys will wear dark suits with white ribbons on the arm.

There will be a solemn high mass at 10.30 o'clock, celebrated by Father Lindsmann. The choir will render special music under the direction of the organist, Frederic Kenyon. Father Lindsmann will preach the sermon.

WILL DANCE MAY 27

At a meeting of the Knights of Columbus last night plans were made to hold a card party in their rooms In Oneida st., on Thursday evening, May 27.

There will be an orchestra and dancing will be enjoyed from 10 to 12. The committee in charge is made up of James Flynn, Richard Murphy and Vincent Cavanaugh. The proceeds derived will go into the council's building fund.

LUMBERMAN SECURES LAND IN THIS COUNTY

Thomas Beatty, a well known lumber operator of Williamsport, Pa., has taken over a tract of 570 acres of timber land in the eastern part of Oswego county, a few miles from Altmar. He will commence lumbering operations within a few weeks, taking up headquarters in person on the property which is valued at $32,000.

If your horse is kicked, or cut by barbed wire, apply Hanford's Balsam.

Children Cry
FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

WALL PAPER

Our Entire Stock will be Sold at a
10% DISCOUNT

We Do Paper Hanging

You need OUR PAINTS in your CLEAN UP WORK

HULETT-TAFT CO., Inc.
208 Oneida Street

Community Notes

Mrs. Anna Wilkinson of Syracuse visited her sister, Mrs. Fred Boigoel, of Oneida st. Monday.

* * *

Mrs. William Wright of Volney has been visiting her daughter, Mrs James Keeney, for the past week.

* * *

Mrs Alex Pelo, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, still continues in a critical condition.

* * *

Mrs. Samuel Levi, who has been ill for the past two weeks, is improving.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Hotchkiss of New Haven were recent visitors here.

* * *

George Hill and daughter Clara of Palermo visited relatives here Monday.

* * *

Mrs. Henry Crane is spending some time with friends at Central Square.

* * *

Ralph Collins of Morse visited his sister, Mrs. George Moone, on Sunday.

* * *

Fred Wadsworth has returned from a visit with relatives at Wolcott.

* * *

Mrs. D. E. Wadsworth of Wolcott visited friends here last week.

* * *

Mrs. Fred Pelo of Central Square visited her mother, Mrs, Belle Pelo, last week.

* * *

William Gorham spent Monday at Syracuse and Auburn.

* * *

D. A. Northrop was in Syracuse Wednesday on business.

* * *

H. D. Wadsworth of Wolcott but formerly of Fulton is spending a few days here.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Seymour were in Volney Tuesday to attend the funeral of Edwin Foster.

* * *

Dr. Charles Lee remains critically ill at his home in South 1st st.

* * *

Miss Doris Lamb is ill at her home in West 1st st.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. George Harrington, who has been in Ithaca a short time, have returned to their home in West First st.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Whorl of S. 3d st. are in Pennsylvania called there by the illness of a relative.

* * *

Gervis Colwell has been visiting his sister at Carthage.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Coe have leased the apartment recently vacated by Mr and Mrs. Coy in Worth st.

* * *

Solomon Morin, of Philadelphia, is visiting I. Alderman of the West Side.

* * *

Letters received from Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Coy, who left Saturday for Almond, stat that Mr. Coy stood the journey well and is now very comfortable.

* * *

Mrs. George Palmer will entertain this afternoon the W. H. M. S. at her home in Worth st.

* * *

Henry Galpin of Oxford is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Sears in Worth st. Mr. Galpin was in the city to attend the funeral of Edward Foster.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Griffith have come from Bath to reside in this city. Mr. Griffith is the new baker at the Black's bakery.

* * *

The Jewish feast day of Sharmouth was celebrated this morning at the home of Samuel Waldhorn, at nine o'clock. Rabbi J. Cominkovitz was in charge of the services. The feast will close with another service tomorrow morning at the same time.

* * *

Mrs. S. Levi of North 4th st. is seriously ill.

* * *

Archie Hayes of the West River road has returned from a business trip to Leavittsbarg, Ohio.

FAMOUS FLAG FOR STATE.

Colonel Proctor's "Rattlesnake" Now in Library.

Greensburg, Pa.—The famous Rattlesnake flag has been transferred from the vault of the Merchants and Farmers' bank in Greensburg to the state library, Harrisburg, to take its place among other interesting relics of American wars.

The Rattlesnake flag belonged to Colonel John Proctor's Independent battalion of Westmoreland county. It was made in 1775 and was carried in the Revolution. Samuel Craig, Sr., who, with his three sons, John, Alexander and Samuel junior, fought in Proctor's battalion, was the color bearer.

On Colonel Proctor's death the flag passed to the next senior officer, and so on to the last survivor, General Alexander Craig. It was bequeathed by his great granddaughter, Jane Maria Craig of New Alexandria, to the state library at Harrisburg.

Music.—Buell's Full Orchestra at the Onyx Confectionery, Saturday night. adv.

BUELL BROS.
PLUMBING and HEATING
Phone 186
17 N. Second Street

We Want Your
ELECTRICAL WORK
ALL SORTS OF SUPPLIES AND WORK WILL BE DONE IN A WORKMAN-LIKE MANNER.
D. B. KANE
Phone 1598 118 Oneida St.

FRESH VEGETABLES
EVERY DAY
at LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

OUR NEW MODERN STORE
WILL OPEN TO-MORROW MORNING
AT 9 O'CLOCK
Special Opening Day Values Bigger and Better Than Ever
SHIPMAN'S 5-10-25 CENT STORE

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 45

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 18, 1915

45—PHONE NEWS ITEMS—45

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

The Scrap Book

The English Sense of Humor.

James C. Thomson, now of Milwaukee, was a purser on an Anchor line steamer many years ago. In those days life preservers were not in general use, and on the inside of each stateroom door was affixed a small sign, reading:

"In emergencies this door may
Be lifted from its hinges. It
Will carry two people safely in the water."

Thomson had an extra sign, and he pasted it on the inside of the door of his little safe. An English passenger came into the office and asked for change. Thomson swung the safe door back to get the money, and the Englishman read the sign. It was too much even for his credulity, and he burst out:

"Thomson, that's a lie! The bally thing cawn't float!"—Detroit Saturday Night.

The Best of Friends.

There are no friends like old friends
To help us with the load
That all must bear who journey
O'er life's uneven road,
And when unconquered sorrows
The weary hours invest
The kindly words of old friends
Are always found the best.

There are no friends like old friends
To calm our frequent fears
When shadows fall and deepen
Through life's declining years,
And when our faltering footsteps
Approach the great divide
We'll long to meet the old friends
Who wait on the other side.
—Anonymous.

Too Realistic.

During a performance of "Captain Lapalisse" at a Valencia theater some years ago an incident occurred which for lifelike effect left nothing to be desired. During the said play some of the actors mingle with the spectators in order to co-operate from the body of the house. No sooner had Miralles, the actor, taken his seat in the stalls than a daring pickpocket robbed him of his gold watch. Miralles seized the man by his coat collar and called out in a deep bass voice:

"Police! Help! Thieves!"

The audience, taking this little episode to be part of the performance, roared with laughter. Even the policemen joined in without stirring hand or foot.

"This is no farce!" cried the actor in tones of despair. "The fellow has got my watch!"

The voice sounded so natural that the audience broke into loud applause at "such excellent fooling." Meanwhile the thief managed to break away from his captor and escaped.

Innocent.

Robert, at the end of the college year, was taking up with his father the debatable matter of obligations incurred with tradesmen in the pursuit of knowledge. It had been a rather stormy session, but the storm had subsided, and the father returned to his book of poetry. Presently he was minded to test Robert's education.

"What do you know of this 'Ode On a Grecian Urn?'" he asked.

Robert felt himself to be injured unjustly.

"Father," he answered earnestly, "I assure you that a mistake has been made. I didn't buy a single Grecian urn while I was in college."—New York Post.

Plenty of Stars.

That resilient old timer, Ben Dodson, who is perhaps best remembered as advance agent for Jennie Yeamans thirty years ago, had no feeling of awe in the presence of greatness. He was in Kansas City when Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett opened the new Warder Opera House. It was so far from being ready for the event that it was literally roofless. Ben larked upon the stage before curtain up time to have a talk with the boys, Ned and Larry. The tragedians were good naturedly tolerant of the open air conditions in which they must play. Barrett, who was usually nervous when affairs were deflected from their normal course, observed, "Well, Doddy, this is unique, to say the least."

The house property man, excusably ambitious to get speech with the royalty of the profession, sidled up and insinuatingly queried: "What's de matter wid dis, Mr. Barrett? Hain't we got stars on the stoige and (pointing to the sky) stars overhead? Dis hain't no jay town, betcher life tain't!"—Detroit Free Press.

MODERN DIOGENES NEEDED

"As a single drop of aniline will tint a whole cask of water, so does the life of a good man influence a whole city—aye, a nation." —Anon.

Each hamlet, village, city and nation has its great men. Their simple, open lives attest their greatness. Vainglorious expressions are absent from their speech. Their life is marked by service, mutuality, reciprocity, and all doors open from them in generous thought, self-reliance, and a helpful, honest desire to benefit others.

Every place however great or small, on the other hand, has its men of the opposite type. From them there is no good will, no promotion of faith, no inspiration radiated. They are the men who readily avail themselves of another's hospitality but who in an hour of self-preservation, beast-like, surrender friendship and manhood to profit toward material ends. These, there are, who seek to gain in wordly goods by aiming to pull down the roof upon the head if another playing his own game honestly. Never yet has the person existed who could successfully and gleefully call constant attention to another's misfortune, real or imagined, without himself receiving retribution, full and speedy.

Fulton has both types of men, but how long should the mischief-brewers, the scandal-mongers, receive protection and support. There are those who decry the use of the "hammer," but surely a modern Diogenes with a modern lantern, and a shovel, could light the way and uncover the real stumbling blocks that detract from a city's growth.

Just as animal life gnaws from the root into the heart of the plant, sapping its life, so the unwholesome men of a community gnaw into its heart and sap therefrom its life.

"The life of a good man influences a whhole city--aye, a nation."

Clinched It.

An aged and much traveled tourist was relating experiences of his travels to a group of friends when a blatant young man, who had himself made a short trip through Europe, decided that it was about time to come in for his share of honors as a great traveler. "When I made my trip through the Red sea," the young man interjected, "we dropped anchor one night in the exact spot where Pharaoh's hosts were engulfed by the waters of the Red sea. In the morning when we heaved up the anchor we discovered that one of Pharaoh's chariots, which had for years been lying at the bottom of the sea, was hooked on to one of the flukes of our anchor. It was in an excellent state of preservation." "How did you know it was one of Pharaoh's chariots and not one of more recent vintage?" inquired the old tourist. "Oh, that was easy," replied the noisy young man. "You see, in one corner of the chariot we found an old coin which bore the inscription, '2005 B. C.'"

The Other One.

A tourist relates the following reminiscence: "I was traveling through England on foot with a knapsack on my back and in company with a facetious friend of mine, and in our wanderings we came to an inn. It was late at night, but by the bright moonlight we were able to see that the sign bore a counterfeit presentment of two asses' heads, with this legend over the picture, 'When shall we three meet again?' We stood for a moment gazing at it. Then my friend went to the inn door and began thumping upon it with his cane, while the echoes rang through the house. I was just going to expostulate with him over his unseemly conduct when an upper window was thrown open, and the innkeeper thrust out his head and demanded what we wanted. 'That's all right, old man! Don't get excited!' called up my friend in the most affable voice. 'There are only two asses' heads on the sign, and I just wanted to see the other one!'"

An Amended Epitaph.

Duncan's wife had the reputation of being a first class shrew. When Duncan died his neighbors put a tombstone over his grave with the epitaph "Asleep In Peace."

Widow Duncan was wild. It was meant as a slam at her, and she knew it was. It meant that she did not let him sleep in peace when alive. The neighbors assured her that it was not meant that way.

"Then it ought to say so."

To please her they got a stonecutter to add, "We all believe that he did have peace here—when he slept."—Baltimore Star.

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next year.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Automobiles and Baseball.

Somebody has discovered that the number of automobile owners in our country is nearly equal to the number of baseball patrons. In this connection it is suggested that, while the fans haven't the same cause for pride, they don't worry any over tire trouble. On the other hand, the car owners are not annoyed by outlaw leagues and umpires.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sadly Beautiful.

Some of the courtesies imposed upon armies and navies are at times beautiful in their expression. For instance, a Japanese warship the other day steamed about the spot where the F-4 went down. Its crew was drawn up in salute, and its flag was dipped in honor of the men entombed below.—Rochester Union and Advertiser.

A Seasonable Explanation.

Every woman wants a new hat that makes her look better than she looked in her old hat, which was more fascinating than the one she had before, and so on, back to the time she was an angel in appearance; hence the difficulty of finding a hat to suit.—Toledo Blade.

The Irish Tongue.

Seumas McManus declares that the Irish language is "the most forceful to curse, pray and make love in, as it is the most expressive," and he adds, "It has 365 terms of endearment for a girl." In that respect it runs a close race with Spanish.—Boston Globe.

Bulls and Bears.

They are getting so gay again in Wall street that seats on the Stock Exchange that were selling a little while ago for $35,000 have been bid up to $70,000. Still, a trifle like that can be made in a few minutes' operations—sometimes.—Philadelphia Press.

Let Us Be Thankful.

Summer colds are bad enough in all conscience, whatever that means, but let us turn to the silver lining of the cloud and cheerily reflect that there are no summer chilblains.—Boston Globe.

Emerging From Despotism.

Fifteen hundred arrests for bribery in the Japanese election show that Nippon is rapidly emerging from the gloom of despotism into the full light of self government.—Boston Transcript.

Looks Like a Sticker.

Jitney or nickelette bus or five cent automobile—the thing itself multiplies, and the name doesn't much matter. Still, it looks as if jitney will stick.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Crowded For Room.

Flower gardens in Berlin will be turned into vegetable gardens this year. Here they're turning 'em into space for garages.—Detroit Free Press.

Mean Graft.

Canada's war contract scandals remind us that the grafter and the vulture never rise above their natural instincts.—New York Press.

Bowser Saves the Family

But the Cook Is Ungrateful and Quits Her Job.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mr. Bowser is not eccentric.

He is not irresponsible.

He has bought burglar alarms.

He has invested in nine kinds of fire escapes.

He has kept cows and pigs and chickens.

He has bought little less than a carload of patent cures.

He has, according to his diagnosis, had every ailment on the list of human ailments.

All this and a heap more, and yet he is not far ahead of the average husband.

It is that every new idea looks good to him, and he wants to be helping to shove the old world along.

The other afternoon as he sat in his office a sudden thought made him start and turn pale. He didn't wait two minutes before taking action. He rushed downstairs, rushed into a drugstore, rushed home.

"LET ME DRAW A PICTURE OF A MICROBE."

Mrs. Bowser noted his excited look and the package under his arm and was at the door to exclaim:

"If anything has happened why didn't you telephone me? What is wrong, and what have you got there? Don't keep me in suspense!"

"Don't ask me any questions now," he replied as he dropped his hat on the floor and looked around like a man in danger.

"Is anything wrong—are you sick?" she anxiously demanded.

"Don't say a word—not a word, and don't bother me for ten minutes. I hope I'm in time to avert the danger!"

She turned pale and fell into a chair, and he hurriedly broke the string securing the package, seized the three quart bottles which comprised its contents and rushed upstairs, down the back stairs, down into the basement and up again. A strange, disagreeable odor followed him as he hustled around, and by the time he had returned to the sitting room Mrs. Bowser had recovered sufficiently to ask:

"Mr. Bowser, what on earth are you doing and what in the name of goodness is that stuff?"

"What have I been doing? Saving our lives, Mrs. Bowser—saving our lives and every one under this roof."

"But I—I didn't know our lives were in danger."

"Of course not. If the house was on fire from top to bottom, and the firemen pitching our furniture out of the windows, you might possibly realize the fact, but it has never struck you that death silently lurks in every room in this house."

"How you talk, Mr. Bowser! What has been the danger hanging over us?"

"Microbes, Mrs. Bowser!" he whispered as he sat down and wiped his heated brow. "Microbes and bacteria—millions of 'em!"

"It can't be!" she replied.

"Can't it! You know nothing whatever about it! I do, of course, but, having so many other things to attend to, this one slipped my mind until today."

"But what causes that terrible odor?"

"Nothing terrible about it, as I see. On the contrary, I rather like it. It is the odor of disinfectants, Mrs. Bowser—the odor of something which has no doubt saved our lives."

"How?"

"By killing off the microbes and bacteria, which would soon have entered our systems and produced terrible illness, if not death."

"Well, I suppose you know best," she said as she opened a window to let a yard or two of the carbolic smell dodge out.

"Certainly I do, certainly. All husbands do. Mrs. Bowser, let me draw you a picture of a microbe. You can then realize the danger which menaced us."

He drew a picture of that insect with his pencil, and as she surveyed it in surprise and disgust he continued:

"Nice thing to have about forty of those birds cantering around through your system, eh?"

"Where do they come from?"

"Sewer gas. By this time tomorrow the house would have swarmed with them, and nothing on earth could have saved us from typhoid fever or diphtheria. If the microbe was the only thing to look out for I shouldn't have been so anxious, but there is the bacteria."

"What's that?"

"Here is a picture of him. Comes in the same way, and his mission is to eat out the lungs. It is calculated that 2,000 of them will eat out the strongest man's lungs in a mouth."

"And they were in this house?"

"Yes, and ready to be absorbed into our systems. Not only ready, but anxious."

"You are sure you don't mean cockroaches? I saw two under the kitchen sink yesterday and was going to ask you to get some powdered borax."

"Mrs. Bowser," he began, as he stood up. "Are you growing soft in the top of your head? Do I know a Bengal tiger from a woodchuck?"

"I—I suppose so."

"But I don't know a microbe or a bacteria from a cockroach," he thundered.

"But I have never heard you speak of them before, and I—I"—

"Do you suppose that I or any other husband sits down and tells his wife all he knows?" he shouted. "Because I haven't told you that a jack rabbit's legs have three toes is that any reason why I haven't known it for forty years?"

"But this is medical science, isn't it?" she softly protested.

"And suppose it is. Do you suppose I've gone sloshing around all these years with nothing but a recipe for making soft soap in my head?"

She was silent, and after striding up and down the room a few times he halted before her and continued:

"A wife isn't expected to know these things, of course, but I'd be accounted a pretty husband and father and member of a scientific club if I didn't know all about microbes and bacteria."

"But that picture of a bacteria looks like a lobster," she persisted.

"Lobster! Looks like a lobster, does it? Very well, Mrs. Bowser, this discussion will end right here. It is plain enough that you haven't the necessary knowledge to appreciate it!"

"But don't you"—

"Never you mind, Mrs. Bowser. Let it drop right here. Is supper ready?"

The odor was so strong in the dining room that the butter tasted of it, and after supper the cook called Mrs. Bowser into the kitchen to ask:

"Is it going to be like this all the time?"

"Oh, no. Mr. Bowser had to kill off all the microbes and bacteria, you see."

"What's them?"

"He'll have to come in and explain."

"No need of it, ma'am, for my bundle is all made up, and I'm goin'. A man who'll drag dead cats through his own house would cheat a poor girl out of her wages at the end of a month. Microbes and bacteria, eh! I don't believe it. Let him show them to me up in the zoological gardens."

When Mrs. Bowser told Mr. Bowser what had occurred he bristled up, got red in the face and exclaimed:

"I see how it is. You couldn't carry your point with me, and so you went out and upset the girl. Mrs. Bowser, you are treading on dangerous ground. A husband may be a worm, but if that worm is stepped on too often he turns!"

And he clapped on his hat and walked over to his family drug store, and after peering into the window and seeing that the druggist was alone, he entered and asked:

"Doc, are you protected from microbes and bacteria here?"

"Thoroughly," was the reply.

"What do you use?"

"Why, every time you come in and go out I sprinkle the floor after you with catnip tea."

Mr. Bowser turned and went out into the night and leaned up against a fence, and in his inmost soul realized that he was a man with plenty of bacteria and microbes, but without a human friend.

And an owl lighted on a nearby telephone pole and hooted three hoots.

Force of Habit.

"See here, boss, I ordered tripe and beans with coffee, and the waitress has brought me a lettuce sandwich and a cup of weak tea."

"You must excuse her, sir. All due to absentmindedness. She's a former society girl, and she can't grasp the idea that a quick lunch is not a function."—Exchange.

Prudent Steering.

"Law, pa, what are you sneaking around the hall at this time of night with your shoes off?"

"Sh, sh, son! I don't want to run into the war zone."—Baltimore American.

Swollen.

Tramp—Could you spare me one of your husband's old hats, mum?

Woman—They would be too large for you. My husband is an actor.—Puck.

Looked New to Him.

Randolph—Is that Buxton's new girl with him?

Sylvester—Oh, no. That's just one of his old ones painted over.—Judge.

No Limit at All.

There's a time to work,
And a time to shirk,
And a time to go to school;
There's a time to fight—
When you're in the right—
And a time you'd best keep cool;
And a time to smoke,
And a time to joke,
And a time to take a chance,
But in this mad day,
So the folks all say,
It is always time to dance.
—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The City Beautiful

BEAUTIFYING CITIES WITH FLOWERS.

A Practice Quite Common Abroad Might Well Be Made General Here.

At small expense the denizens of a city can easily help in a material way to make it more beautiful. The beauty of many foreign cities is heightened by the co-operation of the inhabitants in placing in the windows of their houses or apartments small flower boxes. Nothing makes for cheerfulness more than a profusion of greens and bright colored plants. Some residents of a few of our cities now carry out this beautiful practice. If residents were to place small flower boxes outside the windows of their homes little trouble or expense would be involved. The cost would be trivial, and the care of the plants would take but a few minutes a day.

In all our larger cities the apartment house is coming more and more into use, and great numbers are now in course of construction. Builders might help make the city more beautiful by constructing in these apartment houses window boxes ready for use. Care must be taken that they do not fall.

MAYOR'S PUBLICITY PLAN.

Atlantic City Executive Would Have Advertising Done by Municipality.

To systematize resort publicity, which heretofore has been largely a matter of individual enterprise, is the purpose of Mayor William Riddle. He expects eventually to have the municipality assume entire responsibility for advertising Atlantic City, N. J., and securing conventions, making ample provision through tax levy.

"We haven't been doing this thing as it should be done," Mayor Riddle said recently in announcing his intention to insist upon an initial appropriation of $25,000 for publicity and conventions in this year's budget. He believes that if the hotel men and other live citizens give the municipalization of publicity approval the appropriation can be doubled next year.

"There isn't any place under the sun where there is greater need of advanced methods for obtaining conventions and great numbers of visitors," the mayor continued. "Providing health and pleasure for great crowds is Atlantic City's business—our only business, because we haven't any industries. Yet we have been doing our advertising in a hit or miss fashion, depending upon individual expenditures by hotel men and a publicity bureau supported by a small number of people.

"What we need to do is to follow the lead of cities where this thing is done much better and put our publicity upon a business basis, financed as we maintain our police and fire departments and the board walk."

Fountains In Parks.

Foutains in city parks not only help to beautify the park, but are very popular as drinking places for the children who get thirsty at play. On warm days these fountains are apt to be surrounded with children, to whom drinking in this fashion seems to be a part of their play, so thoroughly do they enjoy it. Also these fountains are much used by the birds, and these little creatures come regularly to them in the early morning and in the evening as well. Altogether these fountains are a boon and a blessing, and their multiplication should be encouraged.

CHILDREN DRINKING AT A PARK FOUNTAIN

PUBLIC HEALTH CAMPAIGN.

We all want better health for our families and our townspeople. We all believe that a well planned, sanitary city is a more healthful place in which to live than a haphazard, squalid one. Why not use this point of agreement as the starting place for the kind of public health campaign in which every one can unite and whose impetus will be irresistible?—American City.

LOCAL :: SPORTING NEWS :: GENERAL

CURRENT COMMENT

"Tunk" Ward, who is now a regular manager of box-fighters, will probably start scientific farming with the aid of his collection of ring artists as soon as he is comfortably settled in his rural retreat. "Tunk" contemplates the early purchase of a dinner bell, but the wise ones inform him that such extravagance is unnecessary as boxers and ball-players are two classes of athletes who never need a watch to tell them when the grub isready. "Tunk" is advised, however, to take the door to the dining room off, as the onslaught of the camp toward the eats will be something irresistible.

* * *

A big-league scout who is on the alert for rare specimens of the ivory clan would certainly find a trip to Baldwinsville worth his while. A certain outfielder on the B'ville team has been dubbed "Bonehead" by the fans of that city. The Independents claim that the title is a misnomer as certain kinds of bone are penetrable and the dome of the player referred to would resist a collision of a railroad train or the entrance of a bright idea if it was boosted along by a thousand pound sledge hammer.

* * *

Tommy Ryan, the matchmaker at the Syracuse Arena, has been forced by numerous sad experiences to have a substitute on hand for every fight that is pulled off in his establishment. So many boxers of the near variety have been suddenly attacked with serious diseases at the Arena just before their matches were to be pulled off that Tommy has adopted the "Safety First" slogan and now a substitute is always on hand. A certain boxer named DeBottes who has lived here was seized with an acute attack of appendicitis at the Arena last Friday nighht shortly after he had taken three or four hard punches from "Speedy" Boland. DeBottes made a good bluff but crabbed himself by holding his hand to the wrong side of his anatomy when he explained to the referree what was the matter. When tipped off to his mistake by one of his seconds he showed his versatility by immediately shifting his appendix to the other side.

* * *

A good baseball game, with a host of Normal school lassies to add enchantment to the view so to speak, is the delectable bill offered for the mastication of local baseball fans at the Athletic Park tomorrow afternoon. Two bits is the only invitation needed for this unusual offering and as the local high school boys need the support it is expected that many "tired business men" will be able to tear themselves away in time to see thegame. Comfortable cushions will be provided for the aged and infirm and cooling drinks (of Great Bear) will be furnished between the innings. (To the ball players).

* * *

Several of the Fulton High school ball-players are due to receive a rude shock when the official batting and fielding averages for the first half of the season have been compiled. But averages are not always the best means of figuring out the real value of a ball-player to a team, so the heavy hitters whole line up in the .166 or thereabouts column will have some consolation.

* * *

Phillip Van Gelder Carter, the 20-year old Pawling school-boy, added another laurel to his golf crown Saturday by defeating Max Marston of Cranford, N. J., in the invitation tourney of the New Oakland Golf club. Carter made his first nine holes in 33, a wonderful performance in view of the fact that a strong wind was blowing. Carter won the Metropolitan junior title at the Plainfield Country club last summer and the winter has hhad several opportunities to watch his game. He is without question, the marvel of the age.

NOVICES TO HAVE CHANCE AT JUNE STATE SHOOT

Rochester, May 18.—Officers of gun clubs throughout the state who are arranging for the tournament of the New York State Sportsmen's Association. report that scores of entries are being made for the big event to be held at Ontario Beach Park on June 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th. Entries are coming in from many of the best marksmen of the state as well as from professionals of other states who have made enviable records at the traps.

Letters have been sent to every marksman of note not only in the state but of the country at large and the responses have been very gratifying. It is believed that the shoot here in June will be the largest and best patronized of any similar tournament in the history of the state association.

A feature this year will be something new in sporting events. It will be a New York State Handicap. This event will be conducted under conditions similar to other handicaps with which the shooting public is familar. It will be of 100 targets a man, with the shooters handicapped from 16 to 23 yeards, thus gvinv all a chance.

Rubber tires for buggies, also baby cabs and go-carts. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

Walter Johnson Said to Be Worth $60,000

Manager Griffith has set a price on Walter Johnson.

"If I were to put Johnson on sale he would bring at least $60,000," said Griffith. "Ayers is worth $10,000; Shaw, $20,000 : Bentley, $10,000; Boehling, $15,000; Harper, $10,000; Engel, $5,000; Hopper, $3,000 and probably more, to say nothing of other promising youngsters who would bring a goodly sum." Despite the fact that Griffith has named these lgures, he says that he would not sell one of them for this price.

Summing up, the stac is about a $150,000 asset, and it cost less than any stac in baseball. Johnson went to Washington for his railroad fare. Think of that. Cliff Blankenship, former National, saw him working and signed him. Shaw was a gift, having been signed while a member of the Pittsburg Collegians. Bentley was ag reenc ountry lad and reported for a trial. Boehling was with the Richmond Battle Ax team. He pitched a game in Washington and made such a favorable impression that Griffith secured his services.

Engel was a student at Mount St. Mary's college when he signed his contract, while Harper was picked up off the sand lots at Hackensack, N. J., Thormahleu, Clarke, Russell and Stevens are the youngsters who may make good and further increase the ful value of the pitching staff. There are Gallia, Ayers and Hopper. For Gallia, Griffith traded Vaughn and Walker, and he figures that it was a 112,000 transaction. Ayers was bought from the Richmond club for the surprisingly low price of $1,200. Tommy Long, the outfielder, was traded for Hopper, and $1,200 was spent in securing Long.

JIM THORPE MAY COACH COLUMBIA

College sport fans in New York are considerably stirred up by the unofficial announcement that Jim Thorpe, former Giant player and famous football star, is to tie up to Columbia University as football coach. Jim is now in Jersey City playing with that club and the drop to oneo f the minors probably is not altogether to the liking of the ex-gridiron star.

No one at the big university on Harlem Heights will say he has been invited to steer the proposed football neither will they deny it. Thorpe is without doubt the best man Columbia could secure for a coach. He knows the game as few living men do, bar none.

ZIMMERMAN WAS SUED FOR ALIMONY

New York, May 18.-The great slump in the work of the great Zim since the Cubs hit Gotham is explained by the fact that while on the diamond he has been lghting to keep out of jail simply because he has neglected to attend to a little affair like $265 back alimony. Saturday a court order was issued at the instigation of the former Mrs. Great Zim demanding his presence before the judge today to show cause why he is not in contempt of court for his forgetfulness.

Tire Vulcanizing. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

MERCHANTS and SHIPPERS

Save 25% on your Freight Bill, Order Goods Shipped by Boat.

STEAMER "CITY OF FULTON" Now Running

Freight House on Rochester St. Dock, open from 7 a. m. until 6 p. m. Man in charge all day.

C. S. BURLEIGH, Captain

Big Leaguers Must Speed Up Contests

The efforts being made in both the major leagues and the Federal League to speed up the daily games is already beginning to show results. Complaints from the cities represented in all three circuits, first called the attention of the league executives to the fans' objections to long drawn out contests and there was imediate action on the part of the baseball authorities.

President Ban Johnson of the Aberican League notifred the junior organization club managers that less time must be consumed in playing games and that several time-killing practices must be discontinued. President Gilmore of the Federals took a similar stand and intimated that he might offer prizes in order to shorten the average playing session. In the National League the matter was also given careful study and several plans considered to improve the conditions.

A study of the playing time figures of the three leagues discloses some interesting details. Using the April contests as a basis it is shown that the average in the American League for from ten to thirteen contests is two hours five and one-half minutes. The Federal clubs under similar conditions required two hours 2 1-4 minutes to play nine innings while thhe National League made the best showing with an average of one hour 52 1-2 minutes.

Of the individual clubs of the American League the Washington team led the organization with an average of one hour 51 minutes. Boston and New York followed with averages five and seven minutes slower respectively. St. Louis consumed the most time, the Browns requiring two hours 19 1-2 minutes with Chicago but one minute faster. The Philadelphia Nationals were the hustlers of the Tener circuit, averaging one hour 44 minutes for ten games with the New York Giants but one-half minute slower. Chicago required two hours 11 1-2 minutes and Pittsburgh also crossed the two hour mark. In the Federal League, thhe Pittsburgh clug showed the best time, averaging but one hour and 50 minutes for thirteen games. Bpffalo showed fhe other extreme, requiring an average of twp hours 27 minutes for twelve games.

PARAMOUNT TRAVEL SERIES AT QUIRK TODAY

Theh introductory reel having been shown last Tuesday No. 1 of the series will be shown today.

The first of the Paramount Travel Series shows scenes taken by the Paramount cameramen who stopped off for a few days at Palm Beech while en route for South America.

Scenes taken while flying over Palm Beach in a hydro-aeroplane form the most striking part of the picture. They give the spectator all the thrills of flying from an orchestra chair.

Palm Beach is well portrayed as the beautiful winter playground of the rich. Other scenes showing stretches of beach, corners of the golf links and the bicycle chair method of leisurely transportation and the rich semitropical foliage forms a striking background.

Florida orange groves are shown in interesting views, including the orange pickers at work and "close-ups" of the branches heavy with fruit.

Beautiful scenic views of the Florida rivers and everglades are shown with the smalll passenger boats plying up and down. For atmosphere there are alligators and tropical birds.

The film concludes with a comedy cartoon by C. R. McCauley, formerly of the New York World, showing "Skid," the cameraman, trying to take a "close-up" of an ostrich. The bird kicks "Skid" and his camera into the river

One notable feature is the fine tinting and double toning in many of the scenes. As a travel picture this and the coming issues of the series will form a valuable part of a well balanced theatre program.

All Kinds of GARDEN SEEDS by the ounce or pound at LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 73

WITH THE AUTOISTS

GENTLE HINT TO BUYERS OF AUTOS

Many automobile dealers announce that they are sold out and cannot get any more cars from their factories. You can take this in some cases with a grain of salt, but in many houses this is postively true.

It is painful to be compelled to inform prospective buyers that this condition exists, and the only remedy which can be suggested is:

"If You Are Going To Buy Do So This Week."

None of the 1916 models will be ready for delivery before July or August, and by that time your wife may have spent all your ready cash for gowns.

* * *

Local auto owners have been awaiting, with bated breath, the advent of the new, motorcycle. Many autorists have taken the time to inform themselves on speed limits, etc. And hist! A state inspector was in this vicinity of Syracuse last week and headed this way. This gentleman is liable to walk up to you suddenly as you drive along, stop you and ask to see your license. He also looks your car over and tells you whether the numbers are placed correctly. If you have no license you are in for some disagreeable experiences.

Moral—Don't drive without your license.

* * *

On August 1 the Ford Company will begin to mail 300,000 owners who purchased their cars after August, 1914, checks for $50. The total rebate of $15,000,000 involves quite a clerical task and the expenditure of more than $6,000 in postage.

Those who want to be Ford Owners will please remain after service. We will now sing that familiar little hymn. "The Little Old Ford Rambled Right Along."

* * *

The Packard Company has something mysterious up its sleeve. Officials of the company refuse to discuss it, but the whole trade understands that 1916 model, which is due shortly, will be quite radical and a distinct departure from all present or past models. There's another one not too proud to fight.

* * *

The Overland seems to be very popular here. The Willys-Overland company has been having difficulty in filling the orders that have been pouring in from all over the country, and the new "Six" in particular has been in demand.

Do not let another day pass without trying some of the good things at the Roberts & Wood Fountain. adv

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next year.

BICYCLE BUYERS ATTENTION!

GUARANTEED BICYCLE, equipped with coaster brake, spring saddle, improved handle-bars, puncture-proof tires, etc.

Sold by mail-order house for $28.75.

THIS WEEK WE WILL SELL THIS WHEEL FOR $23.25.

BUY IN FULTON

BOGUE

61 FIRST STREET PHONE 4249

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND

The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"

The largest and most costly steamer on any inland water of the world. Sleeping accommodations for 1500 passengers.

"CITY OF ERIE" — 3 Magnificent Steamers — "CITY OF BUFFALO"

BETWEEN

BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND

Leave Buffalo 9:00 P. M. Leave Cleveland 9:00 P. M.
Arrive Cleveland 7:30 A. M. Arrive Buffalo 7:30 A. M.
(Eastern Standard Time)

Connections at Cleveland for Cedar Point, Put-in-Bay, Toledo, Detroit and all points West and Southwest. Railroad tickets reading between Buffalo and Cleveland are good for transportation on our steamers. Ask your ticket agent for tickets via C. & B. Line.

[illegible]

THE CLEVELAND & BUFFALO TRANSIT CO. Cleveland, Ohio

FOR WOMEN

SUIT SALE

at "The New York Shop"

Several New Patterns in the Leading Color Effects and Designs, this week at $9.98. These Suits are the $15.00 to $18.00 quality and are limited to one of a style.

WE GIVE NATIONAL MERCHANDISE STAMPS
THEY SAVE YOU 3 1-2% ON YOUR PURCHASES

M. J. McDONALD & COMPANY

Oneida Street, Fulton

DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, May 18.—When the delegates to the Constitutional Convention take up their duties again this week more attention will be devoted to committee work than has yet characterized similar efforts upon their part. There are two hundred and twenty proposed amendments in the different committees and upon a number of them bearing have been set.

Committee hearings in connection with the Constitutional Convention are of far more importance than the legislaive committee hearings, in that the legislature meets every year and there isb ut one Constituional Convention in a score or more of years. Once adopted, the amendments will endure until the next convention is held.

There si to be no gag rule tactics in connection with the Constitutional Convention now in progress, neither will proposed amendments be rushed through so that adjournment may be taken upon a certain date; full and ample discussion will be given each separate proposal. Citizens will be heard by the committee members and their arguments will be weighed with care.

Up to the present time none of the committees have favorably reported a proposed amendment to the Constitution. The reason is that sufficient timeh as not been given by the committeemen o he proposiions before them.

It isn ot at all unlikely that before the end of the present week several of the proposed amendments will be reportd and placed upon the day calendar, this result is not generally looked for, however.

For the balance of the present month and for two weeks in June, propositions will be received; after June 11 no more amendments will be received. It is thus fair to assume that many important proposed amendments covering a wide range of subjects, will be forthcoming from now until the final day set for the cessation of proposals.

Nothing has as yet been introduced covering the idea cherished by Governor Whitman that the duties of the executive bel essened and those of the lieutenant-governor be increased. Before the Convention the Governor expressed the belief that the akairs of State, insofar as they related to the administrative branch of the government could be better transacted were the lieutenant-governor to be given some of the less vital duties of the executive. Governor Whitman was frank in admitting that he would like to see the Constitution of the State so amended so as to bring about this result. It is possible that before many days have passed that such a proposal will be submitted.

An amendment which has already caused considerable interest is that which seeks to abolish capital punishment. Both Governor Whitman and State Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley are opposed to such an amendment. Bills to accomplish this result were introduced in both houses of the legislatured uring the session recently over, but they failed to make progress. It is not at all unlikely that Governor Whitman and Superintendent Riley will appear before the committee having this proposed amendment in charge and urge that it be retained and not be favorably reported.

There are several of the Constitutional delegates who are strongly in favor of having the death penalty reduced to imprisonment for life and discussion upon the proposition bids fair to be long and animated if a hearing is given upon it, which undoubtedly will be the case.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Pat Moran, Manager of Philadelphia Nationals.

Photo by American Press Association.

Patrick J. Moran, manager of the Philadelphia National league club, is the early season sensation of the baseball world. When Pat succeeded Charley Dooin as manager he began laying plans for a rejuvenated team. He secured a lot of youngsters and got rid of some of the old timers. "I don't care for waning stars," said Moran. "I want ambitious ball players." He was willing to part with Magee, Lobert, Dooin and others. Whitted for Magee suited Moran, and many think it was a good play. It is hardly to be expected that he can win the pennant this year, but he has started out showing that he is a clever baseball man and will keep the Quaker team in the running. Moran joined the big league as a member of the Bostons in 1901 as a catcher. He went to the Chicago Cubs in 1906 and since 1910 has been with Philadelphia.

Motorboat Wonder For Drexel.

George W. Childs Drexel, the Philadelphia sportsman and commodore of the Corinthian Yacht club, is having built for himself the speed wonder of the 1915 crop of motorboats, a runabout which will be guaranteed to average thirty-two miles an hour. The boat will be called the Ace and will be about fifty feet in length and will have a beam of seven feet eight and one-half inches. Her lines and general appearance as to construction of the hull, coupled with the immense power to be installed, give every indication that the new craft will be able to attain a speed of about thirty-five miles per hour. For propulsion two eight-cylinder high speed motors will be installed in the boat, each of which is rated at about 200 horsepower. The boat is about one-third completed and will be ready for launching early in the coming motor boating season.

Trout In Quarry Pits.

Abandoned granite quarry pits in Gloucester have yielded many more brook trout to the fishermen in that community in the open season than the brooks in the woodland, according to information received at the offices of the Massachusetts state fish and game commissioners. Edward Babson, secretary of the Cape Ann Fish and Game Protective association, was the first one to think of having the quarry pits stocked with trout, and two years ago six cans of fingerling trout were plaqed in the three pits. This season, when many of the amateur fishermen found very few fish in the brooks, they cast their lines into these pits, and since then there has been a satisfactory catch all around. John E. Peterson is believed to have had the high line thus far, having caught forty-nine trout in the pits in a short time.

Yale's Great Infield.

Yale this season boasts of the best college ball team in the east. An infield of Bush, first base; Millburn, second base; Legore, shortstop, and Reilly, third base, is burning up the "Big Four." However, the brightest spot in the team is Harry Legore, who promises to be the best all round athlete Yale has turned out in years.

Legore, a former Mercersburg academy star, was the star of the football team last fall, easily the best kicker Yale had. He took a flier at basketball and is a streak on the track. But baseball is his pet pastime. Already he has received flattering offers from Connie Mack and John McGraw, the former really offering him a bonus to sign a contract. However, Legore hails from Legore, Md., and when they name towns after you one hardly could be interested in baseball.

French Athletes Killed.

Thouraus, the champion javelin thrower of France, has been killed in action near Ypres while leading an attack against a German position. He had recently been promoted adjutant of his regiment for conspicuous bravery. Three well known French footballers have also fallen. Elie Carpentier, the famous goalkeeper of the Olympique Lillois club, has been killed in the recent fighting at Beausejour. Carpentier was a sublieutenant in the Forty-first regiment of artillery. Mijon and Andre Vernaud, other well known soccer players, have also been killed in action.

Fishing Tackle

Perfection Oil Stoves
Screen Doors and Windows
Refrigerators

Paint-Up and Clean-Up
With Sherwin-Williams Paints

BUSINESS IS GOOD

A. M. DRUSE & CO.
7 South First Street

HATCH CHICKS BEFORE JUNE 1

The profits from a flock of hens depends largely upon the number of eggs prodüced by the pullets during the fall and winter months. Not only do early hatched pullets usually lay well when eggs are high in price, but these pullets mature and lay at an earlier age than trose wrich are hatched after June 1st, according to the state college of agriculture, at Cornell. This, it is claimed, is due somewhat to the fact that the spring months are more favorable for rapid growth and also because the eggs that are laid early in the spring generlly contain stronger germs and produce better chicks. It is believed that hens become weakened by heavy laying and by warm weather conditions, and that as a result, the June and July hatches are less likely to have vigorous chicks.

Moreover, experiments at Cornell show that most of the best layers produce their first eggs when they are between six and eigrt montrs of age, while those that do not lay until after they are nine months old rarely produce enough to pay the feed bill even when kept for several years. Carefully kept records indicate that usually the least productive fowls are to be found among those that are hatched late in the season.

For al lthese reasons the poultry authorities of the college hold that it is best in New York State, to hatch the larger breeds from March 15th to May 1st, and the Mediterranean breeds, between April 1st and May 20th. Pullets from these hatches should begin laying in October and November, and lay well all winter, providing they have been properly reared.

We are Agents for
CHASE & SANBORN'S
Fine Teas and Coffees
LA PORTE'S GROCERY
Oneida St. Hello 75

An Engagement Ring

produced at the pschycological moment will often influence the young lady's decision. If it is a

MORGAN RING

your success is doubly certain.

Wm. C. Morgan
Jeweler & Optometrist
Fulton, N. Y.

CHEAPER EGGS COMING WHEN MOST NEEDED

Sedalia, Mo., May 18.—That a hen may swallow a news item, even an article from a country newspaper, and live to immortalize the digested information in an egg memoranda, was shown yesterday, when Mrs. J. A. Jared, wife of a clergyman, who corroborated their sensational breakfast, wrecked a boiled one and read the truth, or at least read the truth as near as a county newspaper ever gets it.

The fragment of newspaper, about a yoke and a half wide, was wrapped around the egg unler the shell instead of the usual thin white shawl that protects the white of the egg in most instances. Mrs. Jared carefully removed the newspaper and found that every letter on it was readable and in fairly good English.

It is assumed that the innovation marks a new step in the reduction of the high cost of hatching.

"THE FEAST OF WEEKS" CELEBRATED BY HEBREWS

Commencing today and continuing for two days the Hebrews throughout the whole world will celebrate "The Feast of Weeks," or "Shavuoth" as it isc alled in the Hebrew language, a holiday which marks the 3,227th anniversary of the giving of the Ten Commandments by God to Moses on Mount Sinai. The holiday which is a joyous one among the Jewish people has also attached to its meaning the reasons why the Jewish race is the most widely scattered and why the Jews are called the children of God.

At the time Mosses received the commandments from the Almighty they were presented with the declaration that they were to be a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. To be a kingdom of priests and a holy nation meant that they should teach what is right to all people and nations which they have done b ytheir Bible.

The festival has the following names: "The Day of Giving of the Law," because it was on that day that the law was given; and "Penecost." The name Penecost means 50 and is suited to the present holiday which takes place just 50 days after the passover festival.

HEBREW SHELTER TO BE OFFICIAL STATE SCHOOL

New York.—The high school of the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society at Pleasantville, N. Y., will be recommended for official recognition to the Regents of the University of the State of New York, it mas learned recently. This will be the first time that an orphan asylum school has been put on a par with twelve years' course high schools in this city.

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS

Notice is hereby given that an annual meeting of the stockholders of the Foster Brothers and Chatillon Company will be held on the 19th day of May, 1915, at two o'clock P.M., at the office of the Company in the City of Fulton (formerly Oswego Falls), New York, for the election of Trustees or Directors, and the transaction of such other business as may lawfully come before such meeting. That at such meeting a proposition will be submitted to amend the By-Laws of said Company generally.

C. E. FOSTER,
Secretary and a member of said Corporation.

Dated, Fulton, N. Y., May 3, 1915.

BASEBALL GAMES WANTED BY STATE ST. BOYS

Charles Rohrbough is looking for a baseball team strong enough to meet his band of husky warriors, the State Street Athletic Association. His challenge is directed toward any team in or out of the city, the men to be between the ages of 18 and 20 years, with the added specification that the games shall be played upon week days. Captains and managers of teams should communicate with Mr. Rohrbaugh, P.O. box 22, Fulton.

Planet Jr. Garden tools and cultivators. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Pittsburgh at Boston.
Chicago at New York.
Cincinnati at Brooklyn.
St. Louis at Philadelphia.

Results Yesterday

Philadelphia, 5; St. Louis, 3.
All other games postponed; wet grounds.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Philadelphia	17	8	.680
Chicago	15	11	.577
Boston	12	11	.542
Pittsburgh	13	14	.481
Brooklyn	12	14	.462
Cincinnati	11	14	.440
New York	10	14	.417
St. Louis	12	17	.414

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Cleveland.
Philadelphia at Chicago.
New York at Detroit.
Washington at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 6; Philadelphia, 2.
Washington, 3; St. Louis, 2.
Other games postponed; wet grds.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
New York	16	8	.667
Detroit	18	11	.621
Boston	13	9	.591
Chicago	17	12	.58
Washington	12	14	.462
Cleveland	11	16	.407
Philadelphia	9	17	.346
St. Louis	10	19	.345

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Buffalo at St. Louis.
Brooklyn at Kansas City.
Newark at Pittsburgh.
Baltimore at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 6; Baltimore, 5.
Brooklyn, 7; Kansas City, 5.
Newark-Pittsburgh, rain.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	19	10	.655
Newark	16	12	.571
Chicago	17	13	.567
Kansas City	15	13	.536
Brooklyn	15	13	.536
St. Louis	12	14	.462
Baltimore	12	18	.400
Buffalo	8	21	.276

All Base Ball Scores
Received by Innings Every Day

BANK CAFE
J. M. CAFFREY, Proprietor
23 S. First Street

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Richmond at Toronto.
Providence at Buffalo.
Newark at Montreal.
Jersey City at Rochester.

Results Yesterday

Rochester, 3; Jersey, City, 2.
Buffalo, 2; Providence, 1.
Richmond, 11; Toronto, 8.
Newark, Montreal, rain.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	11	5	.688
Montreal	10	6	.625
Richmond	9	6	.600
Rochester	7	7	.500
Jersey City	6	7	.462
Buffalo	6	6	.455
Newark	4	7	.364
Toronto	3	11	.214

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

	R	H	E
At Milwaukee—
Louisville	3	8	9
Milwaukee	7	11	4
At Kansas City—
Indianapolis	3	9	1
Kansas City	1	4	1
At Minneapolis
Cleveland	11	14	1
Minneapolis	1	5	4
At St. Paul—
Columbus	1	4	0
St. Paul	0	3	0

COLLEGE BASEBALL

At Middlebury, Vt.—Middlebury, 7; Clarkson, 2.

Slightly used 1915 Overland Demonstrator. $750.00. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

FRESH VEGETABLES
EVERY DAY
at LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

SANITARY CLOSETS
That can be placed in any room
now on sale at
L. P. SMITH CO.
Your Plumber

THE QUIRK
Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TODAY
BETTY NANSEN in Count Tolstoi's Masterpiece
ANNA KARENINA
If you have read the book, see the play.
and
Paramount Wonderful Travel Series No. 1
(Last week was introduction)

WEDNESDAY
SPECIAL—The Ill-Fated Lusitania on Her Fatal Trip.
See the passengers arriving at the Cunard S.S. Dock. The big ship pull out into the Hudson river as the passengers are waving good-by to their friends on the dock and the ill-fate that befell them. Absolutely genuine. No fake. Simply scenes before and after the wreck.
and
The Great Sensational Feature
"THE CRIMINAL CODE"

THURSDAY:—"THE STRUGGLE FOR PLEASURE"
2d of the Who Pays Series
CHARLES CHAPLIN in a Roaring Comedy.
The Thrilling Drama, "AT THE END OF THE BRIDGE"

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

For Sale—Large ice box, suitable for store; also 16-foot row boat at 510 So. 1st st. Phone 148. 128c

Lost—Thursday; small amount of money. Return to 309 W. Broadway. Reward. 128c

Furnished Rooms—3, single or en suite. 205 Cayuga st. 129c

Young Man Wanted—As clerk at the Onyx. tf

Flat To Let—202 S. 3d st. R. L. McCully. 133

To Rent—Flat, lower, at 608 Rochester st, 130c

FRESH STRAWBERRIES EVERY DAY

at LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

ANNA KARENINA AT THE QUIRK TODAY

Anna Karenina, by Count Tolstoi, the heroine of this remarkable drama, is the wife of a Russian diplomat high in the councils of his country. This man cold, reserved and wholly wrapper up in hisd uties gives neither time nor attention to his young and beautiful wife.

Anna, though she respects her husband and adores her little son, yet craves the love which she feels is the right of every woman, and when Count Wronsky, a handsome young cavalry officer, enters her life and offers her the admiration and devotion which are denied her in her home she eagerly grasps her chance for happiness.

The inevitably result follows. Rich and beautiful though she be and of exalted social position, Anna finds that she cannot defy the conventions. She is cast off by her husband and denied a sight of her son. Her former friends desert hef; she is an outcast from society where she formerly reigned a queen. At last she even begins to distrust her lover, the man for whom she gave up everything. Wearied by her unequal struggle, and without position or reputation Anna finds this last blow too much to bear and she seeks in death a release from worldly sorrows.

USED A PICKANINY TO PAY AN OLD DEBT

Waynesboro, Ga., May 18.—For the first time in the history of the State a pickaninny has been used here as currency. A burke county negro who owed a bill to Dr. J. M. Byne called to tell why he couldn't pay it. He had with him the woolly headed boy.

"Can't you pay it anyhow?" asked the doctor.

"Naw, sir."

"Suppose you leave the boy," merrily suggested the doctor.

"Dat debt am settled," said the negro. He placed the child in a chair near the physician's desk and was gone. He hasn't been seen since.

A negro woman on the plantation owned by the doctor is raising the child for a yearly fee.

WATERTOWN TO BUILD ITS OWN HIGHWAYS

Watertown, May 17.—Two city streets are to be paved this year under the direction of the city engineer's office. Plans are now under way in the office for this work. The two pavements will cost $30,000. This will be the first time the city has attempted to do any large improvement work of this nature without letting a contract. The work will be done through the appropriation of a year ago and under the direct supervision of the city engineer's office.

Special prices on carriages. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

SUNDAY MAY VISIT ENGLAND

Paterson Trail Hitters Now Total 15,290—$32,726 Contributed for Expenses

Paterson, N. Y., May 18.—If Billy Sunday decides to go to England to fight for prohibition he won't make a decision at all. That's Irish, but it's true, for it will be "Ma" who will make the decision.

"It's entirely up to her," Sunday told Henry E. Randall, chairman of the British Business men's Campaign for Prohibition, tonight. Bill had his arm about Randall's neck, and displayed one of his chacacteristic teeth-revealng grins.

"Oh, now you call up Mrs. Sunday tomorrow and talk to her," he said. "She always knows what's best, anyway."

The Englishman approached the evangelist as soon as Billy completed the trail hitting and saw that all the names of the converts had been properly signed up by the ushers.

"What time can I see you tomorrow?" he said to Sunday.

"Say," said the athletic preacher, going off at a tangent, because he was pleased by the visitor's persistency and evident desire to get down to business, "how many other fellows are there like you over there?"

"Oh, there are quite a number of us," replied Randall. "But what time can I see you tomorrow?"

"See me? Huh! Can't see me tomorrow. Monday's my day of rest. Have to rest one day. If I didn't I'd go plumb off my nut."

Randall persisted. Bill laughed in a warm-hearted fashion. Then he blurted out his direction to the man from over seas to go see Ma about the matter. And Randall will. He hopes to have some sort of an answer from Sunday before tomorrow evening, even though he does not get an absolutely definite reply to the invitation.

Sunday Could Sweep England.

This was the first time Randall had heard Sunday speak. Last night he only talked with him at the Shelley House. Tonight he was seated on the platform. He was very sincere afterward in his comment. To a reporter's "How do you like him?" he uttered a most enthusiastic "Fine!" He looked out at the trail-hitters, seating themselves on the benches, and then said:

"Mr. Sunday must do incalculable good. Look at those men. They're not weaklings. They're most of them big, broad-shouldered men. And they tell me he packs this huge place with almost ten thousand persons each night. Most extraordinary!"

Later he said to a group of men:

"That man would sweep England. I have heard Moody and all of them, and he's the greatest of them all. This talk of not understanding him over there is rot. I understood all he said tonight. If he goes over, we will have him tour the big industrial centers, such as Manchester, Bristol, Newcastle-on-Tyne and Cardiff, and in Dublin, too."

To Ma, to whom Mr. Randall will "telephone through" tomorrow for an engagement, he said yesterday:

"The newspapers do not state the facts when they try to make it appear that intemperance is not interfering with industry in England. Sometimes ships are sent out of dry dock and then have to be taken back and dry-docked again simply because shoddy work has been done on them by drinking workmen."

More Than 15,000 Trail Hitters

"I hate to ask America, which needs Mr. Sunday so much, to give him up for a while," he went on to say to Ma, "but it's because England needs him som uch more just now."

Those little songs that everybody at Sunday's great meetings shout with so much vim, ginger, tobasco and pepperino, seemed to appeal to Mr. Randalll very much. He sung them all with spirit, especially "When Jesus Came into My Heart," which has a decidedly syncopated rythm.

Some one suggested to Mr. Randall that the popularity of American ragtime in England might help the songs along. He smiled.

Including tonight's meeting, $32,726.08 has been collected for current expenses and $6,258.78 for charity. More than 15,000 persons have hit the trail(to be exact, 15,290. There has been a total attendance in the six weeks of more than 500,000.

Next Sunday, May 23, the last day of the campaign, the evangelist will receive the collections for his personal use. This is what is called the "free day received close to $50,000. What Paterson will do for him remains to be seen. While the regular free will offering will not be taken up until next Saturday, envelopes marked "For the Rev. William A. Sunday" were distributed to the men in the tabernacle.

That's so if you can't be here next Sunady you can put your contribution in the envelope and send it to the treasurer," it was explained.

Billy preached twice today to men only, on booze. In one of his sermons he called the barroom "A recruiting office for hell, the penitentiary and the electric chair," adding, "some men have so lost all decency they'd drink whiskey if Jesus Christ lived in town.

Sunday will play baseball tomorrow afternoon with a minister's nine aganst a team composed of Paterson and visiting newspapermen. Next Saturday there will be a parade in his honor. He announced today that July 29 had been officially designated as "Billy Sunday Day" at the Panama Pacific Exposition.

NO FUTURITY RACES AT STATE FAIR

Albany, May 18.—Futurity races planned by the State Fair Commission to be held at the State Fair in 1915, 1916 and 1917 cannot be held lawfully and money collected from horse-owners toward the project must be returned, Attorney-General Woodbury held in an opinion rendered yesterday. In all $3,205 has been collected.

The old commission had planned to spend $20,000 in purses for the Futurity races in three years. The Attorney General held that because an annual financial report must be made by the commission, when all unexpended money must be turned over to the state treasurer, the Futurity plan was not feasible.

The $8,205 collected now is deposited in a Syracuse bank and the recently appointed commissioners are directed to return it.

ELECTRICITY IN THE EASTERN END OF COUNTY

The Henderson Electric Light & Power Company is the title of a stock company which will soon be incorporated for the purpose of supplying electricity for heat, lighting and power purposes in Oswego and Jefferson counties and which will include the townships of Richland, Sandy Creek, Ellisburgh and Henderson.

Frank E. Hamm, a Henderson business man and T. G. Alvord of Syracuse, are the main promotors of the plan, the construction work to begin at a very early date so that the plant may be in operation this fall.

Lacona and Sandy Creek and Richland are expected to become large users of Salmon River Power when the line is completed.

REASON MUST PREVAIL

It is inconreivable that Germany's reply to President Wilson's note will in tone disappoint the United States. Though Germany's back is to the wall, the people of that land are Christian, sober and law abiding, as kind and as humane as the people of any other land and as resentful of massacre. There are leaders of the German people whose consrienues are as acute as our own. And there are leaders who would devote the nation to outlawry. These leaders appear to have had the upper hand; perhaps they still hold it. We have the same type in this country and there have been times when they were dominant. The war of humanity is against the type which knows no limit to its excesses.

President Wilson has asked not only just and prompt action, but he demands that it shall be along enlighted lines. When the German people ponler upon his note, it is altogether likely that those guilty of outlawry will not dictate its reply, though they may choose the words. The preliminary representatives have shown a distinct change of front in Germany. Its position within a week has been greatly modified. As a civilized Christian nation it cannot fail to accept President Wilson's view and demand. The President has strength ened our case by the tone of moderation. He has not made it more difficult for Germany to do wrong.—Watertown Standard.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

The Order of Eastern Star, Elizabeth Chapter 105, held memorial services last eveninfi at their rooms in memory of Mrs. Francis Reynolds and Mrs. Nellie Gardner.

An unusually large attendance was present to join in the services.

10 per cent. discount on Ford tires. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

WILSON GUARDED DURING VISIT

First President Since Civil War to Visit City During Crisis

President Wilson is guarded with the utmost vigilance during his visit to New York. Elaborate details for shielding him have been worked out by Police Commissioner Arthur Woods and Chief Flynn of the Secret Service.

Not since Abraham Lincoln stopped off in New York in 1861, on the way to his inauguration, has a President visited Manhattan when the nation was facing a crisis.

Secret Service men arrived there on Saturday to make plans for guarding the rPesident through all the various functions which mark his review of the fleet. Particular attention has been given to arrangements for his reviewing the land parade in front of the New York Public Library, on Fifth avenue.

Admission to that portion of the grandstand adjoining the President's place of honor has been restricted to those known to Commissioner Woods and Chief Flynn. Special tickets have been issued for admission to the smaller stand opposite the President, in front of the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, at Forty-first street.

Equally stringest precautionary methods were used in distributing tickets for the luncheon at the Biltmore Hotel Saturday noon.

Watchmen kept their eyes open for persons who inspected the grand stand on Fifth avenue Saturday. If a person tarried for even a minute to admire the effect of the deorations he was scrutinized closely by figures which appeared from the sidewalk inclosure between Fortieth street and the Union League Club.

PROPERTY OWNERS HAVE TAKEN UP THE HINT

Several instances of hearty co-operation on the part of residents of the city in the Clean-Up Week have been noticed during the past few days. In an issue of this paper printed last week, attention was called to a very unsanitary and unkempt condition which existed in property owned by a prominent Fultonian in First st. near Division. Residents who have neat homes complained about the sanitary conditions tolerated by foreigners who reside in that section and the matter was given some publicity by this paper, with the result that the owner of the property set men at work on the premises and the refuse is now ready for the Chamber of Commerce rubbish wagon.

It is reported, however, that the living conditions of the people in some houses objected to should be looked into by the Board of Health. There is a bed in the cellar of one house and it is stated that the bed is occupied at the usual time every evenng. Some sixteen people live on the premises and the house is small with the result that many are forced to sleep in one room.

On other premises owned by an Oswego man a very unsanitary condition exists and one property owner who complained to the owner was informed that "Nobody asked you to come up here and live; we don't pretend to have a swell neighborhood here." The property will doubtless come to the attention of the committee of the Chamber of Commerce which is conducting a careful investigation of sanitary conditions in the city.

MANY SOLICITORS ARE FOND OF REFRESHMENTS

Solicitors who imbibe too freely of the wine that cheers seem to be present in the city in large numbers. One citizen who represented a newspaper syndicate which makes a specialty of special editions, walked into the Times office yesterday and after reefing his sail tacked over to the editorial desk and proceeded to explain his proposition as best he could in view of the fact that his articulating apparatus was slightly recalicitrant. He was promptly given his bearings and procedded once more to port his helm, saying as he passed over the threshold, "It looks like a bad night for the sailors."

WATER GLASS

EGG PRESERVER

By the Quart or Gallon

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

THE BIG

SHIRT WAIST SALE

Starts WEDNESDAY at 9 a. m.

$1.50 and $2.00 Values for 75c. No Phone Orders. No Approvals.

COUCH HAMMOCKS—Steel frame, Link spring, Wind shield $4.98

CREX RUGS—All sizes and colors . . . $1.98 and up

BIG PORCH ROCKER for $1.98

$15.00 and $18.00 LADIES' SUITS—All 1915 Styles, to close out at $9.98

M. KATZ & CO.

Department Store

63-65 FIRST STREET FULTON, N. Y.

Community Notes

Charles F. Jones is remodeling the old Star theatre building in West Broadway and will use it as a store room.

* * *

It is well to keep in mind Friday morning. There will be free collection of rubbish. Get yours on the curb at 8 a.m.

* * *

The Chamber of Commerce cannot push a clean-up campaign without your help.

* * *

The Oswego County Medical Association met at the Clark House today.

* * *

Harold Scholz has returned from a short stay in Hamilton.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. George Nichols were guests Sunday of Fair Haven friends.

* * *

Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Hall were guests of Pulaski friends Friday.

* * *

Mrs. A. S. Burgess of Cortland has been the guest of Fulton friends.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Summerville of West 1st st., have been the guests of friends at East Syracuse.

* * *

The W. H. M. S. of the First M. E church will hold a regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. George Palmer, 207 Worth st., Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Leader, Mrs. F. E. Goodjon; topic, "Aborigines who are not Red Men."

* * *

Norman Waugh was in Oswego Monday on business for the Granby Paper Company.

* * *

O. Bogardus of South 4th st., is recovering from his illness.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Jay Hollingsworth of Buffalo are in the city.

* * *

Edward Joslin is in New York, but will return today or tomorrow.

* * *

Herman H. Randall has just purchased a $970.00 Lyon & Healy harp, direct from their factory in Chicago.

* * *

James Fuller, an employe of John McGuiness of West 1st st., had the misfortune to have his hand crushed yesterday.

* * *

Grocer Frank Massaro was in Pulaski yesterday, attending court. He was assompanied by Dr. A. L. Hall.

* * *

Mrs. Mildred J. Harrington has bought a new Dodge touring car.

MRS. WILLIAM CARR TO TALK ON ALASKA

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First Methodist church will meet with Mrs. George Palmer, Worth street, Wednesday afternoon.

The meeting will open promptly at 3 o'clock. Special music has been arranged, and Mrs. William Carr, Park street, will give a half hour's talk on Alaska. Mrs. Carr recently returned from Alaska and the story will be full of personal experiences. Alaska picture views will be shown also.

PAPER CO. TO INCREASE ITS CAPITAL STOCK

Secretary of State Hugo gave permission on Saturday to the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Co. to increase its capital stock from $30,000 to $600,000. The increase was asked for by the company in order that plans for the enlargement of the plant may be carried to a conclusion.

Do not let another day pass without trying some of the good things at the Roberts & Wood Fountain. adv

Ladies, If You Insist

on wearing a corset, don't use the kind that laces in the back. It is a relic of barbarism, and tends to produce a matronly figure."

Dr. Robert M. Green,
Boston City Hospital.

THE GOSSARD CORSET

conforms to hygienic standards.
IT LACES IN THE FRONT.

For Sale by

DIX—Milliner

SECOND STREET

Get Busy With a Brush

and Some of Our BEST PAINT

Get Busy with the Rake and Shovel in the back yard. Also the front yard.

We Are Selling the BEST WALL PAPER

at a

10% DISCOUNT

HULETT-TAFT CO., Inc.

208 Oneida Street

D/34

A REAL NECESSITY

No Advertiser can Successfully Develop Trade in the Market Afforded by the People of Fulton, Unless He Employs the Advertising Columns of

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

¶ Remember that its circulation represents ONE-SIXTH of the population of Fulton, therefore it is necessary to use The Evening Times to make your proposition a success.

¶ The Evening Times' readers represent the same classes as any other paper circulated in this vicinity, who are, collectively, the all-powerful people for the advertiser to reach.

¶ The people of Fulton reached by The Evening Times buy ONE-SIXTH of everything sold in the city. They have money to buy luxuries as well as necessities, and they read THIS PAPER because it is their Home Paper—edited, printed and circulated by "Home Talent" who spend their money for the upbuilding of Fulton—your City.

¶ Readers of The Evening Times are a big, mighty crowd—to neglect them, to ignore them means a lack of business judgment, and it requires the support of the big crowd to put things over.

THE BIG CROWD OF FULTON—READ YOUR HOME PAPER

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Admiral M. J. de Robeck, In Command at Dardanelles.

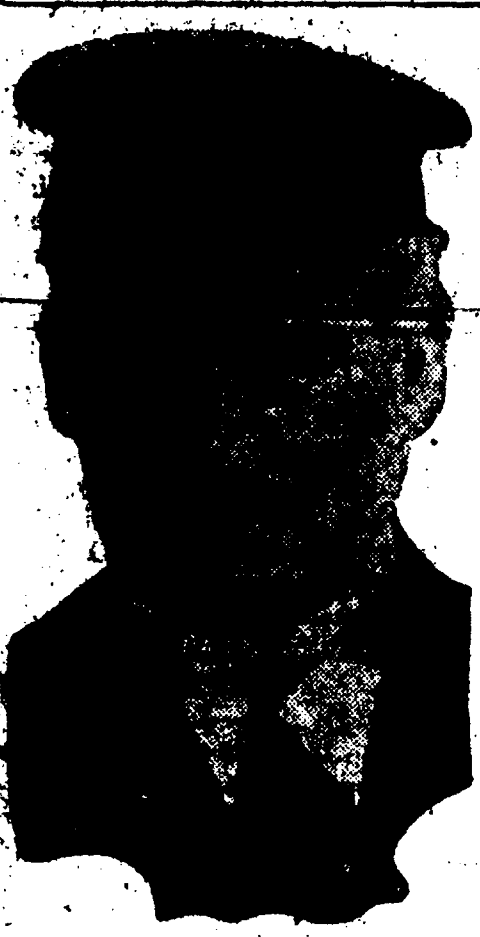

Photo by American Press Association.

Rear Admiral Michael John de Robeck, who succeeded Vice Admiral Carden as commander of the allied fleets operating in the Dardanelles, is an expert in the use of and defense against mines and torpedoes. He entered the British navy in 1875 at the age of thirteen and became a rear admiral in 1911. In 1912 he was made admiral of patrols, a command embracing all torpedo craft allotted to the coast defense in time of war and calling for expert acquaintance with every form of mines and mining.

The rear admiral (acting vice admiral) is an Irishman and is the second son of the fourth Baron de Robeck of Gowran Grange, Naas, Ireland. His brother, the present Baron de Robeck, is the only British subject holding a Swedish title of nobility. He is the great-grandson of John Henry Fock, Baron de Robeck, who fought for the American cause in the war of independence. He was a lieutenant in the Swedish army and with the permission of his king joined a French dragoon regiment sent to this country under Rochambeau. He was wounded at the battle of Gloucester and returned to France in 1783. Later he emigrated to Ireland, married a daughter of the brother of the Earl of Upper Ossory and by act of parliament was naturalized a subject of George III.

Register of the Treasury.

Houston B. Teehee of Oklahoma, who recently assumed the duties of register of the treasury, is five-eighths Cherokee Indian. He succeeded Gabe Parker, also an Indian, who resigned to become superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes. The new register of the treasury was born in 1874 in what is now Sequoyah county, Okla. He was reared on a farm and was educated in the tribal schools and at the Fort Worth (Tex.) university.

HOUSTON B. TEEHEE.

Mr. Teehee's first political service was as an alderman in the city of Tahlequah, and he was subsequently mayor of the city for two terms. Later he became county attorney and at the time of his appointment as register of the treasury was probate attorney in the Indian service. Mr. Teehee's father was assistant chief of the Cherokees. He served as delegate to Washington during the negotiations leading up to tribal dissolution. He had been connected with tribal politics during his entire adult life until the tribal entity was abolished in 1898.

Register Teehee is deeply interested in all efforts for the advancement of the red man, especially as they concern the people in Oklahoma. He said recently that, while quite a number of them are yet restricted as regards their property interests, he hopes "it will be but a few years until all are rendered capable and industrious citizens of the state in the true sense of American citizenship."

POPULAR MECHANICS

Fires In Paint Barrels.

Many serious shop fires have had their origin in a paint barrel or tank used for dip painting. Such tanks or barrels occasionally take fire either spontaneously or through other causes, and when once in flame it is very difficult to extinguish it before damage is done. Water is useless, as it only spreads the burning paint; the ordinary fire extinguisher is in about the same class, and sand, while used by some with fair success, so fills the paint with grit and dirt as to render the entire batch unfit for further use. To put out a fire of this kind the American Machinist points out that a mixture of bicarbonate of soda and fine sawdust in about the proportion of ten pounds of bicarbonate to each bushel of sawdust has been found effective. The mixture is thrown into the burning tank and the cover replaced. The fire is almost instantly choked out by the heavy blanket of carbonic acid gas formed by the burning sawdust and sodium carbonate.

After the fire is out and the tank has cooled the charred sawdust dirt may be skimmed off the top, and the paint underneath will be found free from dirt and in as good condition as before the fire.

When Iron Is Inflammable.

Iron burns freely under favorable conditions, though such a metal is not commonly thought of as combustible. A piece of soft iron when whittled into a flame burns brilliantly. A recently discovered process, termed by its inventor "calorization," said to protect combustible metals from atmospheric action at high temperatures and make them available for a much wider range of usefulness than is now the case, was recently described in the American Machinist. The metals are heated in revolving drums containing, among other things, finely divided aluminium, by which a surface alloy containing aluminium is produced. Pieces which because of their shape and size are not adapted for tumbling may be calorized by packing them in or painting them with a suitable mixture and heating them. After iron is calorized the effect of heating is slight. Instead of burning and the scale falling off, as in the case of untreated iron, practically no effect can be detected.

Removing Plain Keys.

Considerable skill is frequently required to remove plain keys fitted in places where it is impossible to get at them with a drift, says Popular Mechanics. One of the simplest successful methods of obtaining the desired result is the use of a monkey wrench and pinch bar, as shown in the illustration. For this purpose a wrench should be used that has sharp edges on its jaws, so these can get a good grip on the key. To further improve the method grooves may be cut on opposite sides of the key, so the jaws will fit better when straddling the key at a slight angle with the face of the keyed machine part. By using a pinch bar against the movable jaw sufficient force can be applied to remove the key unless it is so tightly driven or rusted in place that it will have to be drilled out before it can be released.

METHOD OF USING WRENCH AND BAR.

Repairing Marble.

With a little practice any mechanic can repair holes, cracks or chipped places on marble slabs, so that the patched place cannot be detected from the natural marble, says Popular Mechanics. Use the following mixture as a base filler: Water glass, ten parts; calcined magnesite, two parts, and powdered marble, four parts. These should be mixed thoroughly to a semifluid paste. Fill the crack or hole and smooth off level; then, with a camel's hair brush and colors made of aniline in alcohol, work out the veins, body colors, etc., as near to the natural marble as possible. It will depend on the application of the colors whether the repair can be seen or not. Artificial marble slabs can be formed from this mixture.

Cleaning Before Painting.

The proper cleaning of the surface of iron and steel parts before paint or other protective materials are applied is of the utmost importance. Paint which is put on a surface covered with grease or dirt does not come into good contact with the metal and consequently does not adhere to it. Sooner or later the dirt will fall or be knocked off and the paint will come with it. Beams and other parts which are coated with heavy oil or which have been allowed to lie on the ground until they are covered with mud and dirt should be thoroughly cleaned before painting if it is desired that protection of any permanence is to be secured.—Engineering Magazine.

Walnut Filler Ingredients.

A walnut filler is made of three pounds burnt Turkey umber, one pound of burnt Italian sienna, both ground in oil, then mixed to a paste with one quart of turpentine and one pint of Japan drier.

A Mother's Mistake

By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

Farmer Perks called his son Thomas to him one bright spring morning and said to him, "Thomas, I wish you to go to town and sell the calf." Thomas got himself ready to go to town, putting on his store clothes and brushing himself up so that he looked very well. He was a handsome youth, and his mother dreaded that some girl on the way might fancy him and get away with him. It occurred to her to so handicap him that he would be in no condition to respond to such advances. So she said to him:

"Tom, dear, since you are going to the city to sell the calf I think you had better take some other farm produce."

Tom expressed a willingness to do as his mother said, and when he had taken the calf from the barn he led it by the rope about its neck to the house, where she was waiting for him. She gave him a basketful of eggs and a live turkey. Since he must use one hand to lead the calf and could not carry the turkey and the eggs in the other his mother made a sort of turban of a towel for his head and balanced the basket of eggs on it. Then she placed the turkey under the arm not in use for leading the calf.

"Mother," said Tom, "I fear that if I stumble the eggs will fall and be broken."

"The distance to the city is short," was the reply. "You may walk slowly and carefully and yet reach the market in half an hour. And, Tom," she added, "if a girl offers to relieve you of a part of your burden refuse her."

Tom, who was a very obliging youth, suffered his mother to kiss him goodby, for he could not kiss her loaded as he was, and set forth on his journey. The calf did not lead easily, and the turkey tried to get away, so that between the two difficulties he was in constant dread lest he drop the eggs. He had made but half the journey when Annie Pixley came out of a wood and, seeing Tom trying to balance the eggs on his head while hampered by the calf and the turkey, began to laugh at him. Annie was just fifteen years old, a very attractive age with girls, and had a lithe figure that showed to advantage in her scant costume. Moreover, her eyes were full of mischief, and her lips were a rosy red. Tom cast a reproachful glance at her, whereupon her heart softened to him, and she said:

"Poor fellow! You are surely having a hard time of it with so much to attend to. Let me carry some portion of your burden."

Tom remembered his mother's warning and declined the offer, telling Annie the reason for his refusal.

"And why did your mother do that?" asked Annie, who jumped at the true cause at once.

"I don't know," replied Tom. "She simply warned me. Then she kissed me goodby and sent me off."

"And did you not kiss her goodby?" asked the girl.

"How could I, loaded as I am?"

"I see," said Annie. "You can't kiss any one. If there is any kissing between you and a girl she must do it all."

"Certainly!" said Tom.

"But you might set down a part of your load if you won't let me carry it."

"What can I set down? If I release the turkey he will not come back to me; if the calf he will scamper back to the farm. As for the eggs, I must use one hand or the other to remove them from my head, and I have shown you that is impossible without losing either the turkey or the calf."

"I might take the eggs off your head and set them on the ground. That would not be carrying them for you."

"That would not help matters. I would still have my hands full."

"I see. You can't kiss any one. If you are kissed one must kiss you. Your mother has arranged that she is the only one to kiss you."

"How is that?"

"It would not be modest for a girl to kiss you."

Tom stood still in order that he might do some thinking. Something was denied him. Had he been at liberty to take it he would not have thought of doing so. But now that he was prevented he pined for it. Annie stood before him, looking up into his eyes with hers, and her red lips were very tantalizing. The longer he thought the nearer she drew to him. Presently her lips were so close to his that he bent his head and kissed her. Down came the basket of eggs and every one was broken. Tom let go the calf and the turkey to catch it, and the calf ran back to the farm, while the turkey scurried off into the woods.

"There," said Tom. "See what you have done!"

"I have done! I have done nothing. I offered to carry a part of your load, and you would not let me do so. You attempted to take a kiss without my consent. It seems to me that you are alone to blame."

Later Tom appeared at home without any of his load, but with Annie Pixley. When his mother asked him what it all meant he said:

"Dear mother, you made a terrible mistake. You filled my hands and put a burden on my head so that I could kiss no one. The girl was so modest that she would not kiss me, so I was obliged to kiss her. I dropped the eggs, and to catch them I let go the turkey and the calf."

"I see," said his mother.

Old Grayson's Housekeeper

She Was a Paragon, but He Discharged Her

By JOTHAM KINGSLEY

"So you lost your job at Peterby's?" remarked Mrs. Sharp when Ruth Lowell paid her week's board.

"Yes—the manager told me that I was not aggressive—that I would never make a good saleswoman," smiled Ruth wearily.

"If that means that you haven't got any nerve—he's right," said the landlady emphatically. "There's some wimmen just naturally cut out for clerking in stores, and some for dressmaking, and others for housekeeping; seems to me you'd shine best in getting married and keeping house for a good husband."

"In the meantime I must have something to do," laughed Ruth, "so I'll just go out and buy a morning paper."

When she returned to the red plush sofa in Mrs. Sharp's parlor, Ruth tossed aside coat and furs and scanned the want columns.

She copied a list of addresses—shops where they needed experienced salesladies, and then she clipped an advertisement different from the others and put it in her pocketbook.

"All the others failing—I'll try this one," she said firmly and set out to find employment.

That night she sat on the edge of her narrow bed in the third floor back hall room and studied the little clipping, for all of her applications for work had been in vain.

If Peterby's did not want her no one else did.

She reread the advertisement through a blur of tears:

WANTED.—A housekeeper; one who can cook properly and keep a house clean and neat, and mind her own business; good wages to right party; call afternoons all week. THEO. GRAYSON, Roselawn.

"I can keep house," decided Ruth, "I am glad that mother made a housewife of me—I am clean and neat and I can attend to my own affairs. I'll go tomorrow."

Roselawn was a small village twenty miles from New York and when Ruth left the train she discovered that there was no conveyance to take her down the long hill.

She sat down on a bench for a few moments and took occasion to view the surrounding country and at the same time to compose herself for the coming ordeal. She had never worked in the capacity of a housekeeper, although, being a country girl, she felt equal to the task. She felt a great relief to be away from the turmoil of the city and contrasted the quiet village with the hot and dusty scenes she had left behind. What if she be not accepted as a housekeeper by Mr. Grayson? Perhaps the place had already been filled. She winced at the thought and fervently hoped that her quest would not be in vain. While thus musing she heard a step and turned in the direction of the sound.

"YOU WISHED TO SEE ME?" HE RUMBLED IN A DEEP VOICE.

The station master came out of his little building.

"The stage doesn't meet this train, miss. It's only half a mile to the village and it's a nice day for a walk. Grayson? Oh! The Grayson place is the first one you come to on the right hand side of the road—a big place with a stone wall around it."

"Thank you," said Ruth and went her way.

The Grayson place looked large to Ruth's eyes: it was a comfortable red brick house set in an ample lawn and surrounded by beautiful elms now drooping bare branches toward the snow covered ground.

Smoke was pouring from one of the chimneys.

As Ruth hesitated in the gateway a man passed along looking curiously at her.

[illegible] asked.

"Yes? Maybe you're one of the housekeepers he's advertising for? Yes! Lord love you. You won't stay a day if he'll take you! He's the worst old crank in the county! Ask any one about old Grayson, and they'll tell you the same thing!"

"Thank you," said Ruth, and with a sinking heart she hurried up the path to the front door and rang the bell.

A heavy tread sounded in the hall and the door opened, disclosing a very giant of a man, who looked down at Ruth from sharp gray eyes. His thick gray hair and bushy gray beard gave him an appearance of advanced middle age, but his eyes were clear and his skin was fresh and unlined. His clothes were baggy and unbrushed.

"You wished to see me?" he rumbled in a deep voice.

"Are you Mr. Grayson?" timidly asked Ruth.

"Yes—you're not another—you didn't come in answer to my advertisement for a housekeeper?" he asked incredulously.

"But I did!" protested Ruth.

"Please come in," he said gruffly, and Ruth felt very much as if she was walking into a lion's den. He led the way into a cosy sitting room and drew a chair close to the glowing stove. "Sit down," he ordered, and Ruth obeyed.

"What a horrid old ogre," she thought.

Mr. Grayson ranged himself opposite and folded his arms.

"Can you keep house?" he asked sharply.

"Yes."

"Cook?"

"Yes," decidedly.

"How well can you cook?" with a sarcastic inflection.

"As well as my mother could, and she was a farmer's daughter and a farmer's wife," retorted Ruth.

"Any objection to my eating rolls and coffee for breakfast instead of sausages and pancakes?" he demanded.

"None."

"Do you mind serving dinner at night?"

"Of course not."

"Would you want to marry me?"

"Heavens—no!" Ruth crimsoned and started for the door, but Grayson reached it first.

"Please don't go. You must forgive my rudeness. But I've been pestered to death by housekeepers. Have had seven in as many months. Those who could cook wanted to suit their own appetites concerning the food that was served. The rest couldn't cook and were only looking for a home and a husband."

"I am looking for work," said Ruth indignantly. "I am sorry I came"—Her voice trembled.

"Give me another chance, please. Sit down and tell me where you came from and what you can do." He led her to the chair, and she resumed her seat.

In fifteen minutes he was possessed of Ruth's simple history, and Ruth Lowell learned that for seven months past Grayson's widowed cousin, who had kept house for him many years, had been confined to her chair with rheumatism. She was waited on by a small colored maiden, and Grayson had been obliged to hire a housekeeper to attend to domestic affairs.

"So there you are," he ended. "Cousin Ida helpless in the south room, with Judy to wait upon her. I'm busy most of the time over my work—I'm an architect, you know—and you'd have free swing here. Judy's mother comes and does the washing and ironing, so the work isn't heavy. What do you say, Miss Lowell?"

"You think that I will do?" asked Ruth.

"You can try. When will you come? Twenty-five a month and your board. We're all at sevens and nines here."

Ruth laughed. "I'll stay and get dinner for you," she volunteered.

"Done! There's a steak in the pantry and—er—all the other things. I'll send Judy in to show you around."

Ruth did not remain to eat the toothsome dinner she had prepared for Theodore Grayson and his family. She had made the acquaintance of Cousin Ida, a gentle, frail little woman, who tapped her round cheek and told her she was too young and pretty to stew over a cook stove.

"And don't mind Theo," she advised. "His bark's worse than his bite. Folks call him 'Old Grayson,' but he's only thirty-five."

So Ruth Lowell came to Roselawn and found a home in a charming old fashioned room that opened into Cousin Ida's apartment.

She remembered what Mr. Grayson had said about the former housekeepers, and she recollected with a smile the wording of his advertisement. She must "mind her own business."

She did to a degree that worried her employer.

Breakfast found a daintily set table, well rubbed silver and a well cooked meal—fruit, delicious coffee, bacon and rolls. Cousin Ida had her favorite cereal and tea and toast in her own room, and by some marvel the new housekeeper disdained sausages and pancakes and enjoyed the same sort of breakfast as her employer.

Beside his plate there would be the morning newspaper, and Ruth discouraged talking at meals. Luncheon was a solitary meal for Grayson, but he looked forward to dinner.

Ruth sat opposite him and poured the coffee. She was such a contrast to the snuffy old women who had filled that chair in the past that Theodore Grayson excused himself for admiring her demure gowns and her frilly white aprons and her curling waves of brown hair.

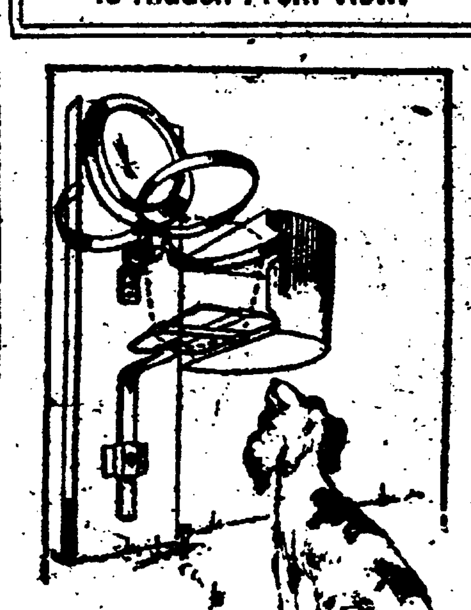
The night Grayson appeared in a new and well fitting suit of clothes, with his hair trimmed and his face [illegible]

Fall In Line For Cleanup Day

THEY'RE ON THE JOB—ARE YOU?

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Sanitary Garbage Can That Is Hidden From View.



There is a new garbage receptacle that supports the pail on a stand at a point where it cannot be readily reached by roving animals, and in addition to this it guards it from becoming accidentally knocked from its proper place. When the bucket is in its place the outfit is concealed behind a semicircular shield which closes on a hinge at one side and is supplied with a locking device on the other side. This shield not only protects it from view, but also keeps water from it, which is extremely desirable from a sanitary point of view.

Kitchen Helps.

To prevent the gravy soaking through the bottom crust of meat pies brush over the crust with white of egg.

After frying onions pour a little vinegar into the frying pan, let it get hot and it will remove all smell from the pan.

When washing coarse clothes use soft soap, as it will go further than the ordinary yellow and is more efficacious.

Do not leave wooden tubs to dry or they will quickly crack and come apart. Keep a little water always standing in them.

When baking custard pies put one-third teaspoonful of baking powder in custard. It makes it nice and firm.

Currant Pudding.

Cover one quart of cleaned red currants with water and let them boil till the juice has been well drawn out. You may help by mashing berries with a spoon; then strain liquid. You will have about one and one-half quarts of juice. To this add two cupfuls of sugar and six even teaspoonfuls of corn starch, dissolved in cold water. Stir while it thickens and until it's done, which takes only a little while if you use a saucepan instead of double boiler. A little piece of stick cinnamon may be added while cooking. Put into an earthen (not tin) mold and serve ice cold with sugar and cream.

A Cake Baking Hint.

Raisins and currants have a habit of sinking to the bottom of a loaf of cake, no matter if they have been floured or some other means taken to prevent their doing so. At last, it is said, a way has really been found which will make them stay where they ought to. Put the raisins and currants in a dish and set it on the back of the stove; stir them ocasionally and see that they do not burn. When thoroughly heated add them to the batter.

Meat Rolls.

Sift two cupfuls of flour twice with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one of salt and chop into this two tablespoonfuls of lard and one of butter. Moisten with milk (about one-half cup) and roll out one-half inch thick into oblong shape. Spread with chopped, cooked meat, well seasoned and moistened with stock. Roll up like jelly roll, brush over with milk and bake in moderate oven. Serve with tomato sauce.

A Museum of Crime.

Professor Hans Gross of the University of Gratz, Austria, has the credit of establishing the first museum of criminology and a criminalistic laboratory, where the weapons, tools and other paraphernalia and materials used by criminals are assembled to assist in the analysis of the workings of criminal minds and a study of methods and systems for dealing with this large and dangerous class of every community. This museum was established in 1895, and since then other establishments of the same character have been organized.

One of the most important of these is the Society of Criminology and Social Defense in Paris, which has a membership of more than 200, including many prominent representatives of the law, the police and medical profession, and it was organized to concentrate and centralize the scattered efforts of individuals who were studying this disquieting social problem and to make the results of their work available for mutual information.

Fasting and Health.

"The practice of fasting," states a medical man, "is, when wisely followed, most beneficial. I am convinced that many people never feel the sensation of natural hunger. All they have is a morbid craving for food which comes of habit rather than from any actual need felt by the stomach. Natural hunger stimulates the palate and is felt in the mouth as well as in the internal organs. It makes the plainest food seem delicious. Some unfortunate people suffer, it is true, from insufficient food, but not so many as those whose ills arise from overnutrition, their digestions being continually over strained. A habit of judicious fasting would do wonders for them. The system would recover its lost tone, and—in the case of mental workers—the brain would work with an ease and lightness that would surprise them, for the brain is one of the chief sufferers from the practice of overeating."

Inappropriate Garb.

"How are you coming along with your new magazine, the Society Girl?"

"All right. But the mailing proposition bothers me."

"How's that?"

"I don't like to send her out in a wrapper."—Louisville Courier Journal.

A Good Actor.

Patience—So she married an actor?

Patrice—Oh, yes!

"Was he a good actor?"

"Oh, yes; he acted as if he loved her."—Yonkers Statesman.

To apply to others in charity the knowledge one has used against oneself in judgment—this is the hard thing to do.—Malloch.

[illegible]

What Would Society Do if Evolution Had Banished It?

"Say what you will," remarked the dispassionate pilgrim, "these scientific sharps have some real interesting stuff in the paper sometimes."

"What now?"

"Here's a fellow states that in prehistoric times a man could twitch his skin. Twitch it at will, you know. If a fly lit on you you could twitch that particular square inch of hide and jounce him off. See?"

"I see."

"Of course them as had tails could wag 'em. Then we had gills, rudimentary horns and all sorts of contraptions that have since disappeared. A man could also cock his ears like a mule kin."

"What does all this dissertation lead to?"

"Oh, nothing, nothing. We've lost all them faculties now."

"Still, we get along just as well without them."

"We do. That's true. But there's one faculty we retain that we could hardly get along without."

"What is that?"

"It would be an awful blow to society if we couldn't raise our eyebrows."—Puck.

Desiccated.

"She gave Alphonse
A withering look."
So runs a line
Within this book.

And reading on
His fate to see—
Alphonse dried up
Immediately.
—Los Angeles Express.

A Herculean Task.

A youth who bore the earmarks of a college boy stood forlornly on a corner smoking furiously a new white pipe. Every fifteen minutes or so he knocked the ashes from the bowl and, stuffing it again with tobacco, resumed his puffing.

"Old fellow, what's the idea—coupons?" asked a friend who came upon him.

"Well, you see, I took father's meerschaum out this morning and it dropped on the sidewalk and broke. Now I've got to get this one colored before I can go home," answered the young man.—Louisville Times.

Pessimist.

Stranger (to clerk at weather bureau)—I'm to be married tomorrow. What are the probabilities?

Clerk—Why, judging from your looks—rotten!—New York Globe.

My Conge.

I begged a glove of Phyllis fair,
And when at length obtained it
I said: "Suppose no 'g' were there.
Could I have ever gained it?"

She smiled and said: "You ask for love?
'Tis plain you think I'm smitten;
So know at once I meant the glove
To be for you the mitten."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Pooh!

Alice was very enthusiastic regarding the new minister, and young Winston was inclined to be rather jealous.

"Oh, he is superbly eloquent," cried Alice. "He can move his hearers to tears."

"Well, that is but a paltry accomplishment, Alice," replied the young man sarcastically. "I would scorn proficiency in an art in which every sneeze is my equal and every peeled onion my superior."—New York Times.

After Marriage.

"My love for you is like a rose,"
He used to tell his girl.
Such lovely sentiments he chose
As put her in a whirl.

But now she makes a frequent "strike,"
And as he taps the till
He sighs and thinks his love is like
A fifty dollar bill.
—Kansas City Journal.

Must Have Liked Jack.

"And what did you do last night when Jack kissed you—scream?"

"And spoil the deliciousness of it? I did not. I'm going to be perfectly frank with you, Maxie. I nestled my head on his shoulder and closed my eyes."

"You sensible girl!"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Circulation Statement, Unsworn To.

"May I print a kiss upon your lips?" I asked.
She gave me sweet permission.
And so, I went to press and Printed a large edition.
—Philadelphia Ledger.

Might Be Misunderstood.

"He's a perfect duck of a doctor!"

"For heaven's sake don't tell people so."

"Why not?"

"Naturally, they'll think he's a quack."—Philadelphia Record.

Certain to Lose.

You may break, you may shatter
The peace if you will,
But a copper will cart you
[illegible]
—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Woman's World

College Girl at Head of Congressional Union For Woman Suffrage.

Copyright by Edmonston.

MISS ALICE PAUL.

Miss Alice Paul of New Jersey is chairman of the Congressional Union For Woman Suffrage.

Miss Paul is a graduate of Swarthmore college and has an M. A. and Ph. D. degree from the University of Pennsylvania. She is also a graduate of the New York school of philanthropy and studied at the Universities of Birmingham and London. She was formerly chairman of the congressional committee of the National American Woman Suffrage association and formerly a member of the board of the Pennsylvania State Woman Suffrage association.

The Congressional Union For Woman Suffrage is an organization which has as its basic work the establishment of a national suffrage amendment.

The women most interested in the suffrage movement felt that during the incoming of a new administration was the psychological moment for reviving interest or, rather, creating a new interest in the demand by women for an amendment to the national constitution embracing the enfranchisement of women. It was to this end that the Congressional union was formed, with Miss Alice Paul at its head, and which demonstrated in no unmistakable terms to President Wilson's administration the great strength of the movement for a national suffrage amendment.

Suffrage history was made that day preceding the inauguration of President Wilson, when approximately 8,000 women marched from the capitol at Washington up Pennsylvania avenue, past the White House and invaded the Hall of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

This demonstration was so beautiful in its pageantry and allegorical features that it very nearly overshadowed the interest excited in the minds of the people by the inaugural ceremonies themselves, and the Sixty-third congress entered upon its term of office fully informed upon one point at any rate—that many women were demanding the amendment.

STUNNING BATHING COSTUME

Black Satin Given Smart Touch by Red and White Striped Silk.

The girl who bathes in the ocean's briny waves this summer will like to remember herself afterward as having made a pretty picture on the sands with the alluring background of sparkling waves and cloud flecked summer sky. The costume pictured here will give her such a memory. It is of the ever serviceable black satin, lent distinction by an underblouse of red and white striped silk. The coquettish cap is red and white, and the white [illegible] are laced with [illegible].

A SEASIDE [illegible]

D/34

MEMORY DAY PLANS BESPEAK NOT MUCH DISPLAY; NO SPEECHES

Plans for the observance of Memorial Day in Fulton were announced today by the officials of Schenck Post G. A. R. include a parade on that afternoon, a salute to be fired at the Soldiers' Monument and the decoration of graves of departed comrades by members of the post and the various fraternal organizations of the city. Simplicity will be the keynote of the observance this year and consequently there will be no speeches.

The parade will form in front of the City Hall at 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon. The line of March follows: First to Oneida st., Oneida to 3d, 3d to Buffalo, east on Buffalo to 4th, where a square will be formed around the Soldiers' Monument.

The march of the parade will be resumed south to Broadway and out Broadway to Mt. Adnah cemetery. Here a square will be formed around the chapel and those present will sing "Onward Christian Sloders."

The members of Schenck Post will then go to St. Mary's cemetery where they will decorate the graves there. During this time the members of the various fraternal organizations will decorate the graves of their departed members.

The parade will form again at the north gate of Mt. Adnah cemetery, proceed down Broadway fo 1st st. and out 1st st. to the City Hall and disband.

Organizations which will be in the line of march are the following: Schenck Post, G. A. R., Sons of Veterans, Fulton Lodge of Elks, Order of the United American Mechanics, Red Men, Modern Woodmen of America, Odd Fellows and Boys Scouts. Members of the Sons of Veterans will act as escorts to the old soldiers.

The Citizens' band will head the procession.

Next Sunday night members of Schenck Post and ladies of the G. A. R. will attend their annual memorial service in the First Baptist church. The Rev. M. G. Peck will preach the sermon.

Sunday morning members of the Post will go to Mt. Pleasant in automobiles to decorate the graves there.

On June 6th the Post will decorate graves at Bowens' Corners.

On the Saturday preceding Memorial Day ladies of the G. A. R. will be in the Schenck Post room sto receive flowers for the decoration of the graves from citizens who care to donate them.

NEWSPAPER COMPETITION PREVENTS CENSORSHIP

The censor commission recently appointed by Mayor Fox, which will view every moving picture that is shown in this city and censor those not already passed by some reliable board of censorship, will commence its duties some time in the near future.

Irving Galusha, chairman of the committee, stated last night that he had not been able to give the matter any thought. "The killing newspaper competition of the past few weeks has made the chairman of the committee "so goldummed busy," said Mr. Galusha, "that he hasn't been able to get around to it."

MONTCLAIR TO HAVE "CLEAN-UP WEEK"

Montclair, N. J., May 18.—The Federation of Women's organizations have inaugurated a "clean-up week" for Monclair. It is three years since the town has undergone a similar furbishing. The town authorities will co-operate by furnishing teams and workmen to remove litter. During the crusade lectures describing the evils of the house fly will be given in the public schools.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEETING 7.30 TONIGHT

Secretary Heydecker announced this morning there will be a meeting this evening at 7.30 o'clock of the membership and entertainment division. All members are urged to attend.

If Pennsylvania should give the women the right to vote there should be no separation of the sexes on the ballot records. The present plan in some of the Western States is vicious. It leads inevitably to class appeal and bad politics. Woman must be counted as a voter and not as a [illegible]

[illegible] lots of house paint at [illegible] Inc. adv133

ELKS BAND CONCERT POSTPONED A WEEK

The Elks' committee on arrangements for holding an open-air concert and ice cream festival decided this morning that continued cold weather makes unfeasible the plan to carry out the orginal program. Accordingly a postponement was made until about one week later, the exact date to be announced.

It was the intention of the committee in charge of the entertainment to have the Elks' Citizens' band under the direction of L. W. Richardson, stationed on top of the new $4,000 porch, and upon the lawn ample seating capacity to accommodate a large crowd was to be provided.

Phosphate for lawns and gardens. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next year.

To Take Impressions of Plants.

Burn a common cork till reduced to a powder, add a teaspoonful of olive oil, mix into a thick paste. Now paint the veiny side of the leaf with camel's hair or black sable brush, lay the leaf carefully on a piece of clean paper, painted side down, subject it to a strong and even pressure by placing it in a book under a weight for about a quarter of an hour, then remove the leaf carefully from the paper. Very veiny leaves are the best.

Heard in the Nursery.

"I thought you were very much attached to the book," said the stuffed dog to the picture that had once ornamented the cover of the book.

"I was," said the picture, "but Dora cut me out."

Losses.

Little Bopeep
Has lost her sheep
And cannot refrain from yawning;
Leave her in bed,
The sleepy head,
To slumber all the morning.

Little Boy Blue
Has lost his shoe
And cannot tell where he dropped it.
He must have come back
With his feet very black,
[illegible] peradventure he hopped it.

WEATHER FORECAST

Unsettled tonight and tomorrow; probably local rain; moderate variable winds becoming northwest to west.

COUNTY MEDS. DINED TODAY

Visiting Physicians From Albany and Buffalo Made Addresses—Another Meeting Soon

The ninety-fourth annual meeting of the Oswego County Medical Society was held today in this city at the Masonic Lodge rooms above the Quirk theatre. Twenty nine doctors were in aatendance.

The program:

Acute Nephritis, was the subject of Dr. E. M. Anderson's paper; Dr. Geo. F. Cott of Buffalo, read a paper on the Significance of Temperature in Infection," from the Throat and Ear; Dr. W. A. Howe of Albany gave an interesting talk on "School Inspection." Dr. Hervey of Oswego, vice-president, and Dr. Dowdle also of Oswego, who were to have addressed the meetin gon "Goitre," were unable to be present. Dr. Schlappi presided at the session.

It was decided today to hold another meeting in the near future in Oswego at which time the subject to be discussed will be "Blindness, Its Cause and the Prevention of It."

Memorial resolutions on the death of Dr. Carrington MacFarlane and Dr. Charles S. Albertson was passed. This afternoon Dr. J. K. Stockwell, the delegate of the county society to the state convention of medical societies, addressed the meeting and madt a report of the work done by the state convention.

The meeting adjourned for dinner at one o'clock at the Clark House.

Massaro Awarded $150 In Damages

The negligence action brought by Frank Massaro of this city against Kirk N. Sweet of Phoenix went to the jury in the Supreme court at Pulaski yesterday afternoon. The case was started last Friday before Justice Hubbs and the justice ordered the jury to bring in a sealed verdict at 9 o'clock this morning.

This morning the jury turned in a verdict in favor of Mr. Massaro, allowing him damages amounting to $150.

Mr. Massaro and Dr. Hall of this city were thrown out and injured last fall when an automobile driven by Mr. Sweet collided with the Massaro machine.

The case of Albert Callan against the Granby Pulp and Paper Company and the Donald Steamship Company was the next case to come to the attention of the court. The case went on trial this morning.

It is all right for the South to preach its new gospel of Hay, Hogs and Hominy; but it will not forget Strawberries, Watermelons and Peaches if it wants to keep on good terms with the rest of the country.

Golf Ball's Strange Flight.

That a golf ball does not travel in a parabolic curve was asserted by Professor C. Vernon Boys during the trial of a patent suit in the British chancery court. Professor Boys, who had been called as an expert on ballistics, described experiments he had made with mechanically propelled golf balls and said that these when driven hard more than counteracted the attraction of gravity. "A good flight," he said, "is very nearly straight for a long time, then gradually rising and then falling."

Aztec Emeralds.

Among the Aztec treasures of Mexico were found many fine emeralds. They were exquisitely cut, and it is from this source that the magnificent emeralds now forming part of the royal collection of Spain were supposed to have come.—Exchange.

Imagination.

"A poet needs a great deal of imagination."

"Yes; if he really waded around in the wet grass looking at sunrises and listening for robins he wouldn't last long enough to write much poetry."—Washington Star.

Limitations.

Jack—I hear that you have quit the literary game. Jill—Yes; I despaired of ever writing up to my publishers' printed estimates of my work.—Life.

AMERICAN NOTE WARNING KAISER

Full Text of President's Statement Sent on Feb. 10.

FORESAW GRAVE DANGERS.

Wilson Strongly Protested Against War Zone Proclamation and Declared That This Nation Would Hold Germany to Strict Accountability Should Single American Life Be Sacrificed.

Following is the full text of the note of warning sent on Feb. 10 by the state department to Germany:

Feb. 10, 1915.

The secretary of state has instructed Ambassador Gerard, at Berlin, to present to the German government a note to the following effect:

"The government of the United States, having had its attention directed to the proclamation of the German admiralty, issued on the 4th of February, that the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole of the English channel, are to be considered as comprised within the seat of war; that all enemy merchant vessels found in those waters after the 18th instant will be destroyed, although it may not always be possible to save crews and passengers, and that neutral vessels expose themselves to danger within this zone of war because, in view of the misuse of neutral flags, said to have been ordered by the British government on the 31st of January and of the contingencies of maritime warfare, it may not be possible always to exempt neutral vessels from attacks intended to strike enemy ships, feels it to be its duty to call the attention of the imperial German government with sincere respect and the most friendly sentiments, but very candidly and earnestly, to the very serious possibilities of the course of action apparently contemplated under that proclamation.

"The government of the United States views these possibilities with such grave concern that it feels it to be its privilege and indeed its duty in the circumstances to request the imperial German government to consider before action is taken the critical situation in respect of the relation between this country and Germany which might arise were the German naval forces, in carrying out the policy foreshadowed in the admiralty's proclamation, to destroy any merchant vessel of the United States or cause the death of American citizens.

Unprecedented Act.

"It is, of course, not necessary to remind the German government that the sole right of a belligerent in dealing with neutral vessels on the high seas is limited to visit and search, unless a blockade is proclaimed and effectively maintained, which this government does not understand to be proposed in this case. To declare or exercise a right to attack and destroy any vessel entering a prescribed area of the high seas without first certainly determining its belligerent nationality and the contraband character of its cargo would be an act so unprecedented in naval warfare that this government is reluctant to believe that the imperial government of Germany in this case contemplates it as possible. The suspicion that enemy ships are using neutral flags improperly can create no just presumption that all ships traversing a prescribed area are subject to the same suspicion. It is to determine exactly such questions that this government understands the right of visit and search to have been recognized.

"This government has carefully noted the explanatory statement issued by the imperial German government at the same time with the proclamation of the German admiralty and takes this occasion to remind the imperial German government very respectfully that the government of the United States is open to none of the criticisms for unneutral action to which the German government believes the governments of certain other neutral nations have laid themselves open; that the government of the United States has not consented to or acquiesced in any measures which may have been taken by the other belligerent nations in the present war which operate to restrain neutral trade, but has, on the contrary, taken in all such matters a position which warrants it in holding those governments responsible in the proper way for any untoward effects on American shipping which the accepted principles of international law do not justify, and that it therefore regards itself as free in the present instance to take with a clear conscience and upon accepted principles the position indicated in this note.

Deplorable Situation.

"If the commanders of German vessels of war should act upon the presumption that the flag of the United States was not being used in good faith and should destroy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American citizens it would be difficult for the government of the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights which it would be very hard indeed to reconcile with the friendly relations now happily subsisting between the two governments.

"If such a deplorable situation should arise the imperial German government can readily appreciate that the government of the United States would be constrained to hold the imperial German government to a strict accountability for such acts of their naval authorities and to take any steps it might be necessary to take to safeguard American lives and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas.

"The government of the United States, in view of these considerations, which it urges with the greatest respect and with the sincere purpose of making sure that no misunderstandings may arise and no circumstances occur that might even cloud the intercourse of the two governments, expresses the confident hope and expectation that the imperial German government can and will give assurance that American citizens and their vessels will not be molested by the naval forces of Germany, otherwise than by visit and search, though their vessels may be traversing the sea area delimited in the proclamation of the German admiralty.

"It is added for the information of the imperial government that representations have been made to his Britannic majesty's government [illegible] respect to the unwarranted [illegible] American flag for the protection [illegible]

"GIVEN UP," LIVED 54 YEARS.

Confederate Veteran Left on Field Mortally Wounded.

Fulton, Mo.—Left on the battlefield dying with the surgeon's notation, "mortally wounded," written after his name, only to live fifty-four years and die a natural death, was the experience of the late John W. Davis, a Confederate veteran of Fulton. A letter just received here from Joseph A. Mudd, another Confederate veteran of Hyattsville, Md., tells the story as follows:

"I have just seen mention of the death in Fulton of John W. Davis. He was a member of the grand company of brave boys commanded by Captain D. H. McIntyre, afterward attorney general of Missouri—Company A, Burbridge's regiment. Ours was Company B, and we stood side by side in battle. Comrade Davis was just my age.

"At Wilson's Creek, nearly fifty-four years ago, I saw him shot, so badly hurt that the surgeon wrote 'mortally wounded' after his name."

FAMOUS FLAG FOR STATE.

Colonel Proctor's "Rattlesnake" Now in Library.

Greensburg, Pa.—The famous Rattlesnake flag has been transferred from the vault of the Merchants and Farmers' bank in Greensburg to the state library, Harrisburg, to take its place among other interesting relics of American wars.

The Rattlesnake flag belonged to Colonel John Proctor's Independent battalion of Westmoreland county. It was made in 1775 and was carried in the Revolution. Samuel Craig, Sr., who, with his three sons, John, Alexander and Samuel Junior, fought in Proctor's battalion, was the color bearer.

On Colonel Proctor's death the flag passed to the next senior officer, and so on to the last survivor, General Alexander Craig. It was bequeathed by his great granddaughter, Jane Maria Craig of New Alexandria, to the state library at Harrisburg.

MILLION MORE TO GET MAIL DELIVERY

Rural Route Changes Will Greatly Extend the Service.

Washington.—Mail facilities will be extended to 1,000,000 rural patrons before July 1, 1915, without increasing the present cost of service, according to a statement by Postmaster General Burleson. This, it is explained, will be done by readjusting present rural routes so as to eliminate duplications and unnecessary service and by means of the motor vehicle service authorized by congress.

Changes were authorized which, without curtailment of service, have reduced operating expenses $177,644. This sum has been utilized to establish 263 new routes serving 31,041 additional families, or approximately 155,205 additional persons. Extensions of existing service were put into effect involving 104 additional miles of travel by rural carriers. These extensions serve 1,202 additional families and approximately 6,010 additional persons.

In explanation of his plans Mr. Burleson says:

"The purpose is to enable the post-office department to meet just demands for mail service which thus far the department has been unable to provide. This can be done only by careful and painstaking readjustment of existing service. Thorough survey and study of existing conditions therefore have been made.

"In some localities it has been found there are unnecessary and unjustifiable duplications and retracings of travel by rural carriers. In other cases it appears that unusual privileges involving unnecessary service have been allowed. It is quite feasible to rectify these inequalities, and this is being done.

"Later we expect by utilizing modern motor vehicles on improved highways to extend many existing routes at no additional cost of service. As one of the results from this latter step the delivery zone from important postal centers will be doubled. Thus families in the area immediately tributary to these centers will be enabled to take full advantage of the parcel post as a means of transportation of farm products.

"Rural service will be extended to every farmer reasonably entitled to it as rapidly as the new adjustments can be made."

LENDS AUNT $5; NOW HEIR.

Youth Will Get Part of Large Estate Under Her Will.

Logansport, Ind.—As a result of lending $5 to an aunt in Greeley, Col., A. B. Judson of this city has become heir to a part of a large estate left by the woman, who recently died. Attorneys notified him that he had been named in the will, and he is now en route to Greeley to claim his part of the estate.

Judson had not heard from his aunt for several years until a year ago, when he received a letter from her requesting him to lend her $5. He complied with her request and received a letter of thanks. He never heard from her again.

Killed [illegible] Rats.

[illegible]

VANDERBILT DIED TO SAVE WOMAN

Millionaire Bravely Gave Up Life Belt on Lusitania.

COULD NOT GET ANOTHER.

Survivors Tell of Heroism of Young American When Great Liner Was Torpedoed and Say He Went to Death Like True Sportsman—Frohman, Lame, Was Helpless but Calm.

Two survivors of the Lusitania disaster have given testimony that Alfred G. Vanderbilt died heroically; that he went to death to save the life of a woman.

Thomas Slidell, a friend of Mr. Vanderbilt, who lives at the Knickerbocker club in New York and was traveling with him, told of the sacrifice first. Later Norman Ratcliffe, who lives in Gillingham, Kent, and was returning from Japan, offered verification.

Thomas Slidell said that Mr. Vanderbilt was standing on B deck with two or three persons, all of whom had life belts on.

"Just as the Lusitania was heeling to her final plunge," went on Mr. Slidell, "an old woman, apparently without friends, came along. Seeing that she was without a life belt, Mr. Vanderbilt without hesitation took off his own and fastened it around her. At that moment the boat went down.

"What happened to the old woman I don't know, but I do know that Mr. Vanderbilt is dead. He could not swim and must have known that by surrendering his life belt he was sacrificing his own life.

"Some of those standing with him were saved. It was Miss Loney who told me of Mr. Vanderbilt's sacrifice.

Meant to Help Red Cross.

"It is not known generally what Mr. Vanderbilt's mission on this trip was. The night before the Lusitania went down he told me in confidence, but I see no reason why it should not be known now that, although he had given large sums to the Red Cross, he felt he had not done enough and was coming over to do more.

"He said that he intended to fit out two motor ambulances and go with them himself to France to help the British and American Red Cross people personally in one capacity or another.

"Now all his plans have come to nothing. He forgot everything in the fact that he could be of service to this old woman. His own life, position and wealth did not count. He did what he knew to be his duty."

Norman Ratcliffe, who was rescued after clinging to a box in the sea for three hours, had with him a steward of the Lusitania.

Died Like Sportsman.

"This steward," Mr. Ratcliffe said, "told me he had seen Mr. Vanderbilt on the Lusitania's deck, shortly after the ship was struck, with a life belt about his body. When the ship gave every indication that it would sink within a few minutes, the steward said, Mr. Vanderbilt took off his life belt and gave it to a woman who passed him on the deck, trembling with fear of the fate she expected to meet. The steward said Mr. Vanderbilt turned back, as though to look for another belt, and he saw him no more."

Oliver O. Bernard, scenic artist of Covent Garden, said:

"I saw Alfred G. Vanderbilt standing at the port entrance to the grand salon. He stood there the personification of sportsmanlike coolness. In his right hand was grasped what looked to me like a large purple leather jewel case. It may have belonged to Lady Mackworth, as Mr. Vanderbilt had been much in company of the Thomas party during the trip, and evidently had volunteered to do Lady Mackworth the service of saving her gems for her.

"Mr. Vanderbilt was absolutely unperturbed. In my eyes he was the figure of a gentleman waiting unconcernedly for a train. He had on a dark striped suit, and was without cap or other head covering.

Frohman's End Was Peace.

"Vanderbilt, the sportsman, is gone. Genial Charles Klein, the playwright, is gone. That erratic American literary genius, Elbert Hubbard, is gone, and with him a wife to whom he seemed particularly devoted. And Charles Frohman is gone.

"Frohman's was the only body I could recognize in the Queenstown mortuary, and perhaps it will interest his many friends in London and New York to know that the famous manager's face in death gives uncommonly convincing evidence that he died without a struggle. It wears a serenely peaceful look.

"Frohman must have found it more difficult for him to take his place in a lifeboat than any other man on the ship. He was quite lame, and hobbled about on deck laboriously with a heavy cane. He seldom came to the general dining saloon, either out of sensitiveness or because of distress caused by his leg."

Believe Submarines Trapped Lusitania.

Official opinion as to how the Lusitania came to be caught and why so many lives were lost remains a secret. The general unofficial opinion is that several German submarines were assigned to attack the liner and that they [illegible]

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 129 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1915 | Price One Cent

Dirt and Rubbish Breed Disease and Stagnant Pools Breed Flies and Mosquitoes Which Carry the Disease and Filth to Your Table. Clean-up—A Cleaner City is a Healthier City—Chamber of Commerce.

DON'TS

The Chamber of Commerce in its efforts to make over Fulton by a general cleanup issues the following DON'TS:

DON'T tolerate flies.

DON'T allow them on your premises.

DON'T forget that they carry typhoid.

DON'T allow garbage, rubbish or manure to accumulate on your lot or near it.

DON'T allow dirt in your house: Look in the corners, behind the doors and furniture, under stairs and beds. Remove the cuspidors. In brief, keep the house clean.

DON'T allow flies near food, especially milk.

DON'T buy foodstuffs where flies are allowed.

DON'T buy milk where flies are on the cans or bottles.

DON'T eat where flies are found.

DON'T forget the screens.

DON'T forget to write to the Chamber of Commerce if there is a nuisance in your neighborhood.

DON'T FORGET—NO DIRT—NO FLIES.

CLEAN-UP AND PAINT-UP

LOCAL STUDENTS EARNED HONORS

Harold Thompson Named As Valedictorian of Class of 1915; Miss Simons Rhetorician

The following honors have been announced as awarded the High School Class of 1915:

Valdectorian, Harold Thompson; rhetorician, Lillian Simons; honor in English, Lillian Simons; honor in mathematics, Bernard Reswick; honor in science, Harold Thompson; honor in history, Harold Thompson; honor in elocution, Maragaret Clark; honorable mention in elocution, Howard Shaff.

The students in order to earn honors must take the full four years' course in that subject and mustd uring that time maintain an average of not less than 90 per cent.

The commencement address this year will be given by Rufus Everson King who is among the best lecturers of today.

It has not yet ben decided whether to ask for his noted lecture on "This New Age" or "The Laurel Wreath"—an adaptation for Commencement addresses.

With either subjeet, the graduates, friends of the graduates, and people of Fulton are to have an opportunity to hear an address of a high type. "His lectures are all on topics of the present day; they are timely postive, clean-cut, honest, witty and keen. They ring true, and they have "heart." He is spirited and direct in delivery, and intensely in earnest. He believes what he says and he will make you believe it, too."

The Commencement exercises this year will be held in the new Baptist church. An admission will be charged.

EX-BANKER, CONVICTED, GETS EIGHTEEN MONTHS

New York, May 19.—William F. Wyckoff, lawyer and formerly president of the Woodhaven National Bank, which failed eighteen months ago, was convicted of larceny in the second degree last night by a jury in the Queens County Court at Long Island City and sent to jail. Wyckoff is a member of one of the Dutch colonial families which settled Jamaica. Evidence yesterday showed that Miss Fannie Halsey, of Jamaica, paid Wyckoff $700 in January, 1912, for investment; that he deposited it to his personal account in the Mechanics' Bank of Brooklyn.

WINDOWS IN STEEL FRAMES PREVENT FIRES

Rochester, May 19.—Only by rebuilding them louId cities be made fireproof, but Franklin H. Wentworth of Boston, secretary of the National Fire Proection Association, who spoke last night in Convention Hall, believes that great fires in cities can be made impossible. Windows of heavy glass in steel frames, impervious to leaping flames, in factories and all brick buildinggs would do much to bring about the desired condition, he thinks.

THORN BILL SIGNED

Albany, May 19.—The Thorn bill vesting in the state industrial board authority over future exemptions from the law requiring one day of rest in seven was signed today by Governor Whitman. The bill also repeals the exemptions now in effect. On the ground that the Thorn bill would take care of the situation, the Governor vetoed the Knight bill, intended to exempt salt refineries from the provisions of the law.

WEATHER BOOK OUT SOON

Washington, May 19.—How to forecast the weather is to be reduced to print by the official forecasters of the United States Weather Bureau. For months they have been collaborating on the book and the work is now practically completed.

TWO MOTORISTS BADLY HURT

Attempted to Take Corner at High Speed—Crashed Against a Tree

Clinton Edgely, of Academy st., was seriously injured and Edward La Veck of North 5th st., had a miraculous escape from harm when a motorcycle owned and driven by Mr. La Veck jumped the road at a point near Bundy's Crossing north of this city last night at 11 o'clock. Mr. La Veck and Mr. Edgely had been enjoying an evening's ride in the new machine recently purchased of LaVeck. Attached to the motor was a side-car, and Edgely occupied the single seat while LaVeck was astride the motor. LaVeck purchased the motor only a short time ago and it said that he was not thoroughly familiar with the operation of it.

While coming back to this city, La Veck opened the machine up and it must have been doing almost 59 miles an hour when the turn above the little store in Bundyville was reached. Whether LaVeck became confused and lost control of the machine or did not see the sharp turn until too late has not been learned, but the motor skidded while rounding the turn and then leaping the road ran up a slight embankment and brought up with a crash against an apple tree. La Veck was thrown about twenty feet by thec ollision but escaped injury and when he was examined no bruises could be found on him. Edgely, however, seated in the side care, was evidently thrown against the tree. An examination, however, disclosed only one bruise, a slight wound on the right cheek, but when he was picked up he was unconscious and had not regained consciousness at 10 o'clock this morning.

The crash aroused residents in that section and the men were carried to a nearby farm-house and Dr. E. M. Anderson was called. Edgely did not regain consciousness and Dr. Anderson ordered that he should be left at the farm-house all night and Mrs. Edgely was taken to the scene in an automobile. Edgely was removed to the Lee Memorial hospital this morning.

LaVeck could give no coherent account of the accident, saying that he did not know how it happened. The new machine was completely wrecked, but the loss is covered by insurance.

Several serious accidents have occurred at the same turn and the farmhouse in which Edgely spent the night sheltered a man and a woman who were seriously injured when their automobile overturned on the same turn last fall. There have been a number of minor accidents at that point as the turn is almost a right angle and very unexpected to travelers in both directions. The railroad crossing at Bundy's has also been the scene of many fatalities.

Edgely was examined at the hospital this morning, and the doctors are inclined to believe that he has suffered internal injuries, although Dr. Anderson stated today that he thought the man's chances for recovery were very good, and believed that the coma is induced by shock.

GRANBY CO. CASE DISMISSED

Steamship Co. Sole Defendant—Phoenix Woman Sues for $5000 Damages

Pulaski, May 19.—At the opening of County Court here this morning, in the case of Owen P. Cullen against the Donald Steamship Co. and Granby Paper Co., Justice Hubbs directed that the Steamship Company shall be made sole defendant. The Justice, therefore, dismissed the Granby Paper Co. as one of the defendants. This is a negligence action brought by Mr. Cullen who claims $10,000 damages resulting from an injury sustained on a boat owned by the now sole defendant company.

Another Negligence Action.

Phoenix also produced a negligence action at today's session, the plaintiff being Eva G. Dean, who demands [illegible] $5,000 for injuries sustained by falling upon a street that was in bad repair.

This case had not yet been handed to the jury at the hour of going to press.

Justice Hubbs announced this morning that all jurors on the present panel were excused. With the closing of the Phoenix negligence action Supreme Court for this term will close and County Court will convene in Oswego June 7, Henry D. Coville, Esq., presiding.

A settlement was reported yesterday in the two negligence actions of William H. Kane of Oswego and Florence A. Welch of this city, who was the former visiting nurse, against the New York, Ontario & Western Railway Company. The negligence action of Isaac B. Poucher against William J. Bradt was also reported settled.

Among the negligence actions to go over the term were those of James Bough and Joseph E. Cavanaugh against the Ontario & Western Railway Company, James W. Caffney against William Barry, John Corbett against the city of Oswego, Edward McDonald against the Camden Water Wheel Works and that of Fred Hanley against the Peopless Gas and Electric Company of Oswego. Another case to go over was that of Adelia Barr against Fred T. Cahill of Oswego.

When the partition action of Edwin R. Wood against Cyrus N. Wood and Caroline Wood was called there was no appearance on the part of the plaintiff, and Justice Hubbs dismissed the case.

MINNEHAHA GETS INTO HARBOR SAFELY

New York, May 19.—After an uneventful voyage the Minnehaha, of the Atlantic Transport line, arrived in port yesterday from London. Her course to thhe open seas from London lay through the mine fields and net obstructions that have been laid by the British Admiralty to prevent the penetration of submarines into the open channels. Passengers, of whom there were seventeen all told, said the channel that is open through these obstacles is only a third of a mile wide, and the nets and mines are so laid that no submarine can get in from the North Sea unless they skirt Scotland and come through by way of the Irish coast.

Rome Rid Itself of Mosquitoes, and, Malaria. Flies Have Also Disappeared Because the Romans Destroyed the Breeding Places of the Flies

The Chamber of Commerce through its division of Public Safety is continuing to wage its war upon dirt. Yesterday members of the Divsion called upon merchants in the business section of the city and urged them to make use of the offer of the Chamber to cart away rubbish on Friday—Fire Prevention Day. The Division now suggests making Thursday "Fly Prevention Day." Statisticans have figured that two flies allowed to propagate in May, breed upwards of a million flies by September. The Division of Public Safety contend that now is the time to swat both the fly and the mosquitoes. Due to the cold weather there have been no plague of flies and mosquitoes as yet but as soon as warm weather comes it is certain both will come in great numbers. The time to drain pools and cover garbage cans is before either the mosquitoes or the flies appear in sufficient numbers to be a nuisance. In "The Roman" published by the Rome Chamber of Commerce, a copy of which has just been received by the Chamber in Fulton, there are several articles on the Clean-Up, Paint-Up and Slick-Up campaign conducted in Rome.

"The Roman" boasts that there are no mosquitoes in Rome and that malaria is an unknown disease in Rome because the mosquitoes are the ones which carry the germs and in their absence the fever has disappeared. The article goes on to say that Rome has comparatively few flies and that they have been decreasing in numbers during the past two years. There is a reason. The fly swatting campaign destroyed thousands of flies early in the year and prevented their breeding in large numbers. The campaign also directed attention to them and to the means of preventing their propogation. The Board of Health in Rome has been eliminating open manure piles and it is conceded that it is in such places that flies lay their eggs and breed.

The results in Rome have an applilcation in Fulton. If the Public Safety Division of the Chamber of Commerce can succeed in bringing these facts home to the people, Fulton may hope for some relief from the fly and mosquitoe nuisance this summer.

"FLATIRON LAWN" NEEDS AN ARTIST'S TRIMMING

There is a plot of ground on the West Side, at Worth and 1st sts., which according to an informant living in that vicinity, needs the attention of some one who will make of it a pleasant little park. The ground is in the shape of a flat-iron, hence the nickname. During each year since thec ity has owned the ground eyesores in the form of burdocks have grown up. People living in the neighborhood who own horses find the plot of ground a fairly good place on which to allow their horses to graze.

The Evening Times advises all citizens to remain patient—not only upon the point of clearing up "Flatiron Lawn," but in other places where parks are needed, for in due time the proper division of the Chamber of Commerce under whose guidance parks are to be established will relieve most of the causes for complaint.

WILL LOCATE HERE

S. M. Whitbeck, an assistant in the State Highway Department, has recently been in this city looking up prospective residences.

Mr. Whitbeck expects to locate here and will supervise the building of new roads in this section.

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next year.

WEATHER FORECAST

Thursday, increasing cloudiness with local rains; moderate fresh south and southeast winds.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 66 East First Street Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening Times, Incorporated

Telephone 45

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3 1879.

May 19, 1915

45—PHONE NEWS ITEMS—45

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

A TARDY PURITAN.

The Way He Was Moved to Speak by His Demure Cousin Ursula.

Wooings brought tardily to a successful climax by the tactful intervention of the woman were no less frequent long ago than they are now. Puritan Priscilla inquiring shyly, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" may be poetic license, but it is a well authenticated historical fact that Ursula Wolcott, daughter of Governor Roger Wolcott of Connecticut, quite pointedly suggested the all important question to her second cousin, Matthew Griswold, also a Connecticut governor.

The story of the wooing of her backward relative is told by Mary Caroline Crawford in her book, "Social Life In Old New England." This is how she did it:

In early life Governor Griswold had been passionately in love with a young lady of Durham, Conn., who, in turn, was enamored of a physician, whom she hoped would propose to her. Whenever Griswold pressed his suit she pleaded that she wished for more time. After he had been told this repeatedly her suitor one day said with dignity:

"You shall have more time; you shall have a lifetime."

And so he left her. But he suffered sorely, and ofttimes, to ease his aching heart, spoke of her whom he had loved to his sweet faced Cousin Ursula. After a time, however, Matthew began to think a good deal about the charms of his sympathetic young cousin; yet, dreading another repulse, he looked but did not speak his love. Often Ursula would break the silence by observing gently:

"What said you, Cousin Matthew?"

To which, suddenly panic stricken, he invariably replied:

"I said nothing."

Then one day, feeling that she must, Ursula precipitated the climax, according to Charles Knowles Bolton, who has verified the story in "The Love Story of Ursula Wolcott" and gives us the final chapter thus:

And Matthew riding toward the [illegible]
Heard her light step upon the st[illegible]
And, entering, he found her the[illegible]
She leaned upon the banister
With finger clasped about the spindles;
And tears, he saw, were lingering
To dim her eyes.

His pulse was quick,
And yet he checked his eagerness.
"It cannot surely be," he thought.
"It could not be that she would care."
The clock beat loudly through the hall
To make the stillness yet more still.
And Ursula, with steady voice
That trembled ere the words were done
Began, "What said you, Cousin Matthew?"
And he, as one who comes almost
To comprehend, said thoughtfully,
"I did say nothing, Ursula."
The color faded from her cheeks;
She spoke so timidly and low
He scarcely heard her plaintive words,
"'Tis time you did."

Big Opening of our New Store tomorrow. Shipman's, Oneida st. adv

An Engagement
Ring

produced at the pschyco-logical moment will often influence the young lady's decision. If it is a

MORGAN RING

your success is doubly certain.

Wm. C. Morgan
Jeweler & Optometrist
Fulton, N. Y.

WE NEVER FORGET

Some months ago the people of Fulton were being served to a few of the fifty-seven varieties of reasons why things in general were going dogwards. Then we were told that gross mismanagement glared out of every window of the City Hall and in the public work which emanated therefrom. We were told between other moans that it was unrighteous for The Evening Times to preach a doctrine of live and let live upon the first day of the week, and that in so preaching for the rights of the many who have few of the enjoyments of the few, The Evening Times was of the rattle-brain order. Those were cloudy days as we sat near the window looking out upon the world so wicked. Those days made one in an abstracted mental mood, but lo! Suddenly the sun has broken through the massed cloud formation, bringing out upon the carpet a vivid square of sunshine. The cat has been let out of the bag and one can see the picture of another scene. It is the scene of a splendid crown being placed upon the head of a faithful warrior bold—one who essayed to repeat the words of a learned gentlemen whose opinions we all respect, no matter how much we may differ therefrom. The learned gentleman did chastise The Evening Times for its attitude upon the question of the rights of the masses to attend places of entertainment upon the first day of the week, and, parrot like, the valiant warrior did spread upon the minutes of an out-of-town newspaper the descriptive words used by the learned gentleman who refused to believe that The Evening Times was right in its contention for the retention of the Sunday movies. Now let it be understood once more that this newspaper is not crossing swords with the learned gentleman, nor is it the intent of this article to interfere with the belief of any man upon the much-mooted question of the advisability and righteousness of permitting people to attend worldly forms of amusement upon the Sabbath day. This newspaper respects the opinion of the man who is at all times consistent in his actions, words, beliefs, etc., and who is never, at any time, ready to sell his pelt for a little pelf, or a bit of advertising graft.

Medical men tell us of abounding instances of the awakening of the sub-conscious mind. Not the least interesting are those where a man may learn in his foolish years to approve of one policy and disapprove of another, and suddenly, as if by magic, experience a change of heart. We say heart, because in the instance in mind it has been more a matter of heart than of mind. In this instance an adaptation of the old saw again comes true: The way to reach a man's heart is through the advertising patronage he receives. The advertising patronage pierced the pelt, struck the heart and the movies do move and the motor that did pretend to balk at the line of little resistance ceased to push the pen for a tight town.

It may seem to the reader altogether probable that the mental impression made a few short months ago has not faded beyond recall. Indeed, it has not, as during those months the public eye has been upon the changing picture. The public has seen attack after attack made upon the men who served the city by holding office, the Mayor, upon whom the motor at times worked overtime, included. At times one was led to believe that no sunlight could ever pierce the dense masses of clouds which hung around the objects of attack. A simple operation accomplished everything, and now the movies may move, Sundays and weekdays, and the Mayor does exactly right, and all because, in the first place, the advertising pelf was handed to the paper which takes away from Fulton the dollars that should stay here, leaving little in return for those dollars; secondly, in creating a board of censorship, whose duty it is to see that pictures fit for the people shall be served, the Mayor of Fulton has crowned the head that wanted to be crowned.

The servant has his reward and all is well, provided the advertising pelf is commensurate with the political potage.

BUSY MAN'S CREED

I believe in the stuff I am handing out, in the firm I am working for, and in my ability to get results. I believe that honest stuff can be passed out to honest men by honest methods. I believe in working, not weeping; in boosting, not knocking; and in the pleasure of my job. I believe that a man gets what he goes after, that one deed done today is worth two deeds tomorrow, and that no man is down and out until he has lost faith in himself. I believe in today and the work I am doing; in tomorrow and the work I hope to do, and in the sure reward which the future holds.

I believe in courtesy, in kindness, in generosity, in good-cheer, in friendship and in honest competition. I believe there is something doing, somewhere, for every man ready to do it. I believe I'm ready —Right Now!—The Era.

Opinions

Censoring the Papers

The Alabama Legislature, when the anti-saloon craze was at its height, passed a law prohibiting the circulation in the state of newspapers and magazines, published in other states, that contained liquor advertisements. The law was severely ridiculed when efforts were first made to enforce it, and predictions were made that the New York magazines never could be barred out of the state on any such pretext. The law has now been sustained by the highest state court, however, and unless the question is carried to the Supreme Court of the United States outside newspapers and magazines will have to be carefully censored when they reach the Alabama border. The Brooklyn Eagle declares that if a case ever is carried to the highest court the law will be quickly pronounced unconstitutional because it interferes with interstate commerce. But in that event Alabama might build a high wall around its borders and prevent the entry of the United States mails.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

Why the State Census?

Since the Constitutional Convention now in session, is devoting time and thought to ways of ettering the state government and saving state moneys, The Tribune respectfully invites attention to that curious institution known as the state census. It is provided in Article 3, Section 4, of the constitution, that there shall be a state enumeration each ten years, to be used as the basis for legislative reapportionment. Such enumeration is now being taken—at a cost, approxi-year when the state has to borrow mately, of half a million dollars, in a $6,000,000 and levy a direct tax of 1.7 mills.

There may be good reasons why the state should not adopt and use for its political apportionments the work of the Federal Census Bureau, but they are not apparent at this moment. The Federal government's work is handled in a systematic and scientific way, which places it beyond possibility of falsification or garbling for partisan purposes. It is certainly as trustworthy on the score of accuracy as the work of the state enumerators could be. To be sure, to take the United States figures would deprive the dominant party in state affairs at the time of each enumeration of much political patronage. It would also save the state about $500,000. As between patronage for any political organization and the saving of $500,000, or any considerable part of that sum, there can be no question about the views of the citizens of New York. The matter seems worthy of the consideration of the learned delegates who are to draft the new constitution. —New York Tribune.

Trade Unions and War.

According to the London Times trades unionism is almost as great an enemy of Great Britain in this war as Germany. This newspaper has been exceedingly sensational during the war and has made many statements which have been proven false and detrimental to the government, and it remains to be seen whether this latest assault will be borne out by the facts.

In the present instance it began with a declaration from the front in northern France that the British forces were deficient in ammunition and in consequence the English army was suffering serious reverses.

Backing this up comes an investigation of labor conditions in the industrial centers where shells are manufactured. This investigation shows, according to those who have made it, that the rules of the trades unions have diminished the supplies, that while the artisans are making double and treble wages machines lie idle and the output is restricted. Added to this is the serious loss of time from drink, and the picture painted could not be gloomier.

Well, the whole world seems to be tainted with the same disease. Canada has a scandal that stinks to the skies over frauds in war supplies and equipment, and now it is said that many American contracts for shoes, stockings and woollens are to be cancelled in France because of "skimping" in the quality and poor workmanship by American manufacturers. Blowholes in armor plate and "embalmed beef" over again.—New York Herald.

Hanford's Balsam is a liniment for external use only.

Children Cry
FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

THE QUIRK
Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TODAY
SPECIAL—The Ill-Fated Lusitania on Her Fatal Trip.
See the passengers arriving at the Cunard S.S. Dock. The big ship pull out into the Hudson river as the passengers are waving good-by to their friends on the dock and the ill-fate that befell them. Absolutely genuine. No fake. Simply scenes before and after the wreck.
AND
The Great Sensational Feature
"THE CRIMINAL CODE"
AND
Charles Chaplin
in "HIS NEW PROFESSION"

THURSDAY
"The Struggle for Pleasure"
2d of the Who Pays Series
CHARLES CHAPLIN
In a Roaring Comedy
"Mabel's Busy Day"
The Thrilling Drama
"At the End of the Bridge"

FRIDAY:— "NANCE O'NEIL in Count Tolstoi's Virile Drama
"KREUTZER SONATA"
and CHARLES CHAPLIN In "THE KID AUTO"

COUNTERFEIT BILLS ARE IN CIRCULATION

Counterfeit five-dollar bills, which, according to government agents, bear a dangerous resemblance to the government currency, are in circulation in central and northern New York Despite the efforts of John J. Adams of Utica and his corps of United States Secret Service agents, the authorities have been unable to get any track of the person or persons who are distributing the worthless bills.

The parties passing out the bills have been carrying on their scheme for nearly a year, but the currency is of such clever design that government agents are unabel to get a clew.

Warning has been issued by the police in the various cities, advising merchants and banks to be on the lookout for the spurious bills.

Mr. Adams recently began a raid on a party of counterfeiters operating in this section from Detroit. The arrest of Leo Dominick Giordano at Little Falls a month ago and his subsequent confession to the district court officials led to the arrest of the makers of spurious ten dollar bills in Detroit.

Music.—Buell's Full Orchestra at the Onyx Confectionery, Saturday night. adv.

MT. PLEASANT

Mr. and Mrs. Dings of Hannibal were week-end guests at Theo. Stewarts.

Closing exercises were held at Ludington school Monday evening, May 17th.

Mrs. Elizabeth Garrison and mother will start for the Pacific exposition soon to be gone several weeks.

Master Merman Lathrop, who has been critically ill is able to sit up.

Evelyn Rowlee has been engaged to teach the South Scriba school.

Delbert Myers has resigned his position with James Bartlett and is working for Willard Seymour.

The persons who attended the W. F. M. S. convention at Fulton State St. church were more than pleased and repaidf or the exertion.

Mrs. Chas. Osborne was presented with a handsome rug by the Wesleyan class for her efforts as critic while they were rehearsing their play.

Mrs. Cora Phillips and sons of Trenton Falls have returned to their home after visiting their sister, Miss Ella Baker.

The Misses Russell of West Fulton were recent guests at Gilbert Storms.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Whittemore of Syracuse were week-end guests at Earl Rowlee's.

Mr. Donovan, who worked for Eugene Hurm, was taken violently insane on Thursday of last week and had to be watched by Constables Wright and Lewis until Saturday when attendants from Ogdensburg came and removed him to the institution there. This is his second committment. The former instance being several years ago. His wife is dead and he was paying for the support of his one child. He was well liked and much sympathy is felt for the afflicted man.

John Le Valle is visiting a friend on the Ridge Road.

Rev. T. Williams, Eugene Bartlett, Charley Porter and Claude Barker have gone to Richmond on a fishing trip.

Special prices on carriages. Van-Wagenen Inc. adv133

Man Takes His Own Medicine is an Optimist

He has absolute faith in his medicine—he knows when he takes it for certain ailments he gets relief. People who take Dr. King's New Discovery for an irritating Cold are optimists—they know this cough remedy will penetrate the linings of the throat, kill the germs, and open the way for Nature to act. You can't destroy a Cold by superficial treatment—you must go to the cause of the trouble. Be an optimist. Get a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery today.

BEAVERS GAVE DAMAGE CAUSE

Claimants Get Sum of Money for Trees Destroyed by Beavers

Albany, May 19.—Finding that the State of New York was negligent in having failed to protect the property of William G. Barrett and William A. Guinard in the town of Webb, Herkimer county, the State Board of Claims, which is to pass out of existence shortly, today awarded the two claimants $1,900 as the result of the destruction of trees by a colony of beavers which was liberated in Agle creek, near the timber land of Barrett and Guinard.

The State in its endeavor to propogate beaver evidently was unmindful of the effect upon the property of private owners, for the animals upon being set at large forthwith began an attack upon the birch and poplar trees of the claimants and in an amazingly short time had felled two hundred and fifty of them. A claim for $55,000 was immediately filed.

The action was first argued in 1913 when the attorney general of the State at a term of the Board of Claims at Rochester endeavored to have the claim dismissed. The motion, however, was overruled, the members of the holding that there was actual liability on the part of the State. In January of the present year the case was tried in Albany and experts who were as familiar with the habits of beaver as the average boy is with the batting averages of ball players were called in as witnesses.

Among these witnesses was Mr. J. Allen Loring, a naturalist of note. He testified that it was not an uncommon thing for a beaver to cut down a tree about five inches thick in a single night. Other evidence was produced to show that the natural propensity of the beaver is that of destruction. The State was unable to contradict this.

It was shown that there were no beaver along Fourth lake or near Eagle creek until the winter of 1897 when the State through the Conservation Commission liberated the animal on Eagle creek.

"It seem clear that the State was on notice, upon re-stocking these waters with beaver, to take some precaution to protect surrounding property," says the opinion of Judge Rooney in regard to the award to the claimants.

Continuing, Judge Rooney writes:

"The conditions arising out of this re-stocking policy appeared to us substantially different from the situation where native animals have inflicted injury upon property. In the case of deer and wild birds, for example, the State has not assumed any responsibility for such depredations. In the case before us, animals known to be peculiarly destructive of trees were released and no special safeguard put up against the injury they would naturally inflict upon surrounding property. The purpose sought by the Conservation Commission of re-stocking the woods with these interesting animals was doubtless a proper and commendable one, as adding to the picturesque nature and interest of our woods and waters. But the injury that would naturally follow unless protection of some kind was afforded, should not fall alone upon the owners of property in the immediate neighborhood of these experiment beaver exhibits."

Judge Rooney and his two associates adjudged that the value of the property of the claimants showed a depreciation after the beaver had freely given vent to their natural prerogatives and gnawing instincts.

10 per cent. discount on Ford tires. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

3 HARD GAMES FOR THIS WEEK

Two at Home, One Today and Another on Saturday, With Morrisville

The Fulton High school baseball team is scheduled for three of the hardest games of the season between now and next Saturday night. Today the local school-boys will meet the Oswego Normal aggregation at Athletic Park at the usual hour. Friday the boys will journey to Skaneateles to play the high school team of that place and Saturday the Morrisville nine will perform here.

Today's game bids fair to be one of the hardest fought of the season. The Normal lads have been beaten very few times this season but the Oswego High school team and the Syracuse Freshmen have been able to turn the trick. The Fulton lads have been forced to take a bitter dose from both of the above organizations, but in view of the fact that the locals lost both games by slender margins while the Oswego lads were soundly walloped by both the Oswego High school and Syracuse teams, the locals figure that they can trim the Normal boys. The Freshmen team, however used a much stronger lineup against Oswego than they did here and the Normal team is coming here today determined to convince the locals that they are a better team.

The game against Skaneateles Friday should be a hummer. As O'Brien will serve up the twisters tomorrow, "Honey Boy" Barnes will be called upon for box duty Friday and the youngster will face a strong team, both in the field and at the bat.

Fulton lost to Morrisville early in the season at Morrisville largely because O'Brien's arm gave out, due to an injury to the elbow from a hard pitched ball. This time the locals have to even up the score and O'Brien will be given another chance against the westerners. The Morrisville game will be called early in order that the visitors may make connections for the return trip.

LOCAL MOTORCYCLISTS WILL GO TO SARATOGA

Fulton motorcyclists, thirty strong, will leave this city July 3 for Saratoga where a big convention of motorcyclists from all over the east will be held July 3, 4 and 5. The local delegation is being mustered by James Bogue, and in addition to the men riders, many women will make the trip in side-cars. Saratogo will welcome the motorists with a big celebration and some 2000 riders are expected to attend. At the convention held last year 1200 motorists registered at the convention and in view of the fact that the weather was rainy and that a heavy rain had made many roads impassible, the attendance was considered remarkable. This year if the weather is clear, the attendance should easily reach the 2000 mark.

James Bogue has made plans for the organization of a local motorcycle club and if everything can be arranged in time the club will make its first road run on Memorial day. Motorcyclists who are interested are invited to see Mr. Bogue who will explain the details.

All Kinds of
GARDEN SEEDS
by the ounce or pound at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

All Base Ball Scores
Received by Innings Every Day

BANK CAFE
J. M. CAFFREY, Proprietor
23 S. First Street

Steer this way for the Insurance that spells peace of mind—our Automobile Accident and Liability Insurance.

The accident that generally occurs is the unavoidable one—but that does not stop the "hold up" suit that costs money to defend against—BUT our insurance protects you against property and personal damages and the company fights the case.

See us today for rates.

DAVID & MASON AGENCY
55 N. FIRST STREET

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS STANDING OF TEAMS

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Pittsburgh at Boston.
Chicago at New York.
Cincinnati at Brooklyn.
St. Louis at Philadelphia.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 1; New York, 1.
Boston, 3; Pittsburgh, 2.
Brooklyn, 4; Cincinnati, 0.
St. Louis, 5; Philadelphia, 2.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Phihladelphia	17	9	.654
Chicago	16	11	.593
Boston	14	11	.560
Brooklyn	13	14	.481
Pittsburgh	13	14	.464
St. Louis	13	17	.433
Cincinnati	11	15	.423
New York	10	15	.400

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Games Today

Boston at Cleveland.
Philadelphia at Chicago.
New York at Detroit.
Washington at St. Louis.

Results Yesterday

Chicago, 11; Philadelphia, 6.
All other games postponed, rain.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
New York	16	8	.667
Detroit	18	11	.621
Chicago	18	12	.600
Boston	13	9	.591
Washington	12	14	.462
Cleveland	11	16	.407
St. Louis	10	19	.345
Phialedlphia	9	18	.333

FEDERAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Buffalo at St, Louis,
Brooklyn at Kansas City.
Newark at Pittsburgh.
Baltimore at Chicago.

Results Yesterday

Newark, 8; Pittsburgh, 0.
All other games postponed; rain.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Pittsburgh	10	11	.633
Newark	17	12	.586
Chicago	17	13	.567
Kansas City	15	13	.536
Brooklyn	15	13	.536
St. Louis	12	14	.462
Baltimore	12	18	.400
Buffalo	8	21	.276

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

Games Today

Richmond at Toronto.
Providence at Buffalo.
Newark at Montreal.
Jersey City at Rochester.

Results Yesterday

Jersey City, 5; Rochester, 3.
Richmond, 2; Toronto, 1.
All other games postponed; rain.

Team Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Providence	11	5	.688
Montreal	10	6	.625
Richmond	10	6	.625
Jersey City	7	7	.500
Rochester	7	8	.467
Buffalo	5	6	.455
Newark	4	7	.364
Toronto	3	11	.214

For sores apply Hanford's Balsam lightly.

Phosphate for lawns and gardens. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

CURRENT COMMENT

It was reported today that the Fulton High school baseball team is willing to pay an umpire two dollars a game, if he can handle the indicator to the satisfaction of all concerned. Umpires, who are out of work are advised to consult Manager O'Brien on the subject.

* * *

The Independents seem to have as much trouble in holding a meeting as the Fulton Board of Health. Twice the meeting has been called but all the ball-players are evidently still fanning vigorously in the winter league. Wake up, me lads, summer is nigh!

* * *

The Athletic Park will be taken good care of in this Clean-Up campaign. The high school team is contemplating the purchase of some new wire for the grandstand, not to protect the spectators according to Captain Mike Bray, but to keep the "chickens" cooped up.

* * *

Hank Mott left to join a carnival company yesterday.

Hank's contract calls for a ten minute appearance each day at which time the local heavy weight will demonstrate his tremendous strength before the admiring eyes of the village hicks along the route. Hank's new employer insisted, however, that one clause in his contract should stipulate that the local man was to buy his own meals.

* * *

Keeler, the former third-sacker of the Fulton High school team may be seen back at his old post at third base in next Friday's game. In spite of his bad slump recently, James has kept plugging away on the practise and he is already showing flashes of his former game.

* * *

The Independents may hit upon a novel plan of raising funds for the coming season. There has been some talk of holding a benefit performance at the Quirk theatre, at which the amateur and "movies" will be presented. If the latter plan is carried out one of the movies will probably be a baseball picture, featuring Christy Mathewson in a scenario of his own. The local team will decide upon the affair when the meeting is held.

* * *

Automobile manufacturers are not the only ones who seem to be unable to manufacture their product fast enough. Some of the leading motorcycle firms are working three shifts in order to turn out machines fast enough to meet the demand, and right here in Fulton, a prominent dealer claims that he cannot get enough machines. The craze is at its height here, and the side-car idea is also taking well.

* * *

A movement is on foot in Fulton High school for a Faculty High school baseball game to be played at the Athletic Park some time in June. There are about five male members of the local faculty who can play ball and the remainder of the team can be made up of alumni or varsity substitutes. The Faculty-High school game is an institution in many cities and besides furnishing the baseball fans with some original ideas in baseball it usually swells the treasury of the high school team considerably.

* * *

Many of the mentors in the local schools are old time baseball stars and although some of them have not touched a baseball in twenty years, given a good battery and about a week's practise, they could put a fair article of ball. The Faculty game will be formally proposed at the next meeting of the Athletic association and from all accounts the Faculty will not be slow to accept a challenge.

NOW PAINT

Strike when the iron is hot and paint when the property needs it.

They paint ships a dozen times a year; yes, some of them, every voyage. What for, do you think? To look nice and get business.

A livery keeps its carriages painted and varnished and washed, to look nice and get busines.

A man with a house for sale or to let, "does it up," and Devoe is the paint.

There's more in paint than to keep out water. Paint for looks and you needn't think about water. A fresh coat of paint once a year is about as good for his credit as paying his debts. But the man whose buildings and fences look new, very likely, has no debts.

DEVOE

L. P. Smith Co. sells it.

Planet Jr. Garden tools and cultivators. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

Whole Family Dependent

Mr. E. Williams, Hamilton, Ohio, writes: "Our whole family depend on Pine-Tar-Honey." Maybe someone in your family has a severe Cold—perhaps it is the baby. The original Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey is an ever ready household remedy—it gives immediate relief. Pine-Tar-Honey penetrates the linings of the Throat and Lungs, destroys the Germs, and allows Nature to act. At your druggist, 25c.

STATE LEAGUE

Games Today

Syracuse at Binghamton.
Scranton at Wilkesbarre.
Albany at Troy.
Utica at Elmira.

Results Yesterday

Binghamton, 4; Syracuse, 2.
Troy, 4; Albany, 3.
Elmira, 7; Utica, 5.
Wilkesbarre, 2; Scranton, 1.

Teams Standing

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Troy	7	2	.778
Wilkesbarre	8	4	.667
Elmira	6	5	.545
Binghamton	5	5	.500
Utica	4	5	.444
Albany	4	5	.444
Scranton	3	6	.333
Syracuse	2	7	.222

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

At Milwaukee—	R	H	E
Louisville	2	6	3
Milwaukee	5	7	3

Indianapolis at Kansas City; rain.
Cleveland at Minneapolis; rain.

At St. Paul—	R	H	E
Columbus	0	5	1
St. Paul	1	3	1

CENTRAL LEAGUE

Terre Haute, 7; Wheeling, 5.
Evansville, 4; Dayton, 2.
Youngstown, 2; Fort Wayne, 1.
Erie, 11; Grand Rapids 10.

A few broken lots of house paint at cost. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

ANOTHER TOLSTOY PLAY

The Quirk offers today Tolstoy's Kreutzer Sonata, with Nance O'Neil, Theda Bara, William E. Shay, Henry Bergman and others of equal ability in the cast. In Kreutzer Sonata Count Tolstoi has woven a wonderfully compelling and heart gripping story about the life of his heroine, Miriam, a young Russian girl. Through an unfortunate love affair Miriam is threatened with disgrace. Her father induces Gregor Randor, a struggling musician, to marry her, for a money consideration, and the couple go to America where they are later followed by Miriam's family, including Celia, her sister. Between Celia and Gragor a clandestine love affair develops. Despite their secrecy the wife discovers the truth and torn between love of her little boy and outraged pride, she confronts her fickle husband and unnatural sister. Her revilings and the denunciations of her father are alike unavailing and at last, driven to desperation, she takes vengeance into her own hands.

One Standard Oil Company district manager wrote: "We have used Hanford's Balsam for galled horses with most excellent success. In fact we have no hesitancy in saying that we have obtained better results from the use of this than from any other remedy we ever used."

Rubber tires for buggies, also baby cabs and go-carts. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

White Man With Black Liver

The Liver is a blood purifier. It was thought one time it was the seat of the passions. The trouble with most people is that their Liver becomes black because of impurities in the blood due to bad physical states, causing Biliousness, Headache, Dizziness and Constipation. Dr. King's New Life Pills will clean up the Liver, and give you new life. 25c. at your Druggist.

THOMAS H. MARVIN
HEADQUARTERS FOR
BUILDERS' SUPPLIES
Some of our specialties are:
Lehigh Portland Cement
Peerless Wall plaster
Robinson Sewer Pipe
Onondaga Vitrified Brick
Fire Brick, Fire Clay, etc.
Land Plaster Hydrated Lime
Yard:
Corner First and Broadway

Children Cry
FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

WARD OPENS FIGHT CAMP

Young Local Manager Now Has Long List of Boxers To Handle

John Ward, well-known among local fight enthusiasts, a boxer of no mean ability and a trainer with up-to-date ideas, has opened an honest-to-goodness training camp for fighters on the West River road, about three miles south of the city. The camp is located in a farm house with spacious grounds about it, and the interior will be furnished with regular training camp equipment, including punching bags, weights, exercising machines shower baths, the water for which will be furnished by an artesian well system already on the farm.

Ward is now recognized as a full fledged manager who has out-grown the experimental stage, and he has received communications from several managers of boxing clubs in this state, regarding some of his boxers, particularly Willie Meany and Hank Mott. Meaney, a fast little 116pounder, took on Young Crozier, who has an enviable reputation in Syracuse last Friday night and showed the Syracuse lad the road through four fast rounds. Mott made Jack Burke, an old stager, look like a school-boy in the six round star bout and Burke's performance was such that his return to the Syracuse ring is very doubtful. Mott was able to take all that Burke could give and come right back for more and had the local fighter any knowledge of the fine points of the game. Burke would not have lasted the limit.

In addition to these two promising fighters, Ward has taken charge of Young McBride of this city, who fights at the light heavy-weight limit and who show promise; Buck Green, a fast little West Sider, who can make 108 pounds ringside; "Creely" Smith, so monickered because of his capacity for taking punishment; Eddie Beasaw, another local lad who fights at 116 pounds and who is ready to meet all comers, and Al Williams, a husky lad of Volney, who aspires to a future in the ring. Williams has been in training for the past two weeks under the care of Ward and he shows signs of real ability. He fights at 140 pounds.

Ward intends to take care of these men at his camp as well as some Oswego boxers who have expressed a desire to go through some hard work. The men will be conditioned and matched whenever a lucrative offer is received and Ward has already had offers to match Matt and Meaney at the Syracuse Arena this week. While Mott has left the city for a ime, the res of the camp will be at work every day commencing Thursday.

Your Shoes Do They Need Repairing?
This is the best and quickest shop.
Wilson & Dwyer
207 Cayuga St.
Skates Sharpened too

M. KATRIB
Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing, Repairing. Ladies and Gents Tailor. All Work Guaranteed. Free Delivery
Phone 3353 21 1-2 So. Second st.

Up-to-Date Tailoring
in all its branches. Let me convince you by giving me a trial. The slogan
"TRADE AT HOME"
is good, but why not practice what you preach?
M. J. FELDMAN
Merchant Tailor
Over Whitaker and Bogardus
2d and Cayuga

EXCEPTIONAL VALUES IN SOLID LEATHER SHOES

For Men and Women at the New Shoe Store

Men's $2.50 Gun Metal Button and Lace Dress Shoes	$1.95
Men's $2.50 Solid Leather Work Shoes, black and tan	$1.95
Men's $2.50 Chrome Tan Scout Shoes	$1.95
Men's $2.00 Outing Shoes	$1.48
Women's Patent and Gun Metal Pumps and Oxfords	$1.95
Women's $3.00 Colored Top Shoes, Gun Metal and Patent	$2.29

STRANAHAN & LOVE

15 South First Street

Formerly occupied by Morton & Shattuck

DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, May 19.—Regarding the question as strictly a moral one, it is not likely that an attempt will be made during the present Constitutional Convention to seek to amend the Agnew-Hart law which prohibits race track betting. The proposition has been aired and seems to have aroused some favorable sentiment, yet no delegate has come forward with the promise that he would be the sponsor for a proposed amendment to the Constitution which would make void the statute enacted during the memorable administration of Governor Charles E. Hughes.

Delegate James W. Wadsworth of Livingston county, who for many years has been a State racing commissioner, is an advocate of racing meets. He feels that there is no harm in the sport providing that pool rooms are prevented from inveigling those who can ill afford to place a wager, or better still, are closed entirely. Notwithstanding his attitude, it is not likely that Congressman Wadsworth will attempt to restore the freedom which at one time was permitted as regards betting on horse racing.

"I am in favor of horse races," said the distinguished delegate in an interview today. "The pool room is the evil. In Canada horse racing is conducted in a way that I should like to see followed by this country; no bets are placed or taken on a race until within a certain time before a race. This sounds the knell of a pool room and the matter of placing a bet on a horse becomes one of sportsmanship which few other than those who can afford to take a risk, slight or great as the case may be, care to assume."

Congressman Wadsworth declared that the Agnew-Hart race track gambling bill did not effectually eliminate the pool rooms. He said that in New York and other cities it was not a difficult thing to place a bet upon a horse race with a pool room proprietor in spite of the statute created during the Hughes administration.

When the proposed amendment to the State Constitution which aims to prohibit prize fights in this state come up for a hearing, Delegate Wadsworth will doubtless oppose the proposition. The amendment was introduced by Lemuel E. Quigg of Columbia county and seeks to prohibit any boxing exhibition to which a price of admission is charged.

More than one gentleman sportsman who has horse racing for his particular hobby has been in Albany of late quietly advocating the restoration of open horse racing, it is said. The difficulty has been, those who claim to know the situation say, is that the majority of the delegates fear to present an amendment favoring the restoration of racing because of the same moral issue to which Congressman Wadsworth alluded.

Some of the delegates have taken the position that the propositions which will come up are of a nature aimed to correct existing laxities and evils and that in consequence, a proposition which sought to restore what was regarded as a menace to public morals would be out of place.

AT DARDANELLES

British and French Generals Have Fine Records in Other Wars

London.—General Sir Ian Standish Monteith Hamilton, in supreme command of the British-French army now landed on the Gallipoli peninsula to co-operate with the British-French fleet for the conquest of the Dardanelles and Constantinople, is a poet-soldier, with the tough, wiry frame of the Scotch and the Scotsman's long, narrow head, strong nose and bold chin and with the big ears of the generous Irishman and the Irishman's ingratiating smile. The eyes are shrewd and calculating, as becomes a canny Scot, but no less emotional and full of fun—the endowment of a son of Erin.

His military career is Lord Roberts' best gift to the nation, for Hamilton is the product of the training and spirit of Field Marshal "Little Bobs." Kitchener has had the good sense to show his appreciation of Lord Roberts' handiwork and to give Hamilton the chance to prove his right to a place near the top rung of the ladder. He stands there the embodiment of the best tradition and practice of the British officer—free from pretension, arrogance and "side"—a brave soldier and charming gentleman.

General D'Amade, the French commander, at the beginning reported to be chief of the land forces at the Dardanelles, can serve under General Ian Hamilton in a frank division of authority which is likely to proceed without friction. General D'Amade is said to have resented upon more than one occasion the tone of superiority and condescension assumed toward him by Field Marshal Sir John French during the campaign in France and Flanders. General Hamilton has tact and magnanimity. His intimate association with Lord Kitchener as chief of staff in South Africa began and ended without a row—testimony to Hamilton's ability to get along with the most exacting and despotic of generals, far different from the amiable, kindly General D'Amade.

Photo by American Press Association.

GENERAL SIR IAN HAMILTON.

Hamilton came under the notice of Roberts in the Boer war of 1880, where he went with the Gordon Highlanders, and where, at the British defeat at Majuba Hill, he discovered that there wasn't a British soldier in a hundred who knew how to handle his musket, and not one in a thousand who appreciated the necessity of learning how.

Wounded at Majuba Hill and taken to the hospital, Hamilton was given up for dead. He revived when Sir Evelyn Wood dashed up, covered with mud from a long ride, to tell him that the dispatches home were going to mention his bravery. It was the first of a series of honor records which now have become so numerous that they would fill a book, while his medals and clasps, if he wore them all at the same time, would weigh him down like a coat of mail. From South Africa Hamilton went with Lord Roberts as A. D. C. to India—the "musketry maniac" the young officer was called. But he won over his chief to his own way of thinking, and the revolutionary method in training which Roberts instituted regarding musket and bayonet practice came as the result. The brilliant bayonet charges of the British in this war would have been impossible in 1880 at Majuba Hill.

Serving under Sir Evelyn Wood in the Burma expedition of 1884, Hamilton displayed such initiative that he was offered a high command in India with a salary of $15,000 a year. The School of Musketry at Hythe invited him at the same time to become its head at a salary of $4,000. He accepted the latter, and the soldiers he trained at Hythe were conspicuous for their efficiency in the last Boer war.

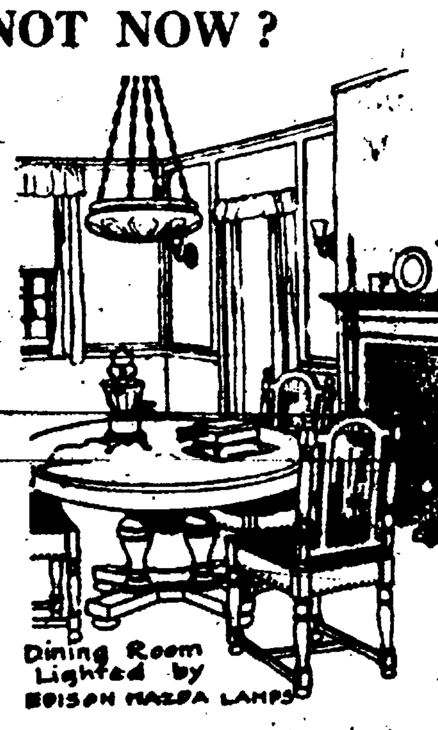
YOU WILL USE

ELECTRICITY EVENTUALLY

WHY NOT NOW?

Electricity once used becomes a neccessity. Good light in the home breeds cheerfulness.

There is no light like Electric light—Safety, Comfort, Convenience, Cleanliness and Economy.



HAVE OUR REPRESENTATIVE GIVE YOU AN ESTIMATE

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

Phone 144

The Sale of

Ladies' and Men's Hosiery

in blacks, tans and white commences

Tomorrow Morning at 9 o'clock

Mostly 25c qualities, your choice for

12c a Pair

J. C. O'BRIEN

FRESH STRAWBERRIES EVERY DAY

at LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

DEAN BARRY'S ESTATE IS NOT TAXABLE

W. S. Hillick was in Oswego yesterday attending a hearing in the case of the transfer of the late Dean Barry. The hearing was ordered by State Comptroller Travis and Mr. Hillick represented the State's official. It was learned at the hearing that Father Barry left but a small amount of personal effects. He had an interest in the organ in St. Paul's church.

It is understood that Dean Barry left a will bequeathing most of his personal property to his nephew, Dr. R. W. Barry. A certain sum was also set aside for masses for the repose of Dean Barry's soul. No proceedings were ever take in Surrogate's Court but a short time ago, at the request of Comptroller Travis, Surrogate Miller directed that the appraisal be made. F. D. Culkin represented the estate in the proceedings.

EPITAPH ON STEPPING STONE

Found on Slab Just Turned Over After Fifty Years.

Columbia, Conn.—Needing a flat stone for repairs that he was making, Edward Phillips pried up one which for over fifty years had been used as a stepping stone near the farmhouse back door. To his surprise he saw on the reverse side, in fairly plain letters, the inscription:

In memory of Emily, daughter of Mr. Joseph and Mrs. Eunice Smith, who died April 15, 1814, aged six months and fifteen days.

Rest, thou, sweet slumberer, in the peaceful grave;
Short was thy life; forgotten soon shall be.
Except the few who, drowned in sorrow's wave,
With painful pleasure still remember thee.

Nobody knows where the stone had been used or where it came from. Mr. Phillips' father bought the house over fifty years ago and the stone was at the back door then for a stepping stone. It is five feet long and nearly two feet wide.

LAST SHOT OF CIVIL WAR.

Woman Asked Police to See if Old Gun Was Loaded—It Was.

New York.—The "last shot of the civil war" was fired recently in a courtroom. It came from a gun which had been hanging for years on a wall in the home of the late Willard H. Hodgson. The musket had been carried in the war of the rebellion by Mr. Hodgson's father.

Mr. Hodgson's sister was preparing to move to another house, but was afraid to take down the old musket. She called in Lieutenant Henry Brown of the Flatbush police station and turned the gun over to him. He took it around to the station house and showed it to Attendant Patrick O'Loughlin of the Flatbush court, which is in the same building.

Standing in the corridor O'Loughlin pointed the gun at the floor and pulled the trigger. The old war musket was heavily loaded, and there was a report which startled the police reserves and the people in the courtroom.

Attar of Roses.

Over 3,000 pounds of rose petals are used in the manufacture of one pound of attar of roses perfume.

WATER GLASS

EGG PRESERVER

By the Quart or Gallon

LaPorte's Grocery

Oneida St. Hello 75

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads. will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldhorn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf

Wanted—Competent young woman as stenographer and bookkeeper, for the summer. Post office box 74, or phone 56. tf

Upper Flat—Moderate rent, 214 Walradt st. 6 rooms and all modern conveniences. H. L. Crandall. tf

Wanted—By Polish girl of 16, position with family; good references. Address, 224 W. 1st st. 131c

Wanted—Woman for housework. Apply to Mrs. W. A. Butts, 351 South Fourth st. 131

Furnished Rooms—3, single or en suite. 205 Cayuga st. 129c

Flat To Let—202 S. 3d st. R. L. McCully. 133

To Rent—Flat, lower, at 608 Rochester st. 130c

MRS. MOREY SUES TO RECOVER PROPERTY

The summons and complaint filed in the case of Louise J. Morey vs. Arthur L. Morey and wife and others show that the action is one to recover $2,000, alleged to be due as dowry from plaintiff's husband's estate. Mrs. Morey was the second wife of the decedent and claims that he left considerable property in the town of West Monroe. She now alleges that Arthur Morey, son of decedent, and wife, have been occupying certain property which she claims to be hers. Three other children of Mr. Morey by his first wife are also made defend-

WINE SHIPMENTS IN BULK COMING EAST

New York, May 18.—The decision on the part of the California Wine Growers' Association to make New York the distributing point for its product in the campaign it is to undertake to increase the sale of its wines abroad, has attracted a great deal of interest, particularly because of the novel method to be employed by the association in transporting the product to New York.

The association has contracted for a tank steamship which will carry the wine in bulk, much after the fashion employed by the Standard Oil Company in transporting oil, from California through the Panama Canal to New York. A central station is to be established here, where the wines will be placed in containers for distribution to the trade.

Tire Vulcanizing. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

Music—Buell's Full Orchestra at the Onyx Confectionery, Saturday night. adv.

DEEDS FILED YESTERDAY

Charles Heistman to William Wright, property in Parish; $450.

John P. Miller to Baptista Abeisto, Fulton, indicated price, $1,600.

Steamship's Passengers Saw White Streak in Wake of Steamer

London, Wednesday.—Whether a German submarine really fired a torpedo at the steamship Transylvania, which arrived at Glasgow on Monday from New York, or the overwrought imagination of excited passengers led them to circulate a groundless report is a question that is causing discussion here.

While some passengers who arrived in London yesterday were positive they saw the white streak of foam trailing a torpedo aimed at the steamship others were equally positive that, while they saw a submarine, no torpedo was discharged.

Other passengers said they were positive a torpedo was fired at theTransyvania. They said the submarine appeared at a distance estimated variously at four hundred to eight hundred yards. The periscope and part of conning tower were in sight for several minutes, they said. The Transylvania's captain immediately turned the vessel and steered a zigzag course until the danger was past.

Some of the passengers described what they said was a white streak of foam marking the course of the projectile.

Many of the passengers were below and knew nothing of the incident at the time. It is said that all who were on deck behaved with the greatest coolness. Lifeboats were prepared for immediate lowering on Saturday morning. Few of the passengers went to bed on the last night of the voyage.

GERMANS FORCING SAN RIVER PASSAGE

Petrograd, May 19.—Efforts of the Germans to force a crossing of the River San, in Central Galicia, are being concentrated north of Permysl, where a battel for the fortifications along the river slopes is now developing. According to latest reports the Germans have been unabel yet to reach within striking distance of Jaroslav and the other fortresses which constitute one of the strongest Russian defensive lines. The Austrian official report of May 15 falsely reported that the Germans had occupied Jaroslav.

Further south along the San, in the neighborhood of Lisko and Sanok, German activity also is reported, but the operations there evidently are less important, being more in the nature of cavalry reconnaissances.

The evacuation by the Russians of their positions in the Carpathians became inevitable as the Germans proceeded with their powerful drive from Cracow upon the Russian right. This threatened the cutting off of the whole Carpathian army of the Russians, whose rear communications were only narrow footpaths. Russian critiics now go so far as to hint that the Carpathian campaign was an unwise undertaking, since it led to a great extension of the front which was not easily defendable. The military critic of the Novoe Vremya says:

"With the evacuation of the Carpathian summits the difficulty of preventing a German penetration of East Galicia has now disappeared, since it is no longer a question of holding these summits, but of defending Permysl and the remainder of the line along the San. So lang as this line is in our possession recovery of Galicia by Austria will be impossible.

"Aside from the strategic soundness of depending for our defence on the San and the Vistula, with the fortresses of Warsaw, Ivangorod and Permysl, our front, extending from the mouth of the Bzura towards Stry, is advantageously shortened by more than two hundred miles."

D/34

A REAL NECESSITY

No Advertiser can Successfully Develop Trade in the Market Afforded by the People of Fulton, Unless He Employs the Advertising Columns of

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

¶ Remember that its circulation represents ONE-SIXTH of the population of Fulton, therefore it is necessary to use The Evening Times to make your proposition a success.

¶ The Evening Times' readers represent the same classes as any other paper circulated in this vicinity, who are, collectively, the all-powerful people for the advertiser to reach.

¶ The people of Fulton reached by The Evening Times buy ONE-SIXTH of everything sold in the city. They have money to buy luxuries as well as necessities, and they read THIS PAPER because it is their Home Paper—edited, printed and circulated by "Home Talent" who spend their money for the upbuilding of Fulton—your City.

¶ Readers of The Evening Times are a big, mighty crowd—to neglect them, to ignore them means a lack of business judgment, and it requires the support of the big crowd to put things over.

THE BIG CROWD OF FULTON—READ YOUR HOME PAPER

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

Antebellum Underwear Would Be Bulky Now.

ETHEREAL QUALITIES LIKED.

Inset With Filmiest Lace, the 1915 Undergarment Is Fragile, but Lovely, and Suits the Gowns of the Present Season—Resume of Earlier Styles.

"Do with our outer garments what you will," we say, "but don't expect us to adopt antebellum underwear, because we won't consider it!"

Picture those chemises, of thoroughly "durable" material, trimmed with zigzag cotton braiding or the even more horrible cross stitch in colored embroidery cotton!

Think of the long sleeved, ample night robes, with their band collars, buttoned in the front with one button, and their solid embroidery trimming!

Remember the series of petticoats, beginning with a short, scalloped flannel one and continuing outward in layers of starched cotton, and then bless anew those filmy but practical, becoming and altogether comfortable garments which are hidden by the gowns of 1915.

Let us discuss first the wisps of chiffon cloth and chiffon displayed in all seriousness as underwear by the lingerie shops this spring, because they are so exquisite, extravagant and ridiculous.

One set is called "dawn mists" and is worthy of its name. Of filmy rose color, the nightgown, envelope chemise and princess slip are all trimmed with nothing but wide hems of their own material, through which are run the thinnest of white satin ribbons.

Other sets, in empire form, are decked with groups of tiny chiffon roses. Some are inset with finest valenciennes.

A bit less ethereal and really very wearable and alluring are the creations of chiffon cloth, much like indestructible voile, which are found in lovely one colored sets, or in white grounds with groups of Dresden flowers in pastel shades, or in the more startling Poiret bouquets.

UNDERWAIST AND DRAWERS.

Some models are just touched with fillet lace, for this variety is enjoying a great vogue just now, and appears also combined with crepe de chine, handkerchief linen and batiste.

Crepe de chine as a material for underclothes is thoroughly established. The charming, almost untrimmed models in the heavy quality, which were seen all last winter, are giving way to the lighter weights, lace trimmed or ribbon run, which are more appropriate to the warm weather.

Untrimmed garments in this weight are also procurable for those who have adopted the simple line in lingerie, which the pussy willow taffeta, requiring no ornamentation beyond its beautiful self, first taught us to like. Advocates of crepe de chine for summer wear—and there are many—extol its noncrushable qualities.

It is well to remember in buying silken undergarments that a flesh color or pink is preferable to white, as washing only makes it prettier, while the white is almost sure to become yellow after laundering.

Lovely as the silken materials are, practical as they have shown themselves, there are women after all for whom linen remains the material par excellence for underclothes.

The combination underwaist and drawers shown in the illustration is made of finest handkerchief linen with inserts of filmy fillet lace with edgings of val. The waist and drawers are attached together by beading through which ribbon is run. Ribbon quite broad, about an inch, is run through the openwork of the lace on waist and drawers.

Featherstitching and hand run tucks form the only decoration of some of the new French "dessous." Many gowns and chemises have no ornamentation at all except large buttonholes in an empire line through which are drawn inch wide pink ribbons. Filet lace and Russian lace are substantial in wearing qualities and look ephemeral.

The favorite envelope chemise, which has been adopted with so great an enthusiasm, is procurable now in different priced qualities of handkerchief linen, as well as in the humbler batiste, in both the mercerized and unmercerized varieties.

being thrown open for more general use by the public than the mere instruction of children. In many cities they are becoming social centers and especially places where free public lectures are held. This movement has been a very extensive one in New York city and is spreading to other communities. Philadelphia has thrown open its free schools for public use, but according to the board of education, which recently issued a statement through its president, Henry R. Edmunds, this fact is not fully appreciated in the Quaker City. Some criticism having arisen over the use for these purposes of the William Penn high school, Mr. Edmunds sent out the following statement:

"The board of education not only has no objection to the use of public school auditoriums as social centers, but actually encourages a more general use of these halls."

The infrequency with which the school buildings are used in the evenings in Philadelphia is due, not to the attitude of the authorities, but to the lack of interest manifested by the public, according to Mr. Edmunds. He added:

"There is assuredly no reason why such an auditorium as the one in the William Penn High School For Girls should not be open to any respectable organization that applies to the board of education for its use. The only cost would be a fee of about $2 for the janitor's services. Of course the public school buildings are closed to sectarian or political meetings, and I believe everybody agrees that they should be, but to their use for neighborhood gatherings, free lectures and entertainments there never has been any objection. If the halls are not often used for purposes other than formal education it is certainly no fault of the board of education."

Not only public school auditoriums but the halls in Carnegie libraries are available, at virtually no expense, for public gatherings, Mr. Edmunds pointed out, and for the use of the latter, too, he said, there seldom were any applicants.

Mr. Edmunds' view was in agreement with that of William T. Tilden, chairman of the board of education's committee on property, who has taken a leading part in the movement toward bringing the home and school into closer relationship. "So far as it is feasible all public property should give the greatest possible benefit to the public," he said.

A Municipal Aid.

The City Parks association of Philadelphia has for many years performed a most useful function for that city. It has managed to combine and concentrate the efforts of a large number of civic organizations upon a certain definite line of endeavor. This was originally, as its name indicates, the creation of a comprehensive park system—the enlargement of existing breathing spaces, the creation of new ones and the linking of all into a well ordered system. While this great work is still in the making, the association has expanded its functions, and it has done yeoman service in keeping alive high ideals of city planning, teaching the people of Philadelphia the importance of the larger vision in dealing with problems of urban beautification and pointing out far ahead of their actual realization the great works which must be carried through if Philadelphia is to continue to be a city of homes, alive to the progress of the times, a beautiful as well as a comfortable place to live and work in.

Portland (Ore.) School Garden.

The Shattuck school garden, located in the foreign residence section of the city, was organized in January of 1914, securing a piece of land 100 feet square. This lot was an unsightly dumping ground for all sorts of debris. The boys took quick action in clearing this ground and removed in all ten tons of rubbish, besides clearing the stumps, and within a very short time had transformed this eyesore into a garden which was a surprise to all after having first viewed the same place before its transformation.

Movies For Children.

The Atlanta (Ga.) chamber of commerce has definitely formulated plans to present moving pictures especially selected to please and instruct children. These children's movies will be shown every Saturday morning.

Some Forms of Rheumatism Curable

Rheumatism is a disease characterized by pains in the joints and in the muscles. The most common forms are: Acute and Chronic Rheumatism, Rheumatic Headaches, Sciatic Rheumatism and Lumbago. All of these types can be helped absolutely by applying some good liniment that penetrates. An application of Sloan's liniment two or three times a day to the affected part will give instant relief. Sloan's Liniment is good for pain, and especially Rheumatic Pain, because it penetrates to the seat of the trouble, soothes the afflicted part and draws the pain. "Sloan's Liniment is all medicine." Get a 25c bottle now. Keep it handy in case of emergency.

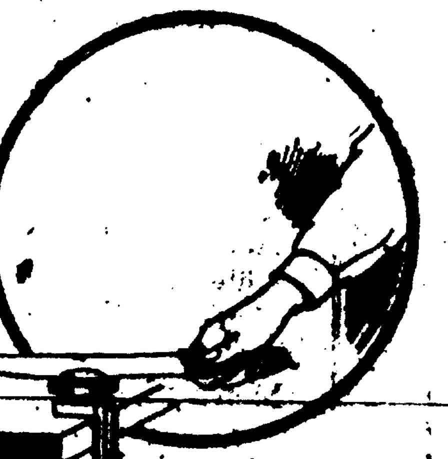
CASTORIA

For Infants and Children

In Use For Over 30 Years

Always bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

Simple Device For Sharpening Kitchen Knives.



If you have the necessary "know how" it is a very simple matter to sharpen a knife by grinding. It all rests in the manner of holding the edge of the knife on the surface of the sharpener. But now we are aided by a new device which has been recently patented, consisting of a wheel of abrasive material and a guide mounted on a metal carrier, by means of which the device may be secured to a table or other convenient place for use. When the carver is placed in the space between the wheel and guide the knife is held just at the right angle with respect to the wheel, so the most effective edge is put on it, and the knife is then reversed and the other side treated in a similar manner. A half dozen passes on each side of the knife put it in good condition. It is impossible to go wrong in the matter of putting an edge on a knife with the aid of this device.

Lobster Chowder.

Lay in the bottom of the chowder saucepan on the rack three medium slices of pickled pork, then a one inch slice of fresh cod, then a layer of sliced potato and a grated onion, pepper, salt and little lumps of butter, a layer of pilot crackers, then one of cold boiled lobster cut into small pieces, another of pilot crackers, then a layer of the cod, and proceed in this way, making the lobster the last layer, with plenty of butter and a dusting of pepper and salt over the top. Pour over a pint of milk, adding just enough water to cover all, and boil for forty minutes slowly, but steadily. Just before serving add a half pint of hot cream. Have ready a tablespoonful of chopped parsley and a finely chopped red pepper. Sprinkle a teaspoonful over each portion as it is served.—New York Times.

Kitchen Wisdom.

To clean white leather bags and belts use oxide of zinc.

To give silk that is being washed the sheen of new silk add just a little methylated spirit to the rinsing water.

The short ends of candles melted and mixed with equal parts of turpentine make a fine polish for hardwood floors.

When pressing the pleated tunics that are so much in vogue dampen with water in which a small piece of gum arabic has been dissolved and then iron in the usual way.

Add a few crumbs of bread to scrambled eggs. This will improve the dish and make the eggs go further.

A cupful of vinegar added to the water in which colored clothes are washed will often prevent the color from running.

Escaloped Potatoes.

Pare and slice a dozen medium sized white potatoes, fill pudding dish with alternate layers of potatoes and finely rolled toasted breadcrumbs. Season each layer as it is inserted with raw sliced onion, salt, pepper (with mace and sage if liked) and butter size of an egg for each layer. Cover the whole with thin sweet cream or very rich milk. If cheese is liked sprinkle the top with cheese crumbs, and cheese may be added to each layer. Bake in slow oven in dripping pan, removing lid to allow the top to brown well toward the end of the baking.

Chicken, Italian Style.

Cold roast or boiled chicken is the foundation for this dish. Cut the meat into dice and to every pint allow one tablespoonful of butter, one of flour, a little onion juice, three hard boiled eggs, half a cupful of cream and a cupful of rich stock, with seasoning of salt and pepper to taste. Melt the butter in the frying pan, blend the flour, then unite with the cream and stock and season. Let the chicken dice become thoroughly heated in the sauce. Dress on a dish with the grated yokes sprinkled over and the whites cut into ornamental sections for garnish.

Carrots and Peas.

Cut carrots into dice and boil in salted water. Mix with an equal quantity of cooked green peas. Sprinkle with two tablespoonfuls of flour, salt, pepper and half a teaspoonful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Add a cupful of water in which the carrots were cooked, and simmer until thick. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve hot.

Fried Carrots.

Clean and boil carrots until tender. Cut into lengthwise slices. Roll in beaten egg and breadcrumbs and fry in deep fat until a golden brown. Drain and serve hot.

HANNIBAL NEWS

Miss Elsie Farnham, who spent the winter in South Carolina, will spend the summer at her home in North Hannibal.

Mrs. Edith Cooper is able to be out again after her recent illness.

Mrs. Robie Metcalf and children, Harold and Doris, are spending some time with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Wilson, Pembers.

Mrs. Howard Shaffer, of St. Johnsville, and Mrs. Hubert Lovett, of Rochester, were recent guests of friends in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cooper and Mr and Mrs W. M. Adamy were in Victory Tuesday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Cooper's uncle, R. Fleming.

John Brackett has a position in the Franklin Automobile Works at Syracuse.

C. S. Byrne and son of Syracuse were the guests of friends in town last week.

Frank Neville and bride returned to their home here last week. Mrs. Neville was formerly Miss Stella Bell of Lapel, Ind., and the happy couplew ere married April 11th at the bride's home.

Miss Sadie Adamy will teach in the senior room of the Martville school the next school year.

Miss Martha Shutts, one of the training class girls, will teach in Cortland county the coming year.

Miss Katie Sayre of Red Creek spent last week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sayre.

Miss Hattie B. Ham of Baldwinsville is a guest of Mrs. I. O. Hamblett.

Raymond Morley of Oswego spent last week with his aunt, Mrs. M. A. Barner.

There was a large attendance at Hannibal Center Grange last Friday night at the ice cream social and a very pleasant social time was enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Porter and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Stevenson attended the revival meetings at Cicera recently. Mr. Brown will leave that place for Wilheim, Pa., this week.

Miss Bessie Scott, Furniss, was the guest of her sister, Mrs Wesley Stock last week.

Mrs. W. W. Manning has been very ill for the past two weeks.

Memorial services will be held in the Baptist church Sunday evening, May 23. Sermon by Rev. Jacob Hamm. All veterans and ladies of Garfield Circle are requested to meet at Grange Hall, Sunday evening at 7 o'clock and march to the church in a body.

Mesdames F. P. Ball, R. P. Allen, Fred Lockwood and B. A. Matzan went to Syracuse by auto Saturday to attend the suffrage sonvention, returning Sunday. They report a very enjoyable occasion.

Ransom Stinge, an aged resident of this town, living south of the village, suffered a paralytic stroke Friday, May 8, and died Thursday. Funeral services were held Saturday at the home. He was highly esteemed by a large circle of freinds. A life-long resident of the neighborhood in which he resided. He leaves three sons, Frank and Charles of Hannibal and Watson of Rochester.

A contest for 300 members has been started in the M. E. Sunday school.

The Ladies' Missionary Society of the Presbyterian church will be held in the church parlors Wednesday, May 18, at 3.30 o'clock. Tea will be served as usual.

Arnold Cummins has rented part of the Cox house on the corner of Cayuga and Rochester streets.

The pupils of the Stone school house have been doing good work collecting nests of tent caterpillars from nearby orchards under the direction of the teacher, Miss Eva Brackett.

Miss Amy Stone will teach in the McKnight district and Miss Martha Gray in the Wilder district the coming year. Miss Lura Lounsberry has hired in the Gifford district.

Dr. F. S. Tillapaugh will deliver the address at the M. E. church on Memorial day.

Ernest Lonis was chosen to seceed his father as overseer of the poor at a recent meeting of the town board.

Mr. Vickery of Oswego, who works in the Home Bakery, has rented the southern part of the Lund house on Oswego street.

The Presbyterian Sunday school are arranging a children's day program for the first Sunday in June.

Prof. Lydell gave a lecture on the European war at the High school building Wednesday evening for the benefit of the athletic club of the school.

The lecture at the M. E. church Friday evening by ex-Convict No. 1122 was largely attended and proved very interesting and a very strong temperance sermon. He was a former member of the New York State Bar, and told of his struggle for an education and of his downfall from the curse of social drinking and of his four years' experience behind prison walls. Also something of Mr. Osborne's work among the convicts to help them regain their lost positions.

SOUTH GRANBY

The funeral of Charles Fuller, who died Monday was held at the house Thursday, Rev. Bull officiating. He was 44 years old, and had many friends. He leaves a wife and father, Adelbert Fuller, and two brothers, Floyd and George Fuller. Floyd Fuller and wife of Rochester and Mrs. Lester Shuultz of Albany, were her for the funeral.

Arbor Day was observed here. The Eight Notes school was invited but owing to the rain they could not go into the woods. All were served with ice cream and cake in the school house.

Mrs. L. T. Austin attended the funeral of Monroe Skeel in Fulton on Monday.

Wilson Stewart has been quite ill but is some improved, his sister, Mrs. Frank Wilcox, is with him.

Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Palmer, Fulton, and son visited at Charley Palmer's Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Glancy and little daughter visited her son, Marvin Miller's family Sunday.

James Howard and wife of Syracuse visited her brother, Fred Andrews Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Addie Phillips is the guest of her neice, Mrs. Minnie Paine.

Mrs. Carrie Lampinan is ill. Dr. Sinclair attends her.

Mrs. Eunice Root, who visited her cousin, Mrs. Hannah Austin, last week, returned to Fulton Saturday night.

Harry Rowland is working for Joe Williamson.

Mrs. Kitty Cook was in Fulton with herm other two or three days last week.

Fred Fisher and wife were guests at Elmer Fisher's recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Johhn Garrett and son John were guests at Wilson Stewart Sunday.

Harry Barry of Oswego caled at his farm Sunday and was a dinner guests at Fred Andrews.

BERNHARDS BAY

Mrs. Frank Winn entertained two young ladies from Syracuse over Sunday.

Charlie Best is improving his house on South st. by painting.

F. Webb is moving from Constantia to Bernhards Bay.

Miss Alice Dickey visited friends at Constantia during several days of last week.

Mrs. Bertha Winn was in Oneida Tuesday on business.

Mrs. Frank Winn was in Cleveland Tuesday on business.

Mrs. Walter Johnson and sons called on Mrs. Jane Hall Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Bosley and daughter Shirley came from Syracuse to their summer cottage last week.

Miss Pearl Curtis was at Cleveland Wednesday on business.

Mrs. William Slayter was in Central Square Saturday on business for the B. B. Grange.

Mrs. Clarence Row and Mrs. Chas. Woolworth of Shackbush were in town on business.

Mrs. Alice Hooks was in Central Square Saturday.

The fire company was made happy by receiving a check for $25 from George A. Martellus. This will enable the company to add to its equipment.

All are glad to welcome Miss Elizabeth B. Dickinson here for the summer.

The B. B. C. Book Club will meet with Mrs. Fred Hartleagle next Saturday.

Frank R. Crandle has been at work for Maude E. Crandle at constantia Center for several days.

If blossoms are in indication we should have a lot of fruit this year.

VOLNEY CENTER

John Trimble and family spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Charley Dolbear.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ives spent the week-end with friends in North Scriba.

Mrs. Jennie Baldwin has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Tice, the past week.

Leigh Simpson was a week-end guest of his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Simpson. Leigh is taking a medical course at Syracuse University.

Mrs. G. Mace of Syracuse has been spending the past week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Vant.

C. McCarthy has moved to the Milo Foster farm formerly owned by Artemas Ross.

Mr. Gates has leased the blacksmith shop here.

Master Earl La Beauf spent the week-end with his friends, Kenneth and Lenard Cramer.

Miss Grace Gore spent a few days of the past week with her sister, Mrs. Johnston.

A. Guthrie of Syracuse spent Monday with Mr. James Laws and family.

Nat Shattuck is ill.

Rev. George Ward was taken to his former home last Wednesday on the Whitaker road and Rev. G. Scriber of Pulaski will preach at the usual hour.

State of Ohio, City of Toledo, ss.
Lucas County.

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and thats aid firm will pay the sum of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for each and every case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of HALL'S CATARRH CURE.

FRANK J. CHENEY.

Sworn to before me the subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1886.

(Seal) A. W. GLEASON. Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly upon the blood and muscous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

PANGBURN CASE WAS IN COURT

Surrogate Overrules Petition Filed by Byron Pangburn

Judge Miller has over-ruled the objections to the sufficiency of the petition filed by Byron Pangburn, one of the executors of the estate of Sarah M. Pangburn, asking the removal of Addison Button, of New Haven, a co-executor, and issued citations returnabel June 7th, at which time there will be a hearing in the case. The objections were made on the ground that the petition was based on information and belief only. Mr. Pangburn alleges that Mr. Button has retained $2,600 of the estate as well as other small articles of personal property. After the objections were overruled, Judge Rowe, for Mr. Button, put in an answer in which he claims Mrs. Pangburn before her death gave him the $2,600 and gave the other articles to Mr. and Mrs. George Cornish, of New Haven. At the time, the answer sets forth, that Mrs. Pangburn was in sound mind, and competent to make the gift. D. P. Morehouse and C. E. Pitts represent Mr. Pangburn.

In the matter of the petition of Eva Parsons, asking for an accounting by Thomas and John Hunter, as executors of the estate of George Benson, of Hannibal, an adjournment was taken until June 7th, before which time Wilson & Rice, for the executors, promised to make and file an accounting.

Letters were asked on the estate of Monroe Skeel, who died in Fulton May 7th, leaving $4,500 personal and $6,000 real. He gives $100 to Mt. Pleasant M. E. church for repairs and $50 to Mt. Adnah cemetery. His widow, Helen, is given the use of the homestead for life and the balance, the house included, at Mrs. Skeel's death, is given to his two daughters, Mrs. Harriet Howell of Fulton and Mrs. Florence M. Townsend, of Rochester.

Martha M. Stowell, named as executrix, asked for letters on the estate of Rose A. Hillyard, who died in this city March 23d, leaving $700 personal property. Ernest E., a son, of Chicago, gets one dollar; William P., a son, of Rochester, $100; George H., a son, of Rochester, $100; Lillian white, a daughter, of this city, $100, and the balance is to be held for Sarah E. Hillyard, now of Rochester, a daughter.

Estelle Fitzgerald asked for letters of guardianship on Anna M. Dorothy and Edward Peters, whose mother died on April 2d, and who are each entitled to a third in $1,283.07, the balance of $4,000 received from the New York Central for the death of their father, Edward, who was killed in East Syracuse in 1908.

BUNDY'S CROSSING

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Loughrey and son spent Saturday and Sunday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Loughrey at Oswego Center.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Burchin and niece, Jennie June, were in Fulton on Tuesday.

Mrs. Byron Wells and daughter called on Mrs. Alice Adams on Tuesday.

Edward Gardner has been in poor health for the past week.

Edward Echard had an accident with his car on Wednesday when he collided with another car at Seneca Hill, both cars were broken but no one received any injuries.

Mrs. Byron Wells called on Mrs. Samuel Graham of Battle Island on Friday.

The president of conference spent Saturday and Sunday with Reverend Crawford.

D. E. Wells and Byron Wells were in Fulton on Friday.

ADVERTISED LETTERS

The following letters remain uncalled for at the Post Office May 19, 1915. Inquirers will please say advertised:

Men—Clark, Robert K.; Davis, Prof.; Keyser, Jacob; Selle, E.; Seymour, Peter; Wilcox, J. H.

Women—Miller, Miss Georgiana; Pickard, Mrs. James; Shattell, Miss Anna.

PETER T. CONLEY, P.M.

Slightly used 1915 Overland Demonstrator. $750.00. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

LEGAL NOTICES

CITATION TO PROVE WILL—The people of the State of New York, To Cyrus W. Phillips, Rochester, N. Y.; Anna Phillips Nagle, Minneapolis, Minn.; Ruth Winegar, Nutley, N. J.; Frank E. Winegar, New York, N. Y.; Minnie Wood Douglas, Nutley, N. J.; May Wood Taylor, St. Joseph, Mo.; George E. Wood, New York, N. Y.; Clinton R. Wood, New York, N. Y.; William H. H. Phillips, Washington, D. C.; Ordelia Carscallan, Carter, Mont.; Josephine M. Wood, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Kittie H. Haw, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Edwin Claire Wilde, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Mary Kidd, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Percy D. Wilde, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Flossie M. Wilde, Foam Lake, Sask., Can.; Rachael C. Davis, Toledo, Ohio; William B. Phillips, Toledo, Ohio; Elmer E. Phillips, Stockbridge, Mich.; Mary E. Ormsby, Stockbridge, Mich.; George H. Phillips, Stockbridge, Mich.; Frank L. Wright, Stockbridge, Mich.; Elpha L. Hutton, Stockbridge, Mich.; Bertha Lyman, Boise City, Idaho; Charles Shaw, Kansas City, Mo.; Ada M. Davis, Clear Lake City, Iowa; Kittie A. Davis, Clear Lake City, Iowa; Clinton L. Davis, Clear Lake City; Iowa; Ada Phillips, New Orleans, La.; Marion Phillips, New Orleans, La.; Mrs. Alexander Bozant, San Francisco, Cal.; M. Augusta Phillips, Toledo, O.; Ada Mason, Batavia, N. Y.; Kittie Look, Atlantic Highlands, N. J.; Cyrus Frederick Phillips, Rochester, N. Y.; Ross Phillips, Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Asa Phillips, Syracuse, N. Y.; Grace Phillips Bryant, Akron, O.; Frank Barnes, Fulton, N. Y.; Hiram Barnes, Little Falls, N. Y.; Loren Barnes, Syracuse, N. Y.; Fannie Barnes Deaks, Springfield, Ohio; Fanny Barnes Burt, Hannibal, N. Y.; Edith Barnes, Fulton, N. Y.; Harry Barnes, Frankfort, N. Y.; Eleanor Tamlyn, Custer City, S. Dak.; Robert J. Jennison, Jamesville, Wis.; W. Harry Jennison, Los Angeles, Cal.; Minnie E. Roberts, Maywood, Ill.; Mrs. C. W. Warren, Waldron, Kan.; Ella Reed, Russell, N. Y.; Ransom Stewart, Russell, N. Y.; Orley Stewart, Russell, N. Y.; Hattie Hurlburt, Harrisville, N. Y.; Mary Curtis, Hermon, N. Y., Rebecca Durham, Fine, N. Y.; William Barnes, Harrisville, N. Y.; William Brown, Harrisville, N. Y.; Edwin Brown, Harrisville, N. Y.; Grace Shampine, Watertown, N. Y.; Helena Brown, Watertown, N. Y.; Minnie Brown, Harrisville, N. Y.; Earle Brown, Albany, N. Y.; Perry B. Hunter, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., Florence Haviland, Stockbridge, Mich.; Elmina Phillips, Syracuse, N. Y., and to Nettie Hunter, Carrie Hunter, Eva V. Hunter, Florence Hunter, Mary Ann Marlott, Alice C. Phillips, Virginia E. Phillips, George R. Phillips and Hamlin Phillips, whose several places of residence, if living, are unknown and cannot after reasonable diligence and diligent inquiry for that purpose be ascertained, and to the widows, surviving husbands, next of kin, heirs-at-law, legatees and devisees of such of the nine last named persons as may be deceased, if any, whose several names and places of residence are unknown and cannot after diligent inquiry for the purpose be ascertained:—heirs-at-law and next of kin and other persons interested in the probate of the last will and testament of Julia A. Broadwell, late of the city of Fulton, in the county of Oswego, New York, deceased, greetings:

Upon the petition of Arvin L. Rice of the city of Fulton, in the county of Oswego, New York, one of the executors named in a certain instrument in writing, purporting to be the last will and testament of said Julia A. Broadwell, late of the city of Fulton, in the county of Oswego, and State of New York, deceased, and relating to both real and personal estate, praying to have said instrument in writing and the codicils thereto proved and recorded as a will of real and personal estate: You and each of you are hereby cited to show cause before the surrogate's court of the county of Oswego, at the surrogate's office in the city of Oswego, in the said county of Oswego, New York, on the [illegible] day of May, 1915, at ten o'[illegible] in the forenoon of that day, wh[illegible] [illegible]id will should not be admitted to probate, and such of you as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your general guardian, if you have one; or if you have none, to appear and apply for one to be appointed; or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a special guardian will be appointed by the surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.

In Testimony Whereof, We have caused the seal of the surrogate's court of the county of Oswego to be hereunto affixed.

Witness, Hon. Clayton I. Miller, surrogate of our said county of Oswego, at the city of Oswego, in the said county, the 12th day of April, A. D., 1915.

(L. S.) H. E. HINMAN,
421-5t Clerk of the Surrogat's Court.

Notice to Contractors

STATE OF NEW YORK, Office of the State Commission of Highways, Albany, N. Y.—Pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 30, Laws of 1909, as amended by Chapter 646, Laws of 1911, and Chapter 80, Laws of 1913, sealed proposals will be received by the undersigned at their office No. 55 Lancaster Street, Albany, N. Y., at 1 o'clock P.M., on Friday, the 4th day of June, 1915, for the improvement of the following highways:

Oswego County, Road No. 1287; Name, Pulaski-Williamstown, Part 3; Mileage, 7.75. Road No. 1288; Name, Pulaski-Williamstown, Part 1; Mileage, 5.12. Also, Rep. Con. No. 701; Class of Work, W. B. Mac. 2½ ins.; Resurfacing; Road No. 653; Name, Granby Roads; Town, Granby.

Maps, plans, specifications and estimates may be seen and proposal forms obtained at the office of the Commission in Albany, N. Y., and also at the office of Division Engineer, Chas. J. McDonough, 433 South Salina Street, Syracuse, N. Y.

The especial attention of bidders is called to "Information for Bidders" in the itemized proposal, specifications and contract agreement.

Proposals for each road or contract must be presented in a separate sealed envelope endorsed on the outside with the name and number of the road or contract for which the proposal is made. Each proposal must be accompanied by a New York draft or certified check payable to the order of the State Commission of Highways for an amount equal to at least five per cent. of the amount of the proposal which such draft or check accompanies.

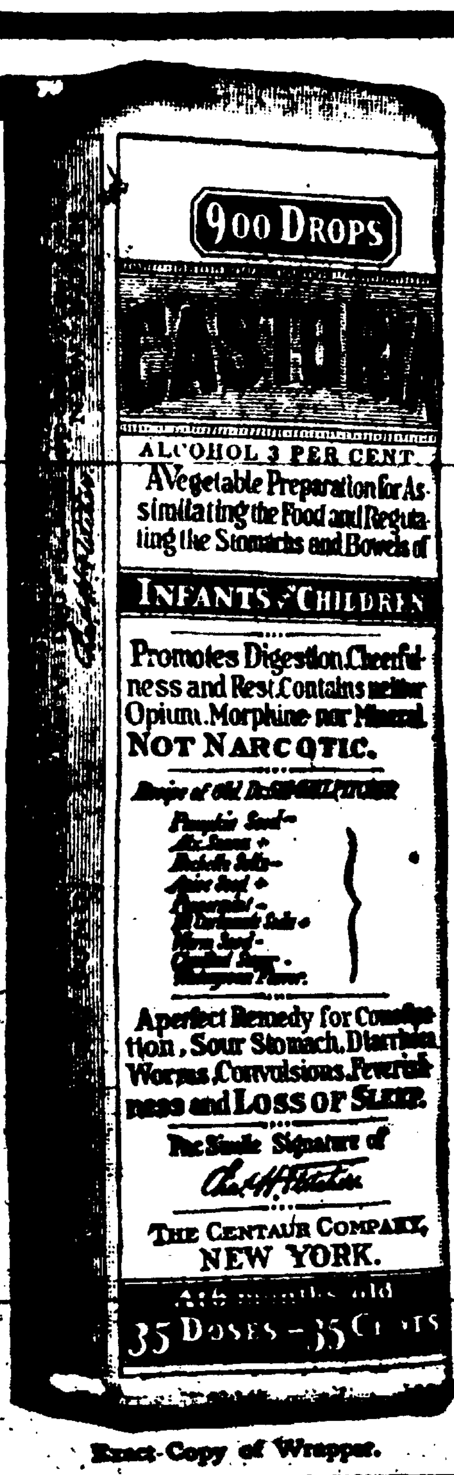
This draft or check will be held by the Commission until the contract and bond are duly executed.

The successful bidder will be required to give a bond for fifty per cent. of the amount of the contract, such bond to be executed by a surety company to be approved by the Commission, or a bond secured by the deposit of collateral securities to be approved by the Commission.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids.

EDWIN DUFFEY, Commissioner.

I. J. MORRIS, Secretary.



Exact Copy of Wrapper.

CASTORIA
For Infants and Children.
Mothers Know That Genuine Castoria
Always Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.
In Use For Over Thirty Years
CASTORIA
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

INTEREST BEARING DOLLARS

Money that is idle cannot yield a return.

To accomplish the best results, your money should be working for you—invest it where it will yield a good return consistent with safety.

We offer you this opportunity and cordially invite your account.

4% PAID IN OUR INTEREST DEPARTMENT

FARE $3.00 DAILY BETWEEN BUFFALO & CLEVELAND

The Great Ship "SEEANDBEE"
"CITY OF ERIE" — 3 Magnificent Steamers — "CITY OF BUFFALO"
BUFFALO—Daily, May 1st to Dec. 1st—CLEVELAND
THE CLEVELAND & BUFFALO TRANSIT CO., Cleveland, Ohio.

CREW SAYS RESCUERS WERE DRIVEN AWAY FROM LUSITANIA

New York, May 19.—That one or more German submarines waited near the spot where the Lusitania sank to torpedo vessels hurrying to the aid of passengers and crew in the water, was proved when the tank steamship Narragansett, of the Standard Oil fleet, reached her pier at Bayonne and her officers told of the effort made to sink her.

The Narragansett was within six miles of where the Lusitania went down and where hundreds of persons were still struggling in the water, when the periscope of a submarine was sighted on the starboard quarter and then a torpedo was seen coming through the water toward the vessel. The torpedo missed the tank steamship by only thirty feet, but went so close that it cut the line which was dragging the log at the stern of the steamship.

That shot probably prevented the saving of scores of lives, as Captain Charles Harwood, believing that the "S. O. S." call to which he was responding was a German trap to lure vessels to the vicinity of the submarine, changed his course and sped away.

Concerning the torpedo attack made upon the Narragansett, Second Officer Letts says:

"We watched the periscope, expecting to see another torpedo come at us, but none did. The submarine pursued us several miles, but we zigzagged and soon lost sight of her.

"In the meantime we had been driven farther away from the position given by the Lusitania, and after a conference Captain Harwood decided it would be foolish to try to return with submarines waiting to sink any vessels going to the relief.

"We also believed that perhaps the 'S. O. S.' call was a fake sent out by a submarine to lure vessels into its range to be sunk. For these reasons, we did not try to go nearer to where the Lusitania had gone down. We remained in the neighborhood, however, until the next morning when, by wireless, we heard the full details of the sinking of the great steamship.

"Had it not been for the submarine attacking us we could have saved many lives without a doubt. We would have been at the scene a little after four o'clock, and at that time hundreds of persons were in the water waiting for rescuers."

George Wheeler, chief officer of the Narragansett, exhibited the log book of the Narragansett to show that the incidents related by the second officer were true.

Captain Harwood and his crew of the Narragansett rescued twenty-three passengers from the Volturno while that steamship was burning at sea three years ago.

ORGANIZE WOMEN FOR HOME EDUCATION

Mrs. Schoff Has Already Enrolled Over 20,000 Members.

Washington.—The bureau of education is much interested in the tour of the country in the interest of home education by the National Congress of Mothers' and Parent Teachers' associations.

"While child welfare conferences are being held by the state branches of the Congress of Mothers in Alabama, Georgia, Connecticut, Mississippi, Missouri, Maryland, New Hampshire, Utah and Wisconsin," the bureau announced, "the officers and leaders of the congress, accompanied by representatives of the bureau of education, are crossing the continent, holding organization meetings in many of the western states. This tour is intended to make the benefits of the annual conference felt as widely as possible.

Photo by American Press Association.

MRS. FREDERIC SCHOFF.

"This year's work of the congress is in close connection with the home education division of the bureau of education. Mrs. Frederic Schoff, president of the National Mothers' Congress, is director of the home education division, which, since its organization in September, 1913, has enrolled over 20,000 women from all parts of the country interested and able to co-operate in organizing parents for study of child nature and child making.

"The plan of the home education work, as revealed in the Congress of Mothers and in the home education division, is 'the organization of the parenthood of the world for study of childhood's needs and for the promotion of child welfare.' In the conferences which the congress proposes to hold some of the topics to be discussed are 'Peace,' 'Encouragement In Habits of Thrift and Industry,' 'Spiritual Development of Children' and 'Helping Wayward Children.'"

Hospitals For Animals.

Rome.—The Society For the Protection of Animals announces that if Italy goes to war it will maintain four big hospitals for sick and wounded horses.

EAT BARK, LIVE IN CAVE.

Fate of Farmer and Two Daughters, Victims of Big Jinx.

Benyille, Ark.—A man named Ewing has been found living in a cave five miles east of here with his two daughters, ten and eight years old. When discovered their clothes were worn to strings, and, according to the children, they had subsisted on the bark of trees for ten days.

The older of these said:

"We haven't seen a piece of bread for more than a month."

Five years ago Ewing was a well to do farmer. First his stock began to die. By the end of a year he owned only one cow and no other property. Two years ago his wife, who was the ruling spirit on the farm, died, and six months later she was followed by their only son and the only grown daughter. This left the old man alone with the two small children.

But the real climax came about seven months ago, when his house and all it contained were destroyed by fire. He then sold the cow and disappeared. No effort to find him was made, for when the neighbors had offered to help him in his trouble he became angry and exclaimed: "No, I cannot accept any gifts. No Ewing has yet ever stooped so low as to beg, and may God grant that I am not the first to do so."

HIRES PRISONER TO WIFE.

Wards of Wisconsin Sheriff Earn $10,376.81 For Their Families.

Janesville, Wis.—Letting out his prisoners to work for wages that go to their families instead of making them hammer stones, C. S. Whipple, Rock county sheriff, is demonstrating the possibilities of the Wisconsin commitment law.

During the two years the statute has been in force $16,775.85 has been earned by the prisoners in this county. Of this amount dependents of paroled persons received $10,376.81 and the county $1,210.41.

One man was paroled for a year to his wife to conduct a clothes pressing establishment.

Easier.

"After I wash my face I look in the mirror to see if it's clean," confided little Doris. "Don't you?"

"Don't have to. I look at the towel," joyfully rejoined Willie.—Browning's Magazine.

Come on People, Clean Up the Town at Once!

WOMEN CALM AS THEY FACE DEATH

One Saw Torpedo Speeding to Send Lusitania to Doom.

SURVIVOR'S STIRRING STORY

Passengers Had Been Thinking of Nothing but Possible Fate After German Threat, and as Ship Was Struck American Exclaimed, "By Heavens, They've Done It!"

Oliver P. Barnard, the scenic artist of the Covent Garden Opera, who told of A. G. Vanderbilt's bravery and Frohman's stoicism, gave the following account of the torpedoing of the Lusitania:

"It was my rare fortune to be one of four people who saw the torpedo of the German submarine fired at the Lusitania at a distance of probably not more than 200 yards. I had just come up from luncheon and was looking across an uncommonly calm and beautiful sea when I saw on the starboard what at first seemed to be the tail of a fish. It was the periscope of our assailant.

"The next thing I observed was the fast lengthening track of a newly launched torpedo, itself a streak of froth. We had all been thinking, dreaming, sleeping and eating 'submarines' from the hour we left New York, and yet with the dreadful danger about to descend upon us I could hardly believe the evidence of my own eyes.

"An American lady rushed up to where I stood, exclaiming nonchalantly, 'This isn't a torpedo, is it?'

"I was too spellbound to answer. I felt absolutely sick.

Hit With Terrific Impact.

"Then we were hit. My impression of the contact of the torpedo was that it was an indescribably terrific impact, though not marked by anything such as the imagination might fancy in the way of a roar.

"The torpedo must have penetrated deeply into the side of the vessel and exploded internally.

"The point of contact was about beneath the grand entrance to the saloon, and the result of the explosion was that it blew everything in that immediate vicinity into smithereens. Then the tremendous water tanks on the funnel deck burst, releasing their enormous contents and flooding everything.

"The moment the explosion took place the Lusitania simply fell over just as a house, kept up by underpinning, would topple the instant the main props were pulled out.

Stunned and Astounded.

"Instantly there was a tremendous rush of passengers to the deck from the saloon and lounge. I did not think that anybody, not even the women and children, were so much terrified as they were astounded and stunned by the consciousness that the fears, cherished half in ridicule for five days previously, had at last been realized and the German bluff had actually come off.

"'By heavens, they've done it!' ejaculated a broad shouldered American whom I never saw again.

"That was the first universal thought. 'What shall we do?' was the next.

"Many people, evidently convinced that the Lusiania was unsinkable, made preparations to sit tight and let things take their course.

"My own first impulse was to obtain a life-belt. Excitement and fright were now everywhere, but there was no panic. 'Keep cool' seemed to be everybody's motto, though there was on all hands a pellmell scurry below to obtain life belts. Every second people reappeared singly, in pairs and in groups armed with belts, uselessly carried out in most cases and inadequately strapped on. Others forgot the belts and devoted themselves to hunting for their relatives.

Brave Wireless Lad.

"The last passenger I spoke to was a young American bride, Mrs. Steward Mason, the daughter of William Lindsley, an American manufacturer.

"'Have you seen my husband?' she shrieked at me appealingly.

"I crossed over to the starboard side again, and on my way encountered the two Marconi operators in the emergency wireless room. They, too, were coolness personified. I learned from them that the explosion had put the main wireless room out of action. It also put out every electric light in the ship.

"Finding that he could do no more a young operator, superbly humored and careless of what looked like sure disaster for us all, took up a kneeling position on the funnel deck in order to make snapshots of the Lusitania settling to its doom.

"The 'snap' was probably the only one attempted in the whole ship, but it did not come off. A further lurch of the boat upset him and his plans, for the last glimpse I had of him was astride a chair in which he said that he was going to sit down and swim.

"The glorious old cry of the sea, 'Women and children first,' was the unvarying rule on the Lusitania. Some man, whom I assumed to be an alien steerage passenger, was the only person to attempt to violate it.

"Certainly not more than fifteen minutes, or eighteen at the outside, ensued after the torpedo impact before the Lusitania was gone."

Where His Art Failed.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, the famous actress, is fond of telling an amusing story of a certain great actor who possessed a marvelous power of mimicry. He could imitate the voice, gesture and facial expression of any person whom he happened to meet.

Although he earned big money, he was always very hard up, and one day he visited his tailor to ask him for a little more time on an account which had been owing for three years. While he was there a customer entered the shop and paid for several articles which were immediately delivered. Then the actor heaved a deep sigh of pain.

"What is the matter, monsieur?" asked the tailor.

"Alas," replied the actor, sighing again, "there is a man I shall never be able to imitate!"

A Pert Reply.

A story told of Sir John Fisher and Lord Charles Beresford when both were stationed in the Mediterranean will bear repeating. A competition had been held at Malta for a prize annually presented by Sir John. It is known as the Malta cup, and, having so far always been won by a crew belonging to the admiral's flagship, it was fully expected by Sir John that this record would be maintained. On this particular occasion, however, a crew of the Ramillies, commanded by Lord Charles Beresford, carried it off instead. A day or two later the fleet was practicing maneuvers, and Admiral Fisher, whose reputation as a stern disciplinarian is well known, was dissatisfied with the performance of the Ramillies. He signaled accordingly to its commander the message, "Explain your reason for being late in executing maneuver." Without a moment's delay the answer came. "We are towing the Malta cup."—Dundee Advertiser.

Roumanian.

"Roumanian" really means "Romanian," the country having been founded by descendants of the ancient Romans.

WIPING OUT MALARIA IN PANAMA CANAL ZONE

American Sanitary Officers Meeting With Great Success.

Washington.—The report of the department of health of the Panama canal for the last calendar year shows that the American sanitary officers on the canal zone are meeting with remarkable success in combating malaria.

Those other diseases so likely to visit white men in tropical climates, dysentery and typhoid fever, are also being coped with successfully. The report shows that no deaths occurred among Americans in the canal zone in the year 1914 from malaria, dysentery or typhoid fever. Yellow fever, as is well known, has long since been banished from the canal zone by the scientific efficacy and thoroughness of the methods of the American sanitary officials.

The fact is that malaria, not only among the Americans in the canal region, but among the entire population there, has been reduced to a lower point than ever before. In this connection, it appears, apart from the report for the year 1914, that the malarial outbreaks among employees in the canal zone outside of Cristobal and Toro Point are now at the lowest point.

The pneumonia death rate increased considerably owing to prevalence of measles among the black employees and the overcrowded conditions in which the people live in Panama. The five diseases causing the highest number of deaths in their order are pneumonia, tuberculosis, nephritis, organic diseases of the heart and malaria.

In the latter half of 1914 a periodic physical examination was made of all food handlers in the kitchens, mess rooms and commissaries of the Panama canal with the result that one typhoid carrier and a number of cases of contagious diseases were detected and eliminated. This doubtless prevented much disease among employees.

In Colon and Panama the figures show a high infant mortality, due to ignorance and indifference on the part of mothers.

COW KILLED AT BALL GAME.

Was Standing on Home Plate During Whirlwind Play.

Sheboygan, Wis.—During a baseball game in a field on the Walters farm, on the Upper Falls road, a cow owned by Mr. Walters was killed while standing at the home plate. The batter let the club slip when he struck at the ball, the club landing on the head of the cow and instantly killing it.

The animal was valued at $75, and the young men of the baseball team made arrangements to pay Mr. Walters for the cow.

$500 For One Day's Work.

Pierre, S. D.—Fred Hanson, a "wolfer" employed by ranchers along the White river to help clear that section of gray wolves, has just collected $500 for one day's work. Hanson trailed a female wolf to her den in the hills and by digging captured the mother and nine whelps. His contract price was $50 for each gray wolf captured.

One Standard Oil Company district manager wrote: "We have used Hanford's Balsam for galled horses with most excellent success. In fact we have no hesitancy in saying that we have obtained better results from the use of this than from any other remedy we ever used."

FROHMAN LEADING THEATRICAL MAN

Career of Dean of American Play Producers.

BEGAN WITH A PENNY SHOW

With This Small Beginning He Lived to Dominate All Contemporaries. Work Was His Only Pleasure, and to This Is Due His Unparalleled Success In His Chosen Field.

It was said of Charles Frohman, lost when the Lusitania was sunk, that he had the refusal of every American play, and it was regarded as a fact that every foreign play coming to this country was offered to him before any other manager had a chance to look at it. Such a statement perhaps expresses his dictatorship in theatrical America more vividly to the public than to say that he was the proprietor and manager of a dozen theaters in New York, of about seventy of the first class throughout the United States and eight in London and managed thirteen touring companies in the United Kingdom. Besides this hundreds of theaters were more or less directly controlled through the booking operations of the "syndicate" in the minor cities of America.

Charles Frohman was born in Sandusky, O., June 17, 1860, and went to New York with his parents at the age of ten. His home was on the east side. While attending school he worked in the evenings in a newspaper office. At the age of seventeen he organized a minstrel show. He was manager, treasurer, secretary, ticket seller, ticket puncher, ticket taker, prompter and interlocutor of the company. Admission to the show was 1 cent, and for three coppers a spectator might become an actor. A more serious theatrical pursuit was selling tickets.

Began With Minstrels.

In 1880 he went to Minnesota to join the Chicago Dramatic company. Shortly after he toured the United States and Europe as treasurer of Haverly's Forty Minstrels, and with this troupe he marched through many a provincial town, the band at his back. Business was good, and he came back manager.

The true beginning of his theatrical success was when in 1887 he obtained control of Bronson Howard's play, "Shenandoah." His brother, Daniel Frohman, had been associated with the Mallory brothers at the Madison Square theater. Charles Frohman went in with him and began to organize road companies under a new system. The ideas that he developed have influenced the course of the theatrical business since that time.

"Shenandoah" first appeared in Boston, when no manager felt interested in it after the first appearance. Charles Frohman saw it, liked it and telegraphed to Al Hayman to come on to Boston at once. Together they made a contract with the author of the play. Under their management "Shenandoah" was a great success.

The next play Frohman took up was also a great success. "All the Comforts of Home" was adapted from the German by Gillette.

That the Charles Frohman theater at Broadway and Fortieth street, New York city, might have an auspicious opening Mr. Frohman went to Europe to see Sardou. He gave the famous Frenchman $8,000 to write a play worthy of the finest stock company and theater in the United States. While on the other side he made contracts with Alexander Bisson and other French writers for their next plays. In London he obtained "Gloriana" and "Jane," both popular favorites. From "Jane" he made $50,000 in the first season.

Made Theatrical Stars.

Such was the start of the man whose nervous vitality and force swept everything before him in the theatrical business, unconquerably and inevitably. He stamped his personal traits and characteristics upon half a hundred separate organizations. John Drew, Maude Adams and other leading actors and actress have stated that much of their success was due to Frohman's suggestions and instructions given in directing rehearsals.

There was little allowance for rest in Frohman's manner of life. Life was nothing but work to him. Four hours amply served him for sleep. It was a marvel to see him in his office, turning his hand from one thing to another. Up and at it betimes in the morning his day was carefully appointed into hours and half hours for the diversified needs of the business. But he would do nothing that he could hire any one else to do, always saving himself for those things which he alone could do.

Work was Frohman's only play and he had practically no time for social pleasures. The song, "I Am a Friend of a Friend of Frohman," had a peculiar significance. That was as near as any one could get to him. He had few or no close personal friends. He was almost never seen on the streets. He was enrolled in the best clubs of New York and London and paid them his dues, but never a visit. His most pronounced eccentricity was an abhorrence of posing for a picture or feeling that one was being taken of him unawares. He was very shy in manner. He and J. M. Barrie have been declared the shyest men in the world. They found each other congenial company.

HOMES DAILY. WATCH US GROW!

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 130 | Established, Dec. 17, 1914. | THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1915 | Price One Cent

President Whitaker Looks for Increased Activity

Owing to the recent illness of the Secretary much of the work undertaken by the Chamber has been seriously interfered with. The Secretary is back in the office again and we hope the activity of the various Divisions will show an increase. The Board of Directors have approved recommendations from the Divisions of Agriculture, Industries and Retail Trade in regard to the establishment of a Credit Bureau and an Employment Bureau. Within a few days the details of these additions to our work will be made public.

The Board asks the co-operation of all members of the Chamber in the Clean-Up Campaign organized by the Division of Public safety. Friday, May 21st will be Fire Prevention Day and the Chamber will supply teams to cart away the rubbish on that day. No ashes or garbage will bec ollected as the Citizens must remove those themselves. The Chamber is after the fire hazards—excelsior, paper, trash, etc. Have your stuff ready.

At a meeting yesterday the Directors adopted the following resolution, "Having received ther eport of the sub-committee of the Division of Industries on the question of the acquisition of Canal Lands, and believing that the actual growth of Fulton's present industries is essential to the success of the City the Directors of the Chamber of Commerce hereby ap point a committee to confer with the City authorities to ascertain what arrangements can be made relative to the City's waiving its prospective rights to the lands in question, and request such committee to report back to the Board as soon as possible." The Committee appointed consists of Messrs. Whitaker, O'Brien and Morin.

In addition to these matters subcommittees are studying methods of getting in touch with the farmer, the problem of a Building Code for the city, the question of taxing sprinklers in manufacturing plants, and the "Buy at Home" movement. In this connection the Board has authorized the printing of 50,000 dodgers to be distributed to merchants in the Chamber and by them to be placed in packages and given away with purchases. Band Concerts, Pay-Up Week, Street signs and other matters are all being considered and with the return of the Secretary to the office we expect an increased activity in all these lines.

There is just one thing the Directors wish to call to the attention of the membership and that is this. The Chamber of Commerce has set for itself a very ambitious program. We will have done exceedingly well, measured by the standard of other chambers, if in the first six months we accomplish one tenth of the work we have set for ourselves. It takes time to organize and get things going in the proper way. We believe we have been making progress slowly but surely and we ask your patience and support while matters are developing.

N. L. WHITAKER, President

Zion Church Sends Delegates to Utica

Delegates from the Zion Episcopal church have been elected to attend [illegible] diocesan convention of the [illegible] church in Utica, Wednesday [illegible] and Thursday, May 27. The [illegible] are: Attorney Giles S. Piper, G. G. Chauncey, W. B. Carr and the Rev. M. J. Peters.

The local delegates have not been instructed as to whom they shall support at the election of a coadjutor bishop. This is due in a measure to the fact that as yet no nominations have been made for the position of coadjutor. The nominating will be [illegible] at the convention, when several [illegible] will be under consideration. [illegible] Rev. Dr. Harding of Utica and [illegible] Griswald of Salina, Kansas, [illegible] spoken of as leading propabilities, [illegible] other candidates comprise. Dr. [illegible], of Syracuse; Dr. Coley, [illegible] Utica; Dean White, of western [illegible], and the Rev. Dr. Fiske, of [illegible]

Clean Yards, Like Clean Collars, Are Emblems of Respectability. Clean Up and Paint Up

The Following Districts Have Been Mapped Out in the City. A Member of the Chamber of Commerce Will Be in Charge of Each District:

DISTRICT

On the East by 7th St. North by Broadway, Park on the West Side and takes in houses on the South side of Fay and Sanford sts. and the houses on the North side of Fay st. and East of 7th. The team covering this district should take rubbish from the South side of Broadway; West side of 7th st.; East side of Park and both sides of all streets within that district.

DISTRICT 2.

Bounded by Park st. on the east; Broadway on the north; river on the west, going as far as 1st and 4th sts. The teams covering this district should take all rubbish from the south side of Broadway; the west side of Park st. and both sides of the streets within that district.

DISTRICT 3.

Bounded on the North by Utica st; on the west by 3d st.; on the south by Broadway extending out Utica st. to where Utica bends north; from there over to the north side of Emery st. and on out Emery to city line. The team covering this district should take all rubbish from the south side of Utica st.; east side of 3d st.; North side of Broadway and on both sides of all streets within the district.

DISTRICT 4.

Bounded on the north by Oneida st; on the west by the river; on the east by 3d st. and on the south by Braodway. The teams covering this district should take all rubbish from the south side of Oneida st; west side of 3d st.; north side of Broadway, and both sides of the streets withhin that district.

DISTRICT 5.

Bounded on the north by Harrison st.; on the east by ninth st.; south by Utica st. and far as 3d st.; thus north on 3d st. to Oneida; west on Oneida to river. Teams covering this district will take rubbish from the south side of Harrison st. north side of Utica st. east side of 3d between Utica and Oneida; north side of Oneida between 3d and the river and on both sides of all streets within the district.

DISTRICT 6.

Bounded on the north by city line; east by city line; south by Harrison st.; west by river. Teams covering this district should take all rubbish on the north side of Harrison st. and both sides of the streets within that district.

WEST SIDE

DISTRICT 7.

Bounded on north by city line; on the east by river; on the south by the boundry line of the lots on the south side of Schuyler st.; on the west by D. L. and W. tracks and including that section of Hannibal st. across the tracks to the city line. Teams covering this district should take all rubbish on both sides of the streets within that district.

DISTRICT 8.

Bounded on north by the street known as 50 ft. line; running west from knife works, on west by the D. L. & W. tracks; on the south side of Leitch st. and on the east by the river. Teams covering this district should take all rubbish on both sides of the streets within that district.

DISTRICT 10.

Bounded on north by Pine st.; east by river; west by lake; south by Cedar st. Teams covering this district should take all rubbish on the south side of Pine, north of Cedar and all streets within that district.

DISTRICT 11.

Bounded on the north by Cedar st.; east by river; south by Plank road; west by lake. Teams covering this district should take rubbish on the south side of Cedar street and both sides of the streets within the district.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

West Side Citizens Will Be Told Why Falley Property Should Be Purchased.

The people of the West Sile who oppose the purchase of the Falley Seminary for a high school site will be given an opportunity to make known their objections to the site at a meeting to be held next Tueslay night, either in Sullivan's hall, the Phillips st. school or in the open air, at which time members of the Board of Trustees of the Board of Education and city officials will explain the Falley proposition thoroughly and objections to it will be hearl. At present the tax-payers of the Seconl Warl in particular object to even calling an election on the question, claiming that it would be a waste of money for as far as they are concerned the measure will never pass.

A delegation from the Board of Education waited upon the Common Council last night to request that a special election be called to vote upon the Falley proposition once more. Before the Aldermen went into session thhe subject was thhoroughly discussed. Alderman Gardner spoke in favor of it citing that it was the most logical site in one of the highest and most beautiful sections of the city. Other Aldermen expressed opinions favorable to the calling of the election but Alderman Baker was of the opinion that the election should not be called until the supporters of thie Falley measure think the project will meet with public approval, for the cost of the special election would be a waste of city money if the purchase was to be defeated again. Alderman Foster interposed at this point and stated that it was no time to talk economy, as the council has appropriated funds many time before for things that were not needed and now when economy is secondary, the money question is given thought.

Mayor Fox asked some of the citizens who attended the meeting to express opinions on the subject. The Mayor asked Joseph H. Conners whether or not it was true that it would cost a great deal of money to tear down the building now on the ground when a new school was to be built.

The Mayor said he had heard that the cost of tearing down the building would approximate $3,000. Mr. Connors said there were many reliable contracting companies who would be glad to tear down the building for the lumber and brick in it. He said there were 146 children in the school at the present time and the city had spent considerable money in modelling the room now used into class rooms that conform with the state requirements. The building is in first class condition now and a modern heating apparatus has been installed. The cost of putting it in order for the reception of more pupils would be very small.

George B. Deuel suggested that the Chamber of Commerce work in conjunction with the city officials for the purchase of the property, and stated that the Educational committee of the Chamber of Commerce had voted unanimously to call an election on the question once more. "This time will be the last that the question will ever come before the people," said Mr. Duell, "and sentiments of the various people of the city with whom I have come in contact in soliciting signatures to the petition have been favorable in most instances, so much so that I believe the Falley Seminary will be purchased by a vote of the people at the next election."

Mayor Fox declared himself in favor of the project and thought a special election would be the proper course. He told of the city's need for a school and also for an athletic park and play ground for the school teams.

When the Aldermen were called upon for remarks, Mr. Sullivan of the Second Ward produced a petition signed by 140 eaxpayers of the West Side protesting against the calling of an election to vote on the proposition again. Alderman Sullivan handed thhe petition to the Mayor and said he was forced to vote against the election in view of the fact that his constituents did not want an election. The vote of the council for the election must be unanimous and although Alderman Sullivan personally had no opinion one way or the other in the matter, and saw no reason why the Falley site should not be suitable, he could not act against the wishes of his people. He suggested that members of the Board of Education and those of the council who believed in the proposition should hold a meeting on the West Side at which the Falley site's merits could be explained more thoroughly to the people.

Mr. Connors thought the suggestion was a good one and proposed that the meeting be held next week. Mr. Connors said he did not believe the people of the West Side grasped the proposition fully and that they would see the matter in a different light if the plan were expounded to them thoroughly and the pressing needs of the pupils explained.

Alderman Sullivan suggested that the meeting be held next Tuesday night and that date was decide upon. A motion that the election resuest be table until the next meeting was passed.

Alderman Foster introduced a resolution that the Council appropriate the amount to be borne by the city in the paving of East 1st st. between Rochester and Broadway, and that the sum should be placed to the credit of the improvement fund of the Board of Public Works. The motion passed by a unanimous vote.

Final Announcement Concerning Fire Prevention Day

Secretary Heydecker caused the following letter to be mailed today to each member of the Chamber of Commerce:

FINAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Tommorrow, Friday, May 21. The Chamber of Commerce will supply teams to cart away your rubbish without charge. This does not include garbage, ashes or manure.

It does include trash, papers, old furniture, bed springs, crockery, tin cans, yard cleanings, shavings, excelsior, carpets, mattresses—in fact, all worn out househould goods and particularly things that will burn.

Everything to be disposed of must be in boxes or barrels or securely tied in bundles and placed on the curb not later than 8 o'clock, Friday morning.

On Friday night at 8 o'clock there will be a public bonfire of goods collected on the state land on the East Side between First street and the canal north of the mill district. The children of the city's public schools will gather at the bonfire where the Rev. M. G. Buck will make a short speech. Your friends and neighbors will be there. Come and watch your rubbish burn.

Through the kindness of the telephone company everyone on the entire lines was called this morning to notify them that the wagons will call around for their rubbish and their neighbors' tomorrow.

Chamber of Commerce.

EDGELEY'S CONDITION REMAINS UNIMPROVED

The condition of Clinton Edgely, the young cafe owner who was injured late Tuesday night in a motor cycle accident near Bundyville, was reported at the hospital this morning as serious. No marked change in his condition has occurred and the young mas has not yet recovered consciousness. His father and mother arrived in this city from Canada last night.

Edward LaVeck, owner of the machine, was able to be about late last night as usual and when questioned about the accident stated that stories to the effect that the machine was making 50 miles per hour when the accident occurred were false. La Veck also stated that the speedometer did not stop at the 50 mark as was stated in one account of the accident. He said that the machine was not making more than 35 miles an hour.

The LaVeck machine was not as seriousdamaged as was at first supposed and was able to proceed to this city yesterday under its own power. The damage on it will not exceed $50 and the loss is fully covered by insurance.

Dr. Anderson, who is attending Edgly, says that it is probable that the man suffered some internal injury, as the only wound visible was a slight one on the cheek. Yesterday morning, Dr. Anderson believed that the man would recover.

SUPERINTENDENT RUMSEY SAW THE NEW MACHINE

Oswego has bought a new street cleaning apparatus, which is a combination pick-up sweeper and sprinkler. Its cost is $500. It was in action Tuesday and Superintendent of Public Works Rumsey visited the county capital to see the operation of the new machine. Mr. Rumsey pronounces the machine a huge success and he would that it were added to Fulton's street cleaning equipment.

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES
and FULTON TIMES
Weekly

Published Daily, except Sunday, at 64 East First Street
Fulton, N. Y., by The Fulton Evening
Times, Incorporated

Telephone 45

G. WILLIAM BRAUN, President and Editor
B. S. BRAUN, Secretary and Assistant Editor
W. H. MERRIAM, Treasurer

Entered as second-class matter December 17, 1914, at the Post Office at Fulton, N. Y., under Act of March 3, 1879.

May 20, 1915.

45—PHONE NEWS ITEMS—45

1900 COPIES OF
THE EVENING TIMES
ENTER FULTON HOMES
EACH DAY

TO LIMIT OURSELVES

'Tis said we sell ourselves each day for the opinions of the neighbor next door. We employ an air of respectability to influence the opinion of Jones and Smith. We oftentimes are much over-concerned what others think of us. The thing of greatest concern to all of us is what we think of ourselves.

The man who does not do the right things, who does not think the right thoughts, cannot have self-respect. The man who does not have self-respect in a high degree is compelled to travel through life a cripple, and is deprived of the privilege and the happiness, derived from the feeling that he is first and foremost A Man.

The ordinary tad-pole, in all probability considers the stagnant pool in which he lives to be the sum and total of the entire universe. The tad-pole does not travel and cannot imagine beyond the stagnant pool in which he lives out his meaningless existence.

The rooster that announces the approach of day, in all probability, considers the barn-yard the total length and breadth of the entire universe. There is no way of determining how little each of us really knows except by comparison.

We are continually neglecting the work we are expected to do, in order that we may trouble ourselves about the things we are not fitted to do. We make of our brains pigeon-holes in storing away the opinions of other men.

There have in the past been few individuals. The problem of each community, state and nation is to evolve men and women who are recognized as personalities instead of people.

THE MILITARY HABIT

The citizens of the United States have always entertained a strong prejudice, derived no doubt originally from England, not only against a standing army, but against the military profession and all things connected with it. The feeling is so decided that to many persons the mere sight of a uniform is repugnant, and to them the multitude of uniforms to be met everywhere in Europe has been a really distasteful accompaniment of Continental travel.

Whether right or wrong, the prejudice is based on the idea that the existence of a military caste is incompatible with popular government, and that even the habit of general military training is extremely unfavorable to such government. It is not only that a trained military force is a dangerous instrument, ever ready to the hand of any leader who may choose to avail himself of it for his own ambitious purposes; but even more that the habit of military discipline, of subordinating your own thoughts and views wholly to the dictates of a unified, arbitrary organism, is disastrous to the free and healthy growth of individualism that is essential for the success of democratic institutions.

We believe that this view is in the main just. At the same time, it cannot be denied that the military habit might prove an excellent corrective for some of our most conspicuous national faults. Even in the physical carriage of our young people we see the woeful need of the erectness, the steady, firm, compact bearing, that military drill peculiarly fosters. And the slouchy, uncouth carriage is indicative of slouchy, uncouth habits of mind. Our boys need discipline; they need to be taught obedience, promptness, and respect. They dally too much; they argue too much; they shirk too much. To be made to do something they thoroughly dislike, regularly and systematically, at the stern call of the bugle, with the assurance of punishment if they fail, would be far more beneficial to thousands of them than lessons they do not learn, set for them by teachers they do not obey.

The presence of a powerful army in the midst of a democratic community is a serious and frightful danger, to be avoided always, if it can be avoided with honor and safety. But if we shall be forced for self-protection to have such an army, it will at least bring with it some compensations.—Youth's Companion.

Opinions

Policewomen

Mrs. Wells of Los Angeles, pioneer policewoman, has not had a very long official life. Yet she told the Nation Conference of Charities and Correction that she had seen about thirty cities in the United States, including Chicago, Baltimore, San Francisco, Topeka, St. Paul, Denver and other large centers, adopt the idea. In these thirty places the policewomen are regular members of the municipal force; in some other cities they are paid from private funds with the approval of the head of the police force.

New York city cannot join the ranks, however badly policewomen are needed here, because the Legislature refused to pass an amendment to the charter permitting the appointment of women police for patrol duty. The Legislators seemed to think the bill was a joke. There is assuredly no joke in the system. As Mrs. Wells says, "industrial and social energy no longer centers in the home, but has given us an age in which men, women and children eat, sleep and work and play together as never before in the world's history.

Women in business, in stores, factories, professions, have naturally led to women in courts as probation officers, and even on the bench in some unusual places; women in all varieties of social service work; women in the police department, where, behind uniform and badge, they do a kind of social service which they perhaps could not attempt otherwise with so much prospect of success.

The policewoman fits into the scheme of things just as completely as does the woman probation officer. In every large city she is certain to find important work, and every large city is certain to need her in both capacities.—New York Tribune.

Charges of Canadian Graft

The Canadian volunteers who, in response to the call of the motherland are fighting in the trenches in France and Belgium, have proved so effective and such magnificent fighting men that they are, in a sense, carrying off some of the greater honors of the war. So stubborn and self-sacrificing in their fighting are they that a prominent German military officer is quoted as declaring that if it had not been for the Canadian troops the Kaiser's army would now be in possession of Calais.

Under these circumstances, it is peculiarly unfortunate that a report has gained wide circulation to the effect that a Canadian parliamentary committee, acting under instructions from the government to investigate charges of corruption and dishonesty in outfitting the Canadian contingent, has unearthed a number of discreditable transactions. It is even alleged, but is yet to be proven coclusively, that several members of the Dominion Parliament are personally involved. It is charged, for example, that motor trucks have been purchased at a price $1,000 each in excess of the price charged to others purchasing the same type of machines. One of the most important things in a soldier's equipment is his footgear. It is charged that boots furnished by Canadian firms to the volunteers were "like blotting paper," and fell to pieces after being worn a short time. Several soldiers, it is alleged, died from exposure incident to using inferior footwear. Horses worth $10 or less are said to have been bought for the army for $90. In the simple matter of surgical dressings, a drug clerk is said to have made $6,000 for his graft syndicate in two days on a small order obtained through a member of Parliament.

To Americans who have frequently visited Canada, and who are aware of the high standards of business ethics prevailing in Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal and throughout the Dominion generally, these charges of petty and despicable graft in army supplies seem incredible. It is due to Canadians generally that the parliamentary committee should promptly sift them to the bottom. If they are unwarranted, speedy contradiction should follow. If they are true, even in part, there should soon be an appreciable increase in the population of the prisons and penitentiaries of the Dominion of Canadian.—Rochester Democrat.

ANOTHER TOLSTOY PLAY

The Quirk offers today Tolstoy's Kreutzer Sonata, with Nance O'Neil, Theda Bara, William E. Shay, Henry Bergman and others of equal ability in the cast. In Kreutzer Sonata Count Tolstoy has woven a wonderfully compelling and heart gripping story about the life of his heroine, Miriam, a young Russian girl. Through an unfortunate love affair Miriam is threatened with disgrace. Her father induces Gregor Randor, a struggling musician, to marry her, for a money consideration, and the couple go to America where they are later followed by Miriam's family, including Celia, her sister. Between Celia and Gragor a clandestine love affair develops. Despite their secrecy the wife discovers the truth and torn between love of her little boy and outraged pride, she confronts her fickle husband and unnatural sister. Her revilings and the denunciations of her father are alike unavailing and at last, driven to desperation, she takes vengeance into her own hands.

2500 WASHINGTONIANS WANT GOOD JOBS

Washington, May 19. (Special correspondence). —Administration officials were stunned a few days ago when 2500 residents of Washington stood in line to receive blanks for applications for positions as unskilled laborers in the government service. Usually there are a few hundred applicants, but 2500 applicants was a severe shock to those who have been contending that prosperity has returned and that the army of the unemployed disbanded.

ECONOMY RUNS TO LOW EBB

Savings Must Come From Employes Serving in Menial Capacities

Washington, May 19.—(Special) —The penny-wise and pound-foolish policy of an administration that saves at the spigot and wastes at the bunghole was illustrated again last week when the Treasury Department made an order placing 4,000 janitors, charwomen and similar employes an on eight-day furlough in order to save a small portion of their already small pittance. Thus the Democratic pledge of economy has the beginning of its fulfillment. After appropriating large sums for new offices and commissions and urging the appropriation of many millions for a dangerous ship-purchase scheme, and finding positions for sons and sons-in-law of members of the Cabinet, the first step in economy is undertaken by cutting the compensation of the hardest worked and poorest paid of all the hundreds of Government employes.

The order which has been made applies to every Federal public building in the United States, for the care of all of which $2,650,000 is appropriated. The burden of the saving that the administration proposes to effect falls upon those who perform the service of sweeping, scrubbing, cleaning cuspidors, etc.

Naturally, the inauguration of this discriminating and unfair scheme of economy has aroused a storm of criticism against the administration. The policy is particularly condemned because the administration has been extravagant in so many other respects where economy could have been practiced with detriment to the public service and without injury to individuals. For example, in numerous instances where the last administration had employed special counsel to conduct litigation in various parts of the United States, the present administration, without any charge of inefficiency, dismissed the attorneys who were conducting the cases and employed other attorneysw ho would necessarily have to study the facts and familiarize themselves with the law, such attorneys being employed in some instances at higher salaries than the experienced men were receiving and without any apparent reason for the change, other than the newly employed ones were "deserving Democrats."

Other men have been appointed to high-salaried positions in the Government service with no apparent special qualification other than their relationship to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Navy. Instead of practicing economy by saving the money paid to these officials, the administration chose to make its first move for the fulfillment of its economy pledge by taking tribute from the poorest paid public servants, who are frequently men and women of advanced age and in dire need of all the compensation they receive.

This act of the Treasury Department has served a valuable end, however, by calling public attention once more to thev iolation of the economy pledge. This subject received wide discussion at the close of the last session of Congress when the Democratic Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations condemned his own party for its extravagaonce and showed that the excess of expenditures was due chiefly to the Executive Departments which had urged appropriations $113,000,000 in excess of the amount Congress appropriated.

This incident has also served a further good end by fore stalling the effort to set aside all other issues and secure public approval for the Wilson administration on the ground that it has not embroiled the United States in European war. The effort to win public approbation because of errors the administration does not commit, will fail because of its own acts which keep before the public its mistakes of a positive and affirmative nature.

Music.—Buell's Full Orchestra at the Onyx Confectionery, Saturday night. adv.

Some people feel free to throw litter in the streets since it will all be cared for in Clean-up Week next year.

Rubber tires for buggies, also baby cabs and go-carts. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

WEALTHY MEN VIOLATE LAWS IN MOUNTAINS

Albany.—With a half dozen proposals already before the Constitutional Convention, the Convention Committee yesterday listened to a sharp difference of opinion about how the State should permit the disposal of the ripe timber in the forest preserve—whether roads and trails should be opened by the State in the parks, and as to various schemes for leasing camp sites in a manner which would permit of morep ermanent habitation.

E. B. Goldthwaite, of Saranac Lake told the committee half a dozen camps belonging to persons of wealth and social prominence on Raquatte Lake were on State land in violation of law. He asked that the new constitution prohibit entirely the cutting of timber in the forest reserves, saying this was necessary to preserve the water supply. He also advocated the leasing of small units of land as camp sites for twenty years, the improvements made on the land in that time revert to the State when the leases expired.

Mr. Goldthwaite advocated the construction of main trunk lines of State road from north to south and from east to west through the Adirondacks and the clearing of pack trails all through the woods, over which fire fighters could be rushed in emergency.

GEM FOR VANDERBILT IN WILL OF FRIEND

New York, May 20.—The will of Frederick Martin Davies, member of the Stock Exchange and a nephew of the late Frederick Townsend Martin and the late Bradley Martin, filed yesterday in Surrogate's Court, leaves a piece of jewelry as a memento to Alfred G. Vanderbilt. The testator died on May 2, five days before the sinking of the Lusitania ended his friend's life.

Mr. Davies provided a trust fund of $50,000 from which Frederick Martin Davies is to receive the income until he is twenty-five years old or is graduated from the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, in case the son decides to enter the academy. Upon the son's graduation from the academy he is to receive $50,000 outright, but if he leaves the institution before graduating the trust fund is to revert to the residuary estate.

To Dr. Samuel W. Lambert Mr. Davies left $5,000. The residue of the estate is left in trust for the wife, and at her death it is to be divided among her three children.

WOMEN'S EMBASSY GOES TO BERLIN

The Hague, May 20.—An embassy from the International Congress of Women, headed by Miss Jane Addams of Chicago left the Dutch capital today for Berlin to intercede with Germany in favor of peace. The embassy in addition to Miss Addams, comprises Dr. Arletta Jacobs and Mrs Richard Palthe, of Holland, and Signora Genoni, of Italy.

Yesterday the delegation was received by Premier Asquith and Foreign Secretary Grey in London, when they presented to the British government official copies of the resolution in favor of peace recently adopted by the Women's Congress at The Hague

EDITORS OF SCHOOL PAPERS WILL MEET

Thhe Association of Editors of High School Papers will hold its third annual conference at New York University on May 22. Professor Gegrge B. Hotchkiss, formerly with the George Batten Advertising agency and now chairman of the advertising courses at New York University, will speak on "Advertising Copy;" Royal J. Davis on "The Editorial Page of High School Papers" and Professor Albert F. Wilson on "Short Story Writing."

Planet Jr. Garden tools and cultivators. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

NEW LAW SAVES COUNTY DOLLARS

Smaller Panels Provided, Besides It Provides for Interchange of Jurors

Oswego county will be saved money under the Sage bill, which amends the law with respect to jury service and has just been signed by the Governor. The law provides that trial jurors drawn for services in any court of record must, by consent of that court, serve as trial jurors in any other part of the same court when it sits in parts or in any other court of record sitting at the same time in the same court house, and that when so serving their services shall be of the same effect as if they had been drawn as trial jurors for service in such other part or court.

The enactment of the bill will mean a saving to Oswego county in that it would do away with the necessity of drawing jurors for County Court, County Court and Supreme Court are for the greater part of the year in session at the same time. A panel of forty-eight jurors is drawn for service in each court.

Only twelve jurors on a panel serve at a time, so thirty-six are idle. Occasionally twenty-four jurors are engaged at the same time, and only in rare instances are thirty-six men employed at once. It is felt that one panel of forty-eight veniremen would suffice for service in both courts. Seldom in the course of a year, it is said, would it be necessary to draw more than forty-eight jurors, and for a part of the year even a smaller number would be sufficient.

"There is no question that the Sage law is in the interest of economy," said Supreme Court Justice Hubbs. "It has been our practice to lend jurors to County Court and borrow them when needed, and in this way we saved a certain amount of money, but this law makes possible the drawing of one panel for both courts."

Under the recent amendment to the surrogate's law, Surrogate Miller is occasionally in need of jurors in his court. When other courts are sitting at the same time and have unemployed jurors, Surrogate Miller under the new law, will be able to procure jurors from these courts.

County Judge Coville believes that the Sage law will mean a saving to the county only by proper administration.

"For a number of years," he said, "we have interchanged jurors between County Court and Supreme Court in the interest of efficiency and economy. The law has no practical application unless administered properly.

"Here in Oswego county we have been working, I believe, with close to a minimum number of jurors. A large amount of money can be wasted by allowing jurors to remain in court the entire day, for which they draw their pay, when it is certain that the case at bar will last the entire day.

"To be sure, the Sage law makes it possible for jurors of Supreme Court and County Court to serve in Surrogate's Court. This will mean a saving, beyond question. The Sage law put into practical application a custom that has followed in Oswego county for years. In other counties, I believe, it will make possible a great saving."

The amendment is to section 566, a new section of article XVI of the judiciary law, which relates to jurors in counties other than New York and Kings.

Phosphate for lawns and gardens. Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

FRESH STRAWBERRIES
EVERY DAY
at LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

THE QUIRK
Matinees, 5c
Nights: Balcony 5c; Main Floor 10c.
CONTINUOUS — 2 to 10:30 P. M.

TODAY
"The Struggle for Pleasure"
2d of the Who Pays Series
CHARLES CHAPLIN
In a Roaring Comedy
"Mabel's Busy Day"
The Thrilling Drama
"At the End of the Bridge"

FRIDAY
NANCE O'NEIL
In
Count Tolstoi's Virile Drama
"Kreutzer Sonata"
AND
Charles Chaplin
in
"The Kid Auto"

SATURDAY
WILLIAM FARNUM in the Magnificent Production of "A GILDED FOOL"
CHARLES CHAPLIN in "THE FATAL MALLET"

All Kinds of
GARDEN SEEDS
by the ounce or pound at
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

Milady's Mirror

Short Skirt With Us.

The return of the short skirt and the popularity of the modern dances have called the feet into prominence again. This means that the woman who cultivates beauty must pay particular attention to her feet. If the ankle is not slender it must be made so, and if the feet are not of a patrician mold their form must be corrected as much as possible.

Exercise and massage will do much for unshapely ankles if the bones are not misshapen. Remove shoes and stockings and sit with one knee crossed over the other. Move the foot about in a circle, using the ankle joint only. When you become tired move the foot up and down until fatigued and then change to the other foot. Another effective exercise is to stand on both feet and turn the feet from side to side at the ankle.

After exercising fill a foot bath with hot water, as hot as you can stand it with comfort, and plunge the feet in this bath. The ankles should be covered, and if a tablespoonful of bicarbonate of soda is added to the water it assists in the flesh melting process. Allow the ankles to remain in this bath fifteen or twenty minutes; then rub them dry and apply a strong solution of alum or camphorated oil. Use firm, vigorous strokes to rub the oil well into the flesh and as a final end of the treatment bind the ankles with strips of linen saturated with the oil. Do not draw these tight enough to hinder the circulation.

To improve the contour of the foot it is necessary to pay attention to the corns, callouses and enlarged joints. Be quite sure that you wear well fitted shoes, for there must be no pressure against any one part of the foot.

Do Not Use Grease on Hair.

Never use grease on the hair. After the shampoo use camomile lotion, rubbing it in carefully with the points of the fingers, and on no account permit it to touch the face, because it will make the face yellow.

This camomile lotion, which cleanses the hair and tones the scalp, promoting circulation, is made thus:

Two large handfuls of camomile: two quarts of water. Boil for fifteen minutes, or until it is as dark as black coffee, then shake and add two quarts of cold water. Put in a stone jar and keep in a cold place. Shake well before using.

Hair to be really beautiful should not lie in heavy, sticky bands, but should stand out hair by hair, as separate as the down of a little chicken. To acquire this use ten drops of ammonia sprinkled in the camomile. It must be added after the mixture has boiled and cooled, otherwise the ammonia will evaporate.

The Use of Soap.

Use soap, but let it be pure soap. There are soaps made from spermaceti, which is the oil taken from the head of the whale. It is very expensive, but one may not economize as to the complexion. This is a recipe for the care of the complexion every day:

On rising massage the face eight or ten minutes. Massage it with the two middle fingers—that is, the second and third—and with a round, not lengthwise, motion. The round motion removes lines. The lengthwise motion makes them. Remove what is left of the cold cream with a linen towel or an old handkerchief, then apply a little more cold cream, then powder.

In the evening take ten to twenty minutes for cleansing your face. First wash it in tepid water—never cold water, except in emergencies of great fatigue—then massage for eight or ten minutes. Remove the cream, then apply more cream, very little more, and so to sleep.

About Nervousness.

No woman can help feeling nervous at times in this age of rush and racket, but it is quite possible to put on the brake, as it were, and not let the nerves run away with us and spoil our beauty. Here are a few hints on the subject:

If people fret you it is not necessary to be rude to them. Try instead to avoid them. Don't read books that irritate you. Books are plentiful; therefore choose another. If noise at night worries you don't let it continue to do so. Get up and see to the matter and put it right.

Don't let yourself get into the habit of being bored. It is not worth while. When you feel it coming on plunge at once into some task that will take all your time and energy.

Fine Skin Tonic.

There is an excellent old skin tonic, used for generations, which will probably be of interest to the women readers of this page. It may be prepared at home and contains nothing that is in the least bit harmful to the face, which is more than can be said of so many of the so called skin tonics on the market. Make a bag of cheesecloth, double thickness, and fill it with bran, a teaspoonful of orris root and a half cake of castile soap chopped up fine. This bag may be used in the bath and on the face and makes the skin smooth, white and firm.

A Museum of Crime.

Professor Hans Gross of the University of Gratz, Austria, has the credit of establishing the first museum of criminology and a criminalistic laboratory, where the weapons, tools and other paraphernalia and materials used by criminals are assembled to assist in the analysis of the workings of criminal minds and a study of methods and systems for dealing with this large and dangerous class of every community. This museum was established in 1895, and since then other establishments of the same character have been organized.

One of the most important of these is the Society of Criminology and Social Defense in Paris, which has a membership of more than 200, including many prominent representatives of the law, the police and medical profession, and it was organized to concentrate and centralize the scattered efforts of individuals who were studying this disquieting social problem and to make the results of their work available for mutual information.

Fasting and Health.

"The practice of fasting," states a medical man, "is, when wisely followed, most beneficial. I am convinced that many people never feel the sensation of natural hunger. All they have is a morbid craving for food which comes of habit rather than from any actual need felt by the stomach. Natural hunger stimulates the palate and is felt in the mouth as well as in the internal organs. It makes the plainest food seem delicious. Some unfortunate people suffer, it is true, from insufficient food, but not so many as those whose ills arise from overnutrition, their digestions being continually over strained. A habit of judicious fasting would do wonders for them. The system would recover its lost tone, and—in the case of mental workers—the brain would work with an ease and lightness that would surprise them, for the brain is one of the chief sufferers from the practice of overeating."

Inappropriate Garb.

"How are you coming along with your new magazine, the Society Girl?"

"All right. But the mailing proposition bothers me."

"How's that?"

"I don't like to send her out in a wrapper."—Louisville Courier Journal.

A Good Actor.

Patience—So she married an actor?

Patrice—Oh, yes!

"Was he a good actor?"

"Oh, yes; he acted as if he loved her."—Yonkers Statesman.

To Lullaby Town.

Ready for bed in her long white nightgown,
Betty is starting for Lullaby Town.
Sweet is the music she hears on the way—
Ready for lullabies, tired of play,
Soft is her carriage; on rockers it goes,
As grandmother counts all the pink little toes.

Each little toe in a vision she'll see,
Safe on her journey on grandmother's knee.
"This is a robin asleep in a tree;
This is a butterfly; this is a bee;
This is a pig with a lovely pink nose,
And this last little one is a tiny white rose."

Ready for bed in her long white nightgown,
Safely goes Betty to Lullaby Town.
Soft is her carriage; on rockers it goes
As grandmother counts all the dear little toes,
Each one as soft and as pink as a rose.

Chairs re-seated—cane, splint or leather; upholstering at reasonable prices. Wm. Lytte, 304 Pine st., Fulton. adv6t

PRETTY LINGERIE.

Simple and Dainty Night Robe, Lace Trimmed.

DIMITY AND LACE NIGHTGOWN.

This is a year when many women are making their own lingerie so they require models that are not too intricate of execution. Shown in this illustration is one of the very prettiest patterns for a simple night robe. The yoke and sleeves are of lace and the gown part is of dimity.

THE HOUSEWIVES' BATTLE.

The Buzzing Fly One of the Deadliest of Insects.

This is the time to begin your warfare upon the fly and precautions taken now are worth all sorts of preventives later on. Every fly that you see buzzing through your rooms and allow to live may breed millions, each one of which may in turn breed millions more. Very often a housewife will not take the bother to chase a single fly, whereas if her rooms were filled with any number of them she would start a clearance at once. If she could only realize that the numbers would never be there if she killed the single one perhaps she would exert herself more at the first glimpse of the dreaded pest.

The spring of the year is the breeding time for flies. In another month, for every single fly that you allow to live today you will find hundreds of thousands. Let that sink into your mind thoroughly. That first fly you just saw buzzing about in the sunshine—look through and beyond that single fly and see its thousands and thousands of progeny. Don't you think you will save time and trouble later on by killing that single fly now?

Swat the fly! Let this be your slogan if you wish to keep your household free of sickness and disease this summer. Teach your children to swat them too. They will do it gladly if you will just arm them each with a weapon which looks very much like a miniature tennis racket made out of flexible wire, and turn them loose in the rooms. They will make a game of it and will clear up all the flies in sight.

SWAT THE FLY.

To Remove Stains.

Blood Stains.—Use a tepid solution of a tablespoonful of kerosene to a gallon of water. Let stand a few minutes, then wash in cold water.

Egg Stains.—Table salt and a wet cloth will remove egg stains from silver.

Fruit Stains.—Put one heaping tablespoonful of gum camphor in a two ounce bottle of good whisky. Shake well before using and apply freely to stains when counting soiled clothes.

Grass Stains.—Wash the spot in alcohol, then in clear water.

Ink Stains.—Cover the spot with salt, squeeze lemon juice over it and expose to the sun.

Iron Rust.—Cover thickly with powdered alum and steam ten minutes over a teakettle of boiling water.

STARCHED COLLARS USED.

Starched linen and pique collars are attractive below round, youthful faces, but they are hopelessly trying on thin faced women and on women past the freshness of youth. With these childish collars are worn knotted ties of soft silk in striped black and white or dotted black and white effects, or of crepe de chine in sombre shadings. The effect with one of the new mannishly tailored suits is very smart, indeed, but women of mature years do best to confine themselves to a more formal type of collar of handkerchief lawn or batiste touched with a little hand embroidery or finished with hemstitching. A collar of some sort, however, must turn over on the dark tailored coat to give it the correct air.

FOR OUTING WEAR.

Chic Chapeau of Flexible Straw For the Little Man.

WHITE STRAW HAT.

Smart in the extreme are the outing hats shown this year for the smaller fry. Take the one in the illustration, for example. This hat is of white flexible straw, built with a hexagonal crown and a flexible brim, which may be worn turned either up or down. A band of white grosgrain ribbon ends in a jaunty bow at the side.

HOW TO DRESS.

The Advice of a Famous Actress Not to Be Followed Too Closely.

"Dress your character, not your figure," is the advice of a famous actress—and rather surprising this advice seems at first hearing. But think it over well and the excellence of the idea will appeal to you. Every woman has a certain individuality of her own—a temperament, if you will—that makes her a little, or perhaps a good deal, different from all other women. It is this individuality—this temperament—that woman should dress up to, according to the actress, in order to make the personality more marked and convincing.

But an instinctive carrying out of this advice with no heed to the promptings of reason may result in disaster. For example, there is always the woman who weighs 200 pounds or thereabouts, but whose personality is distinctly kittenish. Is she to dress her character—or her figure? There is also the little woman who ought to belong to the cuddly, appealing class, who yearns to be impressive and stately. If she insists upon wearing the garments of the grenadier woman she may spoil her chances of being fascinatingly charming.

The actress in her part always is dressed in conformity with the character she is portraying, but her costumes—and here is an important point—are made to suit her figure, lines while expressing a special sort of personality. Therefore if the delightful flounces of the 1850 period suit your type exactly, but are a bit trying to your too solid figure, adopt the flounces, but see to it that they are so cut and so arranged that the lines of the silhouette are right. This is true also of pert millinery styles, of classic draperies or oriental modes. They all may be worn, when they suit the personality, if their lines are cleverly adapted to the figure that is to sustain them.

LOOK UPON THE BRIGHT SIDE.

Pollyanna is the girl in a story who helped others to look on the bright side of things, however dark they seemed to be, and when she discovered how well her plans had worked realized that she had taught others to play her own game better than she could play it herself. How easy that is for most persons, even those who have not the spiritual insight of such a girl as Pollyanna! A mother teaches her child to be brave and to strive for high ideals. All the time she may be sure that she is herself a moral and physical coward and that she often falls below the average in her acceptance of ideals.

"I am not fit to do this work," a man or woman may say on whom devolves something that presupposes not only intelligence, but high moral purpose. The very fact that he questions himself indicates that he is fit in a way and that understanding what is required of him he may at least approximate it.

Those who have not the ability to persuade themselves to look for the bright things of life may at least help others to do it and in the doing may profit by the experience.

Very reverently a mother looks upon the task of leading her children in the right way. "What am I," she asks herself, "vain and frivolous as I am, to be intrusted with the upbringing of a child?" But no doubt the very fact that she does not preach, but leads her children in a sweet, human way, makes better children of them.

Life to be perfect must be well balanced, and the grave must not be allowed to outweigh the gay. A child playing marbles or spinning a top can be taught to be careful and considerate, to play fair and respect the rights of others and many other things, just as well as in his Sunday school class. Moral education is not a matter of a few hours one day in the week, but every day, from morning until night, a mother must lead her child by threads of precept and example, so strong that he cannot go astray and so light that they are not irksome.

The Orang Outang Is a Creature of Great Imitative Ability.

In hotels and private houses of India monkeys have been found that were trained to wait at table, bringing dishes and articles of food in a more or less mechanical way.

The story of the talented orang outang of Buffon, the naturalist, is classic. This creature gave visitors his arm, walked with them, showed them to the door, ate with a knife and fork and drank from a glass, poured tea into a cup, sweetened it and waited till it cooled before he drank it.

An orang outang at the Jardin des Plantes in Paris regularly unlocked with a key the door of the compartment he occupied, opened the door, locked it on the other side after he had entered and then hung the key on a nail.

Flourens relates that he once visited the Jardin des Plantes in company with an aged scholar whose appearance greatly interested this orang outang, which was at large in the rooms of the institution. The scholar wore old fashioned clothes, one article of which was a tall hat with a wide brim. He was much bent from age and in walking supported himself with a heavy cane.

When the two men were about to depart the hat and cane of the old man were missing. Presently the orang outang was seen tottering through the room, his back bent almost double, wearing the hat upon his head and walking stiffly by the aid of the cane.—Chicago Herald.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN.

Story of the Growth of a Famous New York City Landmark.

Madison Square Garden, indissolubly associated with the city of New York, was purchased in 1853 by the Harlem railroad after the extinction of the old eastern post road, which ran diagonally across the block. In 1854 the railroad company put up sheds for the handling of the early morning milk supply and farm products.

In 1868 the train sheds were rebuilt to house a passenger terminal of the Harlem on Twenty-sixth street and of the New Haven road on Twenty-seventh street, the trains being broken up at the present Grand Central and the separate cars being drawn down by mules.

The railway ceased to use the building in 1871, and in 1873 it was remodeled and leased to Barnum for the congress of nations. Sheridan Shook and Patrick Gilmore, in joint conduct of a museum, were the next tenants. Barnum returned with the circus and menagerie April 27, 1874. Gilmore took the place for the next season and produced the first of his concerts May 29, 1875.

On May 31, 1879, the place was first designated Madison Square Garden. The tearing down of the old building was begun Aug. 7, 1889. The present structure was formally opened June 16, 1890.—Argonaut.

Health For Canaries.

Even a canary must be cared for judiciously if its life is to be happy. Regular exercise outside its cage is desirable, if its owner has time to look after this exercise. A scrupulously clean cage, fresh water and seed every day, greens of some sort—lettuce, celery, plantain—once or twice a week and enforced abstinence from sugar, sweet biscuits and other odds and ends that are often fed to birds—these details insure health and, therefore, happiness to the caged bird. Perhaps the fact that it is caged, that it has so few ways of making its wants known, should make its owner more careful of its health than she would be even of the health of a dog or cat.—New York Sun.

Pictures In Gardens.

Above most other arts, landscape architecture is based on nature, and the art should be practiced on natural lines. The evolution of growing things the development of distinct types of effect, although greatly varied, can be, and should be, made to bear the stamp alike of definite, though perhaps instinctive, ideas throughout the various kinds of landscape gardening, whether it be a park, an estate, a village garden or a window box. It should make a fine picture, no matter how small or how large.—New York Telegram.

Cash Prize.

Flatbush—He always was a lucky sort of a guy.

Bensonhurst—What's happened?

"He's got the cash prize in a lottery."

"Really?"

"Yes, he's just married money."—Yonkers Statesman.

Protection.

"What's the idea of using the pronoun 'we' so often in your articles?"

"Well," replied the editor, "it's a matter of self protection. In case anybody takes offense I want to sound as much as possible like a crowd."—Philadelphia Record.

Tempus Fugit.

"I want a warrant for the arrest of Father Time."

"What's the charge?"

"Outrageous and continuous violation of the speed laws."—Judge.

The Proper Kind.

"I will give the boys' athletic club an acrobatic lunch today."

"What is that?"

"One consisting of turnovers."—Baltimore American.

He who lives after nature shall never be poor; after opinion, shall never be rich.—Seneca.

HOW A SHIRKER WON SUCCESS

Luck Proves Better Than Labor In One Case.

"This talk," said the lounger in the country store, "about hard work bein' at the bottom of big fortunes is all bosh. There's more fortunes started by savin' than hard work, more by rascality than by savin' and more by luck than either. Did I ever tell you about Tommy Shirk, the laziest man in the state? No? Well, I'll give it to you.

"Tommy married Phoebe Cutts and $800. Tom had ten acres o' land that wouldn't even grow blackberries. He puttered along tryin' to git somethin' outen it, or pretendin' to, till half his wife's money had been eaten up, then Phoebe said he'd have to find some way of makin' a livin'. Tommy was a good deal cut up by this and went off to a corner of his land that was overgrown with weeds and lay down to think it over. Gittin' his nose right down on the ground, he smelled kerosene. At first he thought some un had spilled it outen a lantern, but on diggin' up the dirt with his knife he found that oil was oozin' from below and the furder he went down the more of it there was.

"Well, Tom went home and told his wife that there was oil on the property. She laughed at him, but he tuk her to the spot and let her smell it. Tom tuk his spade with him, an' made a hole an' proved to his wife's satisfaction that the oil came from below. She had $400 hid away in a stockin', and in less'n a month that money was goin' outen the stockin' just about as fast as a well was bein' sunk where the oil was oozin'. Mrs. Shirk was almost crazy, seen they kept borin' without gettin' oil, but she resolved to put it all in an' take whatever done was at the end. One night she handed over the last dollar and had not struck oil.

"The next day after dinner Mrs. Shirk was wipin' the dishes and wettin' 'em ag'in with her tears when the boss come to the door and said:

"'Mrs. Shirk, we've got down to where there's oil, but it's not a-flowin' well. It has to be pumped up.'

"The Shirk family was in a more tantalizin' position than before. There was oil at the bottom of a well, but no means o' gettin' it up. If Tom hadn't been so cussed lazy he might have done some pumpin' himself. Weeks passed, and the family was nigh on to starvin'. One night a big storm come up, a regular cloudburst, and when mornin' come a creek that had run a mile from the Shirk farm had been turned from its channel and was a-runnin' not a hundred yards from the house. Mrs. Shirk tuk on, lamentin' that the water must run right over the oil well and they'd never git nothin' but water outen it. Tommy, who was a cheerful feller—them wo'thless cusses always is—tried to console her, but there warn't no use, so he said he'd go and see about it. Perty soon he come back and said to his wife:

"'Phoebe, the creek is a-runnin' right by the well, not over it.'

"'Well, then,' she answered, 'if you've got a spark o' energy left you'll go to work, pump out some oil, sell it and git us somethin' to eat.'

"'I got a better scheme 'n that,' he said.

"'I don't want to hear none o' your schemes,' the indignant wife answered. 'I want to see some work.'

"'Wimmen hain't no brains for schemes,' said Tom, and he went away.

"There was an old water wheel on the place, to which a former owner of the property had dug a sluice and had run a saw. Tommy Shirk was too lazy to do any work himself, but he hired a man on tick to haul the wheel to his well. Then he went home and tuk down the pump and tuk it to the well too. He rigged the pump to the water wheel, which was turned by the stream. Jist as the oil begun to flow along comes Mrs. Shirk. Tom was restin' on his back, with his hat over his eyes, smokin' his pipe. His wife, not noticin' the pumpin' and seein' Tom takin' it easy, begun to fire words at him. Tom raised his hand without even liftin' his hat offen his face and pointed at the pump throwin' out oil.

"That was the last time Mrs. Shirk ever spoke disrespectful to her husband. She admitted that if he was lazy he had two redeemin' p'ints—luck and ingenuity. Tom connected his well with a pipe line that run near by, and the oil ran merrily, Shirk charging it up at the market price per barrel. His well produced about twenty barrels a day, and even with oil at 50 cents a barrel he made about $10 a day. Bimeby he sunk another well and got another supply of oil about as large as the first. The same stream and water wheel and pump did the work, and Tom had only to make out a bill for $20 where before he had made out one for $10.

"Tom Shirk still smokes his pipe in the sun, with his hat over his eyes, but he usually does it on the porch of a fine house he has built on the spot where his cabin used to be. Mrs. Shirk has come to consider him a prodigy of genius, and they all git a lot o' good outen their oil wells. When they want to go away they jist let the pump go on pumpin'. It works as well at night as in the daytime.

"What I means by this yarn is: Gimme the luck and give the other feller the energy."

D/34

S. Lipsky & Son

The Stylepius Store

17

The Best Suit for the Money That Can Be Found

SEE OUR

$10
$12
$15

SUITS

You can save $3 to $5 on every Suit

Boys' Suits

Sizes 12 to 18

About 20 Suits, one of a kind left, values up to $5.00

$2.98

S. Lipsky & Son

27 First Street Fulton, N. Y.

AMONG STUDENTS

Fulton High School Pupils Cheer Clean-Up Campaign In City

We are all familiar with the words regarding a journey 'to the ants—considering their ways and being wise,' but here in our city should live our own little slogan—Go to Old High, you Citizen, consider its ways or die!

This morning a delegate from the Chamber of Commerce informally spoke to the student body on the "Clean-Up." Their co-operation was invited and when they were informed the city is their home as much as the house they live in, they looked as happy over the fact as a lot of live, bright, enthusiastic young people can look.

When their presence was requested at the "Community Bonfire," that a fitting demonstration be made by voice and antic, cheermaster Leland Carner mounted his desk and in a twinkling three big, loud, lusty cheers for "Clean-Up" made the very air ring.

That's the spirit in old Fulton High, and right here let it be said that for any citizen to sit facing that all too small assembly room, with the students packed in like sardines (no reflection boys and girls) and not to see the pressing need of a real high school he must indeed be a hard shelled what-do-you-call-it.

In each department activity reigns supreme—Handicapped by space and facilities the work under the corps of efficient teachers is doing the untmost to overcome the great handicap. Every taxpayer, every father and mother, every citizen should take a peep at the interior of the high school during its active hours and then—"consider its ways or die."

The Falley Seminary site, an ideal spot, may not be chosen as the place for the erection of our new high school. Where then, is the natural question?

No citizen or group of citizens should block the desire of the community at large—especially in a matter concerning our public schools.

A new high school is needed—and must come in the near future. How will the proposition be met if the Falley site is disposed of to other interests. Even in the matter of temporary quarters for the grades now being housed in the Falley Seminary. What is the solution?

Come let us reason together. A public debate on this question should serve the community as a whole.

AND POPULARITY

Educators Hope to Awaken Parents and Pupils in Care of Teeth

John H. Walsh, superintendent of New York city's public schools, advances a new line of thought relative to the coming celebration on May 28 of "Tothbrush Day." Mr. Walsh says:

"By setting in motion the machinery for a week of special attention to the teeth of the elementary school children of this city, the Board of Education hopes to accomplish much more than merely discovering whether every child has a toothbrush and knows how to use it properly. It hopes to awaken the children and their parents to the startling results of bad teeth; to influence the parents to see that their children get the proper dental attention, and also to increase the efficiency of the child.

"When I was in charge of the department of compulsory education and had to investigate the truancy of many children every week it occurred to me that there often was some reason other than sheer willfulness which led a child to stay away from school. I gathered enough evidence to convince me that in a great number of cases the boy or girl had good and sufficient reason for remaining absent. Many times a defective tooth had put a child on the black list when he should have been in the dentist's chair. Children are usually inarticulate unless their bodily discomfort is excessive.

"One boy I was interested in, for instance, first came to my attention because of apparent incorrigibility. His teacher made a kindly investigation and discovered that the boy had been coming to school without his breakfast, because he had a widowed mother, who had taken to drink. The teacher brought food to school for him every morning and the boy came back to normal without trouble.

"And I still believe that a child who has a toothache or any sort of ache is better off out in the park than sitting in front of a schoolroom desk. Malnutrition is the root of much trouble in our schools, I am convinced.

"Toothbrush week, or Dental Hygiene Week, as it is officially known, ought to be productive of great good along those lines. Children are reasonable enough to appreciate its value, and I have confidence that they will make the most of the lessons we will try to instill during the week.

"With the practical talks and demonstrations, the lantern slides and the toothbrush drill on Friday, the children are not likely to regard their toothbrushes with that fine indifference which they have shown in the past. Instead, we hope the children will take up their toothbrushes in the morning with the idea that it is not an annoying detail of the morning rush to get ready for school, but an interesting experiment in personal comfort.'

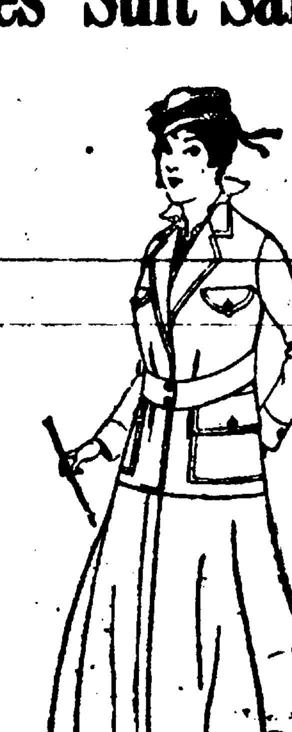
FOR WOMEN

"The New York Shop"

A REMARKABLE EVENT

Womens' and Misses' Suit Sale

We have selected from our stock several stylish models in Checks, Gabardines, Serges and Poplins; which go on sale Friday and Saturday at $9.98. These Suits usually retail for $22.50 and $15.00.



Unusual Values in Waists

A special lot of Muslin, Silk, Crepe and Voile Waists, for Friday and Saturday at 49c each. Regular 98c quality.

It's Just Correct Weather to Wear WHITE COATS

We are in receipt of many new exclusive patterns to select from, priced at $5.75, $9.98, $10.75 and $15.75.

Exclusive Ready-to-wear of the Better Class is always on Display at

M. J. McDONALD'S

Oneida Street

Community Notes

Edward Joslin has returned from a business trip to New York. Mr. Joslin had the pleasure of visiting some of the battleships stationed in the harbor.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rudd of S. 3d st., were in Palermo Sunday.

* * *

Miss Mabel Morrison of Worth st. is entertaining Miss Bertha Smith of Syracuse.

* * *

Mrs. B. S. McKinstry and Mrs. McCully have been guests of Mrs. E. M Baldwin at Mt Pleasant.

* * *

Miss Marjorie Haskins of this city has been the guest of out of town friends.

* * *

Miss Mary Wells has as her guest Miss Fannie Byme of Baldwinsville.

* * *

Howard Rowlee of Ithaca was a recent guest of Fulton friends.

* * *

Prof. Wilcox announces the high school report cards have been given out to pupils and their prompt return with the parent's signature is desired.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Brown of Rochester were in the city today.

* * *

Miss Frances Lewis of Worth st. has taken a position as teacher in the 6th and 7th grades at Henderson, N.Y.

* * *

Mrs. William Bradt of Lincoln, Neb. is visting Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hulett of South 1st st.

* * *

The Woman's Civic League will meet at 3:30 tomorrow with Mrs. Suydam, 409 Buffalo st. Matters of importance will be brought up and a full membership is urged to be present.

* * *

Charles M. Allen caused to be filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday a deed conveying business property in this city to the Charles M. Allen, Inc., the indicated consideration being $6,000.

* * *

Attorney H. L. Gilman will take a petition before Referee in Bankruptcy Wright on Saturday in behalf of Horace E. Ball of this city.

* * *

Mrs. Jessie Lamphere has as her guest Miss Violet Hessler of Syracuse.

* * *

Orin Bogardus has gone to Clifton Springs to recuperate from his recent illness.

* * *

Mrs. Henrietta Roe, who has been seriously ill is convalescent.

* * *

People with "taking ways" have been greatly in evidence in the city of late. Articles ranging all the way from garden tools to silk shirts have been gathered in.

Tire Vulcanizing Van Wagenen Inc. adv133

WANTED

Second-Hand Counter, Desk, Cash Register and Safe

L. P. SMITH COMPANY

We are Agents for

CHASE & SANBORN'S

Fine Teas and Coffees

LA PORTE'S GROCERY

Oneida St. Hello 75

JULIA SOON HAD ENOUGH.

Got Anthony by Mail, but Postage Came Heavy.

Detroit, Mich.—Anthony Merz, fifty-eight, wanted a wife and money and wanted them in a hurry, so he tried the mail order method in a matrimonial publication. Here is the result:

Monday, received an answer from Julia Bekeke.

Tuesday, she came to Detroit.

Wednesday, they were married.

Thursday, they quarreled.

Friday, a warrant charging him with threats was obtained by the bride.

Saturday, Anthony was tried before Justice Stein.

By noon Attorney Alpert said he would have on file a bill for divorce in the circuit court.

"He didn't want me," said the mail order bride. "Just wanted my money. I gave him $100 to open a restaurant, but he changed his mind about that and asked for more cash. Then I left him. I'm going to get a divorce."

THIS BOY OWNS BALL PARK.

Gardner's Father Bought It For Him to Play In.

St. Louis.—Prospects are bright for a fourflusher of a time this summer for Rodgers Gardner, thirteen-year-old son of Russell E. Gardner, president of a big buggy company. His father has leased a whole ball park for him.

Heretofore the corner lot hierarchy reached its apex in the boy who owned a dollar 'n' a quarter baseball, a catcher's glove and an infielder's mitt. Even then he was always likely to be toppled from his throne by some interloper with a wagon tongue bat and an out drop curve. But when a fellow owns a whole park he's reasonably safe.

Russell E. Gardiner the other night closed a lease on the vacant corner at Laclede and Euclid avenues and has arranged to have it fenced and laid out in baseball grounds by the time the son returns from a military school for his summer vacation.

TWO GREAT INVENTORS.

Their Foresight Did Not Equal Their Ingenious Ability.

Not infrequently great inventors do not comprehend the significance of the thing they have produced. An interesting anecdote of two famous men of science whose foresight did not equal their inventive ability appears in Les Inventions Illustrees.

When Hertz first began to obtain satisfactory results from his now famous researches into the possibility of transmitting electric waves certain men of science suggested that some day similar vibrations might serve to transmit messages through space. Hertz laughed at the hypothesis and assured all comers that his experiments were for laboratories only. Now, after a few short years, it is hard to find a single issue of a daily paper that does not record some noteworthy example of the use of wireless telegraphy.

Levassor was the great engineer who sketched the automobile with such skill that his design has not been materially changed to this day. After Levassor accomplished his historic trip from Paris to Bordeaux and return at the dizzy speed of about fifteen miles an hour his admirers gave him a banquet. During the toasts one of them, stirred by the spirit of the occasion, rose and enthusiastically called on the assembly to drink to the approaching day when carriages should travel at the speed of sixty miles an hour. Levassor turned to his nearest neighbor and asked in a quick undertone, "Why is it that after every banquet some people feel called on to make fools of themselves?"

IRON IN WATER.

It Takes Only the Least Little Bit to Make Itself Felt.

Half a part per million of iron in water is detectable by taste, and more than four or five parts makes water unpalatable. In some mineral springs iron is the constituent which imparts a medicinal value to the water, but ordinarily it is undesirable. More than 2.5 parts per million in water used for laundering makes a stain on the clothes. Iron must be removed from water from which ice is made or a cloudy, discolored product will result. An iron content of over two or three parts per million in water used in the manufacture of paper will stain the paper.

Iron is harmful in water used for steaming, for it is in equilibrium with acids which inside the boiler become dissociated, with the result that the free acids corrode the boiler plates; but the amount of iron carried in solution by most waters is so small that the damage it does to steam boilers generally amounts to little.

Waters having a high iron content have in some places, where they have been used as city supplies, caused an immense amount of trouble and expense, for they favor the growth of crenothrix to such a degree that the water pipes become clogged with the iron sheaths of that organism. The removal of iron from water is sometimes easy and sometimes very difficult.—United States Geological Survey.

Quits.

Little Maudie would tell "whappers." One day her aunt thought she ought to be cured of this habit, so she spoke seriously to the little maid, who promised to mend her ways.

To point the moral auntie told the fable of the shepherd boy who was always calling "Wolf!" until no one could believe him. Then one day the wolf really came and ate up all the sheep.

"All the sheep?" interrupted Maudie.

"Yes, every one of them," replied auntie decidedly.

"Every single one?"

Auntie nodded.

"Well," said Maudie slowly, "I don't believe you, and you don't believe me. So there!"—London Answers.

Tough on the Joker.

The contributor wrote a joke about a plumber whose bills were always normal. "That," said the editor, rejecting it, "is not a joke, it's simply a lie."

The contributor tried again with a story of the plumber whose charges left nothing to be desired on the score of size. "That," said the editor, who had suffered, "is not a lie. Neither is it a joke."—London Scraps.

Food For Punsters.

"I don't see how Fussleigh gets any enjoyment out of his food. He's dieting, you know."

"Yes."

"He uses this new 'mathematical masticatory' system."

"Good gracious, what's that? So many chews to the mouthful?"

"No. He eats beans by the dozen, rice by the grain, fish by the perch and spaghetti by the yard."

"Does he seem better?"

"Measurably so."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Drink Plenty of Water.

A Roumanian scientist claims that any one can live to be 100 years old, barring accidents, if he drinks enough water. He declares he has discovered that old age is due to a decrease in the amount of water in the system and that Father Time may be checkmated by systematic water drinking during middle age.

Buying Wives.

Wives are still obtained by purchase in some parts of Russia. In the district of Kamyshin, on the Volga, this is practically the only way in which marriages are brought about. The price of a pretty girl from a well to do family ranges from $100 to $200.

Same Way.

"How did you find dear old Broadway?"

"That way yet."

"What way?"

"Old and dear."—Cleveland Leader.

Be satisfied with success in even the smallest matter and think that even such a result is no trifle.—Marcus Aurelius.

REAL BARGAINS

For Careful Buyers

$350 Styvesant Upright, Beautiful Figured Mahogany, used 6 months, at	$225
$390 Claudon Upright, like new	$245
$250 Kremlin Upright, like new	$150
$300 Mason, Boston Upright	$165

The above great values sold on our easy payment plan or liberal discount to cash purchases.

DON'T MISS THIS OPPORTUNITY COME IN AT ONCE

Bogue Piano Store

61 First Street

SPECIAL NOTICE

No miscellaneous Want Ads will be accepted for the daily issue later than 12 o'clock noon.

In order that display advertising may secure preferred position copy must reach this office not later than 9 a.m. on day on which service is to be rendered.

MISCELLANEOUS WANTS.

House to Rent—in 4th st., with all modern improvements. Also, one on 5th st. Rooms to rent in Waldborn Block. S. Waldhorn, 18 1st st. tf.

Wanted—Competent young woman as stenographer and bookkeeper, for the summer. Post office box 74, or phone 56. tf

Upper Flat—Moderate rent, 214 Walradt st. 6 rooms and all modern cnoveniences. H. L. Crandall. tf

Wanted—By Polish girl of 16, position with family; good references. Address, 224 W. 1st st. 131c

Wanted—Woman for housework. Apply to Mrs. W. A. Butts, 351 South Fourth st. 131

Flat To Let—202 S. 3d st. R. L. McCully. 138

To Rent—Flat, lower, at 608 Rochester st, 130c

WATER GLASS
EGG PRESERVER
By the Quart or Gallon
LaPorte's Grocery
Oneida St. Hello 75

MILK BOTTLES TO BE CLEANED

Health Board Permits Chickens Under Restrictions—Meat Store Displays

By a resolution passed last night by the Board of Health, chicken owners of the city will be able to secure liscences to maintain their yards within city limits and the Health Officer will issue permits to garbage collectors. Since the ordinance which forbids the keeping of chickens within the city limits has been given publicity, many poultry fanciers have been up in arms. Now the Health Officer will issue permits to those who wish to keep chickens but it will not be necessary for the owners to obtain permits unless a complaint is made against their fowls. The Health Officer will investigate all complaints and in cases where he does not deem the complaint justified he will issue a permit which will allow the poultry owners to maintain their yards without interference. Permits will be required of all garbage collectors.

The following were present at last night's meeting whlich was the first to be held since January 6; Messrs. Brooks, Morton, Carvey, Miller, Donovan, Dr. Kellar, Dr. Whitaker, Dr. Kennedy and Mayor Fox.

Dr. Whitaker made his report for the month of March which ineluded one case of diptheria one of tuberculosis, one of whooping cough and one of scarlet fever. For them onth of April there were five cases of measles, one case of chicken pox, one of tuberculosis, two of typhoid and one of scarlet fever. On March 27, Dr. Chase of the State Board of Health took samples of the city water and his report will be announced later. The State Board notified the local body that certain suggestions which were made in 1914 relative to the city's water supply have not been carried out and unless some action is taken the State will do the work and charge the cost to the city. Complaints were received from several citizens that the dirt and mud cleaned from some streets of the city were being dumped upon other streets.

Residents of South 5th st. entered a complaint through the State Board protesting against an unsanitary condition which is alleged to exist at the intersection of Fay st. and 5th st. The spot of ground referred to is filled with ashes and tin cans and thhe residents who entered the complaint stated that the ground was covered with wash water and fifth from which a bad ordor arose. Dr. Whitaker stated that the drainage in that section was imperfect which accounted for the presence of water on the lot. Improvements will be made at once.

... due to fresh east winds.

Butchers will be compelled hereafter to show the heart, lungs, and liver of any beef, pork, veal or lamb carcass which hangs in their establishment upon request of the city inspector or of the purchaser, meat with the government stamp to be exempt from this provision.

A communication was received from the Lungmotor company of Chicago but no action was taken by the Board. A spite fence on Buffalo st. was reported but no action was taken.

Milk venders will not be allowed to fill bottles left on thep orches until they have been sterilized and this rule will be strictly enforced. The Clean-Up campaign was discussed and endorsed.

GEORGE M. WARD

Rev. George M. Ward, aged 69, died at the home of his son Charles F. Ward of Volney yesterday. Mr. Ward was removed from his home at Bristol Hill to the home of his son last week. He is survived by hi s widow and one son.

Mr. Ward was born in Volney June 3, 1845 and in his early days he was engaged in farm ing. He joined the 184th N. Y. Infantry when the Civil war broke out and after the war became a member of Sherman Post G. A. R., of Vermillion. Twenty-five years ago he studied for the ministry and was enrolled in the Methodist Episcopal church and assigned to the church at Bristol Hill. He was taken ill with pneumonia last spring and forced to give up his pastorate because of ill health.

The funeral will be held from his late residence Saturday at 2 o'clock and services will also be held in this city later in the day; Rev. Charles Olmstead of the Congregational church of this city will officiate assisted by Rev. J. W. Barrett of the First Methodist Episcopal church. Interment will be made in Mt. Adnah cemetery.

FULTON PARTY WILL SEE PENN RELAYS

Superintendent of schools, J. R. Fairgrieve, his son James, and Harold Caffrey will leave today for Philadelphia where they will be the guest of Thomas Johnson of this city, an alumni of Fulton High school who is now attending the University of Pennsylvania. While in the Quaker city the Fulton party will see the Penn relay races Saturday, an event of great importance in the athletic world and a trip to Princetown will be made. Caffrey expects to enter Princeton in the fall.

THE BROOM BRIGADE

A broom brigade made a clean sweep through the business section this morning. Shipman's store had a broom sale on and there was such a demand for this implement of warfare that several hundred of them were sold within an hour. "Shoulder your Broom." is the present day slogan in Fulton. Forward, March!

Fulton Keynotes

Mrs. William Hunter is recovering from a serious illness.

* * *

Almon Bristol is in Rochester on business.

* * *

Tomorrow is Robbin Day. Get your contribution on the curb at 8 o'clock in the morning when free collection will be made.

* * *

A daughter, Muriel Marie, was born this morning to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Milvo, Park street.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stauring of S. Third st. were called to Syracuse Tuesday by the serious illness and death of Mr. Stauring's mother.

A Big Difference.

"I notice a great change in your little boy."

"As to how?"

"He used to dawdle and lag when you sent him in the morning to the store. Now he's off like the wind."

"He's a boy scout now, with a message to Rain-in-the-Face, the grocer."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Music.—Buell's Full Orchestra at the Onyx Confectionery, Saturday night. adv.

PERILS ARE MANY

Is Verdict of Speaker Before Savings Bank Association Today

New York, May 20.—The benefits derived from the co-operation given by the bankers of New York State in dealing with th egeneral financial disturbances created by the European War were pointed out by State Superintendent of Banks, Eugene Lamb Richards, in a speech here today before the annual convention of the Savings Banks Association of the State of New York. Superintendent of Banks Richards emphasied the necessity for continuing this co-operation declaring that the coming year may try our courage and our patriotism even harder than has the last one.

"A year ago today," said Superintendent Richards, "when this Association was in convention, I pictured the savings bank system as a great suspension bridge woven from many little strands into a great highway for the people of this State by your ability and industry. Since then momentous things have happened. A world-wide cataclysm, with wars and rumors of wars, has shaken, and is still shaking the earth. But your bridge still stands, and stands not only because it was well built but because it has been well maintained by you whose duty it was to maintain it. You have kept the bridge. You have kept your faith with the people. And this faith rests on someting more than either brains or bullion. Our banks have wealth; our bankers have brains. But these are not all. The essential foundation of the people's faith — which is public confidence—has been character, and that charaeter which has given ourb anks and bankers what they have today—the financial leadership of the world.

"However, everyone realizes that many factors besides general financial disturbances have been and still are threatening to impair the usefulness of the savings bank system. You are facing competition for savings accounts from the postal savings banks, the trust companies, and the banks of discount, to say nothing of the agitation for municipal savings banks and governmental guaranty for national bank deposits; — all these things are disturbing elements, even though you have hitherto overcome them.

"And the whole banking community must face these problems unselfishly, with good judgment and with open minds. All of us must be willing to listen to proposed remedies, and while the banking millenium of complete co-operation and absolute solvency may never arrive, we must do our share to bring it nearer.

"On my mind one thought has been indelibly impressed by the events of this strenuous year. It is more than a thought. It is a conviction,—the conviction that some way must soon be devised to satisfy the depositors in every bank of this State that their money is as safe there as a deposit in the United States Treasury.

"The watchword of our success has been co-operation, not only between the banks themselves, but also between the banks and the Department. No commander at thef ront ever displayed more courage and patriotism than have our leading financiers during that period. Courage and patriotism are not the sole possession of the soldier, Peace as well as War has her victories and her heroes. And many a banker of this State has had to show and has shown more real courage—moral courage— than thousands of men in lines of battle, the courage which has kept a smiling front to those who might have so read panic through our country.

"The present need of the country is true patriotism—patriotism in time of peace! The patriotism which love of country and of serving the country and one's fellow men, not the mere worship of past deeds of dead men.—

"'Men, not Measures' is more than ever the need of the hour. Among the Orientals the highest term of reverence and respect, the term by which rulers of the East are addressed, is 'Protector of the Poor.' I like to think of you and me as that, and a little more, guarding one against the other with even-handed justice, so that debtor and creditor, merchant and clerk, employer and laborer, shall all have been better for our work, and that each of us in his own way shall have done something to advance the comfort, happiness and prosperity of ... year may try our courage and our patriotism even harder than has the one now past. With such examples of quiet courage as the past two weeks have given us, remembering as we may the words of that quiet hero, a man whose quality of courage few men knew till a few days ago, "Why fear Death! It is the most beautiful adventure in Life," remembering as we must the lonely figure of our President carrying without murmur and with wise courage the burden of responsibility for a hundred million souls, remembering these, let us so live and work for our fellow men, that we may say, with the poet Henley:

"It matters not how straight the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul."

TALKS IN HER SLEEP AWAKE, SPEECHLESS

Atlantic City, May 20.—Frightened speechless by a dream she had three weeks ago, Miss Joan E. Wing, of 288 St. Nicholas avenue, New York, is here in the hope that rest and sea air will restore her voice.

Physicians have diagnosed her ailment as a temporary paralysis of the vocal cords. Her mother insists that she is able to talk in her sleep, but that when awakened she finds articulation impossible.

The stricken girl spends most of the day upon the Boardwalk. In response to questions, she wrote on a sheet of paper the statement that she was engaged to a Mr. Russell, of 14 Wall street. "I am quite satisfied with single bliss until after the war, at least," she wrote, with a smile. "I am only sorry that I cannot root for the New York Giants. I adore them.

35,000 MEN AND WOMEN TO MARCH FOR SUNDAY

Paterson, May 20.—No doubt was left last night that "Billy" Sunday had captured Paterson, N. J., heart and soul. That city, which a few years ago began a fight to overcome a reputation for ungodliness, if not wickedness, filled his tabernacle with delegations from the factories and stores and from the labor organizations and political clubs.

At the same time the mill employes, the factory hands, labor unions, political parties and other organizations not usually linked with religious movement, applied for places in the parade which to be held next Saturday, when it is believed 35,000 men will march to show their appreciation of the revival Mr. Sunday has conducted.

JAMES W. LINSLEY

James W. Linsley died yesterday in his 81st year, at the home of his sister, Mrs. E. M. Baldwin, Volney.

Mr. Linsley has been living for about one year at the home of Mrs. Baldwip, his original home being in Catskill, Greene county. Funeral services will be held at the home of Mrs. Baldwin tomorrow at 1 o'clock, and burial will be made at Mt. Adnah cemetery.

Mr. Linsley is survived by Mrs. E. M. Baldwin and Mrs. B. M. McKinstry of this city, the latter being his niece.

Special prices on carriages. VanWagenen Inc. adv133

All Play Runs Broken

Poor Jones got in a trance
And ceased from being sporty;
He woke, by some mischance,
In nineteen hundred-forty.
Oh, how the world was changed
In virtue and in flaw!
He thought himself deranged
When this sign he saw:
"Again today that serial play,
'The Case of Harry Thaw!'"

Said Jones "Am I advanced
Too greatly in my date,
And was I but entranced
One day from twelve to eight?"
"Oh, no," they said, "you've slept
Years twenty-five away,
And still we've daily kept
Exhibiting our play:
This show appeals in fifty reels—
'The Case of Thaw' today!"

"Pshaw!" said the Rip-like one;
"You're fooling me, I know.
D'ye mean this show has run
Since nineteen-six or so?"
They answered: "Yes, indeed;
We put it on each year.
And people come with speed
Whene'er our signs appear:
We have the film that's sure to thrill—
'The Case of Thaw' is here!"

You talk of "Uncle Tom,"
"Old Homestead" and "East Lynne!"
We take the laurels from
Those dramas old and thin.
"Camille" will be forgot
And no one think of Shaw
When still there is a spot
Wherein this sign will draw:
"Come in and see our comedy—
'The Case of Harry Thaw!'"
—John O'Keefe in New York World.

This Size Can FREE

Chi-Namel The Chinese Oil Varnish

Colored---Stains and brightens in one application.
Clear---Gives gloss without changing color.

BUY a 10-cent Varnish Brush, to insure Chi-Namel a fair trial, and we will give you absolutely free out of stock, a regular 20c can of Chi-Namel Varnish in exchange for this signed certificate, any color you select.

Name ....

Address ....

PEOPLE'S HARDWARE CO., Inc. Fulton, N. Y.
Demonstration Saturday, May 22

We sold 600 BROOMS in less than Two Hours this morning

BIG GRANITEWARE SALE
TO-MORROW MORNING AT 9 O'CLOCK

We Give Real Values

SHIPMAN'S 5-10-25 CENT STORE

BOY OF THREE YEARS IS VANDERBILT HEIR

May Inherit Bulk of Alfred Gwynne's Fortune.

In the financial and social world of New York there is much speculation about the disposition of the estate of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, who died when the Lusitania was torpedoed May 7.

Among the suggestions that have been made as to provisions of Mr. Vanderbilt's will is one to the effect that the bulk of the property will probably be left to Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Mr. Vanderbilt's elder son by his second wife, who was Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim. The boy is in his third year. His full brother, George, was born last September.

It is also believed that the will contains bequests to Mr. Vanderbilt's brothers and sisters, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney (who was Gertrude Vanderbilt) and the Countess Szechenyi, and that provision has been made for William H. Vanderbilt, Mr. Vanderbilt's son by his first wife, formerly Miss Elsie French.

A question has been raised as to the methods that would be adopted to prove Mr. Vanderbilt's death if his body is not found.

When the estate of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, was distributed in 1900 (he died in 1899) the appraisal values placed the entire estate at $52,500,000 in personalty and $20,000,000 in realty. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's share was estimated then at approximately $56,000,000. The values of the properties in New York real estate have increased greatly since then.

It is recorded that Mr. Vanderbilt held direct title to the Hotel Vanderbilt, a twenty story structure in Park avenue extending from Thirty-third to Thirty-fourth street: the Vanderbilt building, Nassau and Beekman streets; 245 and 247 Front street and 153 and 155 South street.

Mr. Vanderbilt held a big interest in the New York Central Realty and Terminal company, which controls the blocks between Forty-second and Fiftieth streets from Lexington to Madison avenue. This tract forms the site of the Grand Central terminal development and the property is said to be worth somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000,000.

Properties along the Hudson river and Riverside drive from One Hundred and Fourteenth street to Spuyten Duyvil and the ship canal are also owned by a subsidiary of this corporation. The aggregate values of the properties held by these corporations have been placed, it is believed conservatively, at nearly $100,000,000. His home at Fifth avenue and Fifty-eighth street, is one of the largest and finest private houses in the world.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, the possessor of the bulk of the fortune of his late father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, since he attained his majority, was an active figure in financial circles. He was prominent in the social life of New York city, and by reason of his deep interest in coaching and kindred sports was exceedingly popular in America, and abroad.

Mr. Vanderbilt was the second son of Cornelius Vanderbilt and was born in New York city in 1877. He was graduated from Yale university in 1899 and was voted the most popular man in the institution. His older brother, Cornelius, was disinherited by their father because of his opposition to the marriage of the younger Cornelius, it was said.

Mr. Vanderbilt was one of the principal exhibitors at the horse show in New York, and his horses were also shown at exhibitions throughout the country. He was an expert whip.

WORE INFLATABLE JACKET.

Westerner Was Saved by Precaution Taken by Himself For Trip.

Charles T. Jeffery of Kenosha, Wis., ascribed his escape in the sinking of the Lusitania to an inflatable life jacket he was wearing. Mr. Jeffery said he went down with the ship and that when he came up he was surrounded by hundreds of persons making desperate efforts in the water to grab something which would keep them afloat.

E. M. Collis of Chicago said he jumped into the sea and clung to a log for two hours before he was picked up.

E. J. Milford of Maryland was dragged into a boat after swimming for fifty minutes.

Mrs. Patrick Wilson of Montreal was lowered in a boat, which was swamped and sank. Supported only by a lifebelt, she remained afloat for three sours and was finally rescued.

Active Chamber of Commerce.

